At home, his only sister, Mrs Cecilia Makaha, also played an active part in intensifying the liberation war in the Inyanga district. After her brother's death, she remained active until her death in 1979.

She was killed by a bomb while taking food to freedom fighters. Her body was not found for several days after death.

"Herbert Chitepo's brilliant legal career is well known to all our people. Our people were thrilled by his appearance in court defending nationalist leaders being charged for breaking colonial laws," he said.

President Banana said Mr Chitepo combined theory and practice in all his life's work. "In these days when so many theories are being advocated by different nations and social forces, we should remember to practise what we preach," he said.

He reminded the youth that their education was given to them and paid for by the peasants and the workers who produced the wealth of the nation.

He urged them to render maximum service to the majority of the people and think of the needs and aspirations of the people before they thought of their own comforts and conveniences. Educated people should work in Government projects in the rural areas to give meaning to such policies.

Hundreds Stranded on Way to Salisbury

GWELO.

HUNDREDS of Bulawayo passengers on the train that was to have taken them to Mr Chitepo's funeral yesterday spent a cold, hungry and miserable night in the bush near Somabula.

They never did get to Salisbury. When, late in the morning, their train was able to edge its way into Gwelo they were told that by "ministerial order" — which ministry was not made clear — it was to return to Bulawayo.

The bitterly disappointed passengers — nearly 2 000 of them — streamed off the train when it entered the station at 11.45 am and rushed into the town to buy food and drinks.

The mishap was caused by two derailments.

The first was late on Sunday night at Willoughby's siding, about 15 km from Gwelo. Railwaymen quickly installed a by-pass line but later that day a diesel engine passing over it was also derailed.

PRESIDENT PROPOSES INCREASED FARM WAGES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Banana said yesterday there was an urgent need for an equitable wage for farm workers "in the interests of morality, social justice and common sense".

Opening the Marandellas Agricultural Show, the President said the farming sector had always tended to be unpopular with workers, particularly with indigenous blacks, because working conditions had not always been made attractive.

"Good working conditions would create happy workers and a happy worker is a more productive worker," he said.

In its first year of existence Zimbabwe had produced a record three million tonnes of maize — about one million tonnes in excess of the country's needs.

Before long Zimbabwe would become the granary of Africa because it had a great deal of maize to export to neighbouring territories linked by the nine-nation SADCC grouping.

Because of Zimbabwe's agricultural strength, it had been chosen as the SADCC food security centre.

President Banana said: "This year's achievement is ample proof that with the creation of the new State of Zimbabwe and the return to peace, our farmers have declared a total war on the soil and scored a major victory."

But farmers must not be fooled by the industry's present strength into a false sense of security: to avoid large-scale starvation, Zimbabwe's food production would have to be doubled within the next 12 years.

"We must not sit on our laurels and be static. We need to be dynamic and creative and review our whole agricultural system with a view to revitalising it by placing emphasis on community participation," he said.

Zimbabwe had inherited a dual system, with commercial farmers on one hand and peasant farmers on the other. There was an obvious need to integrate these two sectors to increase agricultural output.

This integration could be achieved in a number of ways:

- Putting all arable land to productive use.
- Encouraging co-operatives at both the production and marketing levels.
- Training people in basic farming skills.

"We need more training centres for providing skills in modern agricultural techniques to improve production and ensure the retention of skilled personnel in the agricultural sector. This, no doubt, will boost the already highly developed agricultural industry in Zimbabwe."

He said he was deeply impressed by the high standard and variety of exhibits displayed at the show.

"This is a clear demonstration of the hard work and ingenuity that are characteristic of our farming community, both in the peasant and commercial sectors.

"If this dedication to hard work can be maintained then Zimbabwe can be spared the perennial Third World problem of starvation."

ROAD TO SOCIALISM LONG SAYS WITNESS MANGWENDE

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr Witness Mangwende, yesterday urged the Zimbabwean masses to be patient and not frustrate the Government in its efforts to spread the wealth of the country.

Speaking at a rally convened by the Mashonaland Central District committee of ZANU (PF) at the University of Zimbabwe to mark the 18th birthday of the party, Dr Mangwende said there was talk in some quarters that the Government was "now in a dilemma".

"This may be true, but all the problems we are experiencing now have been necessitated by the Government's incessant search for an equal distribution of wealth," Dr Mangwende told more than 700 students and workers.

He said it was wrong for people to expect to get everything "now — and then end up with nothing as a result". The Government's policy of socialism did not mean depleting the resources of the country; instead it promulgated socialism with development.

"And then there are some people who ask why we can't ban people like Ian Smith for making subversive statements. These people should know that this Government does not act hastily. We want to give people like Smith enough rope to hang themselves," Dr Mangwende said.

The road to total socialism was a long one, he said, but the Government was determined to reach its goal.

"The most important thing at the moment is for people to work hard and become more organised as a party," he said.

ZANU Day should be commemorated as a day when an "active revolution was launched". The nation must also think of its fallen heroes.

Dr Mangwende urged Zimbabweans to gather en masse today for the burial of the recently assassinated leader of the South African ANC, Mr Joe Gqabi.

"We must show as Zimbabweans that we did not fight for our country only, but for the liberation of the whole of Southern Africa," he said.

The Deputy Minister of Works, Mr Grafton Ziyenge, warned employers, who paid wages below the minimum, that they would be prosecuted.

"All those workers who are being underpaid should come forward with names so that we can deal with these people," he said.

SADCC TEAM STARTS ON FOOD PLAN FOR AFRICA

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 9 Aug 81 p 6

[Text]

THE Ministry of Agriculture is to set up a three-man committee to work on project proposals for achieving regional food security within the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

The ministry's acting chief economist, Mr Peter Murphy, who has been involved with the nine-nation SADCC since its inception last year, said in an interview last week that he recommended that the committee be set up to ease pressure on ministry officials.

"The three-man committee will devote 100 percent of its time to working on the various projects," Mr Murphy said.

The committee would come under the Ministry of Agriculture but would be financed by an outside country or agency. The Australian Government had shown interest, he said.

At the SADCC's inaugural conference in Lusaka in April last year, Zimbabwe accepted the task of working out proposals for the region's food security. The task was passed on to the Ministry of Agriculture which then drew up proposals for the programme.

The proposals were accepted by the nine SADCC countries at a Maputo conference in November last year.

Among the nine proposals are:

- The formation of a technical assistance programme designed to achieve co-operation and co-ordination on all agrarian issues.
- An early-warning system for regional security.
- A regional resources information system.
- A regional food reserve.
- Food processing technology.
- Regional food marketing infrastructure.

"It was at this conference that we expected a secretariat to be set up to work out the projects we proposed, but instead we were asked to go ahead with the work," he said.

It was then that the formation of the three-man committee became necessary, he said, adding that the ministry's pace had been slow because of domestic commitments.

What is the philosophy behind the drawing up of the nine proposals?

"For a start, we feel that the land resources of the nine countries are being under-utilised and therefore the idea is to encourage optimum utility so that food self-sufficiency can be achieved," Mr Murphy said.

As examples, he cited countries like Angola, where the total land was 124,7 million ha and yet only 1,8 ha were under cultivation. Tanzania had 88,6 million ha but only 6,3 million ha were arable.

"According to figures supplied by the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organisation, the whole region is using only 23 million ha out of a total of 475,2 million ha," he said.

"We also believe that there is considerable scope for improving the output per hectare of the region's land area. For example, Mozambique produced only an average of 0,538 tonnes of maize a hectare from 1975 to 1977 and Botswana an average of 0,683 during the same period," he said.

Turning to the implementation of the projects, Mr Murphy said before anything could be done, comprehensive feasibility studies had to be carried out.

Plans were under way to find outside agencies and countries to help finance the studies. The United States and Canadian Governments, and the European Community had shown interest in some of the projects.

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL PUBLISHING COMPANY PROPOSED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 9 Aug 81 p 14

[Article by Ammon M.M. Mutembwa]

[Text]

A WELL-KNOWN Nigerian publisher, Onibonoje, once argued that:". . . our consciousness is semi-intransitive, that is, we are immersed in a reality and are unable to gain sufficient distance from it in order to look at it objectively; hence we are yet to know reality in a critical way, study the problem and face its challenges.

"Under these conditions, development is impossible; at best only modernisation is likely. To be more than what we are is denied to us by our condition of dependence . . ."

The African in colonial Rhodesia gradually realised that he was dehumanised, dependent and brutalised and, as he increasingly became critically aware of himself, also realised that what he originally believed and accepted to be his inherent inferiority, incapacity and helplessness, was, in fact, a result of alienation itself and a demonstration of a condition of domination.

Thus a two-pronged attack, largely interdependent, was launched to restore equilibrium.

Armed struggle and a dialogue within the liberation movement were initiated and ultimately resulted in a national democratic revolution. Armed struggle and constructive dialogue within the liberation movement were cultural actions meant to overcome our "semi-intransitive and false consciousness".

The heat and enthusiasm generated by these cultural actions, it was hoped, would continue after independence as Zimbabweans exchanged socio-economic dependence for national rehabilitation, regeneration and development.

But, alas, even Zimbabwean intellectuals of yesteryear, who used to write and publish articles in various overseas journals have since been bogged down in a quagmire of intellectual despondency that characterises the horizon of the Zimbabwean revolution.

This senile and tired group is now indulging in the most primitive form of primitive accumulation, completely abandoning, maybe betraying, the process of self-apprehension and development. It is the aim of this article to provoke and suggest means and ways to continue the process of self-assessment and dialogue — a programme for liberative cultural action.

Book publishing is one of several cultural actions leading to a cultural revolution and a dynamic development of society. It is a dedicated organ of any people or nation; their voice and heritage. It sensitises the people to their national value systems and national pride.

OPPORTUNE

One wonders why we have left it or why, 18 months after independence, book publishing still remains the domain of expatriate publishing houses?

While we pay tribute to expatriate publishing houses for providing outlets for early Zimbabwean authors — Samkange, Sithole and others — we feel strongly the moment is now opportune and ripe for the book industry to belong to the country.

The state of affairs that exists where there is an entire absence of indigenous publishing houses and the book industry continues to be dominated by expatriate houses who pay scant attention to the objective reality of obtaining — socio-political, economic and cultural — in Zimbabwe is totally unacceptable, unsatisfactory and a disservice to the nation.

There is an inordinately heavy dependence of the country on importation of books and periodicals used in schools for the general reader. The few books made locally are made by expatriate houses.

Most of the imported books are totally irrelevant to the country's needs, extremely expensive and hard to come by. A lot of them are also harmful to us as they are, by and large, inappropriate to the psychology of our population. Even the books designed for the African market overlook cultural and social differences.

In the field of children's books, the existing lacuna is too often filled with books written for European or North American children, and African children find it difficult to relate to the experiences dramatised.

No wonder our failure to cultivate reading habits in children at an impressionable age. The only reading they are likely to engage in is utilitarian rather than reading for pleasure. They are neither assimilated into the English / French / Portuguese reading culture, nor are they interested in books in their own languages.

Reading should be seen as a process of self-discovery, where the author and the reader, both embedded in the same social, historical and cultural reality which they are striving to understand and master, engage in an authentic dialogue, with the publisher an invaluable intermediary.

The absence of this go-between, the dearth of writers in our society, leads to the unhappy situation where our youth is dehumanised in terms of alien cultural values incompletely assimilated.

Our call is that this unhappy situation be reversed and reversed soon. How? How can we get some of our people to write — more than the present crop of writers — and all our people to read? How can we not only satisfy but also create demand for books? There is a terrible shortage of educational books at all levels, and there is also a demand which must be created.

How can we provide materials for life-long education? For a continuing system rather than one conceived in terms of arrival at an educational terminus of reading solely for achievement? In fact, this is the tuberculosis consuming Zimbabwe's crop of intellectuals who boast of Masters and Doctorates but are largely unproductive, if not the acid corroding away the achievements of the revolution.

SERVICE

Can't we organise a truly national publishing house which will render invaluable and significant educational, intellectual and cultural service to the nation, which can take the lead in educational reform curriculum development, working hand in glove with the Ministry of Education?

Can't we establish a house which will help in bringing about national enlightenment through its engaging in adult education and literacy campaign?

The Government must establish a trust which will administer a national publishing company. The national publishing company will enter, initially that is, into partnership with an established expatriate publishing house say for a period of five years.

The established house will offer skills and training in all forms of the book industry — production, distribution and the like. After the five years, the expatriate house will withdraw, selling its shares to the national publishing company.

There are, of course, advantages and disadvantages in the arrangement. But in the final analysis advantages outweigh negative points. A national publishing house could help save much needed foreign exchange, stimulate local industries, help in educational publishing and encourage our people to write, and together with the established writers save us from this literary semi-desert.

To reinforce my argument, we firmly believe that if Mr Mugabe's call to the nation to ultimately assume control of its means of production is to have force, it can only be realised in a context of serious and intense national dialogue.

Publishing in its wider sense is taken to mean the dissemination of information by any appropriate medium and has a critical role in the dialogue. An expatriate publishing company cannot be expected to be a firm and partisan ally in this dialogue.

Again, if Dr Mutumbuka's argument, some few months ago in Umtali, that the Ministry of Education may one day be the national commissariat, is to have punch, we believe it can be realised within the context of a national dialogue in which all well-meaning Zimbabweans will participate.

STAFF CRISIS HITS HOME POWER PLANS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

SHORTAGE of staff is holding up the electrification programme for Salisbury's high-density suburbs. Even if the planned rate could be kept up it will take more than eight years to clear the backlog.

In a report to the health, housing and community services committee the director of community services, Mr Bev Taylor, says 27 648 houses in the high-density area have been electrified.

The programme for the last financial year called for another 1 806 to be connected, but this would not be done until about December. A further 16 137 have still to be put on the programme.

SHORTAGES

The slow rate of work — 480 connections a month including the new Warren Park suburb — was a result of staff shortages. The remaining staff were comparatively inexperienced and so working slowly.

At the end of June the general purposes committee was asked to promote in-service training of staff in the electricity department to speed up the programme.

But last month the committee said it was not feasible because of shortage of training staff and cost.

The health, housing and committee services committee decided to approach the general purposes committee again and ask it to take the necessary steps to meet the needs of all departments for professional and skilled manpower, with special reference to the electrification programme.

The figures presented to the committee mean that if all connections were for unwired houses it would take almost three years to connect all homes in Salisbury to the mains.

But many of these connections are for new houses. The programme for the 12 months which ended on June 30 — and this programme is still unfinished — called for 1 806 houses to be wired. If this is done every year it would take about 8½ years to do the job.

About 35 percent of the houses mentioned in the report are without electricity. This compares to less than 5 percent of the houses in Bulawayo's high-density suburbs.

NKALA URGED TO MAKE TAXES HARSHER

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, was yesterday accused by his party's chief whip, Mr Elio Mudzingwa, of not making taxes heavy enough in his last Budget.

Speaking during debate on the minister's Budget in the Assembly, Mr Mudzingwa also described the 10 percent tax on non-residents as "just peanuts".

This tax should be at least 20 percent. "These people who are not here, just enjoy their interest at the expense of the people who work," he said.

"When delivering his first Budget speech last year the Minister of Finance said his intention was to bridge the gap which has existed between the rich and the poor in this country. To bridge this gap we need to tax the rich more heavily in order to lift up, economically, the poor."

He said Senator Nkala's second Budget had not gone as far as he and many people had expected. He said that with only 30 percent payable on capital gain "it will take us another 90 years to complete the bridging of the gap".

He would have suggested that this tax be put at 40 percent. "After all, the capital goods in this country, be they immovable or marketable securities, belong to the people because it is the people who are made to sweat and it is the rich people who accumulated these goods."

The State duty payable on deceased estates should be 100 percent, he said, because when people inherited money they had not worked "for even one cent" of it. This was "very unfair and very ungodly", he said.

Mr Mudzingwa said he could not understand the minister's reducing of the exemption amount for deceased estates to $30 000. "Why make any exemption at all. I am of the opinion that the whole amount should be taxed. The money must be shared by the people."

The tax on unutilised land should be "from about 50 percent upwards".

If the minister had raised these taxes he could have "found room" to drop the sales tax.

"My statement today will not be palatable to the rich few, but the way we are going is not to please the few individuals.

"To do more, we know where the money is. In this next Budget I think I will have to take him (the Minister of Finance) somewhere privately and tell him this is not enough," said Mr Mudzingwa.

The debate was then adjourned until Tuesday, August 18. — Zimna.

CYNICS' VIEW OF SADCC CHALLENGED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 12 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

CYNICS will be proved wrong if they believe the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) has not truly embarked on the road to economic liberation, says the latest bulletin of the Southern Africa Development Information Documentation Exchange (SADEX).

There are some who do not believe that SADCC countries will have the resolve to carry the struggle for economic liberation to a positive conclusion, it says.

"Similar voices were heard in Lusaka in 1969 when the states committed themselves to the political liberation of Southern Africa.

"Since then Angola, Mozambique and Zimbabwe have been freed, at considerable cost to all the countries of the region."

The bulletin says cynics were proven wrong then and would again be proved so now by SADCC. "Only in South Africa do those who propagate the pernicious policies of racial superiority still attempt to project a false image of security and stability."

SADEX, published by the United States Agency for International Development, says that from the outset the SADCC initiative was not seen simply as a negative response to South Africa's "undoubted economic hegemony".

It represented a new development strategy for Southern Africa whose primary objectives were to improve the living and working conditions of people in the region to reduce the countries' vulnerability to "economic blackmail and reprisal".

The bi-monthly publication says Zimbabwe's independence provided the conditions necessary to transform the region's aspirations into realisable goals.

It contrasts SADCC objectives with South Africa's proposals for a constellation of states which countries in the region have rejected.

"Their object is clear: to tie the countries of the region into an irreversible dependence on South Africa; to turn the free states of Southern Africa into little more than bantustans. Constellation is simply apartheid as foreign policy."

TEKERE LOSES TOP PARTY POST

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The former Zimbabwe Manpower Planning and Development Minister, Mr Edgar Tekere, has lost his powerful post as secretary-general of ZANU (PF).

This was announced by Mr Tekere himself when questioned by reporters after addressing a meeting convened by the ZANU (PF) Mashonaland Central executive to mark ZANU Day yesterday.

"I am no longer the secretary-general. I am now just a task man," he said.

It is understood that the central committee of the party met a week ago and decided to remove him. No announcement has been made by the party.

Mr Tekere has been recorded several times in the past as being dissatisfied at the pace of the Zimbabwean revolution.

Last month the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, told a Midlands rally that malcontents would be weeded out of the party.

Mr Tekere has been going down the ranks since he lost his Cabinet seat in January this year after his acquittal on a split decision trial for his involvement in the murder of a farmer.

At the meeting yesterday, Mr Tekere, who calls himself the "rough party, said he would not tire until the revolution, "which is now decaying," had been revived.

"This country will go to waste if the present trend continues. This has happened in most countries in Africa, but here it must be stopped," he said.

He criticised Cabinet ministers for becoming "masters of the people" instead of serving the masses. The ministers had also become unapproachable to the masses, he said.

Mr Tekere also attacked ministers for practising tribalism and nepotism in office.

Saying such practices should be expected in any revolution, Mr Tekere warned of "a wave of corruption" among certain Government officials.

"The problem is that most of these people have lost touch with the common man in Highfield because they are staying in places where they wine and dine with the same people who financed the bombs that killed us during the war," he said.

"I am a political loudmouth. Give me Marx or Plato and I will tell you nothing about them, because I have no time for those, but I will never stop talking," he said.

BRIEFS

CENSUS SCHEDULED FOR AUGUST--For the first time in more than 13 years a census will be taken of Zimbabwe's population, in August next year, Dr C. Mandishora, Director of Census and Statistics, said yesterday. The Central Statistical Office will begin the nationwide exercise later this month. "Most countries take a census every five years or 10 years. With the coming to power of a new Government and the last census having been taken in 1969, it is high time a new census was made," Dr Mandishora said. The census would provide the Government with information on population size and distribution, age, and sex structure, marital status, occupations and education levels, he said. The information would be used for planning and monitoring Government development programmes. The exercise was expensive and would require careful planning. For that reason a pilot census would be taken between August 17 and August 28. The pilot census would test the suitability and practicality of the questionnaires, evaluate the organisational requirements and the exercise and estimate the personnel, material resources and costs. The pilot census would take place in Mufakose, Waterfalls, rural Seke, Chinamora Section and on a commercial farm near Dzivaresekwa, Dr Mandishora said. WANKIE STRIKE ENDS--Bulawayo--A strike by 300 contract workers at Wankie Colliery ended yesterday morning after two days of negotiations in Salisbury. The strike brought the colliery's open-cast mining operations to a halt. The workers are employed by the Salisbury-based civil engineering firm of Gulliver (Pvt.) Ltd. A spokesman for Gulliver said in Salisbury yesterday: "The men are on their way back to work. I cannot say what the problem was, only that they had some minor grievances. I understand it was nothing to do with pay." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Aug 81 p 1]

RURAL DEVELOPMENT--The wholehearted involvement of the people in rural development is essential if Zimbabwe is to be economically free, the President of the Senate, Mr Nolan Makombe, said yesterday. Opening the St. Phillip's School show in Sipolilo, he said the Government was providing attractive incentives to invest who located their businesses outside major cities. These new areas had untapped labour forces which could be trained to be as productive as those in big cities. He warned against reactionaries seeking to promote their own interests and employing people from the same village, tribe, family or clan. "We don't want to create a sprinkling of millionaires in Zimbabwe at the expense of the masses of our country," he said. Successful rural businessmen must not be unscrupulous and Government legislation protected investors from such men. The brunt of the liberation war was borne by the rural people and so it was not surprising the focus of the Government was on rural development. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Aug 81 p 3]

MULTI-PARTY SYSTEM--The National Front of Zimbabwe yesterday heaped praise on the Government of the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, for its achievements since coming into power. The party's president, Mr Peter Mandaza, said the Government had worked tirelessly to bring the country from war to peace. Mr Mandaza told a Press conference in Salisbury that the achievements were due to the multi-party system. The UANC has expressed concern at the amount of lawlessness in the country. The organisation's secretary for publicity and information, Mr Chris Sakala, urged the Government to move in and stop violence. "We sympathise with the Government that it has no hand or control over the people perpetrating intimidation and violence in the country. We would like an explanation on why when our party holds rallies they are disrupted." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Aug 81 p 5]

SILVER DAGGER SOLDIERS--The men of 1 (Zimbabwe) Commando Battalion, who successfully completed an intensive exercise in the Kariba area last month were yesterday awarded their silver dagger insignia, the international commando symbol. The awards were made to 374 troopers and corporals by the deputy commander of 2 Brigade, Colonel John Pritchard. Colonel Pritchard told the men: "You can be justifiably proud of wearing the dagger and the green beret...Both are worn in many armies all over the world and show you are members of an international brotherhood. "You must improve and maintain the high standards expected of commando soldiers in the Zimbabwe National Army. As a result of your training you are expected to maintain better discipline and be a cut above the normal soldier," he added. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Aug 81 p 5]

SEMINARS ON QUALITY OF LIFE, COST OF LIVING

Paris LE CONTINENT in French 13 Jul 81 p 12

/Text/ Two seminars with the same goal are being held at this moment in West Africa. The first brings together African trade unionists in the Togolese capital; the second, academics and planning officials in the Senegalese capital. The two seminars aim to bring out theoretical ways of measuring the cost of living in Africa in general and the quality of life in the Sahelian countries.

In Lome, 18 trade unionists from 14 countries have been participating, since 6 July, in a 2-week seminar organized jointly by the Organization of African Trade Union Unity (OATUU) and the Afro-American Labor Center, under the auspices of the Togolese trade union movement (CNTT /National Confederation of Togolese Workers/).

The delegates, coming from Burundi, Congo, Ivory Coast, Gabon, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar, Mali, Morocco, Mauritius, Tunisia, Niger, Zaire and Togo, are to discuss questions in common regarding the analysis of the economic problems of their respective countries and of Africa in general. They will study the measures to be taken to determine cost of living indexes, by comparing the wages paid in their own country, sector by sector. This will make it possible to compare them with those in other African countries. They will then define ways of evaluating international economic trends by examining their effect on national economies, as well as the way in which they affect the average worker.

According to Mrs Judith Trunzo, the American organizer of the Lome seminar, research is a basic tool for strengthening African trade union movements. She rightly predicted, in her opening speech, that the participants at this seminar would return to their countries better equipped to set up, organize and finance trade union research centers in their respective countries.

For his part, Cisahako Amedee of Burundi, representing the Organization of African Trade Union Unity (based in Ghana), told the delegates that trade union research is not yet sufficiently developed in Africa and that progress achieved in the research field could contribute to strengthening workers' movements from one end of the continent to the other.

The seminar, whose proceedings are to end on 17 July, was officially opened by the Togolese minister of labor, Ali Napo.

As for the Dakar seminar, one of the most important subjects taken up concerns an index making it possible to measure the quality of life in the Sahel. This index is achieved by combining the infant mortality rate, the life expectancy of a year-old child, and the literacy rate. It is supposed to measure the living conditions of a country's population at a given moment. Conceived some years ago by the Overseas Development Council, it is intended to supplement the data obtained thanks to the gross national product. With regard to the Sahel, the seminar participants proposed that certain other data should be included in the index, such as nutrition, food availability, deforestation, rate of primary school attendance and employment.

AFRICA LOOKS FOR NEW COFFEE GROWING TECHNIQUES

Ouagadougou LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 13 Jul 81 p 3

/Text/ (New Press Agency)--The Inter-African Coffee Organization (IACO) held a seminar in Doualo on the rationalization of African coffee growing. Specialists from all over the world (agronomists, academics, technicians, etc...) participated in this important meeting.

The fact is that for a large number of African countries, coffee constitutes an exchange currency which, for many years, was as good as gold. In the Ivory Coast as in Cameroon, in Uganda as in Tanzania, and in Zaire as in Madagascar, coffee exports represent an important part of the financial resources.

A Depressed Market

But coffee, trade in which constitutes the world's foremost agricultural market, is, for more than one reason, a sensitive product. Despite the existence of an agreement set up under the aegis of the International Coffee Organization, which has its headquarters in London, prices obey that famous law of supply and demand.

For the last 4 years, coffee prices have been somewhat depressed, and these fluctuations weigh down the economy of a large number of producing countries. Prospects hardly look favorable. Already Brazil, the world's leading producer, estimates that its harvest will probably be 60 percent higher than that of last season.

It will thus reach its highest level since 1975. We must therefore expect a drop in prices, which will move even further away from the "peaks" reached in 1976 during the frosts in the state of Sao Paulo

Objectives, Programs

Hence arises the concern of the African producers and the need for governments to review the organization of the distribution networks, particularly upriver in the field, where plantations can yet be found whose yield and productivity are still not competitive.

In Doula therefore, the IACO seminar took up the problem of rationalization on the basis of "a thorough consideration of the foundations, objectives and programs underlying national coffee growing policies, in order to bring production capacities and mechanisms under control, as well as the possibilities of packaging and processing this product."

The seminar also studied "the rationalization of the networks channeling physical and financial flows, as well as the triangular producer-administrator-intermediary relationships, so as to build, on reliable bases, a true income policy for a farm proprietor."

FRENCH OFFICIALS HOLD TALKS--Luanda, 8 Aug (AFP)--Mr Regis Debray and Mr Guy Penne, President Francois Mitterrand's advisers, held discussions in Luanda on Saturday with Angolan authorities within the framework of the African tour which the French President has assigned them. The two advisers who arrived in Luanda on Friday evening from Congo, after visiting Niger, Benin and Gabon, are the bearers of a message from the French President to his Angolan counterpart, Mr Jose Eduardo Dos Santos. According to the National Press Agency, ANGOP, Mr Penne, at the talks during which Angola was represented by Mr Carlos Fernandes, secretary to the president of the republic for foreign relations, stated that the French Government of the leftist union wishes to have more privileged relations with Angola. According to the same source, Mr Penne said that the present government wishes to develop the cooperation established by preceding French governments. Mr Penne and Mr Debray will leave Luanda Saturday evening for Lusaka (Zambia). Their African tour continues with visits to Maputo (Mozambique) and Djibouti. MAVINGA CONTROL--Paris, 8 Aug (AFP)--In a communique reaching Paris on Saturday, UNITA asserts that in spite of the false allegations by the minority regime in Angola, its armed forces still control the town of Mavinga, which they took from the enemy on 28 May 1981. In the communique which was signed by Demostenes Chilingutila, the chief of defense staff of the Angolan Liberation Armed Forces, the resistance movement opposed to the central government in Luanda explained that if necessary, impartial observers from the international community can go to the site to acquaint themselves with the situation. The town of Mavinga is in the Cuando Cubango Province, sharing borders with Namibia and Zambia. It adds that UNITA's recent victories over Soviet and Cuban occupation forces were widely published by the international press following the last July visit of some Western journalists to the regions under the control of the UNITA. TALKS WITH ALGERIA--Luanda, 10 Aug (ANGOP)--The delegation of the people's assembly of the People's Republic of Angola and the delegation of the National Popular Assembly of the Republic of Algeria held a meeting late Monday afternoon, in Luanda, within the framework of the latter's visit to Angola, which began on Sunday. The aim of the meeting at which the Angolan delegation was led by Bernardo de Sousa, first secretary of the people's assembly, was to exchange experiences between the people's assembly and the National Popular Assembly of Algeria. This meeting, which was also attended by Casimiro Sergio, the second secretary of the people's assembly, serves as a basis to strengthen existing cooperation relations between the parliaments of the two countries. The Algerian delegation, led by Dilmi Abbes, chairman of the Algerian National Assembly's Economic Committee, met this morning with deputies Evaristo Domingos (Kimba) and Lopo do Nascimento, coordinator of the committee on industry, energy and petroleum and member of the committee on planning, finance, external trade, (?banking) and international cooperation respectively. Also yesterday the Angolan delegation paid homage at the tomb of the immortal guide of the Angolan revolution, Dr Antonio Agostinho Neto. During their stay in Angola, the Algerian delegation will visit the provinces of Zaire, Uige, Mocamedes and Bengo, where they will meet with deputies of the provincial assemblies. PRESENCE OF FRENCH TROOPS ALONE PREVENTS EXPLOSIVE SITUATION

Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Pierre Biarnes: "President Dacko Must Confront Political Uncertainty and an Economic Paralysis"]

[Text] Coming from the Congo Mr David Dacko, President of the Central African Republic, went to Kinshasa Saturday 1 August at the end of the morning for a 24-hour working visit, at the end of which Messrs Dacko and Mobutu in a joint communique expressed their wish to give new vigor to the Zaire-Central African mixed commission. The latter is to meet "soon", at a date still to be fixed.

The two chiefs of state also approved the beginning of the engineering work on the Mobayi dam on the Ubangi river in the north of Zaire on the Centrafican border.

Bangui. At the M'Poko airport, closed from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m., baggage checks are stricter than usual. In the city searches and identity checks are carried out frequently both day and night, and soldiers are posted at the entries of public buildings and the principal crossroads. Those are the only effects of the state of seige, proclaimed after the deadly attack last 14 July in the Central African capital. No curfew was even instituted. Despite threats by those who claimed responsibility for the attack there has been no serious incident to lament since then; as a result tension has almost completely abated.

Political uncertainty is added to the effects of a disastrous economic and financial situation inherited from Bokassa, and which in 2 years it has been impossible to set right.

Cotton production, the largest income producing crop in the country, now at levels clearly below those reached before World War II, has even continued to decline: less than 28,000 tons of cotton seeds in 1978-79, barely 25,000 in 1979-80, less than 20,000 for the current season. Less that 250,000 diamond carats are officially marketed (more than 100,000, if not double that amount, are sent illegally to the Congo or other destinations) and coffee production is approximately 10,000 tons, a paltry figure. Fish culture itself tends to become ever more inadequate. Wood alone maintains a fairly good level (approximately 110,000 cubic meters of rough timber exported last year).

A Battle of Chiefs

Effective consumer demand is very weak, and has repercussions on importations and in consequence on customs and fiscal receipts which only are enlivened at the end of the month by foreign grants, mainly French, for paying the accounts of government functionaries (about 1.5 billion CFA francs per month).

However, large-scale fraud and corruption are ever rampant and have only been partially attenuated by the few French functionaries seconded from Paris following "Operation Baracuda." It is planned to withdraw them. In recent months the looting, following the 19 March announcement of the election of President Dacko, finally undermined the confidence of shopkeepers who have since reduced their supplies to a bare minimum. Unemployment continues to increase to dangerous levels, swelling the mass of the underprivileged who are ready for anything, and the "gucmodes" who crowd up in the unhealthy quarters of "kilometer 5".

The stagnant and potentially explosive character of the political situation is matched by the growing paralysis of the economy.

Legally in office, even if he barely scraped by in the March election still bitterly contested by his enemies, he is accepted by his African peers, as was shown by his 21 July participation in the inaugural ceremonies of the Marien Ngouabi mausoleum at Brazzaville. Mr Dacko still holds the advantage he gained--although hardly brilliant--by his return to Bangui in September 1979 in a French Army Transall. The new French leaders, however irritated they may be by this fait accompli, which was contrary to their wishes, certainly do not plan to help push him out, in any event, by force. Despite that, the chief of state is not in control of political developments.

The banning of Mr Lala's Central African National Liberation Movement (MCLN), which claimed responsibility for the 14 July attack, and of Mr Abel Goumba's Ubangian Patriotic Front (FPO) were mere empty gestures. On the one henad, these two parties have but a small number of members; on the other, their leaders, who already had fled abroad when these measures aere adopted, can continue to develop their propaganda activities abroad as much as they like.

The "suspension of activities" of the Movement for the Liberation of Central Africa (MPLC), headed by Mr Ange Patasse, is even more pathetic. Whatever one might think of this ex-collaborator of Bokassa, Mr Patasse nevertheless received more than 38 percent of the votes cast in the presidential elections last 14 Marcy, against 50.23 percent for Mar Dacko. Even if these voters were for the must part obtained by exactly the same methods for which the opposition rightly or wrongly blames Mr Dacko, it nonetheless confers a very great authority on their beneficiary. This is especially true in the capital, where any repressive measure against the MPLC under current circumstances would probably not fail to provoke an uprising whose consequences are impossible to foretell. In fact, that is why, however "suspended" he may be, Mr Patasse--who has withdrawn to this property at "kilometer 10" and is protected by hundreds of supporters armed with bows and poisoned arrows--acts like a true leader of an opposition government, who those in high places are very careful not to irritate.

Holding consultations throughout the day, receiving visiting journalists, he continues just as he has for months to give orders to boycott cotton production, and to refuse to pay taxes, awaiting his early accession to the post of head of state--on the procedures and the consequences of which he discourses interminably, making the most extravagant promises to all.

This "battle of chiefs" makes it impossible to see how any true national reconciliation could come about. As a result, the idea of a possible return to the force of the Army is making progress.

During his 15 years in power Bokassa had eliminated about all the officers of the Central African Army who could have offended him. With nearly 5,000 men, it remains not very effective, even if it is no longer as rundown as at the fall of the Empire, thanks to French technical assistance. Moreover President Dacko himself, from all appearances, does not wish to see its quality improve too quickly. His new senior officers are very unobtrusive and cautious, beginning with its new chief of staff, general of the army, Andre Kolingba. They nonetheless in a few months have become one of the elements of the complicated game now being played out in Bangui, and even somewhat more so these last few days, thanks to the state of seige.

While awaiting the outcome, all observers here consider that at present only the maintenance of French troops prevents the situation from becoming completely explosive and Central Africa's being swallowed up in a "Chad process."

FPO LEADER DISCUSSES POLITICAL SITUATION, FRENCH TROOPS' PRESENCE

Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Jul 81 p 3

[Interview with Dr Abel Goumba, head of the Ubangi People's Patriotic Front--Labor Party, by correspondent Philippe Decraene, in Paris, date not specified]

[Text] President David Dacko decreed a state of siege over the entire Central African territory and called on the army, asking its chief of staff to "provide the necessary troop assistance to disperse any mob formed anywhere in Central African territory."

In an order signed Tuesday evening, the chief of state declared that the "use of force involves the use of weapons."

The French defense minister indicated, following this decision, that French troops in the Central African Republic were confined to barracks and would have to intervene only if the safety of French civilians were threatened.

Dr Abel Goumba, head of the Ubangi People's Patriotic Front--Labor Party (FPO-PT)--who left Bangui on 10 July and who has been living in Paris since 14 July, granted an interview to our colleague Philippe Decraene.

[Question] Idi Lala, current leader of the Central African Movement for National Liberation, having formerly been your spokesman, should we conclude therefore that the Ubangi People's Patriotic Front will henceforth have an armed wing?

[Answer] In no way. Idi Lala was expelled from the Front by the rank and file militants, a decision confirmed in August 1980 by our party's central committee.

[Question] How do you explain that the chief of state has outlawed the Patriotic Front whereas you had officially disavowed the 14 July assassination attempt when you were already in Paris?

[Answer] Dacko has once again yielded to a reflex of fear. He knowingly and unfairly put the MCLN [Central African Movement for National Liberation] and the Front in the same category. He has never played the democratic game and he intends to adhere to a line of conduct which has been his for 20 years. Already in 1960 he outlawed the Movement for the Democratic Development of Africa (MEDAC) of which I was the head. The Bangui regime is a fascist regime.

[Answer] Officially, of course. But the government party, the Central African Democratic Union (UCD) is the only one to enjoy complete freedom of action and expression. All the other political parties are intimidated, which impedes the exercise of the democratic proces. The principal group of affiliated trade unions, the General Union of Central African Workers, has been disbanded.

[Question] When you were still in exile, you demanded the immediate repatriation of the French troops. Are you maintaining this position?

[Answer] No, because today there is a socialist government in power in France, which has proclaimed its neutrality vis-a-vis the Bangui government. Giscard d'Estaing, on the other hand, had personalized Central African power by coming to seek out Dacko in Paris in order to bring him back to the Central African Republic in the hold of a Transall. The Barracudas *were not, at that time, protecting the Central African people, just Dacko himself.

[Question] The military presence, therefore, no longer shocks you?

[Answer] The number of French soldiers would have to be reduced and they would have to be barracked in a less visible manner. On the other hand, these soldiers would have to effectively fulfill their role of training a new Central African Army.

[Question] Would you agree to participate in a national government with the present majority, led by President Dacko?

[Answer] I do not see any real majority, but a governing minority. I am ready to enter into a government of national union, covering all the political elements in the country, including the Central African Democratic Union, but excluding Dacko himself.

[Question] You do not envision the Front attaining power except by legal means?

[Answer] Yes, that is why I am excluding the MCLN, which resorts to violence, from any formula for a government of national union. However, if Dacko persists in his negative attitude, we must envisage resorting to other solutions.

[Question] Does the threat which hangs over you, of a possible international arrest warrant, worry you?

[Answer] All that is ridiculous. It would be paradoxical if Bokassa were to go about freely and if I, who struggled for 14 years against him, were to be arrested.

[Question] What is your position with regard to France?

[Answer] I am a man of the left. The government which France has just provided for itself is for me a natural ally and not one of circumstance. I expect that the French Government will exert serious pressure, including financial pressure, on Dacko, to force him to really democratize his regime. Lacking such a peaceful evolution, the Central African Republic will experience the fate of Chad.

FPO SAID TO BE ONLY PARTY WITH COHERENT, SPECIFIC PROGRAM

[Text] The situation which prevails in the Central African Republic is stamped with the seal of ambiguity. Returning to Bangui in September 1979 in the French Army's Transalls, President Dacko, although elected last March, has not succeeded in establishing his legitimacy in a convincing manner. Faced with considerable economic difficulties, a legacy of the defunct imperial regime, the heir to former Emperor Bokassa is also piling up political blunders.

A few days after the trip made by the prime minister, Mr Bozanga, to Paris to affirm that the Central African chief of state was resolved to practice democratic openmindedness, the later adopted a fundamentally contrary attitude and attacked the opposition, certain elements of which he outlawed. Then giving a picture of confusion, he proclaimed a state of siege and called on the army, ruining even further the slim credit he appears to retain in Paris.

But if Mr Dacko's credibility is eroding, most of his political adversaries are not, for that matter, worthy of a guarantee of absolute respectability: not Francois Pehoua, a candidate in the last presidential election, who, as a former "protege" of President Dacko was disappointed at having been dropped by him, and has difficulty in overcoming his rancor and indulged in an overstatement which, it is said, "scandalized" the Elysee's inner circles; nor Ange Patasse, 11 times minister under the empire, the next-to-last prime minister of an abhorred regime, hastily converted to advanced socialist doctrine; nor Mr Maidou, an able politician, unfortunately for too long linked with the former sovereign; nor Idi Lala, who knows how to exploit, for his sole advantage, the disorders which he tries to provoke.

There remains a man whose rectitude no one will dispute, not even among his competitors: Dr Abel Goumba, the leader of the Ubangi People's Patriotic Front (FPO). Seventeen years of voluntary exile have kept him aloof from any compromise with an empire founded on corruption and nepotism. The way in which Dr Goumba, then in France, reacted to the Bangui assassination attempt which, on 14 July, left 3 dead and 27 wounded, attests to the dispassionateness of a leader who does not simply seek to replace Mr Dacko. Indeed, the Ubangi People's Patriotic Front is the only party whose chief has finalized a government program that is both coherent and specific.

It is not because of present circumstances that Dr Abel Goumba calls on the spirit of socialism. Already in 1958, when the Central African Republic was still only Oubangui-Chari and when Dr Goumba was the president of the Government Council of the territory, the latter, a renowned militant socialist, found himself for that very reason exposed to the harassments of the colonial administration. It is therefore not surprising that, of all the Central African opposition, Dr Goumba is, today, in Paris, the most credible. Unfortunately, he also appears to be singularly lacking in troops.

For all that, whatever may be the strength of the Elysee's sympathies for Dr Goumba had whatever the force of the pressures exerted in his behalf by the Socialist Party itself, the new majority does not intend to resort to the intervention weapon, which it always condemned during the time Mr Giscard d'Estaing used it readily. It is therefore up to Dr Goumba to obtain recognition by legal means.

FOREIGN PRESS CRITICIZED--Bangui, 8 Aug (AFP)--CAR Radio on Friday expressed strong opposition to the criticism being made against CAR politicians by the foreign press and called on all Central Africans to close ranks. In an editorial, Radio Bangui disclosed that sensationalist newspapers have been dramatizing certain daily facts in the country to the point of spoiling the reputation of some CAR politicians, regardless of their political leanings. This phenomenon, Radio Bangui went on to say, tends to give public opinion the impression that the Central African is incapable of ensuring the socioeconomic revival of his country by himself. Radio Bangui called on all Central Africans to close ranks, silence their passions and seek ways and means of consolidating the economic revival. The radio also stressed that all that endangers unity, peace and national harmony serves the purpose of small or big powers with expansionist aims. INTEREST OF PCT IN STIMULATING PEASANTS TO GREATER OUTPUT NOTED

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 601 18 Jul 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] As the ruling center of the Congolese people, the Congolese Labor Party [PCT] draws its strength from the broad working masses among whom the peasants stand out by virtue of a commitment never disowned in the course of our struggles for national liberation and scientific socialism.

On the other hand, the PCT, the party of workers and peasants, of revolutionary fighters and intellectuals, gives sustained attention to peasant reality. This interest is attested to concretely by the constant travels of the members of the political leadership to the interior of the country. The recent interregional journey of the chief of the Congolese Revolution, Comrade President Denis Sassou-Nguesso, is very meaningful in this respect. Almost a month spent with the peasants shows not only a concern for maintaining the bond with the peasants, but also a will for change, for a revolutionary transformation of the peasant world.

The objectives and stages of this transformation in depth are defined in the party's program.

Taking into account the dialectic connections between town and country, as well as the mandatory alliance of the workers and peasants in the revolutionary process, what is involved is achieving increased agricultural productivity, reducing the gap separating, since colonization, the city from the country, so as to speed up economic exchanges and slow down the rural exodus.

That is what is stipulated in the Congolese Labor Party's program; it is also the sense in which to interpret and understand the successive stays of members of the political leadership in our villages.

That is, consequently, the red thread which underlies the government party's action.

In its last weekly meeting, the Council of Ministers took a series of measures on behalf of our rural masses. Among these we note, with legitimate pride, the increased prices paid to the producers for a number of foodstuffs and agricultural products.

Twice in succession, in less than a year, the purchase prices paid by the specialized offices for the peasants' agricultural production have been raised; this fact should be pointed out.

This price increase is a way of encouraging greater work effort in accordance with the year's directive. It is also a material incentive, a true motor nerve for production which will induce the peasants to work more, in order to produce and earn more.

The production tasks assigned to the peasant world are heavy. The peasants, it so happens, have the mission of feeding the people, of producing for export and of supporting our country's industrialization.

Considering the peasant world's dominating place in the self-centered and self-dynamic development model, the promotion of a policy for the encouragement and participation of our peasant masses is fully indicated. It is one of the essential conditions for their full and complete integration in the current battles of the provisional program, a prelude to the more arduous battles of our first 1982-86 five-year plan.

NIGERIAN IMMIGRATION POLICY--The DAILY GRAPHIC takes up the announcement by the Nigerian Government to deport all illegal immigrants and those who have overstayed their permits. To the paper, every country has its own immigration laws and for security and other reasons, every country insists on visitors taking visas or resident permits even if the visits are for only 1 hour. The Economic Community of West African States, ECOWAS, it says, has succeeded in fixing the minimum number of days at 90 so that any citizen of ECOWAS can enter another country without visa. However, beyond that period, one has to showetse [as published] for overstaying or should have taken a prior visa or any ECOWAS member intending to stay longer than 90 days should go through the normal immigration procedures. To the GRAPHIC, Nigeria, being the biggest and richest ECOWAS member, appears to have the worst of her exchanges and played host to large migrant forces who enter as visitors but overstay their stipulated 90 days. The GRAPHIC says it is obvious that those who have offended Nigerian laws should be deported and there should be no misgivings about it. The paper, however, appeals to the Nigerian Government to ensure that its immigration and security agencies carry out the deportation order with care. RETURNING STUDENTS FROM CUBA, GDR RECOUNT EXPERIENCES

Recalcitrant Elements

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] "It is through our political line that we were able to keep burning the flame of our moral and cultural values and a conscientious and indefatigable attitude vis-a-vis our studies," Constancio Cossa, leader of one of the two groups of young Mozambican workers recently returned from Cuba and the GDR stressed. The groups had been sent to those countries to be trained in various technical specializations.

The organizational work conducted by these groups in all fields during their 2 years of training in Cuba and the GDR, the highly developed sense of discipline and devotion to studies constitute an example among groups of various nationalities, both from a behavioral and dedicational point of view.

As a result of the conscientiousness demonstrated by these groups vis-a-vis the task assigned to them by our country, 5 of the 17 workers who had traveled to Cuba were selected as monitors for the various fields of study and 10 of the 20 workers in the GDR continued their training in that country for an additional year and a half, in order to be graduated as monitors in the various specialties of agricultural equipment and heavy vehicle repair and maintenance.

Political Combat

"The first thing we did when we reached Cuba was to launch a political struggle to get to know each other, since we had never been together before and because we were sponsored by different organisms. Using our political line, we were able to conduct a strenuous battle against some activities that jeopardized our very personality," Constancio Cossa explained.

It was soon found out that from a behavioral point of view, there were workers who were conscious of the mission entrusted them and there were others who were losing touch with our political line because of their contacts with colleagues of different nationalities. A number of workers within the group began to imitate the values of other nationalities, alleging that "as long as they are also following a socialist line, there is nothing wrong with assimilating their values."

Constancio Cossa added that "it was within the framework of this struggle that we regrettably had to send two workers of our group back to Mozambique after 1 year in Cuba, having noticed that they were recalcitrant and were hurting the group's unity and cohesion.

The manner in which the Mozambicans organized themselves to take the courses offered merited the admiration of other national groups in Cuba. Aware of the difficulties ahead of them--there were 14 different fields--they organized themselves in study groups. This was very helpful, because each group had their leader who was in charge of each worker's study progress.

Simultaneously, monthly meetings were held to analyze each member's activities and to debate behavioral issues. The main objective of these meetings was to define ways in which to help those of the group who were lagging behind. As a result, the group's progress increasingly improved.

"Already during the second semester, school officials were looking at our group with admiration; gradually five of our comrades were selected to become monitors in various fields. While we did not compromise our principles and our personalities, our relations with other nationalities were on a satisfactory basis."

On the occasion of the second campaign for party structuring in our country, this group of Mozambican students in Cuba launched the process of selecting party members from among the students. A cell was created, as well as an OJM [Organization of Mozambican Youth] nucleus. These were the structures that guided political work within the group.

"We know that the enemy is attempting to discredit the idea of sending Mozambicans to Cuba, affirming that we go to that fraternal country only to harvest sugar cane and engage in other tasks of production. But in reality, we participate in various productive activities as an indispensable complement of academic training: this is the central activity," Constancio Cossa stated.

Mozambicans who went to the GDR conducted a different kind of activity that merited them the esteem of the popular masses with whom they were in contact. At the end of the agricultural mechanics and IFA [trucks] mechanics courses, the group was singled out as an example to be followed by the representatives of all the other countries studying in the GDR, not only because of their behavior, but also because of their devotion to their studies.

Highest Grades

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 8

[Excerpts] A young Mozambican in the Republic of Cuba received the highest grades in the intermediate course on scientific organization of labor during the academic year 1980-1981 at the Julian Grimau technical institute.

This distinction was won by Jeremias Domingos Francisco Alfandega, who received the highest grade among Sao Tomean, Angolan, Guinean, Beninese, Cuban and others of various nationalities.

The courses on scientific organization of labor and on industrial health offered at the Julian Grimau technical institute are sponsored by the Cuban state committee on labor and social security.

SUNKEN SPEEDBOAT'S CREW--One year ago today a speedboat for pilots sank in Maputo Bay. The causes of the accident were never disclosed, but it had been feared that the boat had sunk in the area close to the pilots' harbor bar. Search operations were conducted for more than 2 weeks, involving boats, helicopters and small planes, but no trace of the boat could be found. The national directorate of ports and railroads issued a communique yesterday in which it "expresses its deep regret about the death of the workers from the Maputo port pilot services." Members of the crew were Domingos Gomes Araujo, Anatoly Malenik, Afonso Carlos, Penha Alizardo Macia, Chilubane Zimbane and Luis Tinga. The communique praises the spirit of sacrifice of these workers and offers its condolences to the stricken families. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 3]

SUNKEN LEASED SHIP IRRECOVERABLE--The ship "Castle Glory" is practically irrecoverable. This was announced to our reporter by telephone early this morning. Our source in the city of Beira said that operations to salvage the ship's cargo have already begun. Helicopters from the Mozambican Air Force flew over the area to study the possibility of removing at least part of the ship's cargo. This operation is slated to begin today. EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTARIANS DEPART--"We are ready to exert our influence on the United States so that it accepts our proposals on Namibia within the framework of resolution 435," Martin Bangenman told our reporters. The delegation from the European Parliament left yesterday for Lesotho. Martin Bangenman and Ulrich Irmer will then visit South Africa, where the latter will hold talks with the Pretoria authorities. Bangenman, the leader of the liberal wing of the European Parliament referred to the importance of their visit to Mozambique because this country constitutes somewhat of an exception in the relations with the EEC. In relation to the Reagan administration's possible reluctance to implement resolution 435, Bangenman specified that his wing is ready to exert its influence so that it accepts their proposals. However, he excluded the possibility of a break with this administration. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 1]

PRESIDENT SAYS FOOD PRICES WILL HAVE TO BE INCREASED

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 4 Aug 81 p 14

[Text] Niamey, 3 Aug--Niger is soon going to be forced to bring its prices into line with reality and raise the price of cereals by at least 30 per cent, President Seyni Kountche warned here last night in a bleak message marking the country's 21st independence anniversary.

He said a drop in market prices for exported raw materials and the high value of the dollar meant that terms of exchange were the most unfavourable Niger had yet experienced.

The strong dollar led automatically to a rise in the value of the currency of neighbouring Nigeria, a major trading partner for Niger, he said.

Niger would "of necessity" be affected by unemployment, President Kountche admitted. But help from Arab countries, he added, would enable Niger to carry on with some development projects in the coming two years.

Urging realism and austerity, the President said that people in Niger should change their eating habits to make use of other cereals available on the market instead of asking only for millet, which had become expensive. In addition, the rains were late this season and millet harvests would be lower than usual, he warned. (A.F.P.)

FINAL RESOLUTION OF MEETING OF PS NATIONAL COUNCIL

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 27 Jul 81 p 8

/Excerpts/ The work of the PS national council was ratified Saturday shortly after noon with the adoption of a final resolution, the full text of which is published below:

The national council, meeting at party headquarters on 25 July under the chairmanship of Comrade Alioune Badara Mbengue, deputy secretary general, examined the agenda for the following day:

1)--Introductory report by Comrade Abdou Diouf, secretary general of the Socialist Party /PS/;

2)--Report on mass housing policy by Comrade Oumar Welle, minister of urban affairs, housing and environment.

Diouf, starting with a general survey of political activity, drew conclusions and gave instructions which were carefully noted by the national council in order to be taken into consideration in connection with the actions to be taken to make our party increasingly forceful, dynamic, and able to play its role in the organizing of the great majority of the Senegalese people, in the new national political context of complete party pluralism.

In this connection, the national council congratulated the secretary general for his perseverance in the matter of utilization of the funds coming from the special national solidarity levy, and in implementation of the law on illegal income.

With regard to our mass housing policy, his observations and proposals were given serious consideration, in the decisions of the national council.

The national council then heard the report on mass housing given by Comrade Oumar Wele, minister of urban affairs, housing and environment. The council paid particularly close attention, being aware of the importance of the subject under discussion, the level of development of a country often being indicated by its housing and particularly by the mass housing.

He noted in Senegal mass housing has constantly occupied a leading position in the elaboration of the various quadrennial plans, and the administrative authorities have always considered it of great importance. Today it still appears to be one of the fundamental options of our medium-term economic and financial recovery policy. Also, this mass housing policy has been cited as an example, and Senegal ranks high among the nations who have done the most in this field.

However, even though it is true that Senegal was quick to make the decision to take vigorous action to improve mass housing, and even though significant results have been achieved, it must nevertheless be admitted that we have only achieved 40 to 45 percent of our goal.

This situation is evidently creating a malaise, not only in the towns, but also in the rural areas. It is for this reason that the PS has decided to reconsider the question, in order to identify the weaknesses so as to correct them and redefine a new mass housing policy that will be more in accordance with the aspirations of our people.

The national council, considering that it is important to take a critical look at actions undertaken in the field of mass housing,

Considering that the SICAP [expansion unknown], since its creation in 1951, has built 10,158 housing units providing lodging for about 100,000 persons. Considering that OHLM [expansion unknown], for its part, has built 8,883 housing units holding about 90,000 persons since starting in 1960,

Considering that, unfortunately, these two enterprises have primarily been active in the towns, while the rural areas have not received more than 500 housing units,

Considering, moreover, that SICAP and OHLM, in the period from the 2nd to the 5th plan, respectively completed only 40 and 50 percent of their assigned projects,

Considering that the objective, which was to enable the most disadvantaged to acquire property as well as to eliminate gradually the shantytowns and anarchic occupancy, has not been attained,

Considering on the other hand that the BNDS [Senegal National Development Bank], whose efforts merit mention, has nevertheless been forced to scale down its involvement, because of the financial problems which beset the country,

Considering that at the same time "Operation Parcel Rehabilitation," which has been highly successful, has suffered a loss of momentum because of the same financial problems,

Considering, on the other hand, that in the context of subsidized construction the renovation of the old quarters quickly ran out of steam for financial reasons, but also because of the scarcity of available land,

Considering, finally, that as a whole construction of housing units by industry for its workers, or by trade associations for their members, or even by big businessmen desirous of entering the real estate field, has not been as successful as could have been hoped, primarily because of problems obtaining land or financial problems,

Considering that all these mass housing activities have been subjected to considerable delays in relation to demand,

Considering that today in the mass housing sector there is a grave crisis, caused by the reduction in our mass housing productive capacity, and by lack of habitable locations,

Considering that the crisis shows up in the proliferation of irregular occupancy and the irregular location of the old quarters, in the appearance of speculation exploiting the transfer or rental of mass housing, as well as the sale of land and finally in a growing disparity between our towns and our rural areas,

Considering the necessity of correcting this situation by the execution of the program established by the ministry of urban affairs, housing, and environment which envisions the construction of 15,000 housing units in the next 5 years, through SICAP, OHLM, the private entrepreneurs, and the rehabilitated parcels,

Congratulates the government for the achievements already accomplished in the field of mass housing and for its determination to resolve the grave crisis in this field,

Asks the government to undertake vigorous action to rehabilitate the mass housing sector, by means of a merciless war on land speculation and abuses in the sale of state lands or the national domain, as well as by a war on the uncontrolled occupancy of state lands and the national domain,

Urges the government at the same time to launch a catch-up operation in the building of mass housing, in hopes of overcoming, as quickly as possible, the quantitative shortage that has built up over the years,

Believes, in that connection, that it is necessary to increase the production capacity of the state land companies (SICAP and OHLM), to take measures to encourage private entrepreneurs, and finally to extend the "rehabilitated parcels" program to towns in the interior,

Is pleased that the government is reorienting its mass housing policy,

Approves, in that regard, the proposals made to orient mass housing toward the new demands of cost compression, consideration of the collective needs of each neighborhood unit, and finally, the quality and functionality of the housing units,

Congratulates the government for its determination to deal with the crucial problem of mass housing in our country, not only in Dakar, but also in the towns in the interior and in the rural sector,

Asks the government to study and to rapidly develop a program of rural housing responding to the needs of the people,

Expresses its concern, however, about the reduction in the financial resources available to the state companies and about the increase in the interest rate on the loans they are providing,

Asks the government to find new ways to make all the public bodies involved in mass housing (SICAP, OHLM, BHS /Senegal Housing Bank/) more effective,

Urges the government to take all needed measures to complete the 15,000 housing units in the medium term program established by the ministry of urban affairs, housing, and environment,

Encourages it to take the initiative with friendly countries and international institutions to obtain low-interest loans for the implementation of our mass housing program,

Demands that the SICAP and OHLM programs involve all regions and all departments,

Asks all militants to assist the public authorities in rehabilitating the mass housing sector, by denouncing swindlers wherever they originate,

Urges them to conduct an educational campaign in the countryside to enable the people to better focus their efforts in the field of mass housing,

The national council, considering the persistence of serious tensions, almost everywhere in the Third World which directly or indirectly involve the developed countries,

Considering in that regard the continuation of the Iraq-Iran conflict,

Considering the success achieved by the last OAU /Organization of African Unity/ summit which resulted in the strengthening of the cohesion of the African states,

Considering that the presence of Libyan troops in Chad does not permit a normalization of the situation in that country,

Considering that the great powers should show greater determination to resolve the Namibian problem,

Asks the developed countries to quit considering the Third World as a testing range in their rivalries,

Asks the OAU secretary general to take steps very rapidly to put an African peace force in Chad,

Notes with pleasure the measures taken at the OAU summit relative to the normalization of the situation in Western Sahara,

Asks the five western countries to take more vigorous action to find a solution to the Namibian problem,

Is pleased, in that connection, with the initiative being considered by West Germany to achieve a rapid solution in Namibia.

The national council,

Considering the recent actions undertaken by the government in the context of the medium term plan for economic and financial recovery,

Considering the careful preparations for the 1981 agricultural season,

Congratulates the government for its already effective implementation of the special hydraulics plan, as well as for its effort in the struggle against desertification, an effort which is being expressed through a vigorous reforestation program,

Declares itself pleased with the government's adoption of an austerity budget for 1981-1982,

Expresses its satisfaction with the decisions taken regarding the rural sector, particularly with respect to distribution of seed and basic provisions in addition to the cancellation of past debts,

Congratulates Prime Minister Habib Thiam and his government for the scrupulousness with which they have conducted the affairs of state in this difficult period,

The national council,

Considering the great success achieved by the president of the republic, Comrade Abdou Diouf, secretary general of the PS, during his recent visits to friendly countries,

Considering that these trips, in the present international situation, are a necessity for the development of our country, Congratulates Comrade Abdou Dious for the strong momentum he has given to governmental activity in every field for the success of the economic and financial recovery plan.

PDS MEMBERSHIP LOSSES--Mr. Papa Demba Diallo has left the Senegalese Democratic Party, which is at the moment the only parliamentary opposition to the ruling Socialist Party. He has decided to rejoin Mr. Mamadou Dia's Democratic and Popular Movement, which currently has no representation at the National Assembly. The Senegalese Democratic Party has recently lost a number of members to the Socialist Party, such that it is no longer considered a "parliamentary Group" and under the current constitution has little influence on the powerful committees. FRENCH REACTION ON GAMBIA--We must say that the events that have happened in Gambia have been known outside our borders for a while. The whole world considers the Senegalese Armed Forces' intervention perfectly legitimate. Here are the first reactions of our correspondents in Paris: It must be pointed out that no newspaper has condemned the Senegalese intervention in Gambia. All our colleagues have stressed the defense agreement concluded between Senegal and Gambia and which enables our country's intervention in Gambia. There is another reason which cannot be ignored: In fact, the French press commemtators believe that if, at a pinch, Senegal can accept an ordinary palace revolution in Banjul, it cannot--for obvious reasons--allow the establishment in Gambia of a hostile government which has affirmed right away the desire to set up a Marxist-Leninist regime. NEED FOR IMPROVED RELATIONS BETWEEN PATIENTS, ORDERLIES

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 28 Jul 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] In our issue of yesterday, page 4, there was an appeal which concerned the medical attendants of the hospitals in the country. This appeal which was issued by the party chairman for Masasi District, Manzi Mangochi, requested medical attendants to use good language when addressing patients in order to develop friendly relations between them and the patients.

Although the party chairman for Masasi District was addressing midwives and medical attendants who had completed their training, the appeal which he made is important for all medical attendants in our country.

It is a recognized fact everywhere in the world that good language to patients who require medical services usually helps greatly in giving the patients confidence in the medical treatment which they receive. If the patients are addressed in unpleasant language, they may give up hope, a matter which is not good.

In general our brothers who serve in our hospitals, dispensaries and clinics try to provide good service. But there have been complaints that a few employees reprimand patients in language which is not pleasing.

For example, some of the women who have given birth in our hospitals have been heard to complain how the medical attendants in the hospitals derided their women friends when serving them.

It should be borne in mind that some of the citizens who go to our hospitals to obtain medical treatment are not clever about many things. These citizens need to be directed and instructed in good language, not made to give up hope by sharp language.

To tell the truth it is not only good language which it behooves medical attendants [to use] but their behavior in general must be pleasing. This includes working with discipline and self-reliance.

In some of our dispensaries there is behavior which undoubtedly annoys citizens who go to these dispensaries to obtain medical treatment. This behavior is that of being kept waiting to obtain services because the person who was scheduled to provide these services is late in arriving at work.

This annoyance occurs especially when changing shifts in our dispensaries, between 0600 and 0800 hours and between 1900 and 2000 hours. The patients can arrive at the dispensary and see the doctor and be prescribed medicine, but they are hindered in obtaining medicine because the person who is scheduled to be at work is not at work. It would be appropriate to have a procedure for ensuring the progress of work without compelling the citizens to be disconcerted.

Citizens and we too must try to provide good cooperation with our medical attendants if the difficulty of their work is explained to us. If we expect good language and behavior to be provided by medical attendants, we who are being served must show respect and pleasing behavior with regard to our medical attendants so that their work may go well.

ANGOLA, ZAIRE, ZAMBIA BENGUELA RAILROAD AGREEMENT

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 4 Aug 81 p 18

[Text]

KINSHASA, Zaire, August 1 - Angola, Zaire and Zambia have reached final agreement on a plan to rehabilitate the Benguela Railway, a key export channel for Zambian and Zairian copper that has been crippled for five years by rebel activity in Angola.

The first phase of the plan - including procurement of new rail cars and other equipment - will cost an estimated 18.4 million dollars, which the three African states hope to get from international organizations.

Transport ministers of the three ended a meeting here yesterday by calling for an increase in traffic on the line which links Zaire's Shaba Province with the Angolan port of Lobito.

The railway was closed because of the Angolan independence war in 1975-76, but officially reopened in April 1979 after a three-way accord.

Still, traffic has been below capacity, and the UNITA guerrillas of Jonas Savimbi, who are fighting against the Luanda Government reportedly with South African support, are said to continue to sabotage the line from time to time.

The transport ministers expressed their satisfaction at the settlement of litigation, especially related to the former closure of Lobito port to traffic in transit, and at the fact that Zaire and Zambia had been able to get all their rail wagons back from Angola, which had been holding them.

Arabs and OPEC

Of the 18.4 million-dollar figure for the first stage of rehabilitation, cited by sources close to the Kinshasa meeting, a little over a third has already been provided by the European Economic Community and the United Nations Development Program.

In addition, Angola, Zaire and Zambia have solicited supplementary funds from the Arab Bank for Development in Africa and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the source said.

The transport ministers of the three African countries served by the Benguela line will next meet early in 1982 in Luanda.

Attending the Kinshasa session were Transport Minister Fernando Muteka for Angola, Transport and Energy Minister Rajah Kunda and Public Works Minister Haswell Yobe Mwale for Zambia, and State Commissar (Minister) of Transport and Communication Mushobekwa Kalima Wa Katana for host Zaire. (A.F.P.)

SOVIET-U.S. AGREEMENT SEEN KEY TO ANGOLAN-NAMIBIAN PROBLEM

Paris DEFENSE NATIONALE in French Aug-Sep 81 pp 167-170

[Article by Bernard Brionne: "Angola, Namibia: Two Facets of the Same Struggle?"]

[Excerpts] Angola's independence was proclaimed on 11 November 1975. Since that time, the fraction of the population which supports the MPLA, constituted for the most part by city mulattoes and "assimilados," has been unable to control the entire national territory or restore the economy. The country, which enjoys one of the most promising potentials in Africa, cannot feed its 7 million inhabitants, to whom must be added some 100,000 Zairian, Namibian and South African refugees, and has failed in relaunching industrial agriculture. Coffee production fell from 240,000 tons in 1974 to less than 80,000 tons in 1980; this was accompanied by a loss in quality which encourages competition on an often difficult international market. In the mining field, diamond production has reached again its prewar level, oil is still exploited by Western firms which have built a sort of "foreign forbidden cities," supplied from abroad (Gabon) and protected by Cuban detachments. However, the exploitation of iron and manganese ore has practically ceased. The government is counting on the resources deriving from the development of the oil industry to restore the economy, whose drop has been all the more felt since war activities had provoked an artificial and spectacular takeoff from 1960 to 1975.

Most of the difficulties encountered derive from the near total lack of cadre and qualified manpower, since the educated elements of the population left the country at the time of independence or are now occupying higher positions in the government, the administration and the people's army. Eastern-bloc countries provide technical assistance that is very difficult to quantify and is apparently poorly adapted to local conditions. In the field of security, 5,000 Soviets offer logistical support to the FAPLA, 2,000 East Germans are reportedly training police and intelligence organizations while also providing medical assistance. There are reportedly also Soviet cooperants in various sectors of the economy. The most significant assistance comes from Cuba: Many thousands of Cuban cooperants are employed in the fields of teaching, health and construction. To those must be added some 15,000 Cuban soldiers stationed in Cabinda and the main cities in the central and northern parts of the country providing a dissuasive military presence, notably by protecting transports. However, these Cubans reportedly do not take part in offensive operations against the various rebel movements; the Angolan people's army, trained, equipped and instructed by Soviet military cooperants, is supposed to undertake such operations, but has met with little success so far.

The government has understood--even before President Agostinho Neto's death--that the country would be unable to restore its economy without Western assistance. Already, it has appealed to many thousands of Portuguese cooperants in the field of agriculture and has never attempted to end Western aid in the exploitation and development of oil resources, without which the country would be unable to progress and even to survive. It even seems that the Soviets, sure of their political position and aware of their weakness in other fields, are counseling increased diversification in cooperation from abroad. This interesting opening, however, meets with two obstacles: oil resources have so far been used more to equip security forces and finance military operations than to provide solid bases for an economic development policy. Moreover, the MPLA-Labor Party in power in Luanda does not seem to offer great representativity so far. Unstable since President Neto's death, it remains dominated by mulattoes, who are a minority and too westernized to be accepted without reservations by the African population. The MPLA's internal constitution had justified, after independence, the reservations and opposition of the FNLA and UNITA, representing the northern Bakongo and central Ovimbundu respectively, with the latter grouping 40 percent of the total population. No strong personality can be perceived in a collegial leadership; the political bureau is mostly made up of mulattoes with a few Bakongos, but no Ovimbundu representation. It is true that, while Roberto Holden, the former FNLA leader, is living in exile in Paris, UNITA head Jonas Savimbi continues to fight on his tribal preserve against the MPLA domination, which he views as racist, and against "scientific socialism," which he believes is poorly adapted to local customs and conditions. The FAPLA's increasingly larger role in national life with the help of the Soviets, the less and less important part played by the Cubans--favorable to the mulattoes--in the struggle against the various rebellions, the lack of a "charismatic" personality at the head of the nation could well indicate that an evolutionary movement is brewing, with the establishment of a strong regime which could perhaps be more "African," and therefore more stable.

If this eventual renovated regime could put a stop to internecine quarrels within the MPLA, would it be able to ensure peace? It is difficult to tell. The Cabinda liberation movement does not constitute a genuine threat; in the Bakongo region, only remnants of the FNLA guerrillas can be found, and highway robbery is their only means of survival. However, UNITA is well implanted in the provinces of Huambo and Bie, along the Benguela railroad and has compelled the FAPLA to establish villages for the regroupment of peasants in order to cut them off from the guerrillas. This does not prevent Savimbi's forces from circulating freely over the entire Ovimbundu territory, which extends to the country's southeastern border. They reportedly have supply and training sanctuaries in the Namibian Caprivi strip. Pretoria had openly aided UNITA at the time of independence. It had later withdrawn support, hoping, no doubt, that Luanda, concerned with restive [illegible]s among the Ovambos--they live in southern Angola as well as in northern Namibia and militarily dominate SWAPO because they belong to Namibia's most numerous and expansionist ethnic group--would accept to control very closely this organization's activities on its territory. It was, however, difficult for a government that prides itself as representing a pure and hard revolution to consent to such an arrangement, no matter how discreet. It therefore seems that Pretoria, while attempting to reduce SWAPO's military potential through commando operations and bombings, has increased its support of UNITA. The objective sought appears to be twofold: succeed in obtaining the time to consolidate the establishment of an autonomous government in Windhoek, and prod Luanda into negotiating a good neighbor agreement with Pretoria.

In a sense, the struggle conducted by Luanda against UNITA and the support granted SWAPO are, if you will, two facets of the same struggle, that of the decolonization of an African territory, since Pretoria supports UNITA in order to compel Luanda not to protect SWAPO, recognized by the UN as the sole representative of the Namibian population. After a more exhaustive review, a different conclusion can be drawn: on the one hand, a decolonization war fought by SWAPO with the help of socialist countries; on the other, a civil war conducted by UNITA with aid that is not granted because of the justness of the cause this movement defends, but because it temporarily serves South Africa's interests in Namibia.

In reality, the Namibian and Angolan problems interlock, but are, in essence, quite different. In Namibia, it is necessary to know whether South Africa will obey the UN resolution ordering it to abandon its tutelage of a country entrusted to it by the UN itself to lead it to independence. In Angola, it is a question of knowing whether a government dominated by a minority faction and maintained in power only thanks to socialist forces can ensure that domestic peace which is indispensable for its economic development. The USSR apparently believes that the reverse is true, but it does not want to relinquish its political hold, and would accept Western economic aid in order to preserve it. Public opinion in the West is divided on this issue: Certain people believe that one does not have the right to let an entire population suffer because of its leaders' policies and that one should help the country overcome its economic difficulties; others think that a viable solution cannot be found to the Namibian problem as long as Luanda protects SWAPO's terrorist activities, and that it is therefore necessary to exert pressure for Luanda to agree to come to the negotiating table with Pretoria, given the fact that South Africa is charged with the responsibility of order in Namibia until the constitution of an independent government.

At any rate, it is difficult to affirm that the Angolan Government can have an influence on SWAPO's activities. This military organization seems to be trained and armed in camps Luanda does not control. Moreover, the FAPLA, now busy with other tasks, has abandoned the southern part of Angola, where SWAPO units freely circulate, benefiting from the help of a population whose ambitions they fire up. An agreement between Luanda and Pretoria, therefore, could have as its only practical result to deprive UNITA of external support and reinforce the position of the MPLA.

On the other hand, UNITA is too restricted by the fact of its narrow tribal base to be able one day to claim national representativity, even if the Ovimbundu ethnic group numbers almost half of the Angolan population. Order can only be restored in the interior of Angola through an agreement between the various parties which are the emanation of a certain tribal tradition. However, such an agreement could not be achieved if one of the parties enjoys the support of foreign troops.

SWAPO control, Namibian independence, restoration of order in Angola, no solution seems possible without a Soviet-American agreement, which can hardly be contemplated on the short or medium term.

BRIEFS

ERROR ACKNOWLEDGED--The ANGOP [ANGOLAN PRESS AGENCY] acknowledged on 12 August that it "erred" in issuing a "Franco-Angolan statement" 4 days earlier, at the end of the visit to Luanda by Messrs Penne and Debray, the two Elysee envoys. The ANGOP admitted that the text in question was, in fact, "a statement on the Franco-Angolan talks" made to the news agency by Mr Fernandes, secretary at the presidency for foreign affairs. GOVERNMENT VIEWED AS RELUCTANT TO DEMOCRATIZE COUNTRY

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3339, 27 Jul 81 pp 1694, 1695

[Text]

AFTER A grenade attack on a Bangui cinema on July 14, President Dacko banned certain opposition parties, arrested some opposition leaders and ordered a state of siege in the capital. The measures, coming so soon after a visit to Paris by the Central African Prime Minister, M. Simon Bozanga, during which he expressed his faith in the continuation of the multi-party system, has surprised French officials and caused some embarrassment.

Responsibility for the grenade attack, which killed one Frenchman and wounded several others, has been claimed by the Movement Centrafricain de Libération Nationale. In a letter from Lagos, the leader of the MCLN, M. Iddi Lala, suggested that this was only the first of a series of actions against the government. On July 18, the government announced the banning of the MCLN, together with the Front Patriotique led by M. Abel Goumba and the MLPC led by M. Ange Patasse, which is the most powerful opposition party in the country. Earlier the President had deplored the incident — as had two opposition leaders, M. Francois Pehoua and Dr. Abel Goumba. Controls at the frontier were stepped up.

Now it has been announced that M. Ange Patasse has been placed under arrest and that a state of siege has been imposed in Bangui. From Paris, there have been reports of concern on the degree of Libyan support for opposition groups and M. Patasse's brief reliance on Libya at the time of Bokassa's fall has merely fuelled the speculation in this context.

Paris has already expressed "surprise" at the vigour of the reaction in Bangui. A spokesman of the French Ministry of External Affairs condemned the attack on the cinema but also observed that Paris was asking itself what the implications of the government reaction might be.

The new government in France does not share the enthusiasm of its predecessors for the current set-up in Bangui. The visit to Paris by M. Bozanga was not a great success and subsequent events have contradicted his statements during the visit. He had "insisted on the democratic character of the current experience in Central Africa" and he expressed "the desire of his government to continue the democratic experiment." However, contrary to his wishes, M. Bozanga failed to meet with either President Mitterrand or the French Prime Minister, M. Pierre Mauroy. During the visit M. Bozanga also said that he wished to see the 1962 and 1975 co-operation agreements between France and the Central African Republic revised.

Of the 1,500 French troops in the Central African Republic, 400 are stationed at Bangui. The French government has reiterated that their primary role in complying with the co-operation agreements is to assist in the protection against external attack and in protecting French nationals. They are also responsible for training the Central African army.

The French government therefore finds itself in the invidious position of being identified with the current wave of repression by the Central African government. President Dacko has gone so far as to set up an emergency tribunal which will try arrested party leaders. They are charged with "instigation to disobedience, attempts against the security of the state, attempted murder and murder."

What is more worrying for both Paris and opposition parties is that the latest actions by the government appear to be a continuation of its reluctance to democratise the country. Legislative elections which were planned for shortly after the March 15 Presidential elections — in which President Dacko squeaked home with 53 per cent of the vote — have been postponed indefinitely.

The four candidates for the Presidential elections who lost have since formed a Provisional Political Council. They have accused the governing party, the Union Démocratique Centrafricain, of arming its supporters. They have alleged that senior civil servants not associated with the UDC have been made redundant and they accuse the President of muzzling the press.

CHADIAN MINISTERS END VISIT TO LIBYA

LD172143 Tripoli JANA in English 1850 GMT 17 Aug 81

[Text] Tripoli, 17 Aug (JANA)--The Chadian ministers of defence and the interior left Tripoli at noon today after ending a short visit to the Jamahiriyah.

Present at their send-off in Tripoli airport was the General Commander of the Libyan Arab Armed Forces Brigadier 'Abu Bakr Yunis Jabir.

Before leaving Tripoli, the Chadian minister of defence made a statement to our correspondent at the airport. In it, the minister said his visit bore positive results that have expressed the sincerity of revolutionary solidarity between the Libyan and Chadian people and the historic ties that have linked them over the ages.

He said: "We were warmly received by our comrades in arms and understanding prevailed on all topics discussed amongst us...."

He added: "Peace has returned to Chad after ther realization of victory with the aid of our Libyan brethren. Our problem now which requires the exertion of considerable efforts, is reconstruction...."

The Chadian minister said the butcher Hissein Habre and his renegades have been forgotten by the people. Habre, he said, is now a defeated man living in the shadow of the treacherous Numayri regime after having been forsaken by his own supporters.

The defence minister condemned the Sudanese ruler's policies and his aggressive attempts against the Chadian people.

He added: "Our relations with the Sudanese people are governed by total respect and optimism. Our differences will remain with the hireling Numayri only, as he is attempting, as a tool of American imperialism, to destabilize not only Chad, but the entire African continent.

BACKGROUND ON NATIONAL BUDGET GIVEN

London WEST AFRICA in English 27 Jul 81 pp 1699-1702

[Article by M.D. Njie]

[Text]

TAX PROPOSALS contained in the budget speech are the clearest indications yet that the financial year which began on July 1 will usher in an era of economic belt-tightening likely to last for at least a decade. It may not be a decade of extreme hardship but it certainly would be a far cry from the days when well-stocked shop shelves and easy access to luxuries were taken for granted.

An MP of the governing party said the increases in taxes/fees/duty affect "those who can afford them" but even a casual glance at the items affected shows the common man has in no little way been affected. The increases in the duty on textiles, cement, corrugated iron sheets and tomato paste are bound to hit the village dweller as much, if not more than, they do the supposedly well-to-do urbanite.

A feature of the changes as they affect vehicles is that in addition to the increases in the duty payable, a total ban is placed on the importation of vehicles more than four years old.

Already, the impact of the increases in the duty on fuel oils is beginning to be felt. Petrol station prices go up by 50 per cent with the result that a pint of high-grade (super) petrol costs D1.5. Increases of 33⅓ per cent in taxi fares have been sanctioned. It is fairly certain it would not be long before the transport corporation, biggest transporter of commuters, asks for permission to raise fares. Business had been exceedingly poor even before the increases in the cost of fuel oils.

'Unrealistically high'

Overall the budget provides for a surplus of D8,384,280 — revenue amounting to some D100,569,000 against an estimated expenditure of D92,184,720. Mr. Foday Makalo, of the opposition NCP, described the surplus as "unrealistically high for a country like The Gambia". Last year, the estimated surplus of just over D3.5m. turned out to be a deficit of some D11m.

With domestic output down and world recession approaching the 1929 level, the fiscal year 1980-81 was a particularly difficult one. For the first time in ten years the value of external trade, at D331m., declined in spite of a 10.1 per cent rise in the unit price of imports, the total value of which is put at D278.2m. With total exports falling by 36.4 per cent to D52.8m., the lowest since 1973-74, a record trading deficit of D225.4m. was registered. Petroleum products accounted for 14 per cent of imports when in the previous year they accounted for only 9 per cent. For the ten months ending April, 1981, imports of these products totalled a hefty D32.1m. The figure for the corresponding period last year was D20.6m.

Drop in groundnut production

The country's problems are a direct result of the sharp drop in agricultural output over the past four years. In the four years beginning 1973-74, the average production of groundnuts was 132,000 metric tonnes: for the four years ending 1980-81, the average was 78,000 metric tonnes. Consequently the GDP originating from agriculture fell to D87.7m. during the year from D98.5 in 1979-80 and D127 in 1978-79. Actually, there was a fall in the GDP from all sectors, except transport services, construction, real estate and financial institutions, in response to the fall in the agricultural sector.

That the national reserves declined is not surprising in a settin, ike this. Add to that the liberal trading policy which places few restrictions on imports, and the decline becomes understandable but not necessarily justifiable. Matters came to a head when, around the beginning of 1981, firms and other importers found, to their great costs, that monies paid into banks here for onward transmission to creditors were not reaching their destination ·il months after. Rumours of balance payments difficulties and reserves declining to perilously low levels then began to circulate. How alarming the position became was spelt out by the Finance and Trade Minister, Mr. S. Sabally, when he said a really dangerous level was reached in January. Even in April when, he said, they had improved to reach their level of the previous year, they were only sufficient to pay for a month's imports!

Much relief was provided by monies coming in from external sources. D13.68m. was received from the EEC as a Stabex grant. From the IMF there was D775,388 as the country's share from the gold sales; D751,944 from the Trust Fund Loan Facility; D2.1m. representing what is called "the third basic periodic allocation"; D20m. from the Compensatory Financing Facility and D6.8m. from the Islamic Development Bank.

In addition to these amounts, the IMF is to provide funds, over a three-year period, under its Extended Fund Facility. These funds would be utilised partly to meet immediate external commitments and partly as a base for the stabilisation of the reserves.

'Close supervision' by IMF

As all developing countries know to their great discomfort, the provision of IMF funds is not without strings. The Gambian economy will now come under "close superivision", a euphemism for a degree of external control. The minister has already said that "necessary corrective measures" are being taken. "The foreign reserves," he said, "are being carefully monitored by government in collaboration with the Central Bank. We cannot allow it to deteriorate further. In fact we must build up reserves to more comfortable levels for trade to function smoothly."

This is a clear signal that, liberal trading policy notwithstanding, there will be restrictions on imports. (The former Finance Minister, Mr. Cham, presenting the 1980-81 budget, hinted very strongly at the possibility of import controls.) The minister also said that the development programme will be tailored to the country's current financial position. This means some projects will have to be put off, if not abandoned.

The obvious, though somewhat unpleasant, conclusion is that public expenditure would be reduced. Considering that the public sector is the largest employer, one would expect an upturn in the level of unemployment. Not that unemployment has reached unmanageable proportions. Indeed the country's track record in this field is nothing to be ashamed of. But clearly unemployment having risen by 5 per cent during 1980-81 when the state had a record number of people on its payroll, the prospects of a cutback in government activity cannot be encouraging.

Predictably, the Minister had to do something to reduce the impact of his tax measures on the citizenry. To the farmer, he gave an appreciable rise in the cost of produce. Thus the producer price of (ordinary) groundnuts goes up by D40 to D500 per tonne while a tonne of phillipiine pink groundnuts would fetch D560 instead of D517. The price for paddy rice is increased from D463 to D510. Civil servants and other salary and wage earners will benefit from an upward revision of salaries and allowances "in the course of the next financial year" i.e. July, 1981, to June, 1982.

Addressing a post-budget dinner organised by the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Sabally told his audience that he would take a second look at the income tax structure which, he is reported to have said, is among the highest in our part of the world.

Total development expenditure for 1981-82, the first year of the second development programme is, at D70,899,500, some D9m. less than the revised expenditure of D79,634,102 of 1980-81 which itself is much less than the original estimate of D86,247,000 for the year.

Projects are slowed

The reason for last year's drop in expenditure can be found in a report by the Economic Planning Minister, Dr. Momodou Manneh, to the first meeting of the National Development Council on April 15. He said then that both internal and external economic conditions were so negative that implementation of projects had, perforce, to be slowed.

Though official circles express a measure of satisfaction at the rate of implementation of the first plan, given the economic conditions, no secret is made of the belief that much more could have been achieved.

According to Dr. J. A. Langley, Permanent Secretary at the Economic Planning Ministry, a carefree attitude coupled with the absence of trained supervisors contributed in no small way to poor implementation in the rural areas. Two months ago, he said that in the absence of enough local manpower, it was necessary to recruit expatriates as supervisors and consultants with the result that millions of dalasis had to be spent on this alone.

Estimates of development receipts for 1981-82 is put at D68,156,000. Much of this would come from external sources, the very uncertain nature of which sources was hinted at by Dr. Manneh, when he told the Council in May that "the OECD countries on which we depend for external assistance to a large degree" are hard-hit by economic problems". As would be the case throughout the five-year period, the first year of the second development programme will emphasise agriculture, in particular the production of food crops. Fisheries and the construction of the regional bridge/barrage on the River Gambia are on the priority list.

The performance of parastatal organisations in 1979-80 was a mixture of satisfactory, less satisfactory and disappointing.

True to its record, the Gambia Ports Authority recorded profits, though less than those of the previous year. The Gambia Utilities Corporation was no more successful during the year, with losses standing at D2,246,508, much of the blame for this going to increased cost of fuel, load shedding resulting in lower revenue and costs of repair to overutilised equipment such as generators. The Public Transport Corporation was also the victim of oil price rises and lack of spare parts which severely affected the schedules of movements.

The Gambia Produce Marketing Board, for long the flag-bearer of successful trading, suffered a loss of D16m. This is understandable because of the unprecedented fall in the production of groundnuts and the apparently limitless calls on the Board's funds by Government.

The National Trading Corporation suffered a decrease of 80 per cent in its gross profit. There was also a decrease of some 10 per cent in its turnover — from D19,937,670 in 1979 to D17,934,792. The final total loss for the year was D3,28,725 as against a loss of D616,526 the previous year. A considerable change occurred in 1980-81 thanks to a reshuffle of top management. For the nine months ending March, 1981, the gross profit stood at D1,642,000 and net profit at D359,000. Moreover, the liquidity situation improved to the point that bank overdraft was reduced by almost D2m.

The profits of the Commercial and Development Bank fell to D306,211 but encouraging progress was registered in statutory reserves and general reserves which stood at D1.5m. and D1.33m. respectively.

Pensions Board surplus

Other success stories are the State Pensions Board which, as at June, 1980, had a surplus of about D2.4m.; the National Insurance Corporation which raise its net profit from D141,029 to D414,087 '9 and the Central Bank which was able to appropriate D2.5m. to Government from its D3m. profit.

In the industrial sector, manufacture of brick is receiving greater attention with plans to establish a factory at Basse and a joint Government/UNDP/China project to establish a semi-mechanised pilot brick production project in the urban area. Bricks from these projects are to be used to build demonstration houses and offices over the next three years.

This year will see the start of work on the much talked-of Darsilami Salt Works while a modern soap and detergent factory will be established at Kanifing.

The fishing industry continues to occupy attention. The Ministry of Water Resources is engaged in negotiations on the establishment of a government-owned fishing company. The fisheries project has had commitment of participation from the African Development Bank and the Islamic Development Bank, and an official delegation will soon be going to Norway in connection with the project.

Although the average yield per hectare of cotton had fallen, its expansion and production will continue if only because of its potential as a supplementary cash crop to groundnuts.

Gambian cattle came under increasing external attention during the year. The "Ndaama" breed, with a high degree of resistance to trypanosomiasis, is in great demand. The Nigerian Federal Livestock Department has entered into a contract for the purchase of 5,000 breeders over a five-year period, and last month Gabon contracted to buy an undisclosed number of Gambian cattle. External sales of cattle brought in D1.5m.

The lack of success in the joint venture by the American company Chevron and the French Total in the search for oil and gas in the coastal waters has not dampened the enthusiasm of the Gambian authorities. The minister told Parliament that an exploration licence for the continental shelf area was granted to Elf Aquitane (Gambia) Ltd., in March, 1980, and a month later a topographical survey "to locate beacons for the radiolocalisation system that would be utilised in the later shallow water seismic survey . . ." was carried out. Six hundred thousand kilometres of seismic lines have so far been shot. An area, of 4,000 kilometres, covering the licence area, have been aeromagnetically surveyed.

BRIEFS

MAY IMPORTS--The value of imports for May this year has been put at D18.06 million, a little over D5 million than in April, provisional figures released by the Central Statistics Department reveal. The figure for May this year is D4.20 million less than May last year. Provisional figure for export is put at D6.25 million compared with the figure for April which was D7.82 million. The value of exports for the month saw a decrease of D8.59 million when compared with the corresponding month last year. These figures indicate a deficit in the recorded trade in May of some D11.82 million. Food and live animals, mineral fuel, lubricants and related materials, machinery and transport equipment form the three biggest items of export, while groundnut oil accounted for over D3 million of the total export value of D6,246,000. BUMPY ROAD AHEAD SEEN FOR MERGED PARTIES

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3339, 27 Jul 81 pp 1702-1704

[Article by Ansah Barnor]

[Text]

A SERIES of defections have hit Ghana's five minority political parties, less than a month after announcing on June 23 that they have resolved differences that had hampered efforts to unite them into one political party for the 1983 Parliamentary elections and the 1984 Presidential.

These defections — as well as the political stature of the defectors — are beginning to disturb the leaders, although for public consumption, they are dismissing them as "mere political gimmicks". However, at a time when the minority parties are trying to make an impact collectively on the Ghanaian electorate, these developments are not being taken lightly by their middle and lower ranks.

Their troubles began last month when after a long period of silence — or stalemate — the leaders announced in a terse communique that they have overcome a wide range of differences that had since February, 1980, hampered attempts to merge the five into a "viable alternative government" to the ruling People's National Party (PNP).

That announcement, coming in the wake of a threat by youth wing leaders and their various student groups to impose a leader from outside if they failed to revive stalled talks leading to a merger, expectedly shied away from the single issue that is bound to make or break the merger: leadership.

The parties are the Ashanti-dominated Popular Front Party (PFP), the United National Convention (UNC), which provides a forum for the right, the centre and the liberal left, the Action Congress Party (ACP), considered by critics and opponents as "regionalist" having won its 10 Parliamentary seats in the mainly Fanti-speaking Central and Western Regions during the June 18, 1979, General Elections, the Social Democratic Front (SDF), a splinter group from the PNP (Ghana's Vice-President Dr. J. W. S. de Graft-Johnson and Nana Okutwere Bekoe, the PNP national chairman, were paid-up SDF foundation members before the split over ideology) and the Third Force Party, which failed to win a single seat in the 1979 elections and which conducts its rallies and campaigns in the state-owned mass media.

The leaders who signed the June 23 communique were Mr. Victor Owusu (PFP), Colonel F. G. Bernasko (ACP), Alhaji Ibrahim Mahama (SDF) and Dr. John Bilson (TFP). Mr. William Ofori-Atta, national chairman of the UNC which once formed an alliance with the PNP, did not append his signature on the communique.

Compromise proposal

Since there was apparently no agreed choice of a leader at the end of negotiations, the 10-member working committee evolved a method for the selection of a leader: a 150-member Electoral College. Membership of the Electoral College would be in proportion to the individual party's showing at the 1979 elections apart from 10 nominated members from each party.

This arrangement would give this seat distribution on the Electoral College:

Parties	Seats
PFP	57
UNC	38
ACP	25
SDF	16
TFP	14

This was a compromise proposal submitted by the minor parties after heatedly rejecting the PFP's plan, which sought to add each party's parliamentary seats to its seats on the Electoral College; this would have made Mr. Owusu the absolute winner and leader.

It is this compromise arrangement that has sparked off the defections; the most significant "criticism" is the thunderous silence of Mr. Ofori-Atta, who is also Chairman of the Council of State, and the person on whose shoulders the cohesiveness, the unity, the image of gentlemanly-politics of the UNC rests. He has neither welcomed nor condemned the merger. Mr. Ofori-Atta, affectionately called Paa Willie, apparently sees in the UNC leaders, at least in those who abrogated the PNP-UNC alliance, a mix of contradictions and paradoxes. His silence seemed to be asking, why kill a working relationship (alliance) which at best never threatened the identity of the UNC and at worst seemed somehow lop-sided, a situation that could be justified by its parliamentary seating strength, and enter into another alliance which certainly obliterates the UNC?

Denunciation of merger

Down the UNC middle rank, Mr. N. N. Heward-Mills, and Mr. David Lamptey, parliamentary candidates for Ashiedu Keteke and Avawaso, respectively, in the last general elections, have denounced the merger. Mr. Lamptey, who polled 7,000 against the PNP candidate's 9,000, joined the PNP, taking with him the entire Avawaso Constituency Executive.

The SDF, too, has not been spared. Professor Mawuse Dake and Dr. Ansa Asamoah, the Deputy Leader and the Deputy General Secretary, have hotly denounced the merger. Professor Dake, the SDF vice-presidential candidate in the 1979 elections, says the merger "is a sell-out by the leaders . . . for their self-aggrandisement, a further proof of some few self-conceited persons to champion their lust for political power".

Professor Dake, Nairobi-based Project Co-ordinator of UNESCO's Centre for African Network for Scientific and Technical Integration, says the whole merger is irrelevant because the merged parties cannot honestly claim to be the most viable alternative force to the ruling PNP. He says there should have been consultation, a consensus, among the rank and file of all the parties before striking a merger.

Others hold the belief that the merger will revive the spectre of tribal politics that has characterised politicking in Ghana. The Ashanti-dominated PFP, it is assumed, in a merger with their Fanti-speaking ACP cousins — both come from the Akan tribe — would pose a threat to the rest of the ethnic groups in Ghana, particularly the Ewe-speaking people from the Volta Region, the Gas in Greater Accra and the politically emergent Northern and Upper Region peoples.

Less emotional, but nevertheless serious sentiments, are being hawked. Nii Amaa Amarteifio, who intensely opposed the late General I. K. Acheampong's Union Government concept, says the minority parties must not go the way of the Janata Party in India. Their sole objective should not be to defeat the Government in power only to find that they have nothing else to agree upon. Nii Amarteifio, a leading member of the UNC, says that in the election of a leader, no one leader with money should be allowed to buy the Electoral College and grab that post.

In spite of the mixed reaction Mr. Owusu told a rally that if the merger succeeds its Government would be able to achieve in one year what the Limann administration would take eight years to attain. He told the rally, at which representatives of the other parties were present, that the leaders had decided to merge because the danger ahead of Ghanaians was so apparent that the minority parties had sunk their differences to avert the situation.

Areas of discord

There are undoubtedly still areas of discord. The PFP, for instance, has openly stated that it believes in capitalism, the UNC is a middle-roader, a liberal party, so to speak; ACP is in the same boat with the PFP; while the SDF believes in undiluted socialism, as espoused by Dr. Kwame Nkrumah. The PFP, with its 40 seats in the 140-member parliament, is demanding key ministerial posts in a future government, like Foreign Affairs, Defence, Finance and Economic Planning, as well as Interior (which deals with internal security) plus the most important, the Presidency.

It says it has the funds to back up its demands for these posts. This is true, but the funds are not in the name of the party, large portions being held in various assumed named in bank accounts, since the country's constitution forbids an individual contributor giving more than ₵1,000 to a political party, wealthy businessmen and traders handed over funds, estimated at ₵10m., to a leading PFP member.

The ACP and the UNC counter these claims with the argument that the PFP is in serious disarray over the leadership of the PFP itself and of its parliamentary group — notwithstanding a High Court ruling — with the expulsion of Mr. Kwaku Baah, its MP for Nkawkaw (Eastern Region) and the ex-parliamentary leader, and Mr. J. H. Owusu-Acheampong, the MP for Berekum (Brong Ahafo) for showing gross insubordination to the PFP leadership.

Even with the merger now agreed, achieving cohesiveness and eventually defeating the PNP in 1983/84 remains a long shot. The odds are heavily stacked against the floundering minors. It will take them at least a year to select a leader. This leader, whoever he might be, will need at least 18 months to two years to make a national impact — by which time the organisational prowess, combined with the formidable Kwame Nkrumah legacy, might have catapulted the PNP into four more years of power. The next elections in 1983/84 might turn out to be a massacre, which in the long run could pose a threat to democracy in Ghana.

NIGERIAN 'AID MECHANISM' SEEN LIABLE TO HELP ECONOMY

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3339, 27 Jul 81 pp 1705-1709

[Article by Tetteh A. Kofi]

[Text]

EXCEPT for oil-rich Nigeria, most of the countries in Black Africa stand on the verge of political and economic collapse. The inability to earn enough foreign exchange, through exports, to meet basic import demand is one of the factors accounting for the economic difficulties in these countries. For most of them, export earnings have been falling due to stagnant demand and deteriorating terms of trade. At the same time import bills have been rising due to sharply-rising oil costs, food imports and debt-service payments. For example, nearly 25 per cent of Kenya's export earnings are swallowed-up by oil imports. Ivory Coast debt service is about 25 per cent of GDP. Zaire's trade deficit is over $300m. The huge trade deficits faced by most black African countries are the result of this combination of rising food and oil import prices and debt-servicing. Perhaps Ghana faces the most acute form of foreign exchange crisis.

The London Financial Times, May 13, 1981, described the economic situation in Ghana as follows: "Supermarket shelves are bare but in a state-owned Accra hotel champagne is on sale for £36 (₵220) a bottle; outside the capital, petrol is scarce but in the city a new Mercedes sits in a solid traffic jam with one tyre in a pothole; in a local market, traders offer a loaf of bread for more than the official minimum daily wage." (Section III, Financial Times Survey.) The market (free enterprise) system in Ghana has failed. The cedi is overvalued ten-fold and the black market rate reflects international prices.

The Ghana economy has collapsed. It has lost all of its internal correcting mechanisms. Skilled workers are leaving the country in droves — university professors, high school teachers, mechanics. Low wage workers, at present, are not starving to death because of the practice of sharing income — a vestige of African pre-capitalist communalism. This cultural practice will soon disappear as real incomes continue to fall, under perverse capitalist development. Corrupt practices have become part of normal business transactions. The government, unable to collect enough local taxes to pay for its expenditure, has recourse to the printing of more money. Financing development projects by printing more money fuels the rate of inflation, currently running at 150 per cent yearly.

Destruction of cocoa sector

Corruption, mismanagement and inappropriate development strategies have all contributed to the collapse of the Ghanaian economy. For example, the cocoa sector has been destroyed by over-taxation. The government over the years has set prices paid by the Cocoa Marketing Board for the farmers' produce at levels way below the ruling international prices. The farmers have had no incentive to increase output. Production has fallen to half of the 1964/1965 level and Ivory Coast and Brazil have overtaken Ghana as the leading producers of cocoa. The parasitic elites in the urban centres have killed the goose that laid the golden egg. Productive farmers have been overtaxed to pay for the rising conspicuous consumption pattern of some city dwellers. The farmers have responded by not producing cocoa. The economy is unable to increase production of traditional exports to earn enough foreign exchange to meet the consumption patterns of the parasitic elites. Under this condition, the economy cannot be restored to sanity by simply eliminating corruption and mismanagement. A way must be found to create the necessary incentives for the productive class — the farmers — to produce for export. Even if a way is found, and that is a big if, the Ghana economy needs a breathing space to implement the necessary policies.

Oil imports consume about 40 per cent of Ghana's annual export earnings; food imports and debt-servicing take up a chunk of what remains. Thus, little or no foreign exchange is available to import necessities — medicines, raw materials and other finished goods. Since we do not see any massive aid coming from any quarter to salvage the economy, a way must be found to reduce expenditure on oil imports and debt-servicing. For the past two years the Ghana government has been meeting its debt obligations with the hope that investors will have confidence in Ghana's new leadership and bring in new investment. International investors have not responded. At the same time, creditors have been pressing the government for the loans to be amortised on schedule. It seems that, short of outright grants from friendly countries, the only way out is for the Ghana government to seek an aid mechanism which provides a grace period for payment on oil purchases. This amounts to between $400m. and $600m. Nigeria is one of the few countries which can provide such an aid mechanism. I am, therefore, proposing that the Nigerian government provide an "aid mechanism" similar to those which Mexico, Venezuela and Trinidad have been providing for certain Caribbean countries. I will explain later that it is in the economic interests of Nigeria to provide such an aid mechanism to Ghana and, perhaps, to other countries in the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

Aid mechanism for Caribbean countries

The aid mechanism provided by Trinidad and Tobago for the Caribbean countries is different from that provided by Mexico and Venezuela. The aid mechanism of the former began in 1978 under the stewardship of the Caribbean Aid Council (a modest loan programme had begun earlier). Trinidad and Tobago made loan contributions to the Council to be disbursed to various CARICOM states. The loans were to be amortised on the basis of prescribed grace periods, low interest rates and agreed maturities largely in oil, fertiliser and asphalt. Loan approvals and disbursement under the facility were modest in 1978 and 1979. However, because of the new round of substantial price increases for petroleum products in 1979, Trinidad and Tobago forged a new approach for increasing aid to the region:

> "The facility had been structured to provide for the financing of the incremental cost of petroleum products, fertilisers, and asphalt to eligible participants, i.e. member states of CARICOM . . . The proposals limit financing to the incremental cost, since the objective is to assist eligible states to cope with balance of payments difficulties arising from the latest round of increases in the price of petroleum products which started in early 1979."

[Trinidad and Tobago had already contributed to financing balance of payments shortfalls associated with the major oil price increases in 1974. In the period 1974 to 1976, balance of payments support loans to three CARICOM states totalled $340.8m.]

Trading partnership

The "Energy Co-operation Programme for Central American and Caribbean Countries" was established by Venezuela and Mexico on August 3, 1980. The aid mechanism was explained in a joint statement made by the presidents of Mexico and Venezuela:

> "Venezuela and Mexico will undertake to supply the net domestic oil consumption of imported origin in countries of the area, allocating for that purpose a total volume of up to 160,000 bbl/day, and will also contribute to the corresponding official financing . . . The supplies provided by Mexico and Venezuela under this programme shall be made available by each country in accordance with its usual commercial policies and practices, including those related to available qualities and prices on their respective international markets. Venezuela and Mexico, through their official financial entities, shall provide loans to the countries under this programme amounting to 30 per cent of their respective oil bills for a five-year period and at an annual interest rate of 4 per cent. Nevertheless, if the funds derived from these loans are invested in economic development projects of priority interest, especially those related to the energy sector, such funds could be converted into other loans of up to a 20-year period and at an annual rate of 2 per cent."

Ghana is an important trading partner of Nigeria within the ECOWAS. If Ghana's economy continues to deteriorate, Nigeria will not be able to trade with Ghana. The economic text books tell us that trade is an engine of growth In a recent article, "The Slowing Down of the Engine of Growth" (American Economic Review, 1980), Arthur Lewis argued that the developing countries can no longer (at least in the foreseeable future) rely on increased growth of imports by the developed countries to sustain and generate economic development. The only avenue available to the LDCs to accelerate growth and development at a time when the traditional engine of growth has slowed down is for the LDCs to increase trade among themselves. Thus, it is in the economic interests of Nigeria, with a huge potential to export to the ECOWAS countries, to help resuscitate economic growth in the ECOWAS states whose economies are in the throes of collapse.

Nigeria can afford to offer an aid package, similar to those offered by Mexico, Venezuela and Trinidad/Tobago, to Ghana without affecting her economy adversely. The value of Ghana's oil purchases from Nigeria are a very small fraction of her total sales worldwide. The International Herald Tribune, May 22, 1981, reported that Nigeria has cut its oil output by 20 per cent since the beginning of this year. This is because buyers could not be found to purchase Nigeria's high-priced oil (up to $40.2 a barrel). Nigeria could, therefore, provide oil to Ghana because her supply exceeds the demand. Indications are that Nigeria is not under pressure for foreign exchange.

Can Ghana pay back any soft loans granted indirectly through Mexico/Venezuela/Trinidad/Tobago-type aid mechanisms? The answer is yes. This type of aid mechanism, if granted with about five years of amortisation grace period, will release about 40 per cent of Ghana's annual export earnings to be used to resuscitate the economy.

Common historical heritage

As to why Nigeria should help Ghana out of her endemic economic crisis, both countries share a common historical heritage and common economic structures of underdevelopment. It may be inferred that Ghana is the first African country to have experienced hyper-inflation generated by a special type of structural disequilibrium in its economy: a westernised consumption pattern demand base under a declining agricultural export supply base. The Latin American structuralist school of thought see inflation as an inevitable, yet undesirable, symptom when a third world country embarks on an adequately large development effort. The African economies may be more prone to the structural inflationary process and underdevelopment: the African economies seem to have experienced relatively more structural and institutional dislocation than Latin American countries under colonialism: the survival of archaic traditional institutions tend to create agricultural bottlenecks; total national exports are based on a few commodities whose prices undergo large fluctuations, thus annual export earnings fluctuate widely from year to year. An economy with such a structure is prone to inflationary tendencies if the demand curve continues to shift outward. We may provide a structural explanation of Ghana's economic difficulties.

Coming of inflation

Inflation, rising prices, results when aggregate demand exceeds aggregate supply. In Ghana, the consumption patterns became progressively westernised during and after the colonial period; currently, demand for imports far exceeds the ability of the country to earn foreign exchange to pay for them. Since foreign exchange constrains the level of imports to meet demand, inflation is the natural result. At the time Ghana gained political independence, about two decades ago, the seeds had been sown for inflation — aggregate demand was greater than supply. The inflationary impact was not immediately felt because the government inherited substantial amounts of foreign exchange reserves (these reserves were accumulated by the Marketing Board from the sales of cocoa), which were used to purchase imported items to meet the demand. When the foreign exchange reserves were used up under accelerated economic development projects, high rates of inflation began to be felt in the early 1960s and hyper-inflation in the 1970s and 1980s. Space does not allow me to provide detailed historical analyses of government policies which contributed to high rates of inflation. I will summarise my thoughts on this issue (for detailed analyses, see my paper: "Structural Interpretation of Inflation in Africa: The Case of Ghana", Economics Department, University of Notre Dame, Mimeo, April 1980).

The most serious problem facing third-world countries when they embark on large-scale development efforts is the structural implications of the demand shifts: the tendency of demand for imports to rise faster than export receipts. The baskets of goods demanded consists of capital goods, intermediate raw materials, food, oil, and finished household consumable goods. In the African case, current consumption patterns are conditioned largely by external forces — Western industrialised culture. Thus, a large percentage of the value of imports consist of unproductive finished goods (stereo components, wigs, etc.) and conspicuous consumption items (Mercedes-Benz cars, Dimple whisky, etc. We also do not seem to import the appropriate productive items. The productive capital goods, in some cases, are of the "inappropriate technology" types.

The capital intensive production methods in agrarian economies seems to create more structural dislocations in the economy. It is at times not clear if the capital intensive production methods benefits the society as a whole. For example, several studies have shown that capital-intensive farms compared to traditional peasant farms are profitable from the private point of view but not from the public point of view. This is because of government subsidies which range from over-valued exchange rates which make modern inputs — tractors and fertilisers, etc. — appear cheap. The capital-intensive farms, in most cases, are inefficient from the public point of view. Thus the capital-intensive farmers reap high financial returns but at a high cost to the economy.

Thus, in African-type economies the composition of demand is very important to the development process. My hypothesis is that Ghana is the first African country to have experienced the negative effects of a specific level of "demand composition" determined, to a large extent, by Western consumption patterns. All African countries will experience the inflationary problems affecting the Ghana economy as they attain specific Western cultural levels of the "demand structures". The correlation between this type of demand structure and specific levels of inflation differs from country to country, since levels of export receipts differ. The cultural levels of the demand composition are determined by several factors, including: (1) the nation's propensity to consume imported goods; (2) distribution of per capita income attained during the colonial regime; (3) the percentage of the working labour force in the service sector; and (4) when and at what level of intensity industrailisation projects have been implemented. Ghana was one of the first African countries to emulate western culture. Ghana enjoyed one of the highest per capita incomes during the colonial period.

Ghana as a workshop

The basic problem in the Ghanaian economy is that aggregate demand exceeds supply; this is the main cause of her high rates of inflation and underdevelopment. The consumption pattern has been developed over a long period of time and it cannot be changed overnight. Given this basic problem together with the fact that the Ghana economy has collapsed, what strategies may be used to revive the economy? Other African countries may draw lessons from any feasible strategies that Ghana may use to resuscitate her economy. I have explained about that Ghana needs a "breathing space" before it can implement a viable strategy to restore her economy to normalcy. These are the suggestions for the aid mechanism:

1. Nigeria may sell oil and oil-related products to Ghana to meet her net domestic needs at international prices. 2. The "aid mechanism" calls for Nigeria to provide loans to the tune of the sales that Nigeria has made to Ghana. Such loans may have a grace period of five years and thereafter interest will be charged at an annual rate of 4 per cent. The loans may be repaid over a 20-year period. 3. Ghana will use these loans to revive her economy. 4. Ghana must bring to the negotiation table a definite proposed plan or strategy for reconstruction of the economy.

If such an aid mechanism is implemented, Ghana will be forced to develop viable strategies to change her consumption patterns and development policies in general. Such an exercise will be useful to other countries who will face Ghana's problem in the near future; Nigeria may be one of these countries. Imagine Nigeria without oil to export in 20 years; aggregate demand will leap past supply and hyper-inflation will develop immediately. This will not happen if, and only if, Nigeria in 20 years' time could achieve a level of transformation to supply the rest of the world with non-oil products to pay for her imports. It has been estimated that by the year 2000 Nigeria will be consuming one-half of her oil production. Thus it is important that new export lines be opened up to compensate for decline in oil exports. Hopefully new export lines where Nigeria will have a comparative advantage will be found. This transition will not be smooth. Some difficulties similar to Ghana's present problems will be felt by Nigeria. Ghana, therefore, provides a workshop, a laboratory, in which solutions to African development problems may be tried.

PRESIDENT DISCUSSES DOMESTIC, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

Conakry HOROYA in French 31 May-6 Jun 81 pp 23-32

[Interview with President Ahmed Sekou Toure by FRG newsman; date and place not specified]

[Excerpts] FRG newsman: Mr President, do you see a danger of neocolonialism in our time, since the industrial countries, including the FRG, are increasingly looking for raw materials in Africa?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: One cannot speak of the danger of neocolonialism for Africa, because it has already suffered from it. This can only be characteristic of the industrialized countries, above all the former mother countries which had colonies on the African continent and which wanted, while adapting to the demands of the exercise of their sovereignty by the peoples of Africa, to maintain archaic structures, to eternalize their supremacy both on the economic and financial level. Now the former mother countries, desiring to maintain themselves at all costs, could show neocolonial tendencies. But the industrialized countries which had no colonies, which did not have supremacy over the economic, political and cultural life of Africa, could not logically be partisans of neocolonialism. These nations are not bound by any relations of hegemony or superiority with regard to Africa. Thus they would benefit, given the current situation on the African continent, from establishing relations of equality which would thus provide them with just and solid foundations for guaranteeing continuity for the interests they have on the African continent.

Thus we believe that in order to eliminate neocolonialism, it is the body of Europe and the entire West which should cooperate with the body of Africa, defining the goal of long-term cooperation in order to establish a true plan for the development of Africa on the basis of the cultural, scientific, technical and technological means of Europe, for example. Within this context, Africa too can provide Europe with either raw materials or finished or semifinished products--this would be the form of its contribution. In any case, if relations are established on the basis of equality and justice, they will be of a guaranteed continuing nature.

FRG newsman: Mr President, you said, and I quote "that technology and trade are neither socialist nor capitalist." Does this mean that ideology is not important for a country?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: No, ideology is important for a country, and for an individual. We would explain further that trade and ideology do not have absolute values. Ideology is a means; trade also is a means. The goal of the activity is the well-being, the happiness of the sociohuman body. The goal is to allow each individual to have the best conditions for the flowering of his faculties, for enjoying freedom and dignity, and to protect his physical, intellectual and moral health.

The act of commerce, as a procedure of trade based on respect for the interests of the partners, is neither capitalist nor socialist. By way of proof, there is indeed a vigorous flow of trade between the socialist countries and the capitalist ones, although there is no shortage of differences between these two groups! The essential thing is to have the most appropriate equipment for the development of the potential of our country. Whether we find it in Moscow, Beijing, Washington, Paris, London or Bonn, etc, it is in our interest to procure this equipment. Africa wants to develop. It can neither muzzle itself nor hinder its own movement. On the contrary, it must search in sovereign fashion for the means to achieve its development, but without violating its sovereignty, much less its dignity.

FRG newsman: Following this theme, I would like to ask you the following question, Mr President. You are socialist and thus it is perhaps a philosophical question. Is African socialism a form of Africanism?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: We rarely use the word socialism.

FRG newsman: Why?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: Because its definition is controversial because of the distorted usage of the term by its enemies. The term we use in Guinea is people's revolution. The people's revolution is the advance of man over what he has been, man's progress against the surrounding environment, the progress of the people in mastering nature and themselves.

FRG newsman: Mr President, will African unity be a reality one day, or is it already?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: It will become a reality one day. Currently, African unity is still in the stage of conception, although it has been materialized through the existence of the Organization of African Unity (OAU). But development is shaking Africa up! The demands of the defense are its gains, the dictates of its emancipation in its relations with other continents, the imperatives of its development are already constraining forces which weigh ever more heavily on the political thinking of Africans and which are leading them, in the economic realm for example, to commit the continent to a process of economic integration, and on the cultural level, to the development of its own culture. Today, the African languages are being taught in many African countries. Africa is currently mobilizing to pursue scientific research on African problems with a view to the mastery of science, while simultaneously obtaining from abroad all the intellectual resources which can contribute to the happiness and the advance of the African continent.

Thus we say that the foundations of this African unity are bound to strengthen. The future depends on the consolidation of the two foundations of African unity. Today, the United States of America is regarded as one of the largest material powers in the world, but let us never forget history: the people of the United States were also a colonized people, as were those of Africa. The United States freed itself. Happily for its own sake, it did not lose time. It immediately linked the struggle for unity with the struggle for political liberation. The United States of America was born of these struggles.

FRG newsman: Mr President, another question. What permanent solution do you see for Chad? Will it be independent as in the past, the division of Chad or union with Libya?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: In our view, one should not envision the future of a country other than on the basis of a single force, the people. The people are the highest point of reference, based on the free will thanks to which one can establish a guaranteed program of development. The people of Chad, like all the peoples of the world, aspire to unity, to respect for their territorial integrity, to the normal functioning of their national institutions, and thus to participation in the life of the African continent and the life of the world on a basis of equality with other countries, other peoples. Thus the future of Chad, the best guarantee, lies in respect for the freedom of the people of Chad, aid in resolving the material problems they encounter and which determine the welfare of the people, and guaranteeing the integrity of their territory, respect for the voice of the people of Chad through the national institutions with which it should be endowed--municipal organizations, the national assembly, etc, like any nation, any state--and the government. Let the national institutions function freely! We do not see any future outside of this.

FRG newsman: Mr President, South Africa is supported by the new government of the United States. What is the reaction of the African countries?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: We do not dare say that South Africa is supported by the new American government. Each must interpret the facts. For our part we would say that South Africa is supported by all those who do not support Africa in Namibia and who pursue a policy of tolerance, if not support, with regard to the racism in the Republic of South Africa. And there are many such. They are agreeable to freedom for Namibia, but, but, but! For freedom, there is no but! It is the indispensable wealth for an individual and for a people. It is indivisible. Without freedom, there is no dignity, there is no responsibility. And this is why we say that all those who do not place trust in Africa would benefit by placing their trust in it, since it is not the independence of Namibia which can put an end to the presence of foreign interests on Namibian soil. Our countries provide evidence of that.

In all these liberated countries, there are European, Asiatic and American companies and enterprises which are continuing to function and to develop. And why would this not be the case tomorrow in Namibia? This is why, beyond any judgment one might make of the policy of the American government, in which it is not alone, we would demand of all the nations of Europe, America, Asia and the Middle East to place confidence in Africa by helping Africa to free itself from the shame which the direct colonization and humiliation of the nonwhite peoples in the Republic of South Africa represent.

FRG newsman: Mr President, I would like to ask you a last question. How do you think the relations between our two countries, Guinea and the FRG, could be improved?

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: Relations can be improved although they are already good, because confidence has been reestablished. A joint political will has been identified, that of loyal cooperation in all realms. Now we can choose the goals of this cooperation, and we hope this will be done as soon as possible. In the economic sector, in the scientific sector, decisions can immediately be made and implemented. We have always said that the FRG represents for us an example of the mastery of technique and technology. When we realize that at the end of World War II everything in Germany, such as factories, had been destroyed, and that in a minimum of time the German people, whose conscience and capacity have not been destroyed, set to work, equipped themselves with one of the most powerful economies, we need this example to galvanize and dynamize the economic development of Africa in general and Guinea in particular.

We believe that if Germany can establish a true development plan with Guinea, and the minor barter trade, if it envisages the happy future of this cooperation benefiting the German people and the people of Guinea, this would in our view be the best choice. But it is necessary to have confidence in the people, in the future, and to commit ourselves with all the necessary dynamism to a project the social and human scope of which will be the further beyond challenge, the more the standard of living for the citizens of Guinea is improved.

FRG newsman: Thank you, Mr President.

President Ahmed Sekou Toure: Thank you, too.

NORTH KOREAN PRESIDENT SENDS TOURE FRIENDLY MESSAGE

Conakry HOROYA in French 14-20 Jun 81 pp 40-41

[Partial text of message sent by President Kim Il-song, secretary general of the Central Committee of the Korean Labor Party and president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, to President Ahmed Sekou Toure from Pyongyang on 6 June 1981]

[Excerpts] To his excellency Mr Ahmed Sekou Toure, secretary general of the State Party of Guinea and president of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea:

My dear and most intimate friend, Mr President:

With a view to further expanding and developing the excellent relations of friendship and cooperation currently existing between our two countries, and in order to put the commitments made between us into practice as soon as possible, I want to sent to your country a delegation representing the Democratic Party and the government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, headed by Comrade Pak Song-ch'ol, a member of the Politburo of the Central Committee of the Korean Labor Party and vice-president of the republic, and to send you my warm and fraternal greetings on this occasion.

The Korean people and the people of Guinea are brothers and comrades in arms who have established solid bonds of friendship along the way for the maintenance of independence and socialism.

Today, under the just leadership of your excellency, dear Mr President, the people of Guinea are pursuing a steady forward march, following the independent path of socialist development, and are waging an energetic struggle to build a truly independent and sovereign country, a new and prosperous Guinea without exploitation.

The Korean people warmly congratulate the people of Guinea on the achievements made in their sacred struggle to consolidate political independence and develop the national economy through their own efforts, and they voice their firm solidarity with this just cause.

Our delegation dispatched to your country will seek out and discuss with you in detail the possibility of extending and developing the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries in various realms--political, economic and cultural.

At the present time, because of the maneuvers of the imperialists and all the forces of domination with a view to winning or maintaining and extending their spheres of influence, the international situation is proving complex as the days go on.

We are sure that if all the nonaligned countries and the other developing countries in Asia and Africa were to unite firmly, given the current situation, to pursue an energetic struggle with a view to defending their independence and checking and frustrating the aggressive and interfering maneuvers of the imperialists and all the forces of domination, they could easily safeguard the peace and security of the world and guarantee the sovereignty and independent development of each nation.

We voice to you, Mr President, our hope that you who have great authority and influence as an eminent African statesman, will pursue the most determined efforts with a view to the strengthening of the solidarity of the anti-imperialist and independent forces.

The plot of the imperialists and their lackeys to fabricate "two Koreas" is designed not only to perpetuate the division of Korea but at the same time to divide and disorient the nonaligned nations.

On the basis of a firm position of anti-imperialism and internationalist solidarity, Mr President, the government and people of Guinea have always actively sustained and encouraged our people in their struggle to force the withdrawal from South Korea of all foreign troops and to achieve the independent and peaceful reunification of our fatherland.

I express to you my profound thanks. I am convinced that you will vigorously pursue your activities in the international arena, standing beside us firmly and unwaveringly in the future in resolute opposition to the maneuvers to fabricate "two Koreas" and raising the voice of solidarity with the just cause of our people ever more strongly.

Please accept the expression, Mr President, of my most profound respect.

Pyongyang, 6 June 1981

GOVERNMENT MAY SET UP PARASTATAL OIL CORPORATION

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 24 Jul 81 pp 19-21

[Text] THERE is no longer much doubt about the government's intention to import crude oil through a parastatal corporation. The idea has been bandied around for a little more than a year now without the said corporation actually materialising. Such a corporation would negate the need for Kenya to buy its oil through middle-men comprised of the existing six oil companies in the country — all of them branches of foreign multinational companies. The rationale is sound even though the actual establishment and operation of the corporation would be fraught with quite a number of problems. A few months ago, the minister for energy, Mr. John Okwanyo said that the corporation was already formed and would soon go into operation. That may take quite some time, however.

When the idea was originally mooted, the proposed corporation was expected to import half the country's requirements for crude oil. That would be something like 13 million barrels of crude per year leaving the rest to the oil companies. The marketing of the final product, however, would most likely remain in the hands of the six oil companies, maybe seven, assuming that the financially-troubled Kenya Oil Company was able to continue operating. Somehow, it would appear, the oil companies would have to buy the refined products from the oil imported by the government for marketing throughout the country. In economic terms, nobody has yet come out with an argument to show how this arrangement would make petroleum products cheaper. Either way, the costs of importing the crude would have to be passed on to the consumer whether the government or an oil company does the importing. Whether the government would be more efficient in doing it than the oil companies still remains a matter of conjecture. The issue of efficiency assumes importance in view of the rather unimpressive record of most parastatal corporations in the country. But unlike the other parastatal bodies whose operations are mostly limited within the country, the state oil corporation's business would be purely external. Kenya money would have to be exchanged for foreign currency, invariably the dollar, which is the currency in which the oil trade is transacted outside the Soviet bloc. A state corporation can succeed only as long as it is managed along purely commercial terms, just as the oil companies are doing. One thing that would have to be done if such a corporation is to survive commercially, would be to ensure that it earns a good profit to enable it to compete in the murky waters of the international oil trade which like the international currency exchanges, is not known for its lack of volatility.

There is moreover no guarantee that a state oil corporation would be able to wring out of oil producing countries more attractive deals than the oil companies who have been longer in the field. In the first case, there is little justification in the view that oil producers would be more philanthropic when dealing with a state oil company than when dealing with the traditional western multinational oil giants. An oil market differentiated by variable prices to different categories of buyers appears to run contrary to the interests of oil-producing countries.

The notion is nevertheless good, especially due to its potential for ensuring the continuation of an unbroken flow of oil into the country. This is perhaps its most attractive feature, buttressed by the government's fear that a nultinational [as printed] oil company could in certain circumstances decide to restrict oil supplies to the country. Even then the state corporation cannot safeguard the country's oil supplies in the event of war in the producing region, as happened last year between Iran and Iraq.

The need for a state corporation has within a week been given more prominence by the hint by the largest oil company in the country, Kenya Shell, that it might be forced to fold-up its operations in the country unless it is permitted to charge higher prices for its products. Kenya Shell is not alone, the whole oil industry in the country is grumbling about not being able to operate profitably. Kenya Shell has taken a step further ahead of the rest and admitted having cash-flow problems, implying that it is faced by a situation in which it is spending more than it is able to recover at any one period.

In an attempt to maintain some balance between its expenditures and revenues, Kenya Shell has advised its customers that it will no longer offer credit facilities after the end of July. After that date, all orders must be accompanied by cash. It takes quite a bit of a crisis before a company as big as Shell decides to withdraw credit facilities from its customers. The reverberations of such a decision will be felt far and wide since credit is the stuff that keeps business going. A direct effect will be the cessation of such credit facilities by filling stations which have been selling fuel to some of their more trusted customers without demanding immediate payment for the fuel. Service stations selling products from other companies (other than Shell), will also most likely withdraw such credit facilities, spreading the effects still further afield. The scenario is a gloomy one and will certainly lead to reduced transactions since few individuals or even businesses are able to meet their financial obligations immediately they purchase a service or product. And since any change in the marketing of petroleum products almost invariably affects other spheres of the economy, there is a great likelihood of an all-out withdrawal of credit facilities by other businesses and retail trades. The impact on households is likely to be tremendous.

The ministry of energy says that the Kenya Shell's problem has arisen because the company obtains its crude oil in an expensive market where a barrel is sold at around $37 while other oil companies in the country buy their crude in cheaper markets where the oil is traded for some $32 per barrel. In such circumstances, the company is buying oil at a rate higher than that paid by competing companies but has to sell the refined products at the same prices as the competitors.

The ministry of energy's view is corroborated by reports from European business sources. But one thing that the ministry might not be aware of is that the Shell group of companies has a thriving petro-chemical industry — what they call "downstream business" in the oil business. Certainly that downstream chain of products is not undertaken in the country so Kenya Shell is left feeling that its local competitors are cheating on it, even though involuntarily.

Incidentally, Kenya Shell's woes seem to be a microcosm of the plight of oil industries all over the world. The opinion in world financial markets at the moment is that even the major internal oil companies are now vulnerable owing mainly to falling demand for oil. In addition, most governments, especially in Europe, continue to take a rather high proportion, even though a declining one, of retail prices in taxes. And then the curse of the rising dollar, which has risen nearly 20 per cent against most European currencies, has stamped its harmful imprint on the operations of oil companies. The combination of a strong dollar and weak demand has gnawed away at oil company profits. The Shell group for instance estimates that every one cent rise in the dollar against the pound sterling costs an extra £10 million in oil costs a year. For every barrel refined, the big oil companies now say they are losing $4.50 following price rises by the oil producers since the end of last year.

Those arguments have been bandied about by the local oil industry, which, in any case, is comprised of branches of some major and lesser international oil companies. The arguments are proving a thorny issue to the government which is increasingly being asked to allow the oil companies to charge higher prices for their products. Since the budget speech last month, the government has had to allow an increase notwithstanding the increases contained in the budget proposals. The oil industry is adamant in its pressure for higher prices and in spite of the government's reluctance, it seems likely that quite soon, the oil companies might get their way. At least if the dollar continues rising against other currencies, there will be little else the companies can do but to press for higher retail prices. And justifiably so. There is little the government can do also regarding the other complaint by oil companies that a declining demand for oil products inevitably leads to a rise in unit refining costs which creates a greater pressure for higher prices. Until the economy picks up later in the year as it is expected to do, that argument will continue to be another potent one in the oil companies' bag.

The government has consistently given the impression it is not ready to witness an oil company taking the country hostage or holding it up for ransom. That seems quite unlikely even in the present circumstances with Kenya Shell talking of ceasing operations in the country. That eventuality is happily unlikely to happen: a company controlling some 40 per cent of the market in the country will not just walk out. That would be creating a vacuum which the competitors would be very happy to fill.

At the time, the government can only talk about long-term plans which include both the setting-up of the state oil corporation and the proposed plan to make petrol with alcohol from the two power alcohol plants, one at Kisumu and the other at Muhoroni. The two plants are expected to produce a total of 38 million litres of alcohol (methanol) to be used in blending with petrol. The ministry of energy says that the alcohol will displace about 13 per cent of current consumption of petrol. The high costs of putting up the Kisumu plant, however, has raised doubts about the viability of the project. Moreover the company responsible for the venture, the Kenya Chemical and Food Corporation, a joint venture between the government and the Madhvani group of companies, itself admits that the alcohol expected to be produced by the Kisumu plant will not be economic to market without heavy government subsidies. However, the government is unlikely to be in a position to subsidise fuel to the extent that is required by the KCFC. The main reason is that the price of molasses which form uhe factory's basic feedstock, have risen about five times in comparison to the prices used in costing the project's viability.

As if by pre-arrangement, the present unsettled situation in the energy scene within the country has coincided with preparations for the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy which will be held in Nairobi in the second and third week of August. The way things look, it seems quite likely that when the conference opens on August 10, the country will be experiencing one of its most severe threat to its energy supplies. At the moment, cooking gas is hard to find, kerosene has not been easily available for well over one month and now a major oil company says that it might cease supplying its products. The price of charcoal has recently increased following the lifting of price controls. In the rural areas, fuel-wood, which is the major source of energy for heating and cooking, is increasingly becoming rare with a consequent escalation in the price of logs for firewood.

At the other end of the spectrum, conservationists are warning that the country's forests and woodlands are being depleted at an alarming rate and recommend re-afforestation. However, the country's rising population is increasingly clearing more land for cultivation. The attempt by the ministry of energy to produce an energy policy, which at the moment remains a very unconvincing broad statement of desirable goals, is a step in the right direction. But its benefits are likely to be enjoyed only in the long-run. But someone seems to have advised the ministry of energy to pay some attention to a rather unproductive diversion. In the middle of this week, Okwanyo said that the government is even studying a report on the viability of generating electricity by using nuclear reactors which appears to be an unfortunate diversion of the ministry's efforts.

FRG LOANS SH. 42.6 MILLION FOR WATER SUPPLY

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 22 Jul 81 p 28

[Text] West German has loaned Kenya nearly Sh. 42.6 million for the construction of the Kitale Water Supply Project phase II and the purchase of quality control equipment for the Kenya Bureau of Standards.

The Vice-President and Minister for Finance Mr. Mwai Kibaki signed the two agreements on behalf of the Government while the West German Ambassador to Kenya, Dr. Alfred Kuehn signed for his government.

The Kitale Water Supply Project will receive Sh. 40 million while Sh. 2.6 million will be used to supply quality control equipment for the Kenya Bureau of Standards.

Mr. Kibaki thanked the Bonn Government for its continued assistance to Kenya and said the assistance towards the provision of water to urban centres was most noteworthy.

He said the biggest problems facing Kenya today were the provision of adequate housing, water and other amenities to cope with the expansion of towns.

The Vice-President further thanked the West German Government for assisting Kenya achieve her water supply targets in both urban and rural areas. He stressed that it was still the Government's intention to provide good water for her population by the year 2000.

On the agreement for the supply of quality control equipment to the Kenya Bureau of Standards, Mr. Kibaki said the Bureau ensured that Kenyans got quality products from the manufacturers and that exports were of competitive standards.

He said the Kenya Bureau of Standards had plans to set up an institute to serve standard requirements for the whole of Africa.

The German Ambassador said the soft loan carries a repayment period of 50 years, including 10 years grace period and 0.75 per cent interest.

He said the loan will provide for the cost of construction of a new water intake and a pumping station of Nzoia River and a new water treatment plant.

Dr. Kuehn said his government has earmarked about Sh. 104 million for the extension of water supplies in Kitale, Kericho and Malindi.

He said, in addition to soft loans for water supplies in various urban centres, his government has seconded 10 experts to the Ministry of Water Development within the framework of its technical co-operation scheme.

UGANDAN SOLDIERS JAILED--Five Uganda Army men found smuggling nearly 6,000 skins at Sumba Islands in Western Province of Kenya have been jailed for 15 months each. Before the Kakamega acting resident magistrate, Mr. G. N. Osango, were Jacob Egwang'a, who is a lieutenant at Mayangi Barracks in Uganda, James Mugumi, Wilson Ongomi, Hassan Mohammed and Harun Hansi, all jointly charged with having uncustomed goods. Inspector Felix Wanjala told the court that on June 28, the accused were arrested by Kenya police while anchoring their boat with the smuggled skins at Sumba Islands in Lake Victoria. The accused fired at the crew of a Kenya Fisheries Department boat in a bid to scare the crew away due to fear of being arrested, Mr. Wanjala said. He said a team of Kenya police arrested the lieutenant after his futile attempts to resist. In their defence, four of the Ugandans maintained that Sumba Islands was in their country. Passing sentence, the magistrate doubted whether the sophisticated weapons the accused had, which included a machinegun and bombs, were for ordinary patrols. He ordered that the accused's boat engines plus the money obtained from the auction of the skins be forfeited to the Kenya Government. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 23 Jul 81 p 1]

MINISTER WARNS REFUGEES: AVOID CRIME OR BE DEPORTED

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 7 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Francis Khoaripe]

[Text]

THE Minister of Interior and Chieftainship Affairs, Morena Sekhonyana 'Maseribane, has strongly warned political refugees involved in criminal acts to stop them forthwith or face deportation.

Addressing more than 800 refugees here last week, Morena 'Maseribane said it had been reported that some of them were harassing local people.

He said they were allegedly involved in house breaking, robbery, rapes and that they were carrying along with them dangerous weapons and even smoking dagga.

REFUGEES

Morena 'Maseribane said that refugees here were integrated into society whereas in other African countries they were confined in camps.

He said some of them did not appear to be genuine refugees, but agents of the South African Department of National Security (DONS).

The Minister strongly appealed to refugees to turn a new leaf and assured them of protection as "we don't accept discrimination of any kind."

MASUPHA

Speaking at the same meeting, the Principal Chief of Matsieng, Morena Masupha Seeiso, who is also responsible for the Maseru urban area, said that there was an outcry among the people that since refugees came into the country in great numbers the crime rate had increased considerably.

Present at the meeting were the Director of Immigration, Mr. E. T. Matsau and Representative of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR), Mr. Andrew Sokiri.

REAGAN FOREIGN POLICY CRITICIZED AS CONTRADICTORY

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 7 Aug 81 p 4

["I Speak My Mind" column by Lebohang Lejakane: "U.S. Foreign Policy a Messy Affair"]

[Text] THE inherent contradictions in Reagan's foreign policy characterized by genuine and not contrived underestimation of the intelligence and integrity of leaders of the 'Third World' in particular, will sooner or later embarass his confused administration.

Washington's clumsy alliance with Pretoria under the pretext of fighting 'Soviet expansionism' is a non-starter. It must not be forgotten that Pretoria regime has its own definition of words such as 'communist" or terrorist.'

It labels as communists or terrorists all peace and freedom loving people who genuinely fight for their basic human rights. In short all peoole who fight for equality and justice regardless of race or creed.

On the basis of this definition one wonders whether Washington and Pretoria are singing the same song when they 'declare war' on communism. Perhaps they are singing the same old song in different tunes.

However, in the process Washington is fighting a losing battle as its alignment with South Africa consolidates and expands 'Soviet influence' particularly in this continent.

America's confused and inconsistent foreign policy is highlighted by the fact that while on one hand she denounces racism as an affront to human dignity, on the other hand her ties with South Africa are fast growing stronger and stronger, thus reinforcing convictions that it is the massive investments in South Africa that count and not violation of human rights. She rings loud bells on international fora on 'violation' of human rights in socialist countries, but exchanges messages of friendship with Pretoria.

Of late Pretoria and Washington want to turn the Namibian question into an issue of a choice between SWAPO on one hand and Western security on the other. This transformation can hardly go off the ground. It is a psychological masturbation and striking frustration manifested in heartening political backlashes which are threatening to make our continent the focal point of East-West tension.

Namibia is being illegally occupied by an intransigent external power that has for years, consistently and traditionally defied world opinion and ridiculed international law. This it has done and still do in eloquent connivance with the Western countries that are exploiting the economic dynamism of Namibia in concert with Pretoria.

South Africa's assertion that it will not hand over power to a Soviet-backed Marxist government in Namibia is both ridiculous and preposterous.

The point at issue is to give the Namibian people chance to exercise their inalienable right to decide on who they want as their leaders regardless of whether Pretoria wants them or not.

There is absolutely no connection between the presence of Cuban troops in Angola and Pretoria's occupation forces in Namibia. The former (Cuban troops) are in Angola at the invitation of the legitimate government of Angola whereas the latter (South African troops) are a mere occupation force trying desperately to impose its puppets on the people of Namibia.

It is interesting to note that while America is loudly voicing its opposition to the presence of Foreign troops in Angola, Ethiopia, Kampuchea, Afghanistan (you name them) it is deadly silent about hundreds of French troops in West Africa let alone the presence of South African troops in Namibia.

BNP SECRETARY REBUTS BCP CHARGES ON ELECTION

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 6 Aug 81 p 4

[Article by Chris Freimond]

[Text] The executive secretary of Lesotho's ruling Basutho National Party (BNP), Mr Desmond Sixishe, has reacted strongly to allegations by an opposition leader that the Prime Minister, Chief Leabua Jonathan, would call a general election only if he knew he would win.

In an interview with the Rand Daily Mail yesterday, Mr Sixishe said no Prime Minister would call an election if he believed he was going to lose. He went to the polls when the trend was towards his party.

He was commenting on the views of the exiled vice-president of the Basutholand Congress Party (BCP), Mr Tseliso Makhakhe, who accused Chief Jonathan of making moves to entrench himself permanently in power.

Refused

Mr Sixishe also attacked Mr Makhakhe's demand for Chief Jonathan to step down and allow an interim administration to rule.

"People seem to have forgotten that in 1974 the Prime Minister invited the BCP to join the National Assembly and Cabinet. They refused because they could not agree among themselves on who should be Ministers.

"They decided instead to try to overthrow the government by force, but that has failed and now they demand a share in the government," Mr Sixishe said.

Mr Sixishe also rejected suggestions that any moves towards a general election by Chief Jonathan were a result of pressure from donors of financial and material aid.

SPOKESMAN DENIES LLA CHARGE OF AID TO ANC, PAC

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 7 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] TWO South African liberation movements, the African National Congress (ANC) and the Pan Africanist Congress (PAC) have been labelled by the leader of the so-called Lesotho Liberation Army (LLA) as enemies of Basotho. . .

According to pamphlets found at the scene of last week's mortar attacks from South Africa on a petroleum installation in Maseru, the ANC and PAC collaborated with the Lesotho Government against Ntsu Mokhehle's faction of the Basutoland Congress Party and the LLA.

It was alleged that there were NAC military instructors in the Lesotho's Para-Military Unit and than ANC cadres had joined forces with the PMU on some military operations against the LLA.

The pamphlets also attacked the PAC that it had also started co-operating with Lesotho authorities and that it had reneged on its earlier friendship with the BCP.

The LLA leader, Ntsu Mokhehle, described the ANC and PAC refugees in Lesotho as enemies who should be annihilated and appealed to his supporters to ostracize them. He said they should not harbour those refugees in their homes or help them in any manner.

The pamphlets bore the signature of Ntsu Mokhehle and were rubber stamped with ink similar to that used to stamp passports at the South African border posts.

A Government spokesman denied military collaboration between Lesotho and the South African liberation movements. "Lesotho only protects and does not collaborate with the refugees."

The spokesman said, however, that Lesotho would always consistently maintain her well-known support for the legitimate struggle of the people of South Africa against racism and apartheid.

Mokhehle's outbursts against the South African liberation movements was not surprising in the context of the long-established fact that he is a tool of the Pretoria regime, the spokesman said.

The spokesman said that the base of co-operation between Mokhehle and South Africa had been broadened and the fact that Mokhehle had declared war on that country's liberation movements in writing was proof that co-operation approaching an unholy climax.

All right-thinking Basotho should denounce Mokhehle's naked sell-outism and continue to offer all possible assistance to refugees in Lesotho, the spokesman said.

EXPULSION OF SOUTH AFRICANS--Maseru--Fifteen South Africans had been expelled from Lesotho following a spate of crime in the country, a government spokesman said in Maseru yesterday. The spokesman said some of the people deported had entered Lesotho illegally, while others had posed as political refugees seeking asylum in the country. Others had been discovered to be agents of the South African security police, the spokesman said. However, none of the people expelled was a "genuine political exile" who had fled South Africa because of persecution. "Victims of apartheid will always find a home in Lesotho," the spokesman said. The deportations follow threats of drastic action on law-breakers made earlier by the Prime Minister, Chief Leabua Jonathan. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Aug 81 p 10]

BOMB EXPLOSIONS--Maseru--A series of bomb explosions and a fire in which a man was burned to death have occurred in Lesotho's Mafeteng, Berea and Leribe districts in recent weeks. A bomb exploded at police barracks in the southern Lesotho town of Mafeteng near Wepener early yesterday. The explosion is reported to have damaged the barracks, and a woman in a house nearby received minor injuries. In the Berea district, a house belonging to a member of the Lesotho volunteer police reservists, Mr Makgalanyane Letela of Sefeking, was bombed last Thursday. Mr Letela's wife was seriously injured. Home-made bombs were discovered at various places in the districts. The explosions follow several sporadic attacks by members of the Lesotho Liberation Army, a military wing of Mr Ntsu Mokhehele's exiled opposition Basotholand Congress Party. URANIUM IS REPORTEDLY FOUND IN BASSA COUNTY

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 17 Jul 81 p 8

[Article by Sam Johnson: "Uranium Found in Liberia"]

[Text] Lands and Mines Minister Dr. Foday Kromah has confirmed the existence of uranium in Liberia. He said a discovery has been made in Bassa County by a U.S. company, known as Coastal Liberian Uranium Enterprises (CLUE).

Dr. Kromah told the NEW LIBERIAN Thursday that the mineral is of "competitive grade" and that its prospects of future exploitation appear "very promising", although commercial quantity has not as yet been defined.

The uranium deposits were discovered following four years of geological operation by CLUE at various areas around the country.

The Minister also spoke of probable uranium deposits in Bellefani, Bong County, and the Bopolu District, Lofa County.

Uranium is a mineral used mainly for the generation of atomic energy for electrification and for military purposes, such as the production of nuclear weapons.

Meanwhile, offshore drilling, aimed at ascertaining the existence of pertoleum along Liberia's continental shelf and ocean depths, is expected to begin next year, according to a French oil firm contracted by government.

Mr. J.C. Ferrand of Ferrand and Associates, which is carrying out the analysis and interpretation of exploration data, made the disclosure here Wednesday during a briefing session with officials of the Ministry of Lands and Mines and related government agencies.

Mr. Ferrand said though data processing presently going on shows the probability of hydrocarbon deposits, which is the basic elements of crude oil and natural gas, the drilling of wells will provide the final answer to the existence of petroleum deposits or not.

The processing of data is the second phase of an estimated $6 million petroleum exploration program being sponsored by the Liberian Government and the World Bank.

According to Minister Kromah, when the second phase is completed at the end of this year, interested oil companies would be invited to undertake the drilling.

[Article by Carlos Cardoso: "To Smoke or To Smoke Like..."]

[Excerpts] On the morning of the 27th we left for Manchester, on the way to that region in the north where everyone complains that this is "the forgotten part of the economy." "The south is sucking our blood," someone said, adding: "We have too much rain and too few investments."

Barry Munslow, who until 2 years ago used to work at the African Studies Center of the Eduardo Mondlane University in Maputo, was at the door of the house that he and a few other friends had been able to purchase. He received us with the warm welcome of someone who feels that a part of himself has just arrived from far away.

We were joined by about 20 militants who nave been closely following the Mozambican revolution's progress. They are prepared to "wring out" a member of the FRELIMO Central Committee, because the news reaching Great Britain is scarce and some interpretations are, perforce, simplistic.

Armando Guebuza opened his remarks by referring to the political and organizational offensive launched by President Machel at the beginning of 1980.

"We were running the risk of speaking about socialism without, meanwhile, building socialism. There were obstacles, some caused by external factors and others by internal events. The Zimbabwe peace agreement gave us the opportunity to launch the offensive. Today, in the country, there is a better understanding of discipline and a better sense of planning."

The FRELIMO's development policies are at the center of political analyses abroad. In this connection, Guebuza said: "There were two attitudes. According to the first, the state should control everything. However, we feel that it is not incompatible with socialism if certain economic sectors of lesser importance are in the hands of private businessmen. Socialism is mainly interested in state control of the strategic sectors of the economy.

Another attitude was that, as socialists, we should entrust the solution to our problems to the more advanced socialist countries. But this did not take into account the West's progressive forces. It was a question of whether or not Mozambique should maintain relations with multinational companies. At this juncture, we asked: How did the Soviet Union do away with underdevelopment? Today developed socialist countries hold investments in the West. Then, why not Mozambique? Is Mozambique an adult or not?"

This led to still another issue. One of the British present asked whether Mozambique is following the "Soviet model."

European political analysts suffer from a certain disease: An underdeveloped country must be "pro-West," or else, if it is a revolutionary nation, it must be "pro-Soviet" or "pro-China."

Thus the world is comfortably divided into areas of influence of the so-called "big ones," and alliances are pejoratively reduced to a form of subordination.

"If we are 'pro-West,' 'pro-Soviet' or 'pro-China,' then, where is the Mozambican people? We are Mozambicans, you know. When we reached the third FRELIMO congress, we saw that everything we had done during the fight for liberation and after independence with the nationalizations, all this was like impetuous waters flowing into a big river. The river's name is Marxism-Leninism. That is why we call our party Marxist-Leninist. We were Marxist-Leninists before adopting the label. Why should we use a different one?"

Guebuza added: "Some called us African socialists, others called us black communists. Still others said that we are a country with a socialist orientation. We said, we are not socialist-oriented, we are socialists, we are Marxist-Leninists."

But what is the root of the problem?

In Maputo the story is told that late one night, President Machel was discussing this with a Canadian militant. He put the situation thus: "You know, the problem affecting many progressive blacks in Africa is that Marx was white. And for some white Marxist theoreticians, the problem is that Samora Machel is black. You see?"

A small episode: At the end of a public meeting in Manchester, Armando Guebuza was smoking a cigar, when someone commented: "You smoke like Castro." "Or like Churchill," said another. Guebuza looked at both of them and clamly retorted: "I am not smoking like...I am smoking."

GDR MINING TRAINING--Mozambican students at the Freiberg Academy of Mines in the GDR placed second among all groups in the academic year 1980. Their Bulgarian colleagues came first and the Mozambicans were followed by students from Vietnam. Various students have already returned from the GDR, where they attended mining courses at the Freiberg academy. There are now in this institution 16 Mozambican students, 10 of whom are in their first year, 5 in their second year and one in his third year, distributed among various courses, notably mining engineering, ore processing, geophysics, energy technology and underground topography. Students now in our country for a one-and-a-half month vacation period will conduct research related to their field on subjects of their choice and non-compulsory. CHASM WIDENS BETWEEN WHITE POLITICAL PARTIES

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 3 Aug 81 p 18

[Article by Alan Dunn: "A Widening Ideological Chasm"]

[Text] The ideological chasm between SWA/Namibia's major white political parties was spotlighted last week at their annual congresses held simultaneously for the first time.

While delegates at the DTA-affiliated Republican Party congress called for faster internal change, some members of the SWA National Party were pressing to have the political clock turned back.

Significantly, the more radical discussion points at both meetings did not emerge as resolutions — the parties' leaders seemed to play forceful roles in restraining and tempering some tough liberal and right-wing views.

Republican Party leader, Mr Dirk Mudge, doused several fiery liberal cries from the floor, aired by party members clearly impatient at the pace of development in SWA/Namibia.

He braked, for instance, the proposal of introducing a national flag and other non-South African symbols, and the scrapping of "unacceptable" names such as J G Strijdom Airport, Verwoerd Park, and Republic Road.

Mr Mudge cautioned against too much haste, gently goading his supporters into accepting a Council of Ministers or "Cabinet" committee to investigate the question and produce a satisfactory solution.

He dealt equally adroitly with other points, such as why a black person did not address his party's congress, giving him the appearance of a conservative among some in his own all-white ranks.

Delegates generally poured out their concern at the lot of black people in SWA/Namibia. All agreed to appeal to the Ministers' Council to rid the territory "as quickly as possible" of all vestiges of discriminatory legislation and practices.

The cases of Dan Seemuller, a "coloured" German-speaking immigrant who has been barred from a white preparatory school run by the second-tier administration for whites, and a Windhoek restaurateur who does not admit black customers, were mentioned as examples of ongoing apartheid.

Said one prominent delegate: "The black man in Owambo knows apartheid has been scrapped in Windhoek because he has heard this. But not where he is. He does not feel the effect of what we are trying to do," he said.

The delegate went on to suggest the creation of regional watchdog offices to ensure that the DTA-dominated interim government's changes were implemented. This would prevent "kingdom building" by those officials who were perpetuating the status quo in those northern regions.

Mr Mudge went to great lengths to explain his delicate position as leader of SWA/Namibia's interim government, introducing a note of dampening sobriety to the more zealous elements in his party.

He even gave the assurance that the interim central government was not interested in cutting the powers of the second-tier ethnic authorities, thus allaying SWA National Party fears for their authority via the white administration.

But he did occasionally snipe at the National Party, strongly suggesting that the ethnic election for the white administration last November — won by the territory's National Party — contained several irregularities.

Commenting on the "hopeless" state of the voters' roll at the time, he said: "If I was as lenient in an election with Swapo, our chances of winning would be extremely slim."

He noted that the Republican Party had nonetheless, after little more than three years in existence, won 42 percent of the votes, while the National Party had taken 48 percent.

On the issue of an internationally - supervised independence election, Mr Hudge stressed that the DTA had accepted resolution 435. But pre-election constitutional guarantees were not enough — the DTA wanted a free and fair election.

In contrast, the new chairman of the SWA National Party, Mr Kosie Pretorius, said the whites of SWA/Namibia would not accept a one-man-one-vote election.

He was apparently alluding to his party's belief in a consensus system, conducted on an ethnic or "Turnhalle" basis at the first level of government.

"We are not prepared to give way on our view on the existence of a variety of nations (volke)," he said.

On a strong note of conciliation towards the South African government, pointing to stormy behind-the-scenes conflict with Pretoria in the past, Mr Pretorius said:

"We must orientate ourselves. We must be prepared to take the hand of friendship South Africa is again now offering us. But as equal partners, and also that we hold one another's hand to the end."

Much of the National Party's congress deliberation was held behind closed doors, including many of the discussion points. The reason given for this was that the leadership could not address itself "freely" to these issues in the delicacy of the present situation.

It seems highly unlikely, however, that Mr Pretorius would have allowed a resolution calling for the disqualification from any future white ethnic election of a white person who married across the colour-line, to be passed by congress.

The feeling here is that the leadership on both sides was hampered by the current negotiations between the Ministers' Council, the white administration, and the administrator-general, Mr Danie Hough, on certain major issues. Neither leader wanted to be accused of bedevilling the talks.

At issue are: a further imminent transfer of powers from the Administrator-General to the Ministers' Council, the occupancy of South West Africa House, where the outgoing white executive committee chairman, Mr A H du Plessis, stays, the Tinten Palast, traditional government buildings in Windhoek, now occupied by the white administration, the Seemuller case, and the whites-only Teachers' Training College which the Council of Ministers wants opened to all races.

The National Party and Republican Party have both called for a united front against Swapo. The question is whether they can bridge the ideological gap to form that force. Many differences have to be overcome before that can happen.

GENERAL LLOYD DISCUSSES IMPLICATIONS OF BROADER WAR

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 11 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Text]

WINDHOEK: Security Forces in SWA were preparing for an intensification of the military conflict in the war zone on the territory's northern border region with Angola, the Officer Commanding the SWA Territory Force, Major General Charles Lloyd, said yesterday.

As long as the war was confined to fighting Swapo insurgents there would be a slim chance of the armed struggle becoming conventionalised.

"But if the MPLA along with Cubans, begin to protect Swapo, we will unavoidably have to cross swords," General Lloyd told a news conference.

The deployment of Sam 3 and Sam 6 radar – controlled missiles at Mocamedes and Lubango in southern Angola would create an air umbrella that aided Swapo forces, he said.

"Since our recent successes against Swapo, the Angolan Government has been quick to express solidarity with Swapo," General Lloyd said.

"We are aware that those forces in Angola that could try to prevent our actions against Swapo base camps used to be stationed far north of the border," General Lloyd said with reference to the MPLA and Cuban bases.

"Now that there are missile and radar-tracking stations at Mocamedes and Lubango, it seems that an air umbrella is being created to help Swapo and restrict our air force."

Major General Lloyd said a major problem facing Security Forces at this stage was that "we do not want to get involved with the MPLA, but we have to attack Swapo concentrations in Angola to protect the peace in SWA."

SERIOUS WAR

"We are therefore preparing ourselves mentally and physically for a more serious war."

Asked whether that meant the insurgency war was escalating into conventional warfare, General Lloyd said it all depended whether the Cuban and Angolan forces were interested in "adventures."

"As long as we fight only Swapo, the chances are slim that the conflict could turn into conventional war. But if the MPLA and the Cubans join forces with Swapo and interfere, we can expect a serious escalation," he said.

"It all depends on the other side. We are preparing for that eventuality."

General Lloyd said rumours that Security Forces were readying for an invasion of Angola were "definitely without foundation."

"But we are preparing for a more serious conflict," he added.

In reply to a question, General Lloyd said he could see no other option but to pursue follow-up operations into Angola against Swapo.

"We have to attack Swapo's camps on the other side of the border to protect the Territory and we will continue to destroy their home bases."

It was contrary to top Defence Force policy to attack civilian targets.

"We do not attack civilians, we avoid the MPLA wherever possible and we are not destroying the infrastructure of southern Angola."

In response to reports that Security Forces had sent heavy tank-recovery vehicles to the operational area, General Lloyd said normal replacements were being made.

ROUTINE

"Equipment has to be replaced as a matter of routine and there is nothing to support rumours put out by the enemy that we are preparing for an invasion," General Lloyd said.

After being approached by newsmen to comment on General Lloyd's statement, the South African Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan, issued the following statement to Sapa:

"General Lloyd's statement about preparations for a war against Angolan and Cuban forces should not be considered as having any specific implications (betekenis)."

General Malan pointed out that any defence force should be prepared to defend itself against any potential danger or enemy.

He added: "It is a known fact that Swapo terrorists are increasingly calling for – and receiving – the support of Angolan forces and also that Cuban instructors are training members of the movement."

General Malan said it was therefore imperative that "we intensify our defence in SWA so as not to be caught unawares, should the situation escalate through direct aggressive intervention by Angolan forces or Cubans."

He reaffirmed that South Africa wanted to live in peace with its neighbours and did not seek war with them.

"However, South Africa is committed to safeguard the peoples of SWA, and will therefore eradicate terrorism and will pursue terrorists, wherever they might flee, to make them pay for their deeds," he said.

MPLA ESCALATES CONFLICT WITH MISSILES, RADARS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 10 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Johann Van Heerden: "A Conventional War on Our Border?"]

[Text] WINDHOEK: Angola's MPLA government had deployed guided missiles in the vicinity of Swapo base camps in southern Angola and installed radar scanners for air surveillance, informed sources said in Windhoek on Friday.

The missile stations, constructed by Cuban and West advisers, were planned ground- to be strung along the entire southern border of Angola.

Authoritative sources on military matters said the presence of radar-controlled to-air missiles and the prospect of direct Cuban involvement in combat indicated that the 15-year-old bush war in the border area between SWA and Angola was assuming the characteristics of conventional war-fare.

As evidence of a looming escalation in hostilities, military observers in Windhoek attach special significance to a statement issued earlier by the Officer Commanding the SWA Territory Force, Major-General Charles Lloyd.

Swapo would not succeed with "so-called new techniques," General Lloyd said.

"The South African and SWA forces are ready to intensify its war effort and to increase the levels of its fighting forces if required," General Lloyd said.

He did not elaborate, but earlier reports said the Angolan Government had informed Washington that the Cuban forces would stay in Angola and in future back up Swapo insurgents for as long as the implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 435 remained in abeyance.

The Angolan communication was in response to a similar diplomatic note from the Reagan Administration protesting the presence of Cuban military forces in Angola.

The Angolan representative at the UN said last week his country reserved the right in terms of the UN Charter to call on its allies to help defend the territorial integrity of Angola against alleged invasions by SA.

Angola has insisted that SA occupied a large section of Cunenene province in south-western Angola, but SA has equally consistently denied that it was engaged in large-scale incursions into Angola.

Security Forces were merely launching follow-up operations aimed at destroying Swapo camps, SADF spokesman said.

Escalation of the war this year has so far claimed the lives of about 1 000 people. About 800 members of Swapo's PLAN died in clashes with Security Forces, while almost 140 civilians died in landmine explosions, killings by Swapo and cross-fire in the war zone.

The death toll among Security Forces is 29.

SECTOR 30 TRAINS RURAL POPULATION TO COMBAT SWAPO

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 20 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] Sector 30 commander Col J.T. Louw declared Friday in Otjiwarongo that SWAPO's claim that it has widespread support among the rural population is a pure fabrication. The proof of this assertion is that large numbers of rural workers voluntary join the army for training.

Col Louw was showing a group of correspondents around Sector 30 and was explaining the role of the unit.

He said Sector 30 exists to protect people's lives, principally in the northern regions of SWA. Although every soldier in the unit is not permanent but only part-time in the army, considerable success has already been registered against SWAPO.

He stated that they are now in the process of setting up an area force unit in Damaraland and in Hereroland-West. There is also a plan to establish a unit at Uis for later incorporation with Damaraland.

Col Louw said that a whole group of operational bases comes under the jurisdiction of Sector 30. The personnel who man the bases are called up monthly. According to Col Louw Sector 30 is also the first unit to begin training non-whites.

Col Louw further asserted that the end result of the area forces in SWA has been very effective. SWAPO has been severely handicapped in shifting its positions south of the Ovambo line because farm owners as well as farm workers are equipped with the necessary knowledge for doing battle. During periods of infiltration they patrol the farms themselves and if they run into trouble they courageously combat the terrorists.

"SWAPO doesn't engage anyone who can hurt it. That is why SWAPO will never be able to militarily win the war in SWA," said Col Louw.

He also explained that no schooling is needed for anyone who is interested in being trained as an area force soldier. The farmer he works for, however, must consent and also declare that he is trainable.

Col Louw said that the rural population deserves most of the thanks for the success enjoyed by the SWA territory force. There is very good cooperation between the forces and the local population. That is why SWAPO is being effectively combated, he said.

NEW NNPC DIRECTOR HOLDS FIRST MEETING

Decision-Making Process

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 4 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE new Chairman of the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC), Mr. Horatio Agedah, yesterday met behind closed-doors with top officials of the corporation.

In a statement issued at the end of the meeting, the corporation said Mr. Agedah told the management staff that although he was a newcomer to the oil industry, he had been following events in the industry closely.

He was quoted to have told the employees who came in from the various oil installations in the country: "We will have to rely on you as professionals for advice in formulating policy decisions.

"Some of these decisions may not be favourable to you, but the board has to bear in mind national interest and international considerations in determining policy."

Mr. Agedah further told the managers that the nation relied on them at "this time when the country's enemies are trying hard to embarrass the nation and the corporation because of the oil glut."

The new managing director of the NNPC, Mr. Lawrence Amu, attended the "familiarisation meeting."

Comment on Oil Policy

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 3 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Onyema Ugochukwu]

[Text] When in June the Business Times published an article warning about the consequences of the present world oil situation for Managing Director of the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation, Mr Odoliyi Lolomari called a press conference at which he said in effect that there was no cause for alarm.

The way he saw it, predictions of adverse consequences were part of a propaganda by the Western Press to stampede Nigeria into reducing the price of her oil from 40 dollars a barrel to 36 dollars.

The existing oil glut, he argued, was largely due to Saudi Arabia's refusal to cut down her production by two million barrels a day which it had added in 1979 in an effort to alleviate the supply shortages that had resulted from the Iranian crisis and later the Iraq/Iran war.

The sharp decline in Nigeria's exports since this year he attributed to the fact that buyers had anticipated that OPEC would reduce prices at its last meeting in May and so decided to wait until the price-cuts were made before buying.

When OPEC decided not to cut prices, the buyers started coming back, he claimed. And as a proof of this claim, he said that Nigeria's production (which had averaged 1.1 million bbl/day during the first two weeks of June) had picked up sufficiently in the last weeks of the month for the average for the whole of June to rise to 1.45 million bbl/day.

Glut

In effect then, all Nigeria had to do was keep a stiff upper lip and not succumb to the Western propaganda until the glut, which he described as temporary, was over.

Government officials soon also took the same line, and worried citizens quickly relaxed.

But continuing events seem to suggest that the nation has perhaps persuaded itself too easily that there is nothing to worry about, and has consequently assumed a position of security that is bound to become untenable all too soon.

While it is true that the Saudi refusal to cut down is largely responsible for the glut, it is also true that the other OPEC members have so far failed to persuade them to change their mind. The superfluous Saudi oil therefore seems likely to remain in the market for some time.

Also, while it may be true that some buyers of Nigeria's oil came back when OPEC did not cut prices, it does seem too that these were fewer than those who did not; and that some stayed for a short while.

First, production did not rise sufficiently in June to raise the average for the month to the 1.45 million bbl/day claimed by Mr Lolomari. According to industry sources, the average for the month was 1.35 million bbl/day.

Temporary

Secondly, instead of the rising trend that should have followed, production took a sharp dip in July. Again according to industry sources, the average for the month was below 1.0 million bbl/day, and indeed for most of the month was at 0.9 million bbl/day.

Then there is the question of how temporary, Mr Lolomari's "temporary" is, and how many months of depression may be considered insignificant for Nigeria.

Most experts in the oil industry expect that demand should pick up later in the year. The few who agree to name date say October or November.

Assuming that things do look up by October, that will mean that Nigeria's oil output would have been substantially below target for seven months of the year.

Revenue

Going by present trends, and assuming the improvement if and when it comes, will be substantial, the production shortfall for the whole of 1981 could range from 20 to 30 percent. In revenue terms, this could mean a shortfall in anticipated earnings of between ₦2.4 billion to ₦3 billion.

Judging by the country's overwhelming dependence on oil revenues, "temporary" has to be a strictly limited time. With present production levels below 1 million bbl/day, "temporary" should not in fact have to exceed two months to have a significant impact on revenues.

Indeed the impact of the depression so far is already evident, although some people pretend not to recognise it. Almost all state governments are complaining that their shares of revenue are not flowing in, in the projected amounts. But while only one governor has so far publicly acknowledged the cause of the problem, the majority have chosen, for reasons known to them, to complain that the Federal Government is withholding the money, presumably because the President hates them.

Implication

What may be deduced from all the foregoing therefore, is that Mr Lolomari got his picture of the situation all wrong, and by implication any advice he might have given to the government on how to address the problem would be wrong.

But that would be quite surprising considering the number of well-respected experts in the N.N.P.C. addition, we are aware, have had a clear picture of the situation all along and what could be done about it.

One then is left to suspect that what Mr Lolomari expressed was probably not the views of his experts. But the question then is, whose views?

This naturally takes us to the question of who makes Nigeria's oil policy, that is insofar as it may be said that such a policy exists.

As at now, the President is effectively the Minister of Petroleum. He has to assist him the services of the Presidential Adviser on Energy and his staff. The office of the Presidential Adviser, for all intents and purposes, may therefore be considered to be a policymaking body.

Then there is the board of directors of the NNPC. Admittedly the NNPC has not had a board for quite some time. But now that one has been appointed, it may be assumed that as boards of directors have traditionally been, will also be a policymaking body.

Then we have the management of the NNPC which in the absence of a board, may have performed policymaking functions, but which strictly speaking, should not be a policymaking body.

Indeed, we appear to have a superfluity of policymaking bodies. But as far as anyone can see, we do not appear to have an oil policy. All we seem to have had, right from the oil depression of 1976/77, are a series of reactions to events in the world oil market, which unfortunately do not add up to a policy.

Experience

The result of this lack of a policy is that in spite of having gone so painfully through the oil-induced problems of 1978/79, we are not in a position to go through the present oil problems a little bit less unhappily. If anything, such illusions of security as provided by Mr Lolomari's June press conference seem certain to assure that the present experience will be more painful than the last.

From all indications, we are even preparing to come up with a policy that will insulate our economy from the "temporary" depressions in the world oil market.

Evidence

The office of the President which is the premier policymaking body is not so apparently, blessed with experts in the oil industry. The board of the NNPC recently appointed, cannot claim any substantial expertise in the field either, while the management of the NNPC, where the expertise is, is not a policymaking body.

This structure of things, apart from slowing the reactions of the executive body, the NNPC, to events in the oil markets, also assures that the attitude we adopt may not be the best solution to our problems. And if evidence of this were needed, the present approach to our predicament would suffice.

POLEMICS BETWEEN IMO, RIVERS STATES CRITICIZED

[Editorial: "Dangerous War of Words"]

[Text]

FOR quite some time now, a war of words has been going on between the Imo and Rivers States, mostly channelled via the government-controlled media of mass communication. Lined up on one side are the Nigerian Statesman and the Imo Broadcasting Service. On the other side are to be found the Nigerian Tide and the Radio Rivers Two FM Stereo. Between the four of them, they have done so much to poison the air with base propaganda and open incitement.

Of course, there are issues behind this case of rank media degeneracy. These issues are at once historical as well as contemporary. The thorniest of these has been for so long, the sad question of the Abandoned Properties in Rivers State.

Only recently, there was much-orchestrated settlement of this matter in a meeting President Shehu Shagari had with the cohorts who should have abided by the agreements reached at that most commendable Presidential initiative.

However, the abandoned property question is only the central issue. From it has radiated a number of petty side-issues that border on the ethnic and the trivial. Indeed, some of the sentiments being bandied about on both sides are so banal and mundane that one wonders how such views could attain the honour of appearing in print.

We sound a note of alarm at this stage if only because history must never be allowed to repeat itself. Communal misunderstandings in the past were permitted to deteriorate to a level where dogs, so to say, had to eat dogs. Then, the problem had been looked upon as isolated. But festering sores could spread cancerously – and fatally. This nation, having suffered the traumas of early nationhood not too long ago, cannot afford to see her citizens, belonging to two states purely by reasons of accident of birth and residence, organised to hate and despise one another.

Both Governors Sam Mbakwe and Melford Okilo will have to ensure that the present bad blood does not lead into chaos. This is despite the fraternal appearances they present in public. They both have all the opportunity to install a mood of goodwill and a sincere desire to mutually settle once and for all, whatever they feel is at stake.

The state of no peace and no war cannot long be tolerated. It is certainly not healthy for this country. In fact another initiative by the President is certainly not out of place. For, the peace and stability of this nation should no longer be left threatened from any quarters. The goings-on in Imo and Rivers States are certainly dangerous and must be halted.

SUNMONU WARNS AGAINST SPLITTING UNION ORGANIZATION

Visit to Enugu

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 31 Jul 81 p 11

[Text]

NIGERIA Labour Congress [NLC] says it would embark on an indefinite industrial action if the National Assembly repeals the 1976 Labour Decree.

The threat was issued in Enugu by Mr. Hassan Sunmonu, President of the NLC this week when he paid a courtesy call on Mr. Ifeanyi Chukwu, Speaker of Anambra State House of Assembly.

Mr. Sunmonu, who disclosed that the executive of the congress was on a tour of the four eastern states to explain the system of operation of the NLC, accused the Federal Government of trying to impair the solidarity of the Nigerian workers.

He warned that the Nigerian workers would never accept going back to where they were five years ago.

The NLC he said, would fight consitutionally to keep the Nigerian workers united. He warned that if they failed in that, they would embark on an indefinite industrial action.

He said that the United States from where Nigeria copied her constitution, had one trade union organisation "so are West Germany and Great Britain".

Mr. Benson Onwsi, Secretary, Anambra State wing of the NLC also told the speaker that the state was cooperating with the NLC adding that the state government had given the state wing of the Congress 50,000 Naira with which to run the affairs of the congress.

He told the speaker that whatever Mr. Sunmonu said was the wish of the Nigerian workers.

Mr. Onwusi appealed to the state government to look into the welfare of their workers by providing them with car loans, accomodation and other incentives.

In response, Mr. Enechukwu called on the Nigerian workers to show greater interest in the legislative by cooperating with them.

He warned that Nigerian labour leaders should abstain from partisan politics and also warned that any attempt to split the workers' union would not be in the best interest of the country.

[Editorial: "Sunmonu Threatens"]

[Text]

MR. Hassan Sunmonu's latest threat to call out workers on a nation-wide strike if the laws creating the Nigeria Labour Congress and the compulsory check-off system — Trade Union Acts 22 and 21 of 1978, respectively — were debated with a view to amending them must have been the product of the feeling of invincibility given to him by his success after his encounter with the Federal Government over the minimum wage issue last May. That he quickly capped that threat with an appeal to the public to prevail on the House of Representatives not to consider the executive bill on the two acts seems, however, to suggest that Mr. Sunmonu is aware of his limitations.

The reasons that have prompted the Federal Government into proposing the amendments to make trade union movement in the country more democratic may not go down well with the NLC and its blind supporters. To the latter, the amendments are simply designed to weaken the NLC by making its membership among workers voluntary. While this may be a final outcome which the government may not be unaware of, it is by no means the most important. The new law seeks to free industry and governments — the very sources of workers' sustenance — from frequent disruptions by a central labour organisation.

Opponents of the amendment bill argue, sentimentally, that labour must not lose the gains it had made in the last five years in one fell swoop. But they have no solution to intimidation suffered by workers who are often dragged into strikes, sometimes illegally, with little or no information about the cause of the strikes, or their objective, simply because they belong to a central organisation. The same workers always bear the brunt of the actions of irresponsible leadership. If these are the virtues of a central labour union the workers and the nation can do without them.

What is more, all the claims of the NLC leadership to work towards the improvement of the lot of its members are, of course, hollow. Already some employees of some state governments have not had their salaries for two months. The new minimum wage is a curse rather than a blessing. This is what the NLC has brought to the workers this year. How the governments and other employers are going to fare the workers will soon find out.

LIBYAN STRATEGY IN AFRICA DISCUSSED

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 5 Aug 81 p 8

[Article by Obika Isienyi]

[Text]

THE Libyan leader, Colonel Muammer Gaddafi, has employed a variety of methods to ensure his incursion into other nations. These cover a wide range of covert and overt attempts to implant his own nationalistic goals inside the boundaries of other sovereign states.

Chief among the institutions he uses for subversion abroad, is the Libyan Islamic Call Society or (Al-Dawa).

The activities of the society include political action and financial support and training for foreign students and others.

Al-Dawa is engaged in the production and distribution of various types of disinformation, such as printed materials, deceptive plots, and rumours designed to destabilize countries opposed to Gaddafi. Al-Dawa finances seminars and travels of potential dissidents (as well as pro-Gaddafi Libyans living abroad), and supports various elements currently engaged in opposition to their own states. Recently, Al-Dawa recruited students from various countries and brought them to Libya to study terrorist techniques, including the manufacture of hand made dynamite.

Goals

These students are scheduled to return to their own countries, armed with new skills and zeal, to further the disruptive goals of Gaddafi's personal Jihad against all states which do not fit into his Jamahiriyah ideal — including other Islamic states.

Islamic centres have been established in numerous countries, as part of the work of the Al-Dawa, to promote the strengthening of Islam. Most of these centres have in addition to mosques, schools, and radio stations, all financed by Al-Dawa.

Yet this too has been done with different aims than those openly stated The centre in Niamey, Niger for example, was opened as a vehicle to purchase the goodwill of the government and hopefully to increase the possibility of securing Uranium supplies for Libya's nuclear weapons projects. What Gaddafi has been unable to obtain through overt military aggrandizement, he has pursued by spreading a cover of apparent islamic goodwill over his true intentions.

In fact, Gaddafi shows a disregard for true Islam by utilizing the Al-Dawa — designed to seek converts to Islam and further the goals of the Prophet Mohammed — as an agency through which to increase his personal hegemony, and to support movements seeking to destabilize legitimate governments within the Sahel and other areas.

The colonel has utilized defence agreements, such as those entered into during the Mid-1970s by Guinea, Togo, and Niger. Niger quickly left this agreement, when in 1975 Libyan troops occupied an area inside its borders. Apparently Libyan views of mutual defence were different from those of the Nigerians

Chadian President Goukouni Weddeye, however, has less chance of withdrawing from "Libyan defence" than did Niger.

More than one dozen Libyan regular army battalions — not including two additional special commando battalions and an artillery company — are currently stationed in Chad.

Together these units total about 7,000 troops, and are positioned along two North-South of Chad. One of these Axes parallels the Chad-Niger border and dominates the western portion of Chad, while the other is directed against resistance forces in the East — and against possible Sudanese military action. These two axes are positioned not only to help Gaddafi maintain control over his activities in Chad, but also to provide for him the capacity to push further south for additional annexation or aggrandizement. By developing axes of military strength the Libyan leader is able to stabilize his supply lines and communication systems which would be necessary should — or when — he decides that the appropriate time has come to extend his hegemony.

Further, Gaddafi has the possibility of moving his axes laterally across the Chad-Niger border, through Niger toward Mali, Upper Volta, and other West African states.

Libyan troops have not been arrayed to confirm a substantive withdrawal from Ndjamena, their pro-forma "withdrawal" along the western axis could easily be turned around for reentry into the Chadian capital and for close access to Northern Cameroon. In fact, Gaddafi has made no withdrawal: His actions are merely a periodic rotation of tired military units from the occupied capital who are replaced with fresh troops.

In support of his goal of an Arab-African state, he has initiated patronage of the nomadic Toureg tribesmen who live throughout the Sahelian states. Although these Touareg are a berber people, Gaddafi claims that they are in fact ethnic Arabs and should be regarded as Arabs in general, and Libyans in particular.

Since they are "Libyans", he claims the right to defend them and promote their affairs as he sees appropriate. For example, to strengthen his 1975 claim to parts of Niger, he complained that the government of Niger was maltreating these nomadic people, and announced his support of the previously unknown "front for liberation of East Sahara". The only "liberation" that could possibly take place would be the forced Libyanization of Malian, and Nigeria citizens from their legitimate sovereign states with which Gaddafi disagrees.

While other muslim African states are not as directly affected by Libya's expansionism as is Niger, their turn to confront Gaddafi directly could come. Should Libya remain unchallenged, Gaddafi's aggresive push could reach even farther into Niger — bringing the "Libyan" border to Mali, Upper-Volta, Benin, Togo and Nigeria. Currently, Libya has already occupied portions of Northern Chad. With Soviet and East European military assistance and guidance, he may see little reason to be satisfied with the annexation of only Chad.

His personal frustration with failed mergers with Egypt, Tunisia, Sudan, and Syria is likely only to increase his interest in merging Libya with other — more accesible — states.

Merger

(The proposed merger with Syria is currently snarled up due to Syrian refusal to defend Libyan Sam-missile batteries in Lebanon which have been decimated by Israel aerial sorties).

If Niger's neighbours wait until the wolf is at their own door, it could be too late for them to mount the needed opposition. The time for sharing Nigerian and Chadian sentiments about Libyan aggression and occupation is now, while Libya is still contained within the boundaries of only two states.

THIRD INFANTRY DIVISION RENAMED--The General Officer commanding 3rd Armoured Division, Nigerian Army, Jos, Major-General G.O. Ejiga has said that the country's army is now going more mechanised, to meet the demands of modern warfare. In this regard, General Ejiga said, his division, hitherto known as 3rd Infantry Division, has now been re-equipped and re-christened to the 3rd Armoured Division of the Nigerian Army. The expanse and command area which earlier stretched from north to south embracing six states in the country, he said, has now been reduced by two for operational and administrative convenience. Making this known at what he described as "the naming ceremony of the 3rd Armoured Division of the NA" at a press conference in Jos recently, General Ejiga explained that this was because the army in the country must move with the time. He pointed out that the various wars we read in history books of the previous centuries emphasised the need placed on the Infantry soldier. The GOC then lamented that apart from Plateau state, which faired well, other northern states have not been filling their quota in the Nigerian Army. He said that the idea was for a more balanced representation in the army for the future stability of the country and elicited the cooperation of the various governments to fill their quota in the army without any delay. General Ejiga then expressed happiness on the continued existence of mutual understanding between the military and the press on one hand and the general public on the other. MOSCOW BOOK FAIR INVITATION--A Nigerian author and publisher, Chief Arthur Nwankwo, has been invited by the Soviet Government to participate in this year's Moscow International Bookfair taking place in Moscow from 2nd to 8th September, 1981. During the visit, Chief Nwankwo would use the opportunity to tour various industrial and technical areas in Moscow. He would also discuss with eminent Russian authors and publishers on how best both countries can assist one another in the publishing industry, especially technical books which are needed to propel the Nigerian technological transfer process. GNPP MEETING--The National Executive Committee (NEC) of the Great Nigeria Peoples Party (GNPP), has reaffirmed its absolute and implicit confidence and support in the leadership of their National Chairman, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim. In addition, the NEC confirmed the expulsion of ten of its members in the National Assembly from the party. They are: Senators Mahmud Waziri, Bitrus Kajal, Ja'afaru Managga, Umaru Lawan and Bukar Sanda. Others are Madu N. Ngram, Umaru Sarkin Magori, Mohammed Samaj, Isa Abdullahi Barau and Alhaji Hamidu Marafa Gwanda. A communique issued at the end of their one-day closed door meeting in Jos, capital of Plateau State, last Wednesday, explained that the members were expelled from the party because of their alleged anti-party activities. It alleged that the expelled members portrayed themselves as agents of the National Party of Nigerian, NPN, in order to destabilise the Great Nigeria Peoples Party. The communique which was read to newsmen by the newly elected National Secretary General of the Party, Alhaji Sake Layona, declared the meeting being called upon by the expelled members as unconstitutional, illegal, null and void. It described the purported meeting called by the expelled members as a calculated attempt to deceive and misdirect GNPP supporters in the country. The NEC meeting which took place at the Plateau Hotel Rock Garden was presided over by the National Chairman, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim. Those in attendance included Governor Abubakar Barde of Gongola State and the Majority leader of the Borno State House of Assembly, Alhaji Abdulrahaman Darman, as well as top party officials from all the 19 states of the federation. PROTECTION OF CAMEROON BORDER--The Federal Government has been urged to demand the immediate withdrawal of Cameroun gendarmes from the border areas with Nigeria as the only way of putting a permanent end to the wanton killing of Nigerian fishermen by the Camerounians. The call was made by the Chairman of the Cross River State Fishermen Association, Mr Afat Edem Udofia, when members of the association called on the state Governor, Dr Clement Isong, in his office in Calabar. Mr Udofia also called on the Federal Government to "maintain an effective presence in the border areas to give adequate notice to the Camerounians of Nigeria's determination to protect her territorial integrity." He announced that Nigerians living and fishing around the country's borders with the Cameroun Republic were in total support of the Federal Government's decision to seek a diplomatic rather than military solution to the border problem between the two countries. Members of the association, he disclosed, pledged neither to "violate Camerounian boundaries nor engage in any acts not in the interest of Nigeria." Mr Udofia then expressed the hope that the Federal Government would not relax its effort to protect members of the association from harrassment and molestation from Cameroun gendarmes. Replying, Dr Isong sympathised with the fishermen for all the indignities which they had been undergoing in the hands of the gendarmes. He told the delegation that both the state and the Federal Government had taken a number of steps to halt such harrassment from our borders. One of such steps, he said, was the setting up of new local government areas close to the borders. [Excerpt] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 31 Jul 81 p 20]

TEA PROCESSING FACTORY--Production of tea in the country is expected to begin in October, this year, by the Nigerian Beverages Production Company (NBPC) based in Yola, Gongola State. Construction and installation of equipment and machinery for the tea processing factory on the Mambilla Plateau have virtually been completed. The contract was awarded to Sahel Construction Company in November 1979 at the cost of 2.6 million Naira. The Project Engineer, Mr A. Braconi, told a group of journalists in Gembu that the finished product of the NBPC would be in our market before the end of the year in accordance with the company's objective of meeting our local demands for the commodity. Mr Braconi stated that 3.6 million Naira had so far been expended on the project for the construction of factory buildings, supply, installation and commissioning of the tea machinery as well as the development of the plantation. The development of the plantation, he explained, was being carried out in two phases. The first phase will cost about 1.5 million Naira and the second phase will cost 2.7 million. The project manager stressed that the product of the company would compare favourably with any other tea imported into the country. He hoped the company would supply half and eventually all of our tea requirements in the country, when fully operational. The NBPC is a joint commercial venture between the Federal Government which has 50 percent share, the Gongola State Government with 25 percent and the Nigerian Agricultural Promotion Company (NAPC) with 25 percent share. According to the implementation programme of the project, the entire scheme would be financed with a loan of 7.7 million Naira granted by the Nigerian Agricultural and Co-operative Bank. CHAD BASIN PROJECTS--The Federal Government has spent about 340 million Naira on the Chad Basin Development Authority since its inception in 1973. The chairman of the authority, Alhaji Abba Habib, told the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) in Maiduguri that the amount was spent on the South Chad irrigation project, Baga folder project, underground water development and feasibility studies. Alhaji Abba also said that the authority produced more than 11,000 tones of rice, 10,000 tonnes of wheat and seven hundred tonnes of other grains. The authority, he said, had established some poultry projects which produce about 2,000 broilers and 36,000 eggs annually. He further said that the authority had completed engineering work on the first phase of the South Chad irrigation projects covering 22,000 hectares. The authority voted one million Naira for manpower training between now and 1985, he said. Alhaji Abba said the authority had trained about 95 percent of its staff in agricultural sciences and 50 percent of its tractors and plant operators. COTTON PRODUCTION DECLINE--Delay in cotton sowing by farmers in the country was responsible for poor yields and decline in production. This was the finding of a lecturer of the Department of Agronomy, Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria, Dr V.B. Ogunlela. Dr Ogunlela said the recommended sowing date for cotton in the northern part of the country was middle of June. "But the farmers," he said, "do not plant cotton until July or August after planting their food crops." As a result of this, the cotton crops on farmers' plots suffer the fate of poor yields, he emphasised. Dr Ogunlela was delivering a lecture in Zaria yesterday at the ongoing in-service training for agricultural extension workers. He said research had shown that cotton sown in middle of June yields about 2,500-2,600 kilograms per hectare as against 200-400 kilograms per hectare yield from the plots of cotton sown by farmers in July or August. He further said that report had shown a reduction of between 11 to 20 kilograms per hectare for each day sowing was delayed. [Excerpt [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 29 Jul 81 p 1]

JAPANESE LOAN--Japan is to loan Nigeria about ₦44 million for the implementation of the lower Anambra Irrigation project. The Minister of External Affairs, Prof Ishaya Audu and the Japanese Ambassador in Nigeria, Mr Kazuo Wachi exchanged the documents for the loan agreement at a ceremony in Lagos recently. The loan is being given through the Overseas Economic Co-operation Fund of Japan as part of Japan's economic co-operation with Nigeria. The disbursement period of the loan will be seven years while repayment period will be 20 years after ten years of grace. Interest rate will be 3.5 percent a year. Japan has before this time given Nigeria other loans totalling more than ₦50 million for various projects including the Lagos-Kaduna coaxial cable, Nigeria Railway Corporation Expansion and the Kainji Dam. Grant aid and contribution had also been made by that country for marine fisheries Training/Research, electronic microscope and accessories for the University of Lagos and the International Institute for Tropical Agriculture (IITA). SORGHUM, CASSAVA FOR BEER--Sorghum and Cassava tubers might soon be used as the main raw materials for the production of beer in Nigeria. The Minister of State in the Federal Ministry of Industries, Dr I.J. Igbani, gave the hint at Umuahia in Imo State during his visit to the Golden Guinea Brewery. He explained that an association known as the Brewery Research Group of Nigeria has already reached an advanced stage in its research into the use of the two new ingredients in the manufacture of beer. Earlier in his address, the chairman of the board of governors of the company, Dr Anthony Okafor, had told the minister that the brewery was being expanded to increase its present production capacity of 150,000 hectolitres to 600,000 hectolitres monthly. Dr Okafor complained that the major problem facing the brewery was inadequate power supply which had often caused production losses and damage to equipment. SUPPORT TO COCOA PRODUCERS--Governor Bola Ige of Oyo State has called on the Federal Government to pay about ₦80 million to cocoa producer states that have been entitled to such grants since 1978. He said it would be unjust and unfair if the proceeds from cocoa were being spent by the Federal Government to cushion other commodity prices. Governor Ige made this call in Ibadan when members of the Nigerian Cocoa Board called on him in his office. Chief Ige criticised the existing producer price for cocoa, adding that the price was inadequate in relation to the high cost of maintaining cocoa plantation. He argued that the establishment of the board was unconstitutional and its activities were, therefore, illegal. He said the Federal Government had no business with agriculture since it was a residual subject. Governor Ige pointed out that 15 states of the Federation had signified their opposition to the existence of the board. He promised that his government would set up its own cocoa board at the appropriate time to take care of the marketing of cocoa. Chief Ige, however, explained that his government had not relented in its aid of cocoa production in the state. [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 1 Aug 81 p 18]

Mr Wade also welcomed changes in France's policies on development and cooperation, which would "no longer be aimed at using force to support governments in difficulty with their own people." NATION INVOLVED IN SEARCH FOR CHEAPER ENERGY

Victoria NATION in English 5 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text]

AS THE world's industrial powers and the oil-producing nations continue to push up fuel prices between them — the present haggle over the oil glut is certainly not designed for the benefit of the poor and developing countries — Seychelles goes into the United Nations' Nairobi Conference on New and Renewable Energy, next week, searching for cheaper energy sources.

Though Seychelles' spearhead in this field — the Research and Development Unit of the Ministry of Planning and Development — is still at the pioneering stage, there are signs for optimism.

The Research and Development Unit is still setting itself on a firm footing and its two delegates to Nairobi, Dr. Selwyn Gendron and Mr. Peter Shilton, will try to entice major international research and experiments in alternative energy sources to Seychelles. Some 150 nations are expected to send delegations.

"We will be eagerly looking at what there is around in this field", the delegation leader, Dr. Gendron, told Seychelles Agence Presse, "and we are naturally interested in what other people can do to help us and in what they have achieved that can be adapted to our needs and resources".

The Unit is now actively establishing contacts with research institutes elsewhere, he added.

IDEAL BASE

Dr. Gendron pointed out Seychelles' advantages in trying to entice foreign and international research. Because Seychelles' energy needs are so low, given our relatively small size, it would be an ideal base for experiments by countries or institutions which would prefer to start on a small scale before developing or branching out internationally or industrially.

Through susch co-operation Seychelles could save money, gain experience and scientific and technological skill, and, hopefully, hit upon a method that could be adapted to our use even if it did not prove feasible on the larger scale needed in bigger countries.

During the ten-day UN conference, from the 10th to the 20th, Seychelles will also put forward a national paper outlining the country's aims and ideas in energy planning, follow up contacts made by the Minister of Planning and Development, Dr. Maxime Ferrari, on his recent European trip and examine progress on research already being carried out in collaboration with foreign research bodies.

SMALL ISLAND COMMUNITIES

In studying international progress in the quest for alternative sources of energy at the conference, Dr. Gendron and Mr. Shilton, will keep a special eye open for projects s[illegible]ed to small island communi[illegible].

"While the Research and Development Unit has certain things in mind for reducing Mahé's petroleum-based fuel consumption, the emphasis is on the smaller, isolated outlying islands.

"We hope to look at the experience of other island states in the field of alternative energy", Dr. Gendron explained, "especially among the Pacific and, to a lesser extent, the Caribbean countries".

SOLAR PANELS

Already, through AIRDOI (Association des Institutions de Recherche et Développement dans l'Océan Indien), Dr. Gendron has had the opportunity to study Mauritius' and Réunion's progress.

Of particular interest here are their results with solar panels which, Dr. Gendron points out, have been made here, and would be easier to maintain than on the other two islands, as we are not plagued by cyclones.

For the foreseeable future, the Unit sees little or no prospect in using wave energy as the Mauritian experience points to concrete structures — which have drawbacks from the tourism and conservation standpoints — and bigger, more regular waves than Seychelles seems to have.

COCONUT HUSKS

However, the Unit has special interest in the use of coconut husks or, because of the abundant supply on some outer islands, casuarina wood left over from sawmill operations. It is in connection with this that Mr. Shilton is already in Nairobi setting up a pilot producer gas plant in the conference's exhibition.

Designed and built by Mr. Kjell Alfrengen under the supervision of the Swedish Berjes Institute, the plant is a small electricity generator using a car engine and wood chips and coconut husks for fuel. German and French bodies are also involved in the project, which could prove ideal for producing electricity on outer islands.

Added encouragement in this significant, practical step towards an integrated energy project for the country is a R. 2.5 million grant approved by the United Nations for the first three-year phase of the 20-year programme.

This first phase is devoted to the design of an alternative energy package of between 50 and 100 kilowatts for the outer islands. Wind, solar energy, biogas and biomass technology is also being considered.

NATION TO HOST INTERNATIONAL TOURISM

Victoria NATION in English 4 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text]

SEYCHELLES is to host an international tourism marketing conference next month as part of the special Tourism Week.

Releasing the programme for the Week, planned in late September to mark a decade of the tourism industry in Seychelles, the Minister of Transport and Tourism, Mr. Matthew Servina, said over 100 international tourism-related organisations all over the world, including neighbouring government delegations from the Indian Ocean and Eastern Africa, are being invited to attend the conference.

The conference, opening at the Reef Hotel on Mahé on September 22, will last four days and is a follow-up to the tourism marketing conference which was hosted by Seychelles last October.

Attending the conference will be tour operators, airline officials, travel agents and the travel press, among others.

Minister Servina said that he is also sending invitations to various national tourist organisations in the region.

The conference, to be chaired by the Tourism Minister, will hear progress reports since the 1980 conference and a Master Plan for tourism in Seychelles will also be presented.

Other talks will centre on the promotion of Seychelles as a tourist destination and analysis of holiday prices in Seychelles.

The Tourism Week will feature, among other things, cultural shows at the People's Stadium on September 22 and a two-day fishing competition starting at midnight on September 25—26.

An exhibition on ten years of tourism in Seychelles will take place on September 28 and the national Tourism Week will officially come to an end on September 29 with a grand musical festival at the People's Stadium.

Speaking at the tourism marketing conference last October, Minister Servina called upon neighbouring countries in the Indian Ocean and Eastern Africa to come together in a regional grouping for a package tourism undertaking in the interest of all people in the region.

NEW APPROACH TO COOPERATION WITH FRANCE REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 4 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Article by Ronnie Jumeau]

[Text]

SEYCHELLES' first official contact with France's new socialist government was picked out by the Minister for Planning and Development, Dr. Maxime Ferrari, yesterday, as one of the most important events of his recent three-week visit to Western Europe.

Dr. Ferrari had an hour's meeting with Mr. Jean Pierre Cot, France's new Minister for Co-operation and Development, on his country's new approach to co-operation with the Third World. In this, Dr. Ferrari explained, France will now put more emphasis than ever on the mutual respect for another country's beliefs and rights. He expects future cooperation with France to be "more frank, friendly and solid".

In France, Minister Ferrari also saw a new, hour-long television film on Aldabra Atoll, which will be shown on the French network later this month. "It is, in my opinion, a very beautiful film that will promote very well the islands and our conservation policies," Dr. Ferrari observed.

Minister Ferrari then went on to Italy where, as happened in all the countries he visited, he met with firms and industrialists involved or interested in Seychelles. In Italy these included the owners of the Béolière Hotel and the firm carrying out the granite mining project.

The granite firm was very optimistic, Dr. Ferrari said, and was preparing to exhibit polished granite from Seychelles at an industrial fair in Verona next month. The exhibits will then move with the fair to Marseilles in France.

In Vienna our minister met with the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (UNIDO), Dr. Abdel Rahman Khane, after signing a loan with OPEC's (Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries) Fund for International Development.

UNIDO promised some R 800,000 to R 900,000 towards the boatyard projects for Praslin and La Digue.

The Austrian government, on the other hand, showed interest in Seychelles' offshore search for oil, while Austrian firms talked of potential co-operation in renewable energy projects.

While in London, Minister Ferrari also discussed general bilateral relations with the British Minister for Overseas Development and a junior minister for foreign affairs.

CREOLE RECOGNIZED AS NATION'S FIRST LANGUAGE

Victoria NATION in English 1 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE LANGUAGE question has finally been decided. It is now official that Creole is the first national language of the Republic, English second and French third. The decision to make Creole the first national language was taken at the third annual national Congress of the Seychelles People's Progressive Front, which also mandated the Central Executive Committee to decide on the second and third languages after it had studied recommendations put forward by a working committee which the Central Executive Committee would itself appoint.

The working committee — chaired by President Albert René and composed of Congress participants, the Minister of Education and Information, Mr. James Michel, officials of the Department of Education and headteachers of all schools — met all day last Sunday and forwarded its recommendations to the Central Executive Committee.

Necessary steps

Basing itself on these, the Central Executive Committee yesterday decided that the Ministry of Education and Information should be asked to take all necessary steps to introduce Creole in all Primary I classes, both as a subject and as a medium of instruction, by January 1982. These steps should include the establishment of an orthography and the necessary personnel and material as soon as possible, followed by the design and production of dictionaries, grammar and other books and the complete revision of all programmes for P1 as well as the necessary preparation of teachers to teach the new programme.

Creole academy

The Central Executive Committee also decided that a Creole academy should be set up to monitor and guide the development of the Creole language.

Concerning the second language, the Central Executive Committee decided that the Ministry of Education and Information should take all necessary steps to teach English as the second national language as early as possible and to plan for it to be used as the medium of instruction as soon as it has been sufficiently mastered by the children.

Creole, being the mother tongue, may still be used, however, to facilitate understanding and as the medium of instruction for certain subjects which would be determined by the Ministry of Education and Information.

The decision to make French the third national language is also based on the recommendations of the working committee. The Central Executive Committee decided that the third language should compulsorily be French ; that the Ministry of Education and Information should introduce it as soon as the second language has been sufficiently mastered and that a careful study should be made for the timing of its introduction in schools.

The working committee also discussed the present language situation in schools and, again, basing itself on the recommendations, the Central Executive Committee, decided :

- That the Ministry of Education and Information, in close collaboration with headteachers, take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that all children now at school become literate in English by the time they reach P6 and that English immediately become the medium of instruction for all subjects up to P6.

- That the Ministry of Education and Information take steps to ensure that English becomes the medium of instruction for all subjects up to P6 as soon as possible.

- That the Ministry of Education take special steps to ensure that most present P9 students become literate before they enter the National Youth Service.

The Central Executive Committee made its historic decision on the language issue at its weekly meeting yesterday, thus ending a controversy which has periodically swept the country for more than 15 years.

CIVIL AVIATION ACCORD WITH INDIA REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 7 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text]

COOPERATION in civil aviation between Seychelles and India is being strengthened in various ways through the visit to Victoria by a two-man Indian delegation.

Mr. J. Kathpalia, the Director General of Civil Aviation and Mr. N. Vishwanath, Director of Engineering (International Airports Authority), have met the Minister of Transport and Tourism, Mr. Matthew Servina and held talks with other ministry officials and representatives of Civil Aviation Limited.

The two Indians were briefed on Seychelles' requirements in the field of civil aviation administration, general airport management, maintenance and equipment needs.

Accompanied by the Minister himself, the delegation flew over to the Amitié airstrip on Praslin yesterday afternoon to see for themselves the site of the proposed expansion of the island's aerodrome.

Since their arrival on Tuesday, the delegation has also visited the Pointe Larue international airport and other civil aviation installations.

Minister Servina said cooperation between India and Seychelles in civil aviation had started earlier this year with the arrival of three Indian meteorological forecasters. He said he hoped to see the strengthening of this cooperation through the signing at a later date of an agreement based on talks with the Indian delegation.

ALLOCATION OF HOUSING IN ANSE BOILEAU REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 3 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE turn of Anse Boileau district to benefit "en masse" from the Government programme of providing each Seychellois family with its own house, came on Saturday morning when 14 plots were allocated to families there.

As was done in other districts, the plots were allocated through lottery on the housing site at "Dans Caïman". The plots, each measuring about 4,000 square metres are big and fertile enough to encourage farming once the houses have been constructed.

It is expected that community spirit will prevail in the setting up of this new although small community. Mr. Leon Michaud, the General Manager of the Seychelles Housing Development Corporation told the successful plot recipients.

Mr. Michaud hopes they will get together to help with the construction of the houses and a road and to make their community as exemplary one.

At Anse Boileau, the Housing Corporation will not be able to construct the houses themselves because of heavy work commitments. The plot owners will be provided with the money to construct the houses on their own but the Housing Corporation will assist them with advisors.

Mr. Michaud called on awaiting loan applicants to exert some patience. He said it did not mean their cases were being ignored when a little more time was taken in processing applications. The Housing Corporation, he said had so much to do and wanted to help everybody.

BRIEFS

TRAINING FOR OFFICIAL--The former Principal Secretary for Works in the Ministry of Planning and Development, Mr Maxime Fayon, is taking a one-year sabbatical leave to follow a post-professional course in Canada, which will qualify him for a new position on his return to Seychelles. Mr Fayon has already played a key role in the setting up and work of various national organisations and on his return he will probably be involved mainly in the running of some of these bodies. Before leaving Seychelles last month, the former Principal Secretary was also the chairman of the board of directors of both the Seychelles Electricity Corporation and Works Enterprises Limited. The reorganisation of the Ministry of Planning and Development announced last week, has left Mr Robert Grandcourt as the only Principal Secretary in that ministry, which was previously the only government body having two such posts. Commenting on the reorganisation, Minister Maxime Ferrari said it started about a year ago and was necessary to relieve the government ministries of some functions, particularly those operating on a commercial basis. Those providing housing, electricity, water and other services are now the responsibility of independent parastatal companies. [Text] [Victoria NATION in English 5 Aug 81 p 2]

BOTHA DISCUSSES PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL'S WORK SCHEDULE

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 4 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

THE ASSEMBLY — The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, told the Assembly yesterday he considered that by November or December the President's Council would have had a "reasonable time" to complete its work on deciding a new political dispensation for coloured people and Indians.

During the debate on the censure motion Mr Botha said that should the council not have completed its work by then, as he expected, a "little more time" would be granted.

He said that if the council presented recommendations which deviated drastically from government policy, the Cabinet would present them to party congresses, along with the Cabinet's standpoint.

Should the congresses accept the recommendations a referendum would be held in the interests of stability.

Mr Botha said he was also prepared to ask the President's Council to bring out an interim report on local and regional government.

He said he wanted to help the coloured people in their striving for a political say.

"I do not believe in a common voters roll. It has never worked and will never work," said Mr Botha.

He said the struggles and bitterness which had come about in relations with the coloured people had stemmed from the common voters roll.

The government was bound to the proposals referred to the Presidents' Council — the establishment of an electoral college for the election of a State President with more executive power, the establishment of a President's Council on an established basis of election on which coloured people and Indians would be represented, a Council of Cabinets in which whites, coloured people and Indians would be represented and three parliamentary councils.

ADMIRAL SAYS CORVETTE-TYPE CRAFT TO BE BUILT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Aug 81 p 11

CAPE TOWN. — The South African Navy will have new Corvette-like surface vessels as its main attacking force within 10 years, says its chief, Vice-Admiral R A Edwards.

In an interview during exercises by naval frigates, strike craft, SAAF Impala jet trainers and helicopters in honour of the President of Transkei, Paramount Chief Kaiser Matanzima, Adm Edwards added the vessels would also be South African-made.

With one of the three frigates, SAS President Steyn, "paid-off" and stripped, the end of these graceful ships, at the forefront of the SA Navy for nearly 20 years, was less than 10 years away.

"We are into the smaller ship era, an offensive-defensive role where submarines and missile craft act as the deterrent," he said.

The navy was already planning for the introduction of Corvette-type vessels, similar to those on order when the 1977 arms embargo was introduced.

They would be armed similarly to strike craft with cannon and missiles.

The new vessels would be slightly larger than the strike craft, but still economical.

The navy also needed to supplement its present strike craft flotilla of six to operate on the east and west coasts.

South Africa would also have to look at its sub-surface requirements within the next few years, Adm Edwards said.

The present Daphne-class vessels were already 10 years old and would have to be replaced within the next 15 years.

Adm Edwards hinted at possible South African submarine production, but added sub-surface vessel manufacture was an entirely different consideration.

The two remaining frigates, SAS President Kruger and SAS President Pretorius, would have to be kept operational until late into the 80 s, as their primary task was anti-submarine warfare.

NEW BUDGET PRESENTED BY FINANCE MINISTER HORWOOD

'Moderate' Budget

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text]

EXCEPT for drinkers and smokers, who are going to pay more for their liquor and "smokes" because of higher excise duties, South Africans can say "Cheers!" to the record Budget presented by Mr Owen Horwood, Minister of Finance, in Parliament yesterday.

The reason for this general satisfaction is that there are no income-tax or sales tax increases and the loan levy, despite intense Press speculation, is not being reintroduced.

Company taxes also remain unchanged.

Economists described the Budget as mild, fair, neutral and moderate, despite high spending on defence (up more than 30 percent) and on the education and training of Blacks (up to 52 percent).

They forecast a slower growth rate as a result of the economic conditions outlined by Mr Horwood in his Budget survey.

The budget, which included State spending of R15 871-m, was generally described as a "balanced one in difficult circumstances."

Mr Horwood took only moderately and in the right places — namely, from the rich, by increasing duties on luxury items such as jewellery, photographic equipment and furs. He gave moderately to the right people mainly the lower-income groups.

The duty on all beer, both imported and local, is to be increased by two cents a 375 millilitre container.

Brandy, gin, whisky and other spirits will go up by two cents a tot, or about 55 cents a bottle.

Fortified and sparkling wines go up by 2,4 cents a litre.

Non-alcoholic beverages go up one cent a litre.

Cigarettes rise by 4 cents a packet of 20, while cigars go up by 10 cents per kilogramme.

The duty on pipe tobacco remains unchanged.

Ad valorem duty on imported items such as jewellery, photographic equipment, furs and other "less essential" items will be increased by five percent across the board.

Other features of the Budget are:

- Social pensioners are to receive a second special pension bonus of R30 for Whites, R24 for Coloureds and Asians and R18 for Blacks, to be paid not later than November this year.
- Taxation on fringe benefits will be 'phased in" over the next two years.
- People earning less than R7 000 a year will no longer have to submit tax returns.
- An increase from R15 000 to R20 000 in respect of lump sum payments to employees exempt from tax.
- The tax-free allowance on the earnings of married women has been raised from R1 200 to R1 400 for this tax year, and will go up to R1 600 next year.
- Racial discrimination in the income tax system is to be finally abolished next year, when Blacks will be taxed on exactly the same basis as other races.
- The estate duty burden has been eased. Now the estate of a man leaving a wife and two children will only start to be taxed at a minimum level of R180 000, compared with R150 000 previously.
- An R80 tax rebate has been introduced for people aged 70 or more.
- Retirement bonuses, such as deferred compensation, are to be taxed at a lower rate on amounts above the tax-free limit of R20 000.

● The subsidies for maize and bread — the staple foods of the lower income groups — will reach a new record level of R250-million.

● Further rises in spending on all kinds of education, R2 902-million, which will account for 18,2 percent of Government expenditure, compared with 14,4 percent five years ago.

● An allocation of an additional account of R257-m for the National Housing Fund, which is mainly concerned with financing housing for Blacks in Soweto and Coloured people on the Cape Flats and elsewhere in the country.

● An announcement that the Government is to proceed with legislation to preserve pension rights (these rights are now partially lost and partially paid out in cash when a worker changes jobs).

● However, employees will have the right to opt out of this in respect of their past pension contributions.

● Establishment of a new fund for training unemployed workers, especially in the lower-income groups, with a view to enabling them to increase their skills and to get jobs.

● Higher interest rates and higher maximum limits for investors in tax-free building society shares.

● Tax allowances for maintenance of handicapped children will go up to a maximum of R1 200 a year.

● The proportion of ploughed-back dividend income not subject to undistributed profits tax has been increased from 35 to 50 percent in respect of public companies.

● Farmers' breeding stock is to be valued for tax purposes on a more generous basis, including tax rebates on all stock and not only on breeding stock.

● Interest rates on Treasury and National Defence Bonds are to be increased after October to adapt them to present-day interest rates.

● Exemption of Government, Provincial administrations and State enterprises from local authority rates (property taxes) is to be abolished, but local authorities will give them a 20 percent rebate.

● There is also to be financial assistance for local authority, ambulance and fire-fighting services.

● Annual duties on companies will be levied at a flat rate irrespective of the capital structure and irrespective of whether the company is a domestic or foreign company:

● The abolition of duties on all petroleum gases.

Defense Expenditures

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 13 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] The weapons boycott against South Africa and the severe inflation in weapons prices will be regarded as important causes for the rather sharp increase in the defense budget. The total budget for the new financial year is 2,465 million rand, or 575 million higher than last year. This is close to a 30-percent increase.

In political circles it will be pointed out that this is not the largest increase within the past decade. On at least three occasions the increase was larger than this year. The inflation in weapons prices is extremely high, and this is certainly an important factor in the latest increase. The weapons boycott against South Africa also means that some weapons become uneconomic for the country's defense. Observers also note that the threat to South Africa will be greater every year, a fact which the defense budget has to take into account.

The land defense expenditure in the financial year will be 1,293,595,500, compared to 1,032,698,100 rand in the past year; for air defense 62,403,000, compared to 42,331,400 rand last year; and maritime defense 128,165,100 compared to 111,702,100 in the past year.

Special Defense Account

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 11

[Text]

AN AMOUNT of R172-million will be transferred from the Budget surplus of R309-million to the Special Defence Account, Mr Horwood said.

"In the light of recent developments in and around Southern Africa, defence must remain one of South Africa's highest priorities." he said.

Budget Aid to Namibia

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 11

[Text]

THE old method of financing budgetary aid to South West Africa could no longer be regarded as sound accounting practice and he had decided to provide such aid in the main estimates in the normal way, the Minister of Finance, said.

Mr Horwood said the old South West Africa Account was a parallel account to the State Revenue Account.

"It has become customary to make good any shortfall on this account by transferring funds to it from the State Revenue Account by way of the Finance Act.

"Due to constitutional developments in South West Africa, the SWA Account was abolished recently and a Central Revenue Fund established."

This method was unsatisfactory.

"I have consequently, with effect from the 1981/1982 financial year, decided to provide for budgetary aid to SWA in the main estimates in the normal way."

It would be necessary to transfer a further amount of R80-million to the Central Revenue fund via the Finance Act for the 1980/81 financial year.

This amount would come from the Budget surplus of R309 — million, Mr Horwood said.

Tax Changes

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — The phasing out of separate taxation for Blacks was part of the ongoing process of systematic tax reforms, Mr Horwood said.

It was his intention to effect the final phasing-out of the taxation of Blacks in terms of the Black Tax Act of 1969, from March 1, 1982 by subjecting the incomes of all individual taxpayers to tax in terms of the Income Tax Act, 1962, under the jurisdiction of one tax authority.

"In order to provide differentiated relief to persons over the age of 70 years and in an attempt to afford further tax relief to senior citizens who find it increasingly difficult, if not impossible, to augment their incomes, I propose to go further and to grant all taxpayers who are 70 years and older an additional rebate of R80 with effect from the tax year which commenced on March 1, 1981.

"The effect of this concession will be that a person in this age group will, at present rates of tax, not become liable for income tax until his income, after the deduction of medical expenses, exceeds R5 000 per annum, compared with R4 000 per annum at present.

Lump sum payments by an employer to an employee upon retirement due to old age, ill health or other infirmity be increased from R15 000 to R20 000.

"As a further relief measure I wish to propose that the portion of the lump sum remaining after the deduction of the exempt amount be subjected to tax at the taxpayer's average rate of tax applicable to his other income and not at the marginal rate which would, but for this measure, have applied."

Parents who maintained a child or stepchild, who due to physical or mental disability was unable to maintain himself, who was wholly or partially dependent for his maintenance upon the parent, and had not himself become liable for income tax, were at present entitled to a rebate for the child irrespective of his age.

Mr Horwood said he had decided to extend to all such parents the same concession as that which applied in the case where the taxpayer and/or his wife suffered from a physical disability, namely an allowance equal to as much of the expenditure as the Commissioner for Inland Revenue was satisfied was necessarily incurred by the parent in consequence of the child's physical or mental disability, but subject to a maximum deduction of R1 000 a year.

"Fiscal drag"

Referring to estate duties snr Horwood said that in order to compensate partly for the effects of "fiscal drag" occasioned by escalating values of assets making up the taxable value of an estate, it was necessary constantly to adjust the abatements to ensure that a tax of this nature did not become confiscatory.

"I wish to propose, therefore, that in respect of estates of persons dying on or after April 1, 1981, the following deductions be applied instead of the amount of R37 500 at present applicable in each case.

- "A basic deduction in respect of each estate of R50 000;
- "A further deduction where the deceased is survived by a spouse, R50 000;
- 'A deduction in respect of each child who predeceased the deceased parent leaving a descendant by blood or a wife who had not remarried, R40 000.

Gold Output Value Decline

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 10

[Text]

THE value of South Africa's net gold output declined sharply from R10 000-million in 1980 to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of about R8 000-million in the first half of 1981, the Minister of Finance, said.

He said this was due to the decline in the price of gold and the widespread recessionary tendencies abroad.

Other exports also declined marginally below the high 1980 figure of R9 600-million.

"By contrast, the continued rapid expansion of domestic investment and consumption brought about a rise in imports, from R14 200-million in 1980 to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of over R17 000-million in the first half of 1981.

"Taking into account also other current payments and receipts, the result was a turn-around in the balance of payments on current account from a surplus of R2 800-million in 1980 to a seasonally adjusted annual deficit of over R3 000-million in the first half of 1981," Mr Horwood said.

Effect of Gold Price

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 11

[Text]

PRESENT circumstances called for a budgetary policy of consolidation and adjustment, the Minister of Finance said.

Delivering his Budget speech, Mr Horwood said this meant consolidation of the enormous economic gains made during the recent upward cyclical phase, and adjustment to the adverse impact on the South African economy of the set of conditions created by the prevailing world recessionary tendencies: The abnormally high interest rates in the United States and elsewhere, the spectacular appreciation of the US dollar and the sharp decline in the gold price.

"A policy of outright stimulation of demand through increased deficit spending finances by bank credit must be rejected out of hand, even if the South African economy appears about to follow Western Europe into what is technically called a downward phase of the business cycle (if it has not already done so).

"In framing fiscal policy, much more has to be taken into account than just that consideration.

"In the first place, inflation remains a major problem and with the economy still operating at full capacity, any premature stimulation of demand would almost certainly result in an acceleration of the rate of price increases.

"Secondly, the recent adverse changes in the external circumstances affecting the South African economy can neither be shrugged off nor neutralised by fiscal or monetary manipulation."

What economists called the balance of payment adjustment process should not only be permitted to proceed, but had also to be assisted by fiscal and monetary policies, even if this meant retraining demand at a time of slower real growth.

"There are no soft options in dealing with a situation of this kind.

"A country cannot solve its economic problems by attempting to live beyond its means."

As Franklin D Roosevelt had said in 1932: "A country, like any family, can for a year spend a little more than it earns. But you and I know that a continuance of that habit means the poorhouse.

"In this respect, an important element in determining appropriate budgetary policy at present was the movement of the gold price.

"Despite the recent decline in the gold price, I see no reason to revise my basic confidence in gold.

"In fact, I would point out that the present price is still almost a third higher than two years ago and that throughout last year, inter alia in my 1980 Budget speech, I consistently cautioned against basing one's expectations on the high price of gold which then prevailed.

"In my view there can be little doubt that at present price levels, the industrial demand, which is a very important component of the aggregate demand for gold, will be picking up sooner than later.

Together with other factors, such as that Russia had been selling little gold, there was every reason to expect that the price of gold would start rising again, possibly even as early as the end of 1981.

"In the meantime, however, we have no choice but to acknowledge that the decline in the gold price has in a very real sense made us a nation less affluent than we would otherwise have been."

"Ever since he had become Minister of Finance early in 1975, he had been calling for an authoritive round table conference, preferably arranged by the International Monetary Fund, to thrash out the proper monetary role of gold, in order to bring discipline to bear in international financial arrangements and thus setting the stage for an effective attack on rampant world inflation.

"After much opposition over the years, the American administration has at last appointed a Gold Commission to make precisely that enquiry — and not only South Africa will await its outcome with interest".

As far as other exports were concerned, there was little clear prospect of an early general improvement.

Recently, in the World Economic Review prepared by the International Monetary Fund, it was forecast the rate of growth in real gross national product of all the industrial countries combined — would recover only marginally to 1,5 percent in 1981.

It was further forecast that the total volume of imports of this important group of countries, which declined by one percent in 1980 after having grown by eight percent in 1979, would remain stagnant for the whole of 1981.

"The main implication for South Africa is that there is no reason to expect a rapid increase in the volume and value of non-gold exports in the immediate future.

"To ignore these facts in our policy-making would be irresponsible," Mr Horwood said.

Combat of Inflation

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 10

[Text] THE rate of inflation was too high and the Government had no higher priority than combating of inflation, the Minister of Finance said.

Summarising the economic prospects in his Budget speech, Mr Horwood said it was gratifying to note that the average real earnings of the working population as a whole had increased in recent years in spite of high inflation rates.

In 1980 for example, White earning had shown a real growth of 3,3 percent and that of other population groups, 4,-3 percent.

"This means that wages and salaries, expressed in current (1980) Rand, rose on average by some 18 percent last year," he said. This was a very substantial rise by any standards.

Taking into consideration the high growth rate in 1980, it was also gratifying that the average increase of 13,8 percent in the consumer price index was only slightly higher than the 13,2 percent rise the year before.

For the twelve months from June last year to June 1981 the consumer price index rose by 14,6 percent over that of the comparable previous twelve months.

"What is important is that, uniquely for a long time, there has been a successive small decline in the three most recent monthly rates of increase in the consumer price index, compared each time with the corresponding month of the previous year.

"This relatively favourable turn of events, however, which has also been reflected in the index of production prices (wholesale price index), is no cause for complacency about the inflation rate which, however it is looked at, is too high," Mr Horwood said.

At the March inflation conference he had called in Johannesburg and which was attended by the business sector, organised labour, consumers, academicians and the public sector, as well as at a meeting of the economic advisory council, a wide variety of anti-inflation measures were considered in depth.

It had been generally agreed at both meetings that he should continue vigorously with the structural long-term measures he had listed in his 1980 Budget speech. These included the better utilisation of labour resources and more effective competition in all sectors of the economy.

It was also agreed that in order to supplement the domestic supply of goods, the intensification of import controls by quantative measures should be avoided in the shorter term.

"In both meetings the futility of trying to combat inflation through selective price controls was also underlined," he said. Such controls lead to distortions between the prices of controlled and uncontrolled products and gave rise to shortages and production cost backlogs in respect of controlled products. This resulted in large and disruptive price adjustments having to be made later in order to catch up with price increases in the economy at large.

It was strongly felt that inflation should not be fought with formal wage and price controls but at the same time it was emphasised that all parties should be aware of the inflationary consequences of excessive price, wage and salary increases.

"Self discipline by all parties involved in negotiations and decisions on these matters are essential conditions for the more effective control of inflation," the Minister warned.

The policy which had been followed in recent years, albeit for good reasons, of closing the wage gap between race groups, "must necessarily in the shorter term be inflationary," he said.

Although there might be a difference of opinion in the matter, he knew of no serious economic commentator who would disagree that without the necessary increase in the money supply, no inflationary process could run its course.

At both meetings it was agreed that at this stage of full employment of skilled manpower and of production capacity prevailing in South Africa, "the most crucial elements of an anti-inflationary policy was effective fiscal discipline and effective control over the money supply," he said.

Mr Horwood warned that neither the Government nor the private sector could allow the malpractices of "that small minority of members of business and the professions who, under conditions of inflation are tempted to exploit the public for their own selfish ends.

Monetary Control

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 10

[Text] SOUTH AFRICA experienced excessive monetary expansion during 1980 and the first quarter of 1981, the Minister of Finance, Mr Owen Horwood said.

Taken at a seasonally adjusted annual rate the broad money supply (M2) had increased by 27 percent in the second quarter of 1980, 41 percent in the third quarter, 25 percent in the fourth quarter and 46 percent in the first quarter of 1981, before slowing down to 29 percent in the second quarter.

"Although these figures have been distorted by so-called 'disintermediation' and 're-intermediation', i.e. shifts from 'on balance sheet' to 'off balance sheet' bank financing and then back again, they nevertheless indicate excessive monetary expansion, particularly when compared with the broad guideline of 10 to 12 percent for the increase in M2 which I suggested at the time of the 1980 Budget."

Mr Horwood said the successful out-turn of the 1980-1981 budget was most gratifying.

"From the economic facts I have presented today, however, it is evident that not all aspects of economic stabilisation policy in South Africa during the year ended March, 1981, were equally satisfactory.

"In retrospect for example, it is evident that whereas fiscal policy was, on balance, restrictive, the instruments of monetary policy in use at the time could not prevent the money supply and bank credit to the private sector from rising at an excessive rate — a development which contributed to the overheating of the economy and the general demand inflation which came into being during the second half of 1980 and persisted well into 1981."

"The increases in the quantity of money were closely related to the simultaneous existence during 1979 and 1980 of a record surplus on the current account of the balance of payments and the continued application, albeit with some relaxations, of exchange controls over both residents and non-residents.

"This combination of circumstances inevitably resulted in an accumulation of money in the hand of companies and individuals.

Equally important, Mr Horwood said, it also brought about a sustained increase in the liquidity of banking institutions which, in turn, enabled them to create even more money by expanding their credit to the private sector in response to the rising demand for credit.

In the course of 1980 and the earlier part of 1981, this increase in bank credit became the main statistical "cause" of the rise in money supply.

"A further feature of this situation was the abnormally low level of interest rates which prevailed in South Africa during most of 1979 and 1980.

"These rates were low not only in relation to interest rates in the United States, the United Kingdom and many other industrial countries, but also in relation to our own rate of inflation. Indeed, throughout this period most South African interest rates were negative in real terms.

"In addition, within our own interest rate structure, the rates on Treasury bills, bankers' acceptances, call money and other short term paper were abnormally low in relation to bank rate and prime commercial bank overdraft rates.

"At the time of last year's Budget, for example, when the bank rate was seven percent and the commercial banks' overdraft rate 9,5 percent, the Treasury bill had declined to just over [illegible] percent and acceptance cr[illegible]its could be arranged free[illegible] at an all inclusive cost of around six or seven percent.

"It was this distortion, coupled with the excessive liquidity of many companies, which brought about much of the 'disintermediation' to which I have referred.

"Although these problems of monetary policy were dealt with extensively in last year's Budget speech, the excess liquidity in the banking sector, and indeed, in the private sector as a whole, and the distorted interest rate structure continued throughout the rest of 1980 and into 1981."

These conditions were exacerbated first by a temporary increase in bank credit to the Government sector during the second quarter of 1980, and then by a particularly sharp increase of over R1 100-million in the net foreign reserves during the third quarter.

It was only from October onwards, when the net reserves were allowed to decline so as to drain some of the excess liquidity out of the economy, that the position gradually began to return to normal and that interest rates began to rise to more appropriate levels.

More recently a combination of natural economic forces and a firm contractionary monetary policy has brought about a metamorphosis of the monetary and banking situation.

"Although the broad money supply and bank credit, inflated by 'reintermediation' have until recently continued to rise at too high a rate, conditions in the financial markets have tightened considerably and both short and long term interest rates have increased sharply to levels much more in line with overseas rates.

"In an attempt to add effective monetary discipline to the existing fiscal discipline, the Reserve Bank has permitted interest rates to rise to market-related levels and has increased its own bank rate in four stages from seven percent at the beginning of 1981 to its present level of 12,5 percent.

"It has also made increased use of open-market operations, rediscount policy and variations in the discount it offers on forward dollars.

"Preliminary indications suggest that these measures are taking effect and that since the end of April both the money supply and bank credit have been rising at a noticeably slower rate," he said.

Impact on Maize Farmers

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Peon de Villiers]

[Text] THE Government was trying to steer clear of its responsibility towards the South African maize farmers, Dr Kit le Clus, head of the development foundation of the National Maize Producers' Organisation (NAMPO), said yesterday.

He was commenting from the NAMPO headquarters in Bothaville on the budget announcement regarding assistance to maize farmers by the Ministers of Finance, Dr Owen Horwood.

According to Dr Horwood's announcement, a Government-guaranteed bridging loan of R71-million would be made to the maize Board. Part of the interest on this loan would also be subsidised.

A further consumer subsidy of R80-million would be given.

Dr Le Clus said it was unsound Government policy and would get maize farmers into further difficulties.

He said wheat sorghum would be subsidised by R160-million. "This is detrimental to the use of maize.

"It will mean that we will have to export more maize on which we only make losses."

Dr Le Clus explained that the R71-million loan was for farmers to bear their own export losses.

"He could have introduced other measures to stimulate production." Dr Le Clus said the Minister should rather have applied discretionary sales tax to discourage consumption.

"The Minister mentioned in his speech that we would have to carry forward 3-million tons of maize for which the Government did not have the necessary machinery to export. It costs us an average of R16,50 a ton — almost a total of R50-million.

"Already we have to carry forward debts of R33-million from last year which means that by at the end of this year we will owe the Government R104-million.

"The Le Clus emphasised: "The Government is steering clear of its responsibility towards the maize farmer by offering this loan of R71-million of which only a part of the interest will be subsidised.

"Such a loan will get farmers only further into trouble as was the case with the sugar farmers. We all know what position the sugar industry is in today."

Dr Le Clus added that maize farmers felt the consumer subsidy on maize should have been higher, or at least the same as that on wheat.

By continuing with a strict monetary and fiscal policy, the Minister was only combating the symptoms of inflation instead of fighting inflation itself, he said.

"Money in circulation is being reduced, while interest rates rise sharply. This makes money with which we produce more expensive and this does not encourage production," he said.

Opposition Reaction

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] THE Government had lost touch with the people. No attempts had been made to solve any of the country's critical problems.

These were the immediate reactions from the Opposition Progressive Federal Party and the New Republic Party to the Budget.

The PFP's chief spokesman on finance, Mr Harry Schwarz, said: "This is a morning-after-the-night-before Budget and is the day of reckoning after the election."

The real test of a Budget was what it did for the people and how far it went to solve the real problems of the economy.

"This Budget ignores the real plight of the consumer in the field of housing and the general cost of living.

"It is clear that the Minister expects the present rate of inflation to continue," he said.

The NRP's spokesman on finance, Mr George Bartlett, said Mr Horwood had conceded that the cost of living would continue to rise at about 15 percent.

The amounts allocated to critical areas, such as the plight of the pensioners, housing and the salaries of public servants, were not even enough to compensate for the rising cost of living.

"This means that the standard of living of these people will drop even further."

[Article by Daan de Kock]

[Text] THE Budget, introduced in Parliament by the Minister of Finance, Mr Owen Horwood, is seen by most commentators as a holding operation until March next year.

Gold remains the most important factor, and unless there is a substantial improvement in the price of bullion, sharp increases in taxation in March next year cannot be ruled out.

The Budget was described as "very neutral" and analysts said the Minister was careful not to slow down the economy too much.

There was, however, concern that the fiscal measures proposed in the Budget by themselves are not sufficient to bring about the adjustments necessitated by the less favourable internal and external economic conditions mentioned by the Minister. This is the view of the managing director of Standard Bank, Dr Conrad Strauss.

The chief economist of Nedbank, Rudolph Gouws, agreed with him. Mr Gouws said that in the light of the detailed analysis given by Minister Horwood of the external factors, he was surprised that more fiscal measures had not been introduced.

Dr Strauss said the reluctance of the Minister to take sterner fiscal measures now shifts the burden of tackling inflation and the balance of payments problems onto monetary policy. "This means that tight credit conditions may continue for longer, with higher interest levels, that if fiscal policy had been more decisively used to reinforce already restrictive monetary policy." This comment doesn't of course, rule out a further hike in interest rates.

Dr Johan Cloete, chief economist of Barclays Bank, said the Budget was more or less as he had expected. He said the deficit of R2 707-million would probably be financed out of loans from the capital market, with the result that no new money will enter the economy. He said the Minister was probably conservative in his estimation of revenue, but on the other hand expenditure had also increased only slightly. The Government could have spent more on the social infrastructure, but by doing that it probably would have to cut down on defence spending, or reinstate loan levies, he added.

The managing director of Hill Samuel, Jurie Bester, said taxpayers can expect higher rates next year unless the gold price rises substantially in rand terms.

He said the Minister had refrained from raising taxes at this stage, thereby keeping his options open in case the gold price recovers. He also agrees that interest rates will remain high until the tight monetary policy has the desired effect of curbing demand and excessive money supply.

SHIELDING the capital market from a widely expected upward move in long term rates, yesterday's budget went out of its way to keep the market stable.

Additional Customs and Excise duties on beverages and other non-essential goods will help keep pressure away from long term rates, Finance Minister Owen Horwood, said in his budget speech, which will avoid placing undue strain on the capital market.

Giving relief to those institutions still holding a great deal of long term papers, senator Horwood added that the Exchequer would not cover its net deficit — forecast at R2 814-million — from borrowings which would have also acted as a rocket to long term interest rates.

Without any announcement regarding prescribed asset requirements, widely expected for over a year by most market analysts, the price of long term investment stocks are unlikely to go down as a result of the budget speech.

The one positive sign for long term investment specialists is the level of Government spending — an important influence on the gilt and semi-gilt floor — which will show only a moderate increase in the coming year.

While Senator Horwood is confident that this will still be lower than the growth in real gross domestic expenditure, and at a rate smaller than the level of the deficit, the latest budgetary proposals certainly contain a cooling effect on both the capital and money market floors.

Although the budget is as

Senator Horwood says, a conservative one, the stabilisation account, through which some of the authorities market manouvres are conducted, is not left with much margin to relieve any serious money shortages, beginning the new fiscal year with only R40-million compared to R309-million at the end of 1981.

The Government has also excercised its conservatism in the area of foreign loans which will be used to finance only a small 6 percent of total planned Government expenditure of R5 559-million.

This is another indication that long term rates are not going to be scored much higher in the near future, with gilt and semi-gilt investments at home used as one method of attracting foreign capital existing rates already make South African investment attractive compared with others.

A small R350-million loan taken abroad reflects the Treasury's confidence that there will be no drastic shortage of money when the world's markets finally settle down.

CAPE TOWN COUNCIL VOTES IN FAVOR OF COLORED FRANCHISE

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 31 Jul 81 p 10

[Text] Cape Town--The first step towards giving the municipal vote back to the coloured people of the city was taken by the city council when it approved the Bloomberg Report on the municipal franchise yesterday.

Mr Kreiner said he had received a request from Compra to be allowed to address the council.

He outlined why, in terms of the council's rules of order, he could not grant the request. Mr Kreiner then read out a statement from Compra which said it agreed with the Bloomberg Report and suggested further steps to have the franchise accepted in law as soon as possible. In the meantime, "immediate participation in common decision-making as a prelude to future legal formilisation" was requested.

Compra secretary Mr Eddie Kai tried to address the council from the gallery but Mr Kreiner called for the lunch adjournment and the councillors left the chamber.

Against

During the debate the only councillor to speak against the franchise, Mr J S Rabinowitz, said that what held good in 1970 did not hold good today.

Giving the franchise to the coloured people would mean Cape Town going against the laws of the country.

He said the council had lost sight of the "suicidal population explosion" the effect of which would be two coloured councillors for every white councillor.

He said that commerce and industry would not stand for the city being run "by coloureds who were responsible."

It would be playing into the hands of the "ever-wating communists if every skollie who lived in a house can vote."

Informed by several councillors that his remarks were offensive he withdrew them and apologised.

The council passed the franchise recommendations with 25 votes for, and none against. But three councillors--Mr Rabinowitz, Mr A L J Powell and Mr Gerry Ferry --walked out before the vote was taken.

From Durban it is reported that that city is also moving towards giving coloured and Asian residents a direct say in how the city is run.

A working committee was set up by the management committee at the beginning of this month to find ways of giving direct representation to all Durban's communities.

The plan Durban is likely to come up with could fiffer considerably from the Cape Town plan.

LEGISLATION TO GIVE URBAN BLACKS SELF-ADMINISTRATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 14 Aug 81 p 11

[Text]

DURBAN — The Government hoped to introduce new legislation during the current session of parliament to give Blacks in urban areas the opportunity to administer their own affairs, the Deputy Minister of Co-operation, Dr G de V Morrison, said yesterday.

He told the Natal Community Councils that the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, had decided that the Community Councils Act was to be revised to bring it into line with typical local government legislation.

"The community councils operate on the third level of government. This is the same level at which a municipality operates, and in many ways a community council in its responsibilities can be compared with a municipality.

"One important difference must, however, be kept in mind: Whereas the municipality is responsible to the provincial administration and hence, indirectly, to the State, the community council is directly responsible to the Minister of Co-operation and Development and thus to the State."

In the Republic, with its multi-national composition, no public authority, including community councils, could administer its affairs without particular attention to sound relations with other groups and authorities.

Referring to the 99-year leasehold scheme for Blacks, Dr Morrison said it stood to reason that a residential area's planning should first be brought in line for the allocation of leasehold rights before such rights could be obtained by residents who qualified.

"A qualified Black person can buy outright, or on terms, from an administration board the right to 99-year leasehold on a vacant lot and erect his own building with his own funds, or he can buy a lot with buildings in the same way.

"He can also buy a house for a start and later on, when he can afford it, acquire a 99-year lease over the property."

AGREEMENT REACHED FOR PRESS COOPERATION WITH POLICE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Aug 81 p 9

[Text]

A NEW agreement between the Press and police aimed at achieving a free flow of information has been signed, the Newspaper Press Union announced yesterday

The president of the NPU, Mr Peter McLean, signed yesterday and the Commissioner of Police, General Mike Geldenhuys, signed last week.

"Both parties accept that the object is to achieve the free flow of information. We hope that the agreement will ensure that this happens and that it will help to promote close liaison and co-operation between the Press and the police," Mr McLean said in a statement.

He added that the police realised the Press had an obligation to inform the public fully, accurately and as rapidly as possible about newsworthy events.

The Press on the other hand appreciated that in the execution of its task it may not obstruct the administration of justice nor hamper the police in their investigations, he said.

The new agreement replaces one that has been in operation since August, 1976.

It provides among other things for the issue of new Press identity cards to journalists on an annual basis.

Under the new agreement, Press identity cards will be issued by the editors of news organisations, instead of by the commissioner as under the old agreement. The cards will be numbered and the NPU will keep a proper record of them.

The editor of each news organisation will decide whom to issue the cards to and will do so only to people for whose integrity he is personally prepared to vouch. The editor may withdraw the card at any time.

Another change under the new agreement is the creation of a category of accredited journalists. Members of the NPU may submit a reasonable number of names of senior journalists to the commissioner for accreditation. They will have access to the commissioner or an officer designated by him to discuss confidential information. These accredited journalits will have Press cards issued by the commissioner. Such cards may be withdrawn by either the editor or the commissioner.

Possession of a valid Press card enables a journalist to interview the senior police officer or station commander in a particular area and obtain information for publication.

He may also, for purposes of his work and with police permission, enter and remain in an area under police control from which the public is excluded. But it will be at his own risk and he may be ordered out if his presence hinders or obstructs the police in the execution of their duty. This exclusion will not be lightly ordered by the police.

A journalist not in possession of a Press card has no valid claim to any information from the police.

A journalist holding a Press card undertakes not to publish any information about crime or national security that he has obtained independently before he has consulted the senior police officer of the area concerned.

Specially authorised senior police officers may request that information should not be published, or that publication be delayed if the information relates to serious crime, national security or the combatting of terrorism, or if publication could hamper the police.

The commissioner may request that he be given the name of any member of the police force if any statement or comment in a report is attributed to an unnamed policeman.

Editors undertake to instruct their staff not to approach members of the force for information except those who have been specially authorised.

However, a station commander or other senior officer on duty may give information about accidents and fires to the holder of a valid Press card, including the identities and addresses of injured or dead people provided their next-of-kin have been informed.

CARRYING OF WEAPONS ON INTERNAL FLIGHTS ALSO TO BE BANNED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Aug 81 p 4

[Text]

LEGISLATION to prohibit the transportation of weapons by aircraft within the borders of South Africa to prevent possible acts of terrorism had become necessary the Minister of Transport, Mr Hendrik Schoeman said yesterday.

Introducing the second reading of the Aviation Amendment Bill he said South Africa was a signatory to the Convention of International Civil Aviation signed in Chicago in 1944.

Provisions had been made in this agreement prohibiting the transport of munitions and implements of war by aircraft engaged in international navigation.

Mr Schoeman said the necessity of such a stipulation had since increased with the extended use of air transport and the determinations of the convention had to be amended to comply with South Africa's particular needs and circumstances.

"The most important adjustment is to make the ban on the transportation of armaments by a aircraft applicable to internal flights as well."

In terms of the Bill, armaments cannot be transported by aircraft without the written permission of the Minister of Transport and contraventions of this regulation would be subject to imprisonment for a maximum of ten years without the option of a fine.

The Bill was supported by the Progressive Federal Party and the New Republic Party but both Opposition parties objected to the wide definitions which applied to the words "armaments" and "aircraft".

It was also felt that the wording of the Bill would prohibit people with licenced firearms from handing them to airport officials before boarding a flight, and receiving them again at their destination.

As the Bill stood, such weapons could only be transported by air with the written permission of the Minister.

Mr Schoeman said in reply that it was not his intention to do away with this procedure through the provisions of the Bill and that he could delegate his powers to airport authorities.

Individuals carrying their rifles on private aircraft on hunting trips would also not be affected.

After further discussion with Opposition members during the committee stage, he conceded that an amendment to the clause might be desirable and asked for an opportunity to discuss possible amendments with his department before proceeding with the measure.

He made it clear that the only intention was to prevent those transporting weapons with a view to committing acts of terrorism or war.

BANNING ORDERS LIFTED FOR 24

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 1 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Ameen Akhalwaya and Riaan de Villiers]

[Text]

THE Government has removed banning orders on 24 people — but a 30-month banning and house arrest order was imposed yesterday on the new president of the Media Workers' Association of South Africa, Mr Charles Nqakula.

At the same time, five-year banning orders were reimposed on Natal sociologist Mrs Fatima Meer, whose first five-year orders expired yesterday.

The banning and house orders on Mrs Alberthina Sisulu, 63, who has been restricted since 1964, also expired yesterday. By early last night they had not been reimposed.

Policy

The Minister of Justice, Mr Kobie Coetsee, said he had decided to withdraw the notices, under the Internal Security Act, served on the 24 people in terms of his policy of reviewing such restrictions individually.

Among those whose restrictions are to be withdrawn are Mr Ishmael Mkhabela, founder chairman of the Azanian People's Organisation (Azapo), and several people involved in the trade union movement who were banned in the massive Government crackdown on unionists at the end of 1976.

The orders imposed on two other black consciousness figures, Mr Radichaba Kenneth Matime and Mr Kenneth Matime, were also lifted yesterday.

The banning of Mr Nqakula, of King Williams Town, brought to six the number of Mwasa leaders placed under house arrest banned in the past seven months, and to 13 the number of black journalists banned in the past five years.

Mr Joe Thloloe, former president of the now-banned Union of Black Journalists, Mr Phil Mtimkulu, Mwasa's acting president after Mr Sisulu's banning, national executive member Mr Marimuthu Subramoney, and branch official Mr Mathatha Tsedu were all banned and placed under house arrest for three years.

Mr Nqakula is restricted until December 31 1983.

People involved in labour affairs banned during the 1976 crackdown whose restrictions are to be lifted include: Miss Vilma van Blerk, then of the Cape-based Food and Canning Workers' Union; Miss Debbie Budlender and Mr Willie Hofmeyr, then members of the Nusas wages commission; and Mr Graeme Bloch, a Cape Town student leader.

Also included are former officials of the Metal and Allied Workers Union Mr Alpheus Mthetwa, general secretary, Mr Sipho Kubeka, Transvaal branch secretary, Mr Gavin Andersson, organiser in the Transvaal and Mr Moses Ndlovu, organiser in Maritzburg, and Miss Pat Horn, then education officer for the Institute for Industrial Education, involved in literacy projects for black workers.

The orders of several people banned during that crackdown have since been lifted and others have left the country.

But, as far as could be ascertained yesterday, seven people banned at the time who are still in South Africa have not had their restrictions lifted.

They are Miss Judy Favish, Mr Jeremy Baskin, Miss Mary Simons and her sister, Miss Tanya Simons, Mr Chris Albertyn, Mr Alan Aderem and Mr Jack Lewis.

Mrs Meer is currently involved in a court case challenging the validity of the orders first imposed on her in 1976.

Mrs Sisulu, mother of the banned former Mwasa president and wife of Mr Walter Sisulu, the ANC leader serving a life sentence on Robben Island, lives in Orlando, Soweto.

In a statement yesterday, Mwasa's national executive said: "The cowardly and vicious Pretoria regime has once again demonstrated its utter contempt for justice and the rule of law by banning yet another leader of black media workers, Mr Charles Nqakula.

The trade union movement expressed its "outrage" at the bannings, and condemned them as attempts to silence the trade union movement.

The full list of those whose restrictions are to be lifted is:

Vilme Daphne van Blerk, Deborah Jean Budlender, William Andrew Hofmeyer, Graeme Bloch, Robert Cedric Wilcox, Frank Anthony, Nobunle Hilary Mokaba, Vuyumuzi Attwell Mzauli, Msokisi Jackson Fuzile, Jack Phambulele Nudlea, Matthews Mfengu Makalima, Maxwell Mayekiso, Gavin Michael Andersson, Patricia Horn, Amina Suleman Nagdee, Dessi Sipho Andrew Kubeka, Khayalethu Luckyboy Mqayisa, Nkosinathi Benson Fikile, Ishmael Mkhabela, Mogame Joseph Moeng, Aigheus Mthethwa, Moses Ndlovu, Jackson Thibedi Ntsoane and Radichabe Kenneth Masima.

BRIEFS

CONFISCATION OF JACOB'S PASSPORT--The Director of the South African Council of Churches' Mission and Evangelism Commission, the Reverend Sol Jacob, has had his passport withdrawn by the South African Government, the council's director of communication said in Johannesburg yesterday. Mr Jacob, who was recently released after 45 days' detention, had his passport confiscated by policemen who came to his house in Pietermaritzburg on Tuesday. Mr Jacob had earlier travelled to Botswana, Swaziland, Lesotho, Zimbabwe and Zambia, where he preached to and collected information from South African refugees living in those countries. EXPELLED INDIAN STUDENTS--Durban--Forty of the 400 Indian high school pupils expelled in May have been re-admitted to classes after yesterday's meeting with the Director of Indian Education, Mr Gabriel Krog. Parents described the meeting as "a waste of time and an insult to our intelligence." The 40 pupils, who will be allowed back to school next week, are all in standard seven. The future of the remaining eight, nine and 10 would be reviewed, Mr Korg said. The pupils were expelled after the sporadic boycotting of classes in protest against the Republic Day festival. Telegrams to the Prime Minister and Mr Chris Heunis, Minister of Internal Affairs, for the re-instatement of the pupils and the replacement of Mr Krog, apparently had no effect. The fight to have their children re-admitted took a new turn this week when a group of parents and Indian leaders approached Mr Harry Pitman, MP, to bring an urgent application in the Supreme Court. It was expected to be heard next week. [Excerpts] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Aug 81 p 7]

IMMORALITY ACT CONVICTIONS--More than 50 people had been convicted under Section 16 of the Immorality Act during first six months of this year, the Minister of Justice, Mr Kobie Coetsee, said yesterday. Replying to a question by Mrs Helen Suzman (PFP Houghton), Mr Coetsee said 102 people had been prosecuted and 55 had been convicted. A further 38 were still on trial or awaiting trial. INTERNAL SECURITY ACT RESTRICTEES--A total of 97 people were now restricted in South Africa under the Internal Security Act, the Minister of Justice, Mr Kobie Coetsee said yesterday. PUBLISHER'S AGREEMENT WITH UNION--Allied Publising, distributor of all major English-language newspapers, has signed a recognition agreement with the black Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union. Allied said yesterday the agreement included a formal grievance procedure, and procedures for the involvement of union shop stewards in day to day shop floor matters. The agreement also permitted negotiations to take place at company level and applied to all Allied premises in the Transvaal and Free State. The union, which is affiliated to the Council of Unions of South Africa, has been provisionally recognised by Allied since last year and has already negotiated wages with the firm. OPEN PUBLIC SERVICE PROPOSAL--Cape Town--The principles of an open public service, freedom of political association, a common voters' roll and representation not based on ethnicity should be built into any new constitutional dispensation for South Africa, the General Secretary of the Public Service League, Mr B Q F Wentzel, said yesterday. He was giving evidence before the Constitutional Committee of the President's Council in Cape Town with a colleague, Mr J White, on behalf of the league which represents about 15 000 non-Whites employed in Government services. Mr Wentzel said by the year 2000 there would be more than 50-million people in the country. He said the State, as an employer responsible for the welfare of its employees, would have to plan ahead to meet future demands. While public servants could not directly participate in politics, they nevertheless put into effect central authority policies. The league was not in favour of separate parliaments for Indians, Coloureds and Whites as this would split their loyalty to the country and would limit promotional opportunities for each group within its own parliament. There should be only one Public Service Commission for every one, one parliament and proportional representation. A common voters' roll and freedom of political association were also necessary, he said. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 14 Aug 81 p 9]

NEW SAR CHAIRMAN--Cape Town--A member of the SA Railways and Harbours Service Commission, Mr H S Erasmus, has been appointed chairman of the Commission from August 1. SOUTHERN AFRICA DEVELOPMENT BANK--South Africa will invest R17-million as an initial subscription to the capital of a multi-national development bank for Southern Africa, said Mr Horwood. Mr Horwood said the money would come from his budgeted R309-million surplus and that negotiations had been conducted with the Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and the self-governing national states to participate as founder members. "Negotiations with the initial participating states have already reached an advanced stage and the articles of agreement constituting the envisaged development bank are now being drawn up," he said. The bank was aimed at being a vehicle for development assistance to economic regions on the sub-continent and would take over from the relevant government departments most programmes of economic development assistance to member states. To ensure the bank's success, "it will have to attract funds from both domestic and foreign sources and secure the involvement of the private sector as well as the public sector." Although the bank would be financed mainly by South Africa initially he was sure other member states would like to raise their own financial contributions gradually as they experienced the benefits of participation. The self-governing national states would be constituent parts of the South African membership and it was hoped that at least all the governments of the Customs Union would be interested in enjoying "the economic benefits. SASOL CATALYSTS PLANT--The first trial runs at African Catalysts' new R5-million plant in Sasolburg have just been completed successfully. The plant is a joint venture between Suedchemie of Germany, the Industrial Development Corporation, and Sasol, and will produce catalysts for the Sasol oil-from-coal process which until now have had to be imported. On hand for the trial runs was Dr. C. Hofstadt, chairman of African Catalysts and a member of the board of management of Suedchemi, who said he was "delighted" with the rapid progress made with the construction of the plant. One of the main feed-stocks for African Catalysts is being supplied locally by Hoechst South Africa. This feedstock will be supplied primarily from the New Hoechst polyphosphoric acid plant in Kurgersdorp--also a R5-million investment. The managing director of Hoechst South Afirca [as printed], Mr A.L. Baltzer, said that work on the Krugersdorp plant was making good progress and it would be in full operation during next year. CENSUS OF MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS--South Africa has at least 12 638 medical practitioners, according to the latest statistics released in Pretoria. A statement by the Department of Statistics said the figures were preliminary results of a census of medical practitioners taken in 1979. A report with detailed information would be released later. For the 1979 census questionnaires were sent to 14 691 medical practitioners whose addresses appeared on the register of the Medical and Dental Council. It was established that 1 586 were abroad, had died or could, for some reason, not participate. No response was obtained from 281 addresses and 186 returns could not be used because of irregularities. Eventually 12 638 returns were processed and tabulated, the department said. The statistics showed that 10 975 practitioners were White, 230 were Coloured, 1 266 were Asians and 167 were Blacks. Of these 5 053 were in private practice, 6 591 were in salaried employment, 865 were retired and 129 were awaiting employment or to start practising. Of those in private practice, 3 374 were general practitioners and 1 679 were specialists. [Text] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 1 Aug 81 p 5]

TRADE WITH GREECE--Athens--South African diplomatic sources in Athens are confident that Greece's seven-month old membership of the European Economic Community is not having an adverse effect on trade between the two countries. Exports from South Africa to Greece are expected to rise during 1981, continuing their steady growth of the past few years. South African exports to Greece during 1980 totalled R41,7-million, according to the National Statistical Service of Greece. This represented an increase of R7,8-million over South African exports in 1979. Leading South African exports to Greece are iron and steel (around R11,7-million during 1980, a R5,2-million increase over 1979) and metalliferous ore and metal scrap (R7,9-million in 1980, an increase of R381 000). Meat and meat products were the third largest

South African export (R5,8-million in 1980), followed by textile fibres (R4-million) and fertilisers (R3,3-million). The balance of trade is strongly in South Africa's favour, with South African imports from Greece during 1980 running to only about R3,5-million. Leading Greek imports to South Africa include fertilisers, petroleum, petroleum products and elated minerals and footwear. [Text] [Johannesburg THE STAR in English 3 Aug 81 p 21]

RECORD AUTO SALES--The July sales figures for new vehicles have resulted in the breaking of overall and individual records, with the total sales of 41 992 new vehicles achieving an all-time monthly high for the motor industry. The breakdown of figures released by the National Association of Automotive Manufacturers of South Africa (Naamsa), reveal that 27 384 new passenger cars were sold during the month, improving on the previous record of 26 820 units sold in May, 1981. Commercial vehicle sales also rose to 14 608 units being sold to better the previous record established in October, 1975 by 1 230. The figure reflects a 30,3 percent increase over results for the corresponding month in 1980. Naamsa's figures show improvements on every statistical permutation to be derived from a very buoyant motor industry. The combined (passenger and commercial) total sales figures show an increase of 18,2 percent over the figures recorded in July, 1980, and a 10.2 percent increase over figures recorded in June. "A fairly significant slowdown in the rate of growth of demand for new vehicles can be expected in the months ahead," said Mr Peter Searle, president of Naamsa. "To some extent this is already becoming apparent in the used car market, where difficulty is being experienced in the financing of pre-1978-79 cars. "This indicates the possibility of reduced markets in the months ahead. [Excerpts] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Aug 81 p 15]

MILITARY AWARDS--The Officer Commanding the South West Africa Territory Force, Major-General Charles Lloyd, received the Southern Cross Medal at a parade at Defence Headquarters in Pretoria yesterday. At the parade four other senior officers received the Southern Cross Medal and a warrant officer received the Pro Merito decoration. NYERERE ASKS IDEOLOGICAL SCHOOLS TO FOSTER SOCIALIST IDEAS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 30 Jul 81 p 1

[Article by Danford Mpumilwa]

[Excerpt]

CCM Chairman Mwalimu Nyerere has urged the Party's ideological colleges to continue their role of promoting socialist dialogue, encouraging freedom of thought and discussion.

Mwalimu said this yesterday in his address to mark the 20th anniversary of the founding of the Kivukoni Party Ideological College in Dar es Salaam.

He told staff, students, college alumnis as well as Party and government leaders that Kivukoni and its eight zonal colleges must be in the forefront in ensuring the people's freedom to think and to act.

However, Mwalimu said: "In our free thought we must never become mere receptacles for foreign ideologies. We must become masters of our own destiny, digesting and analysing ideas in the context of the situation obtaining in the country".

This, he explained, did not mean rejecting ideas from other people. People must learn from systems evolved by other mankind in order to evolve a socialist, just and democratic society in the country.

Mwalimu said the Party ideological colleges should help in liberating Tanzanians from any remaining colonial mentality, the task assigned to Kivukoni when it was established only a few months before independence.

The Party Chairman said the college's responsibilities were ever more necessary in view of the current imperialist manoeuvres to dominate thoughts and suppress those of smaller countries.

He condemned suggestions that the college should establish a system whereby its graduates would be awarded certificates upon completion of their studies.

The education offered by the college was aimed at liberating one's mind. "Basically, education is like health and ignorance is like a disease. One who remains healthy does not need a certificate or some special reward for being so," he explained.

"We therefore, do not need to award a certificate to anyone who undertakes a course aimed at liberating his mentality, making him a good socialist. We only want to see his actions and ideas to know if he has become a socialist or not. But not a certificate," Mwalimu stressed.

It was possible for one to have a certificate showing that he had gone through the college with flying colours, but when it came to practical reality, he proved to be far from having the qualities of a Kivukoni graduate, he said.

Mwalimu also said the college would continue to enroll its students through a selection system. He refuted criticisms that the college was not being fully utilised by the Party to train its functionaries and that most of those selected from public institutions went to the college thinking it was a punishment.

"We will be making a big mistake to enroll only Party functionaries into the college. We want all those in different leadership positions in the country to be fully conversant with the Party policy.

The Party Chairman pointed out that soon after completion of the course provided by the college, those selected came with full praise of what they had learnt.

"Those who think that their formal education is enough to understand our society and that there is no need to go through Kivukoni, are ignorant, indeed. For they are ignorant of what they do not know", he explained.

Mwalimu paid tribute to all those who had helped establish the college at the difficult initial stage. These include the thousands of Tanzanians who had made material contributions towards the college fund in the late 1950s. He made special mention of Ndugu Joan Wicken who had been treasurer of the fund and the late Karimjee who had generously contributed 1.2 million/-.

Earlier, the Party Chairman, accompanied by Party Vice-Chairman Aboud Jumbe, officially opened a new 500,000/- Party branch at the college.

MINISTER URGES UTAFITI COLLABORATION WITH SCIENTISTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Text]

THE Tanzania National Scientific Research Council (UTAFITI) has been urged to collaborate with scientists and technocrats in various institutions in the country to enhance research geared towards solving the country's development problems.

Addressing members of the UTAFITI Board at their 11th council meeting in Dar es Salaam yesterday, the Minister for Planning and Economic Affairs, Ndugu Kighoma Malima said that the use of science and technology in the country should increase the ability to plan and implement development projects.

It is imperative that UTAFITI seeks to increase the people's ability to control their environment, the Minister said.

He said that the poor economic situation in the country presently calls for UTAFITI to stress on research that would develop and improve efficiency and production in all sectors of the economy.

To achieve this goal, the Minister advised UTAFITI to have greater recource to raw materials and inputs found in the country.

Refering to the recently approved Government bill on special awards to inventors who contributed to socio-economic development, the Minister said UTAFITI must ensure that the award acted as a real incentive to potential inventors.

Ndugu Malima stressed that the award should be granted in fair and frank conditions and cautioned against favouritism during the selection exercise.

Likewise, UTAFITI must not feel compelled to give an award to any one person in a given year if no person has proved himself worthy of the award, Ndugu Malima said.

Ndugu Malima later recommended that UTAFITI start laying short and long term plans for its activities.

JUMBE REITERATES GOVERNMENT'S GUARANTEE OF FREEDOM OF WORSHIP

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Vice President, Ndugu Aboud Jumbe has reiterated that the government would continue to respect the right and freedom of worship in the country as guaranteed under the Party and government constitutions.

Speaking at a preparatory meeting for the proposed National Mosque Council on Monday, Al-Haj' Jumbe said alongside protecting this right the government would encourage the cultivation of good relations between followers of the various religious denominations in Tanzania.

On the proposed Mosque Council and similar mini-councils at district and regional levels, Al-Haj Jumbe said the new bodies were intended to stream-line and strengthen Islam, and enhance existing good relations between Muslims and non-Muslims in the country.

He rejected the notion that the formation of the new council would polarise relations between Muslims and members of other religious sects in Tanzania. 'The councils would help to further strengthen and harmonise unity of the citizens,' he said.

He told the 180 Imams (religious ministers) from all over Tanzania who are in Zanzibar for a meeting which will elect office bearers for the proposed national Mosque Council scheduled for today, that Tanzania had never and would never experience religious conflict.

'The Party and government constitutions guarantee the freedom of religious beliefs in Tanzania and the right for believers to organise themselves for religious purposes,' he said.

At Monday's preparatory meeting, the Imams endorsed proposals for interim constitution for the council and nominated candidates for the chairman and deputy chairman, the secretary general and his deputy and directors.

The elections for the leaders were expected to be finalised later yesterday before the meeting for launching the national Mosque Council convenes at the Mbweni Technical College in Zanzibar today.

The one-day meeting organised jointly by the Muslim Council of Tanzania (BAKWATA) and the Muslim Community in Zanzibar is also to be attended by representatives of muslim communities in neighbouring Kenya, Uganda, Sudan, Malawi, Zambia and Burundi.

WESTERN NATIONS' AID TO SOUTH AFRICA CONDEMNED

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 7 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] The commanding general of the South-West Africa Territory Forces [SWATF] in Namibia, General Lloyd, told reporters of foreign countries that his forces have attacked Angola again and again. This Boor boasted that this combat occurs daily.

The provocation of the Boors against the citizens of Angola is not a secret matter in the world. But the remarks of the Boor Lloyd show how the Boors feel pride in conducting their provocation, which causes considerable losses of people's lives and property in Angola.

It is estimated that during a 3 year period, the provocation of the Boors in Angola has caused not less than 3,000 deaths and the wounding of other people.

As usual, the Boors are trying to deceive the world [by claiming] that their assaults are directed against the SWAPO freedom fighters. The truth is that the attacks which are conducted by the Boors are directed against refugees and unarmed civilians.

The SWAPO freedom fighters are conducting struggles inside Namibia because their objective is to liberate their country, Namibia, and not Angola. Those whom the Boors are attacking and calling freedom fighters are either unarmed citizens of Namibia who fled to Angola to save themselves as a result of oppression or citizens of Angola. And those camps which the Boors call freedom fighter camps are centers for safeguarding these refugees.

But the fascists do not know the difference between different people when they engage in their evil. A small child, an old woman and even a sick person will be attacked by the fascists in order to maintain this oppression. The Boors do not respect people's lives, especially those of citizens of the country.

Unfortunately, together with fascism and its provocation, the government of the Boors has been given strength by the western nations. The economic and military aid which the government of the Boors is obtaining from the western nations gives the Pretoria government arrogance and power to trample human rights' and the rights of adjacent independent countries.

The effort to cause difficulties for the government of the Boors has been hindered by the veto vote of the western nations without that matter reaching the UN Security Council.

It is clear that the western nations are not prepared to help to eliminate colonialism and racial discrimination in Namibia and South Africa. The western nations are trying to confuse matters in order to give the government of the Boors more time to strengthen itself.

It would be appropriate now for Africa to be concerned especially with good methods of fighting the Boors instead of listening to the deception of the western nations. By doing so, African can seek aid from friends who doubtless are prepared to help to destroy the final colonial fortress of South Africa.

SIDO SPOKESMAN REPORTS ON RESULTS OF OPERATIONS SINCE 1978

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

A total of 411 small scale factory units were established in the country between 1978 and June this year, the Small Industries Development Organisation (SIDO) reported yesterday.

Another 240 units are at different stages of implementation, SIDO spokesman said.

All the units, totalling 651, are estimated to produce goods worth 1,076m/- and would employ 20,502 people, he added. The units would be established with a fixed capital of 596m/-.

The units are part of the 1,067 factory-type units envisaged to be set up under SIDO's five-year development plan starting 1978/79.

The spokesman said during the three year period ending 1981, a total of 504 non-factory industrial units were established in 400 villages, against the target of 1,229 units.

A census conducted throughout the country showed that there were 3,978 small units spread in all regions producing goods worth 845.3m/-. The units, with an investment in fixed capital of 369.7m/-, provide employment to 52,284 people.

Out of these 782 were factory type units. Factory type units are those registered under the factories act and which employed more than 10 people. Non-factory units are related to the crafts.

According to the SIDO spokesman, the remaining targetted units would be implemented during the rest of the plan period. More emphasis would be placed on the contribution of the priority areas with the aim of making the small scale drive "formal".

The priority areas are agro-based industries, building materials clothing and apparel, educational requirements, hospital and health requirements, transport related items, food and food-based items, and household requirements.

On the industrial estate programme the spokesman said of the 20 estates envisaged during the three years ending 1981, only five were working and had 76 factory units.

He explained that the dismal performance was the result of lack of foreign exchange and the unavailability of building materials.

On the training of artisans, he said the number of those trained in SIDO training centres were 455 in 1978, and 1,000 in 1979, 675 the following year and 600 in 1981.

REAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT DEPENDS ON SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 5 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] It is an incontrovertible fact that no nation can obtain real economic and social development without developing science and technology. It was by bearing in mind this fact and its importance that our government decided to establish the national council for scientific research under law No 51 which was passed by the National Assembly in 1968. As the minister for planning and the economy [listed in NFAC reference aid as minister of state, Vice President's Office for Economic Affairs], Kighoma Malima, said yesterday in the city of Dar es Salaam when opening the session of this council, in general the work of the council can be broken down into two main parts.

The first part is that which concerns the coordination of all kinds of scientific research which takes place in the country and the second part concerns the provision of advice concerning important questions relating to scientific research in the country, and especially steps which are suitable to be taken by the government along with other institutions to improve scientific research work and economic and social development.

But, even after passing the 1968 law and after the council began its work officially in 1972, it was still apparent that there was insufficient incentive to encourage the national council of scientific research.

To correct this situation, the government made a revision recently of the law relating to this council which makes possible the provision of special honors and incentives to those who are making [scientific] discoveries which aid production and other development tasks.

After all these steps taken by the government, the citizens will retain a desire to see the council implement its responsibility with more capability to help it obtain more and better results in the development of science and technology in our country. In the work of conducting research and developing science and technology, a country like Tanzania is confronted with some difficulties. For example, the country was confronted recently with difficult economic conditions. These conditions did not give us leave to deadlock altogether the important work of research and the development of science and technology.

Doubtless, as a result of these difficult economic conditions, the council must conduct its work in accordance with the real situation and thus stress more research concerning the use of raw materials and natural resources which are obtainable here in the country. Also it must be borne in mind that the final objective of scientific and technical research in our country is to complete the Tanzanian's independence. This is to say that the research conducted must be able to increase the citizens' ability to control their environment, overcome their problems and then obtain a better life which ensures their complete independence.

CARBON DIOXIDE GAS PLANT CONSTRUCTION BEGINS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 30 Jul 81 p 3

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

CONSTRUCTION has started on buildings for the super quality carbon dioxide gas plant at Kyejo in Mbeya's Rungwe District.

A spokesman of the Tanzania Oxygen Limited (TOL) said yesterday in Dar es Salaam that work which started this month would take approximately 33 weeks.

TOL and the National Development Corporation (NDC) jointly own the Kyejo carbon dioxide project.

The spokesman said the tender for the civil works at Kyejo had been awarded to a Mbeya contractor, Dalip Singh.

The works include building of a single building for the plant. The building to house the offices, shop for the plant and a workshop would cover an area of 326 square metres, according to earlier reports.

A manager's house would also be built at the plant site near Mannow Mission.

The plant for processing the gas would be shipped from Denmark this September.

According to the spokesman, the plant would arrive here in about two month's time.

Earlier reports said installation of the plant would start at the end of this year or early next year. Processing work is expected to start in January or February.

The quantity of carbon dioxide at Kyejo is estimated at several million cubic metres, enough to meet the country's demand for industrial carbon dioxide for the next 20 to 25 years.

The gas from the boreholes that had been drilled at Kyejo would be trapped, purified and later compressed into liquid and solid form for transportation to various areas in the country. Some of it would be exported to neighbouring countries.

The plant is expected to have an intial capacity of 300 kilogrammes of gas an hour on a single shift.

The total cost of the Kyejo project is estimated to be 17m/- of which 10m/- would be for the plant and distribution equipment and the balance for other works.

Drilling of the gas at Kyejo started in 1979. According to a report on the deposits, the gas found there is 98 per cent pure.

Large deposits of natural carbon dioxide have also been found in other neighbouring areas along the volcanic and gas-rich volcanic mountains.

PETROLEUM RATIONING SYSTEM ENCOUNTER SNAGS IN IMPLEMENTATION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

THE just reviewed fuel rationing system, which extends the validity of ration cards to a period of six months instead of one month, has hit some implementation snags.

Several motorists, have failed to beat the deadline set. This is especially so in connection with motorists registered with petrol stations whose schedule for obtaining the six-month ration cards fell between July 23 and 29.

A quick survey made in Dar es Salaam by this newspaper, registered a number of complaints against the re-registration process at the 11 stations falling in this category.

When contacted yesterday about the problems, the Ministry of Water and Energy said it had noted some of the snags and assured motorists who missed the deadline that arrangements were being made for them to buy the fuel ration cards.

A ministry spokesman said the government was aware of some of the problems that had surfaced especially relating to the eleven petrol stations where the exercise begun on July 23.

At the stations, a number of motorists who had earlier registered here under the one-month system, did not turn up to buy the new cards within the allotted period. The six-month card system comes into force on August 10.

The poor turn up varied from station to station, but was generally attributed to late arrival of registration clerks and presence of traffic police to ascertain the authenticity of vehicle documents.

It was observed that some of the motorists had entered false numbers on their old cards which did not tally with these on the engines and chassis.

Motorists with defective vehicles, according to the survey, were scared off by the presence of traffic police whom they thought were checking the vehicles' roadworthiness. They were not too sure of the conditions of their vehicles. They turned back.

At one of the petrol stations it was reported that some of its regular customers did not turn up to buy the new cards because their vehicles were outside Dar es Salaam between July 23 and 29.

At Makutano Service Station opposite the National Bus Services (KAMATA) offices along Msimbazi/Pugu roads, only 269 people had bought the new cards by July 29.

The station had registered more than 1,000 vehicles owners for the current rationing term.

Vehicle owner, who spent almost the whole of Wednesday waiting to buy his card complained on Thursday that he was asked by the clerks to return the next day apparently because time had run out.

He complained that the clerks, who were supposed to report at the stations at 8 a.m. in the morning, instead arrived at 9 a.m. and left at around 3 p.m. instead of at 4.30 p.m.

TRC MANAGER NOTES PROJECTS, FOREIGN AID, EARNINGS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 31 Jul 81 p 3

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Text]

THE Tanzania Railways Corporation (TRC) needs 1.5b/- to implement a long-term project to improve central and Tanga lines, the TRC General Manager, Ndugu Tom Mmari said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

Ndugu Mmari said that the money, of which 1.1b/- would be in foreign exchange, was estimated only for rail track laying work which had already started, adding that strengthening bridges, improving telecommunications system would cost the corporation "much more".

In the project, TRC would have to cover 2580.24 kilometres of rail. It has so far covered 376 kilometres from Dar es Salaam along the Central Line, Ndugu Mmari added.

The General Manager said that Canada had granted rails to cover 180 miles and slippers covering a distance of 52 kilometres. "We need more rails and slippers", Ndugu Mmari said.

On bridges, he said that the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) has in this financial year given a grant of 60m/- for strengthening some of the bridges along the Central Line. FRG experts were currently doing the design work for 16 bridges, which he said needed "urgent repair".

The 125 bridges along the line were built between 1905 and 1959 and were designed to carry fewer wagons and less powerful engines compared to the present load they are forced to carry.

Meanwhile, Ndugu Mmari said that Canada and the European Economic Community (EEC) have promised to provide TRC with one set each of ballast quarry equipment. TRC needs at least 12 sets of the equipment.

He said the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA) pledged to give TRC funds for the machines adding that DANIDA and the Tanzania Government were discussing the issue.

The corporation has meanwhile reported earnings totalling 485,487,000/- last year — two per cent below target.

Ndugu Mmari said that the performance was far better than that of 1979 when TRC realised only 358,836,000/- from its operations.

TRC expects to earn a total of 496.94m/- this year.

NON-ALIGNED SEMINAR SCHEDULED IN DAR ES SALAAM

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

A seminar on the "achievements and problems" of the Non-Aligned movement will be held in Dar es Salaam as part of celebrations marking the movement's 20th anniversary on September 1, this year.

The seminar, to be held from August 25 to 27, will be sponsored by the Dar es Salaam-based Mozambique-Tanzania Centre for Foreign Relations.

The centre's Director, Ndugu O.H. Tesha, told Shihata yesterday that during the seminar, lectures would be given on various aspects of non-alignment, including its origin and its contribution to world peace and to the liberation of dependent territories.

The seminar will also discuss the role of the Non-Aligned movement in international economic co-operation, particularly among developing countries, the search for a new international economic order and the consolidation of national independence and world peace.

The lectures will be delivered at the conference hall of the Institute of Finance Management.

Ndugu Tesha explained that the seminar follows a resolution passed early this year by the last ministerial conference of the Non-Aligned movement in New Delhi that each non-aligned country should mark the movement's 20th anniversary.

'In this connection, it was proposed that seminars reviewing the movement would be the most appropriate context in which to mark the coming of age of the movement', Ndugu Tesha said.

Yugoslavia, a founder member of the movement, has meanwhile invited national delegations from Non-Aligned countries to Belgrade to mark the anniversary.

OCM-SACCO TO PURCHASE TWENTY PERCENT OF SHUMA SHARES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

AN Italian firm — OCM SACCO —has decided to become a shareholder in the proposed 320m/- Arusha agro-industrial complex due for launching before the end of the year.

OCM SACCO will take up 20 per cent of the total equity capital shares in the project, the General Manager of Arusha Municipal Development Corporation (SHUMA), Ndugu Noel C. Kaaya, revealed in Arusha yesterday on arrival from Rome.

As a holding company, SHUMA will take up 51 per cent of the shares while the remaining 29 per cent of the shares are to be sold to any firm that would be able to make its contribution in foreign exchange, Ndugu Kaaya said.

He explained that with assistance of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (UNIDO), a foreign company would be secured as the third partner in order to ensure the balancing of management capabilities and resources of the project.

To be implemented in four phases, the Arusha agro-industrial complex will include a 10,000-hectare pilot yellow maize farm which is intended to provide about 75 per cent of raw materials to subsidiary poultry and piggery projects.

The complex will have its own sluaghter houses for processing and packing pork and poultry meat for export.

At a meeting held in Rome with OCM SACCO officials under the patronage opf the Tanzania Embassy, the Tanzania delegation led by Ambassador Abbas Sykes suggested that the entire venture should be scaled down to reduce the foreign exchange burden on the country.

The delegation, which also included the SHUMA Board of Directors Chairman, Ndugu Abdul C. Faraji, also suggested that a dairy farm should be set up as a sideline project.

Another consultative conference of OCM SACCO experts and officials from the ministries of Livestock Development, Development Planning, Prime Minister's Office, Bank of Tanzania and SHUMA, is to be held in Tanzania next month to review the project proposals and financial terms pending formal confirmation by the Government.

Meanwhile, Ndugu Kaaya said the project feasibility study is being reviewed before final decisions are taken.

When commissioned, the agro-industrial complex will breed a maximum of 10,000 swines per annum and turn out 40,000 tonnes of animal feeds of which 34,000 tonnes are to be sold to farmers.

ARRIVAL OF FIRST SHIPMENT OF AIRPORT MODERNIZATION MATERIALS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Text]

THE first consigment of 2,500 tons of building equipment and materials for modernisation of the Dar es Salaam International Airport arrived last Monday and off-loading began on the same day.

According to NOTCO (Tanzania) Limited Claims Manager, Ndugu N. Kazaura, the equipment, which arrived aboard MV "Leon R.E." from the French port of Marseilles, had been cleared and was being taken to the site at the airport.

Construction work, to be undertaken by a French contruction firm — Messrs Bouygues is expected to begin in September. The project is financed by a loan from the French Government.

The Ministry of Works reached an agreement with the firm last December for the implementation of the 700m/- airport's modernisation programme which was planned by another French firm, Aeroport de Paris — the supervisors of the project.

The Project Manager, Mr. P. Madjedi, said yesterday that the second consignment of 2,500 tons would arrive towards the end of this month, adding that delivery of the over 50,000 tons of equipment would take one year.

The equipment, he said, included 5.8m/- worth of plant machinery, bulldozers, tracks, hydraulic trains and other machinery.

The programme aims at modernising the 1955-model airport to enable it handle increasing air traffic for the next 20 years.

The airport is expected to handle about 955,000 passengers in 1985 and some 1,610,000 in 1990, according to earlier reports.

LITERACY EXAMINATIONS FOR ADULTS SCHEDULED

Education Ministry's Special Publication

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

OVER three million Mainland adults will sit for literacy examinations during the Evaluation Week starting next Monday and ending six days later.

It was erroneously reported in this newspaper yesterday that the examinations would be held today.

Some 3,477,072 adults will be examined during the week throughout the Mainland's 21 regions. Of the candidates, some 2,018,145 are women and the rest men.

According to a special publication issued by the Ministry of National Education in Dar es Salaam, the National Evaluation Day will be August 10 this year.

However, it said, regions could, if they chose, select appropriate days during the Evaluation Week for holding the examinations.

This arrangement contrasts sharply with that obtaining in the 1975 and 1977 evaluations when only a day was set aside for the examinations.

The publication said an entire week had been allocated for the convenience of both the regions and the examinees.

It said the regions were better placed to pick suitable days because they were more knowledgeable about the real conditions obtaining in their respective areas.

It also said the new arrangement would enable adults missing the examinations on a particular day because of pressing personal problems to be tested on any other day during the week.

It added that the extended examination days would make it easy for officials to deal with unexpected problems, with the least inconvenience to the examinees.

The ministry's publication said after the 1977 evaluation, the Nation resolved to reduce illiteracy from 27 per cent to 15 and even 10 per cent.

It said examinations during the Evaluation week would establish success attained since 1977 and would also facilitate planning for advancing the knowledge of those now literate.

It said it was expected that the results of the examinations on national basis would be announced in December this year.

This announcement would be followed by others on a regional, district, ward, divisional and centre basis.

It was envisaged that the examinations results would have reached all concerned before the end of January next year, the Ministry of National Education's publication said.

President's Appeal

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] President Nyerere last night appealed to adults attending literacy classes in the country to turn out for the Examinations next week and to continue learning after the tests.

In a nation-wide broadcast over Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam, Mwalimu said the tests would benefit the individual new literates and also enable the Government to assess progress made in the literacy campaign.

"Only when everyone who was illiterate attends classes and takes the tests shall we be able to recognise how far we have gone in eradicating illiteracy", he said.

The President explained that the results of the national tests, to be conducted between August 10 and 16, were vital information for future planning of literacy programmes.

"Without them, (the test results) we shall be like the woman who cooks a meal without being told how many people are coming to eat. The result is either that many go hungry when food could have been ready, or else that very much food is wasted", he said.

Mwalimu told the 3,477,072 adults who are registered for literacy classes: "Knowing how to read and write is like acquiring a new jembe or panga. It is something very important".

Apart from enabling them to get certificates, which they should be proud of, and also showing how they were doing, literacy gave the learners new power over their lives, he said.

"The more you learn the more exciting learning becomes", he said, adding "it enables you to do your work better".

People who knew how to read and write could not be cheated easily, could exchange private letters with distant friends and relatives and could also discern what was taking places elsewhere in the world through reading newspapers, he said.

He told those registered in the rural areas: "You can also make it more difficult for dishonest people to steal your village money".

"In urban areas, you as a literate person, know which bus to catch, and can find your friend in a new house by reading the street signs", he said.

The President pointed out that it was because of these and other gains which resulted from literacy that the Party and Government continued to ensure that every adult Tanzanian became literate.

SCOPO SURVEYING EMPLOYMENT OF KENYANS, UGANDANS IN PARASTATALS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

THE government has launched a country-wide survey on the terms under which citizens of neighbouring countries are employed in Tanzania's parastatals.

The survey will enable the government to evolve the terms under which these people will be engaged and solve various problems' encountered when employing non-Tanzanians, especially those from Kenya and Uganda after the collapse of the East African Community (EAC).

The Presidential Standing Committee on Parastatal Organisations (SCOPO), in a circular to all parastatal organisations and public companies, said several citizens of Kenya and Uganda were demanding employment under expatriate terms after the collapse of the EAC whereas they had been employed under local contract terms.

The circular said it was not known how many people from the two countries were employed in parastatals and other companies in the country.

Elaborating, a SCOPO spokesman said the expatriate contract terms differed from the local contract terms on allowances received by an individual, annual leaves and passages to and from the place of work.

"The local contract terms are not different from the terms under which citizens of this country are employed, only that local citizens are employed on permanent terms while those from neighbouring countries are engaged for specific terms which could be renewed", the spokesman explained.

The SCOPO circular has asked all parastatals and public companies to submit complete data on their employees who came from Kenya and Uganda, stating their full names, the type of work they did, and the terms of their contracts — whether local or expatriate.

The exact date the individual workers were employed should also be clearly stated, the circular said.

All the information should then be submitted to the Ministry of Manpower Development and Administration.

The SCOPO spokesman has asked all the institutions involved to speed up the exercise.

BABU CITES DPRK AS BEING GENUINELY SELF-RELIANT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 7 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

FORMER Tanzanian cabinet minister Abdulrahman Babu said yesterday developing countries should "look inwards" and co-ordinate their productive sectors because this was vital in developing backward economies.

He said in a public lecture at the main campus of the University of Dar es Salaam that developing countries should co-ordinate their individual agricultural and heavy and light industries so that they served each other.

These countries should orientate their economies to serve the local market, he told a capacity audience that jammed the dome-shaped Nkrumah Hall at the hill.

"You don't develop an economy by depending on Paris to be your market," he said in his lecture on "Underdevelopment and the Struggle for Socialism in Africa".

Ndugu Babu, now Visiting Professor of International Relations at US universities and a popular columnist of the London-based monthly Africa Now, cited the example of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) as a developing country that had looked inwards in developing its economy.

He said that country of 17 million people was "today the only country of its size that is genuinely self-reliant. We have a lot to learn from it," he said.

He criticised the tendency by some of the developing countries to build socialism through separate sectoral development priorities like for example stressing on "rural development".

"Rural development is a misconception of development. There is no such thing as rural development. Socialist development means taking the economy in its totality," he said.

Ndugu Babu described socialism as "nothing else except a guide to action. Socialism must understand objective reality. Socialism is a mechanism of ordering priorities," he said.

On the proposals to establish a New International Economic Order (NIEO), Ndugu Babu said under present-day global economic arrangements, the new order would only benefit the giant multinationals at the service of imperialism.

He said the proposal for NIEO was a creation of the multinationals so they could "effectively" penetrate the economic market through the back door.

Ndugu Babu explained that the only lasting order would come with the complimentarity between the economies of developing socialist countries and centrally-planned socialist economies.

A questioner asked: "Who should build socialism in developing countries? Ndugu Babu answered: "Socialism should be built by the people.

He said bureaucrats would never build socialism. "Some of the bureaucrats over-indulge. They build themselves at the expense of the people," he said.

He told the audience that it was the bureaucrats who contravened some of the very regulations that had been set to curb, say, the importation of luxury items.

"The bureaucrats' hands are clean, but their hearts are dirty; the peasants hands are dirty, but their hearts are clean," he said.

"Who introduced corruption in this country?" he asked. "I leave it to you my friends," he concluded.

BRIEFS

PRIME MINISTER ON ECONOMY--The Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, said in Dodoma yesterday that the ever increasing price of oil since 1973 was one of the major problems facing the country's economy. He was addressing a three-day bi-ennial conference of the Christian Council of Tanzania (CCT) on the ailing economic situation facing the nation at present and how to combat it. Ndugu Msuya said the country was expected to spend 60 percent of its foreign exchange to purchase fuel oil this year but the expenditure rate was reduced to between 50 and 55 percent after the Government had taken precautionary measures to conserve the commodity. The Premier said another cause for economic problems was the rising of prices of various imported commodities like spare parts, building materials, agricultural inputs, paper, vehicles and tractors. He said in 1980, for instance, prices of imported goods shot up to more than 250 percent as compared to 1972. He told the conference that on the other hand, prices of the country's agricultural products were continuously dropping or increasing at a very slow pace. PARTY IDEOLOGICAL COLLEGE EXPANSION--An expansion programme which would enable the Kivukoni Party Idological College in Dar es Salaam to increase its student intake from 150 to 250 is currently underway. The college Principal, Ndugu Bismark Mwansasu, said yesterday that the programme also includes construction of an assembly hall and five new teachers quarters. Currently the college has ten teachers quarters. Ndugu Mwansasu could not say when the construction of the buildings would be completed, but he explained that as soon as the buildings were ready the college would raise its student intake. The college, which has just observed its 20th anniversary, teaches the Party ideology to Party and government officials, as well as leaders of various public institutions. The college was established by the then TANU on July 29, 1961. Funds for running the college came from donations and contributions secured by the then Tanganyika Education Trust Fund, a registered charity organisation formed by TANU. WINDMILL DRIVEN WATER PUMPS--Singida--An executive engineer with the Ministry of Water and Energy has suggested that windmill driven water pumps be encouraged in all wind-prone areas of the country due to fuel shortage. In his write-up on the prospects of windmills in the country for pumping water, the engineer, Ndugu Richard Msengi, said by emphasizing on windmills, the country could speed up its clean water supply programme to the villages with minimum costs. Ndugu Msengi also said the manufacturing of windmills locally be considered to minimize the problem of spare parts and reduce maintenance costs. He also proposed that technicians to repair the windmills be trained. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 31 Jul 81 p 3]

BACKLOG CEMENT SHIPMENT--Maputo, Tuesday--About 7,000 tonnes of cement are now being loaded aboard freighter Rice Trade destined for Tanzania, the Maputo daily Noticias reported today. The loading of the cement at the Port of Maputo began last Friday and is expected to take about ten days before the Rice Trade leaves for Tanzania, the daily said. The 7,000 tonnes are a backlog which the Mozambique Cement Company had to meet under an agreement with the Tanzania Saruji Corporation. The Mozambique Cement Company owns three cement factories--Matola in Maputo Province, Dondo in Sofala Province and Nacala in Nampula Province. Cement trade between Mozambique and Tanzania started in 1979 when the Mozambique Cement Company signed a contract for the supply to Tanzania of 72,000 tonnes of cement. It is understood here that out of that amount, only 55,039 tonnes of cement have been supplied. There was another agreement between Mozambique and Tanzania for the supply of 20,000 tonnes of cement. Nine thousand tonnes of cement in this agreement have been supplied. A delegation from the Tanzania Portland Cement Company (TPCC), a company falling under the Tanzania Saruji Corporation, is expected later this month to review the previous agreements and see whether more cement contracts could be entered. ARRIVAL OF SUDANESE RICE--A consignment of 1,800 tons of rice shipped by the Government of Sudan to Tanzania has arrived at the Dar es Salaam Port. The Director of Procurement of the National Milling Corporation (NMC), Ndugu G.S. Mwanache, said in the city yesterday that it was now processing the consignment's documents before off-loading could start. The rice will be handed over to NMC by the Sudanese Embassy in Dar es Salaam immediately after being off-loaded. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Aug 81 p 3]

DENIAL OF MAGAZINE'S IMF REPORT--Tanzania has dismissed allegations appearing in the August edition of Africa Now magazine that the first round of negotiations with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) last month were stuck. The Deputy Minister for Finance, Ndugu Venance Ngula, told Shihata yesterday that the Government was unaware of the alleged bottleneck in the talks. Finance Minister Amir Jamal told the National Assembly in Dar es Salaam last month that the Government was negotiating with the IMF for an extended fund facility for three years, to be used in the battle against inflation. APPROVAL OF PARTY BUDGET--The Party Central Committee which ended its meeting at Chamwino yesterday approved a Party budget of 440 million/- for the 1981/82 financial year. The committee also received reports from its sub-committees on Defence and Security, Planning and Economic Development, Parastatal Organisations and Party Affairs. It was announced at Chamwino last night that an extraordinary meeting of the Central Committee would be held in Dar es Salaam on August 17 this year. Meanwhile, the Party National Executive Council (NEC) is expected to meet in Dar es Salaam next month to discuss the Party Programme. The Party Programme is being prepared by a six-member Central Committee team which had been meeting at the Party Headquarters in Dodoma for the past fortnight. OFFICIALS SEEK CONSOLIDATION OF ROMANIAN-ZAIRIAN AGRICULTURAL COOPERATION

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 16 Jul 81 pp 1, 7

[Article by Lusende Mbemba: "Consolidation of Romanian-Zairian Agricultural Cooperation"]

[Text] "I have mainly come to Zaire for the purpose of participating once more in the consolidation of the agricultural cooperation that so closely links the Republic of Zaire and the Socialist Republic of Romania. It is a form of cooperation in which our respective governments and chiefs of state are particularly interested." This statement was made to the press by Adrain Rogojanu, Romanian deputy minister of agriculture, at the end of the meeting granted him on Tuesday, 14 July, by citizen Bomboko Lokumba, deputy first state commissioner and state commissioner for foreign affairs and international cooperation.

It should be noted that Rogojanu, who has been visiting the Zairian capital since 13 July, is heading a delegation made up of representatives of the different ministries of his country (finance, foreign trade, agriculture) and other experts. The delegation will participate in the work of the Romanian-Zairian joint commission which, it should be emphasized, began its work on Tuesday, 14 July, in the Green Room of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation.

The work is being directed by Dr Mwema Ngoy Toka, secretary of state for agriculture and representative of the Executive Council, who is assisted by Deputy Minister of Agriculture Rogojanu, representing Romania. The General Planning Commission, the ministries of National Economy, Foreign Affairs, Government Investment Holdings, Finance, Foreign Trade, the Bank of Zaire and the joint venture ZAIROM [Zairian-Romanian Zootechnical Company] have sent their representatives to the meeting, which is of great importance.

The major problem to be taken up in the discussions now underway in the Green Room of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is undoubtedly the possibility of intensifying the training of farmers and especially of thoroughly examining what measures could be taken to get the activities of the joint Zairian-Romanian company ZAIROM off to a new start. ZAIROM's main purpose is the promotion of agriculture.

The work of the officials is of great importance, as stated by the secretary of state for agriculture, and it is urgent for the two parties to demonstrate a great deal of frankness and intelligence in order to arrive at a solid basic document to be proposed to the two governments.

Furthermore, it would be a very positive step if, through the meeting, all ambiguities concerning the granting, by ZAIROM, of a site facilitating the continuation of its activities could be removed. The same is true of the revision of financing clauses regarding the project, particularly chapters involving the liberation of foreign exchange and counterpart funds in local currency.

Work is proceeding normally and our immediate wish is to see a more effective Zairian presence in ZAIROM.

PRICES REPORTED VACILLATING; SPECULATORS ACCUSED

Lubumbashi MJUMBE: LE QUOTIDIEN DU SHABA in French 11 Jun 81 p 3

[Article by Mfwamba Ntambwe: "Palm Oil: Prices Have Dropped"]

[Text] The first two weeks of this month brought smiles to the faces of housewives, who watched the price of palm oil drop.

A 75-centiliter bottle that once cost 15 or 20 zaires has now fallen to 7 or even 5 zaires. Observers note with satisfaction that the supply has increased substantially, balancing demand. The competition of demand is now effective.

Readjustment of Price of Local Rice

Nearly 3 weeks ago, prices of local rice, whose major distributors in Shaba are the Tshiani ETS [expansion unknown], were readjusted. At the beginning of this fiscal year, rice sold for 120 zaires per 45-kilogram bag. The same quantity now costs 160 zaires, meaning an increase of 40 zaires. In other wholesale stores or at food stores, rates have already reached 200 and even 250 zaires. A glass of Kindu rice now costs 150 K [expansion unknown] at our public markets, compared with 90 or 80 K around the beginning of the second quarter of this year.

According to ETS officials, the readjustment was made following the increase in the current official price of paddy rice paid to Kindu farmers. In addition, transport rates have also gone up.

Cheaper Television Sets

Television sets are indispensable for many families. As a result of the market competition we are now seeing, many citizens of modest financial means can easily afford sets.

A week ago, following a sale at a number of local stores, a Tatung television set sold for 160 zaires at the Kukap ETS.

Following the example of the Mukap ETS, Shaba-Center is now selling refrigerators and color television sets at lower prices. For example, a refrigerator costs 4,000 zaires, compared with 8,000 zaires for the same size elsewhere.

Speculators

Speculators are doing a great business. Salt merchants or traffickers, most of whom are expatriates, are growing scandalously rich by exploiting poor citizens. We have just verified prices they are charging for salt and have bitterly noted that they (the prices) denote the purest gauging, sometimes supported by influential local figures.

The price of a 50-kilogram bag of salt is now 200 zaires, compared with less than 80 zaires for the purchase price. Some 8 months ago, the same bag cost less than 60 zaires, meaning an increase of over 140 zaires.

At our public markets, a glass of salt is sold for 200 K or even 250 K, compared with 100 K a month ago and 50 K in 1980.

Meat: Higher Prices

For almost a month, beef in general and charcoal-grilled meat in partiular has gone up in price again. At the SGA [expansion unknown], the new prices of charcoal-grilled meat are about 16 zaires per kilogram from the slaughterhouse and 18 zaires at the retail level.

Retail prices were previously about 14 zaires per kilogram, meaning an increase of 4 zaires. At other meat markets, prices went from 20 Z per kilograms to 24 and even 26.

RECOVERY OF STOLEN COBALT--On Tuesday morning, the joint antifraud services (public prosecutor's department and industrial guard of GECAMINES [General Quarries and Mines Company] in Kolwezi) recovered 2,700 kilograms of cobalt worth nearly 4.32 million Belgian francs from a ring of highly specialized thieves from Likasi, four of whom are already behind bars. The cobalt theft recently occurred at the GECAMINES Luilu plants in Kolwezi. The thieves were also in possession of spare parts from GECAMINES that they wanted to sell in Kasai. It was in a dark house in the village of Tshiamundende, some 30 kilometers from downtown Kolwezi, that the robbers were arrested as they were refining their diabolical plan. They are now being intensively questioned by the public prosecutor's office in Kolwezi, which will try to shed light on the origins of the ring and learn the potential receipients of the precious stones and spare parts seized. Last month, at the same Luilu plants, the Kolwezi antifraud services also recovered 536 kilograms of cobalt worth 804,000 Belgian francs from three traffickers who fled to Lubumbashi. To date, there is no information as to their whereabouts. Given the rise in thefts of precious materials in Kolwezi, the political commissioner and regional governor of Shaba, citizen Mandungu Bula Nyati, has decided to visit the mining town of Kolwezi to investigate the situation. FLOUR SHORTAGE PROVOKES DISSENSION--For some time, there has been a shortage of wheat flour in Lubumbashi and as a result, prices are going up. Bread costs between 4.5 and 5 zaires. Zairian bakers and expatriates are in disagreement. They accuse one another at all levels. The railroad cars sent by MIDEMA [expansion unknown] to the bakers committee in Lubumbashi are diverted between Ilebo and the copper capital. Certain SNCZ [Zairian National Railroad Company' and ONATRA [National Transportation Office] employees are accused of being accomplices in this diversion. The cars do reach Lubumbashi, but addressed to persons other than those mentioned by MIDEMA. ANEZA-Shaba [National Association of Zairian Enterprises] has not remained insensitive to this work of "mafiosi." Correspondence has been addressed to both national and regional leaders. At ANEZA, people also complain that from January to May, MIDEMA shipped only 30 cars of wheat flour, when the real needs of the Shaba region are around 275 cars a month. Conventional needs are on the order of 100 cars a month. [Excerpt] [Lubumbashi MJUMBE: LE QUOTIDIEN DU SHABA in French 12 Jul 81 pp 1, 6] 11,464

KAUNDA DIRECTS GOVERNMENT TO TAKE OVER BRICK PLANT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE controversial Nega-Nega brick factory is to be taken over by the Government at the instruction of President Kaunda.

According to the Government Gazette published yesterday and signed by Minister of Lands and Natural Resources Mr Clement Mwananshiku, the President has resolved that "it is desirable or expedient in the interests of the republic" to acquire the property.

Registrar of lands Mr Peter Chamutangi said there was nothing "mysterious" about the handover as the matter had been made "very clear" in the Gazette.

Revalued the factory

Last month, the Government revalued the factory which had been sold to Libro Textiles — a private company owned by M. S. Limbanda at K800,000.

Asked what would happen to the transaction which was criticised by Members of Parliament, Mr Chamutangi said he was not competent to comment on the issue and referred the query to Mr Mwananshiku who was not available for comment.

The issue was hotly debated in Parliament during the last session with MPs demanding an explanation from the Government why the factory was sold at a give-away price.

Minister of Commerce and Industry Mr Remmy Chisupa who was under pressure to explain the matter then, said the marked value of the factory, the housing estate and recreation centre was K800,000 as assessed by the Zambia National Building Society.

The minister said the plant and machinery had not been sold and would be moved to Kalulushi Brickworks which belongs to Zambia Clay Industries.

The MPs wondered why the Government sold the K3.2 million factory at K800,000 — turning down K2 million offered for the property by Mazabuka district council.

They told Mr Chisupa that the deal was suspect and should have been cancelled. Malambo MP Mr Whitson Banda doubted the validity of the valuation. He said he knew of some politicians who were involved in the sale of the factory.

Mr Whynter Chabala (Chipili) said it was not possible that such a project could be valued at K800,000 when it cost the Government K3.2 million to construct.

Obvious

Mr MacDonald Mtine (Kantanshi) said it was obvious

from the questions raised by his colleagues that it was not in the interest of the nation or the House that the factory should be sold at a "give-away" price.

The factory which belonged to Indeco was closed in December 1979 because of low sales and the depression in the building industry, Mr Chisupa explained to the House.

And an Indeco spokesman said the corporation lost about K15 million before the decision to close it down was made. He made it clear Indeco did not have a written offer from Mazabuka district council to buy the plant.

According to the Gazette, President Kaunda has certified that the property was "urgently" required and in terms of Section 5 of the Lands Acquisition Act, it was his intention to acquire it for the State.

Under Section 6 of the Act, an order has been issued to surrender the factory to the State on or before August 21.

"Any person claiming to be interested in the said properties is hereby invited to submit his claim to me within four weeks of the date of publication of this notice in the Gazette," Mr Mwananshiku said.

MINISTER SAYS HE HAS INTERVENED TO SAVE ZAMHORT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

MINISTER of Agriculture and Water Development Mr Unia Mwila yesterday said that he intervened into Zamhort's problems to save it from total collapse.

He said in Lusaka yesterday that he had since submitted a full report of the organisation's problems to President Kaunda with suggestions on how the organisations could be made viable.

The minister was once forced to summon Zamhort officials to a meeting at which serious charges of mismanagement and financial losses were raised.

Mr Mwila could not indicate whether Dr Kaunda had accepted some of his recommendations but said the decision to transfer Zamhort to Zimco under NIEC was the prerogative of the President.

Mr Mwila assured the organisation's works council five months ago that workers would not be sacked as a result of the reorganisation.

The minister's assurance is contained in the minutes of the meeting the works council had with him on April 8.

But under the reorganisation about 250 workers have already been sacked and Mr Mwila yesterday denied last week's reports that there were investigations into the affairs of Zamhort.

The minister said one of Zamhort's problems was that it was under capitalised to an extent that it accumulated huge debts.

This was aggravated when some public institutions like schools failed to pay for the food supplied to them.

He directed all inquiries on Zamhort to Zimco or Cabinet Office as he had nothing to do with it any more.

MINISTER SAYS MAIZE COLLECTION SHOULD BE SPEEDED UP IN SOME AREAS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

Meanwhile, the minister has despatched officers to rural areas to find out what problems they have in the collection of the expected bumper maize harvest.

Although the maize collection had been satisfactory in most parts of the country, there was need to speed up the exercise, he said.

He cited Southern and Eastern provinces as some of the areas where the exercise had run into difficulties.

In Eastern Province the problem was lack of funds to pay farmers. He indicated that money for the exercise would soon be made available.

In addition, there was lack of transport for officers who were required to pay the farmers for their produce.

In Southern Province, inadequacy of stacking machines was the main constraint in the collection of the grain.

Last week Namboard general manager Mr George Chabwera announced that his board and the cooperative marketing unions in the country had bought 2.5 million bags of maize from farmers worth K40 million.

In Choma it was reported that more than 400,000 bags of maize may go to waste this year in chiefs Macha and Mapanza because transporters were reluctant to collect produce from there because of the poor condition of the roads.

Southern Province Cooperative Marketing Union has appealed to the Government to grade the Choma/Namwala road to enable transporters to collect produce in the two areas.

Union marketing manager Mr Thomas Mudala told the province's permanent secretary Mr Ian Sikazwe that some transporters had threatened to pull their vehicles out of the Macha/Mapanza route because of the poor roads.

About 750,000 bags of maize have been collected by the union from the area but there were more than 400,000 bags still to be collected.

Mr Sikazwe said the Government would try to repair the road.

MINISTER SAYS STATE FARMS FEASIBILITY STUDIES NOT DONE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Aug 81 p 5

[Excerpt]

FEASIBILITY studies have not been done on any of the proposed State farms under the operation food production programme, National Commission for Development Planning acting Minister Mr Unia Mwila told Parliament yesterday.

He was answering a question by Isoka MP Mr Leonard Singoyi who also wanted to know if a cost ratio between establishment of such farms and smaller farming units in districts had been determined.

The minister said no such ratio analysis had been undertaken because the feasibility studies had not been accomplished.

However, a good start had been made and several friendly countries and private companies were about to move in and carry out the studies.

In a supplementary question, Mr Singoyi asked Mr Mwila if he was aware that the "colossal" project would be difficult to manage, and the minister replied that the programme would succeed.

Not all

He denied a charge by Nchanga MP Mr Cosmas Masongo that the farms which were originally supposed to be 18 had been reduced to four. The intention to have 18 State farms still stood but not all would be started at the same time.

Mandevu MP Mr Dingiswayo Banda asked why it was necessary to carry out the feasibility studies when Mount Makulu research station had analysed all the types of soil in the country.

Mr Mwila replied that the Government had to differentiate between agricultural research information and the viability of a project.

Several MPs asked how long it would take to finish the feasibility studies and the minister said the farms were big concerns.

GOVERNMENT STARTS MINING EMERALDS IN NDOLA RURAL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Aug 81 p 5

[Excerpt]

THE Government has started mining emeralds through the Reserved Minerals Corporation in Chief Nkana's area of Ndola Rural, managing director Mr Winter Matongo has confirmed.

He said production started last week after the mining team set up the required infrastructure and built houses at a camp in Chief Nkana's area several kilometres from Kalulushi.

"We began moving in last April after setting up the required infrastructure."

He refused to discuss production at the mining site, saying this was a security matter. Mining operations would be carried out in a restricted area.

The corporation would initially operate from only one site, but more sites would be located and camps for personnel built as the operations expand.

The number of expatriates would also be increased from the present one.

The Corporation was formed last year to mine and sell emeralds and immediately set out buying the precious stones from individuals after the Government declared an amnesty to stop the illegal peddling of the stones.

For some time now the corporation has been under pressure from politicians and the Ministry of Mines to speed up prospecting work especially on the Copperbelt to begin mining and selling the stones.

Permanent secretary in the Ministry of Mines Mr Julian Masaninga said in Lusaka recently that the ministry was concerned about the delays in prospecting for precious stones by the corporation.

CABINET OFFICE INTRODUCES ANTI-RACKETEERING MEASURES

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 9 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

NEW measures aimed at cracking down on racketeering by loans officers at the Ministry of Finance have been introduced by Cabinet Office.

This follows discrepancies unearthed at the ministry in the recovery of monies advanced or loaned to Government officers.

According to the annual report of the Cabinet Office for 1980 which was tabled in Parliament last week, the Government is understood to have lost millions of Kwacha through such unscrupulous deals.

During an audit check it was found that loans owed by some officers were not debited against them as a result such officers did not repay the money.

It is believed that such deals were arranged between officers in the ministry and applicants.

Cabinet Office has directed that strict measures be introduced to ensure that officers owing money are correctly billed.

Ascertain

These include checks and controls on advances of salaries authorised in excess of amounts laid down by Government general order and controlling loans and advances authorised to officers before they have cleared the amount outstanding from previous loans and advances.

The suggestions which were made by the management services section in Cabinet Office also recommended — to curb the racket — that loans data must be compared in the same month.

This should include indicating when an advance or loan is given to ascertain immediately whether an officer's "take home" pay is more than the authorised amount.

The report discloses that organisation and methods experts from Cabinet Office are evaluating the workload, quality and functions performed by provincial political secretaries to determine whether or not there was justification for the creation of the post of personal secretaries for them.

A preliminary report on the study was being considered by experts who would later make a decision whether such politicians were entitled to personal secretaries.

Following reports that there was duplication of management positions in Zambia Railways the Ministry of Power, Transport and Communications had enlisted the services of the Cabinet Office experts to review the nature and functions of various positions in the system.

During the year reviews were also carried out in the Department of Cultural Services to formulate proposals on the number of staff to be employed and to establish the nature and content of individual duties.

This report was accepted by Cabinet Office and is in the process of being implemented.

SWAPO REORGANIZES ITS LUSAKA OFFICES UNDER MUSHIMBA

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE Lusaka office of the South West African People's Organisation (SWAPO) has been reorganised and all its activities brought under Mr Aaron Mushimba.

Mr Mushimba, who is member of the organisation's national executive of the central committee, has already arrived in Lusaka from Luanda to head SWAPO.

He said yesterday that SWAPO had reorganised its operations in all countries in which it was being represented.

Mr Mushimba will head the entire operations and activities of the organisation in Zambia.

He has taken all the responsibilities which previously fell under Mr Lucas Pohamba and Mr Ben Boyd, who are still in Lusaka to assist him until they get alternative assignments.

Under the present set-up Mr Hage Geingob United Nations Institute for Namibia director and Mr Hidipo Hamutenya will advise Mr Mushimba on political and diplomatic matters.

Since Mr Pohamba and Mr Boyd cease to be executive and central committee members in Lusaka, there are now five members of the central committee.

These are Mr Geingob, Mr Hamutenya, Dr Ernst Tjiriange, Dr Mose Tjitendero and Mr Benjamin Namalampo.

There is also the deputy secretary Mr Lucas Sephanus who shuttles between Luanda and Lusaka.

RESULTS OF BOTSWANA-ZAMBIA COMMISSION MEETING NOTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 8 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

THE Botswana-Zambia joint permanent commission has recommended building a bridge across the Zambezi river to link the two neighbouring countries.

At the moment the two countries are linked at the Kazungula border post by a pontoon.

In the past there have been incidents of people and vehicles accidently sliding from the pontoon into the river.

A joint communique issued in Livingstone yesterday after a two-day talks said the commission considered the construction of a bridge and improvement to transport and communication.

Other issues were the construction of the Zambia-Botswana highway, educational, cultural, technical co-operation and mass media development, cooperation in financial transactions particularly in the banking field and tourism promotion.

The commission noted "with great satisfaction" the progress being made in sustaining and promoting the bilateral cooperation and development in major fields, and urged further strengthening of other areas.

It resolved to consider at its next meeting in Botswana, mineral exploitation and animal disease control measures.

The meeting, opened by Southern Province Member of the Central Committee Mr Mungoni Liso on Thursday, was chaired by Minister of Finance Mr Kebby Musokotwane.

Several ministers, permanent secretaries and parastatal heads from both countries attended the talks at the Musi-o-Tunya Hotel Inter-Continental.

WORLD BANK REPORT PREDICTS 'DESPERATE PREDICAMENT' FOR NATION

Key Policy Priorities Highlighted

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

LOW-INCOME oil importing countries including Zambia face increasingly desperate predicament, says a World Bank development report which has just been published.

The report, emphasising the need for global and national economic adjustment, says the external pressures on developing countries have shown little sign of easing over the past 12 months.

It draws particular attention to the increasingly desperate predicament of the poorest countries. The low income oil importers "face the 1980s, which have started badly for them, with no sign of change in either their trade or their aid prospects."

Today's estimate of 750 million people live in absolute poverty, but the number could rise to 850 million by the end of the century.

The experience of the 1970s provides valuable lessons for the 1980s. "In general terms, industrial countries increased their exports to capital-surplus countries and slowed down their growth.

The report highlights the importance of domestic economic policies; some countries having similar economic structures and natural resources nevertheless differ widely in the way they cope with difficulties.

Key policy priorities are highlighted: raising domestic saving and investment and using those resources efficiently: adopting a neutral approach between export promotion and import substitution in the choice of exchange rates, taxation and subsidies and, for primary producers, diversifying the range of goods and markets.

The report also says the population of developing countries could stabilise at about seven billion if "replacement fertility" (about two children a couple) is achieved in 25 years' time.

It underlines the link between proverty and rapid population growth. Depending on their success in economic and social development countries still have a considerable influence over the eventual level of their population.

If replacement fertility is delayed for 45 years the eventual stationary population would be more than ten billion.

Several countries have cut back human development programmes; yet there are various ways of maintaining their efficiency. Better-off people can be charged for public services, costs can be shared with local communities and communications can be improved.

Such measures have been adopted in various countries, often to considerable effect. Human development programmes seldom use much energy, nor do they need much foreign exchange.

The recurring issues of food and population are discussed in the light of adjustment pressures. While there is little cause for alarm about another global food shortage to match the 1973-74 crisis, there are several disturbing features about the position today.

World food markets face growing demands from middle income countries, a process that is bound to continue as incomes rise and more grain is fed to livestock.

Report 'Should Not Discourage Us'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

THIS year's World Bank report, like many others before it, paints a very gloomy picture of the world economy. Reading through the massive report gives one the impression that the world is about to end.

Religious zealouts may say "Armageddon" is near. Yet the world is still there although the rich are getting richer and the poor poorer living from hand to mouth.

Pragmatism would demand that the report should result in a more generous resolution on the part of the rich nations to help the poor ones. But that, as we have always maintained, is a forlorn hope.

The World Bank is a capitalist organisation headed by men who have excelled in the art of wheeling and dealing which characterises Western capitalism.

But where Zambia is concerned they have not, after all, shown that their hearts are made entirely of stone.

They have been very helpful to this country of late although, because of its copper, Zambia has not been treated by the World Bank as the poor country that it really is.

A country is poor only because its people do not eat enough; do not have enough jobs; do not have enough housing; and do not have enough education. Many developing countries are in that category.

Yet it would be a fool's paradise to hope that in the final analysis we can survive economically solely on the basis of the "crumbs" thrown at us by the rich nations.

We must always remember that words such as self-reliance; self-sufficiency; simplicity; self-restraint; and hard work are not just transient political slogans.

They pertain to very old forms of wisdom which people everywhere should now turn to if humanity is to survive the gloomy prospects which the World Bank has portrayed. Otherwise "Armageddon" is indeed very near. And this time it will be a battle to the finish between the living and the dying.

The reality lies in doing things for ourselves. We should not therefore sneer at calls for hard work or for increased food production.

The usual pessimistic reports of the World Bank should not discourage us, but instead goad us to more efforts to revamp our ailing economy.

A country which produces most of its own food borrows money only for absolute essentials and has, in fact, little need to crawl to the developed nations for help. It is then highly respected.

Where people go hungry in the midst of plenty, then a rottenness has crept in. Zambians must safeguard their future against such a fate.

For Zambians, self-reliance and hard work should involve the creation of an economy which is not wholly dependent on hand-outs from the World Bank or rich countries which demand blind political loyalty in return.

Zambia Development Article

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Aug 81 p 2

[Text]

FUTURE growth requires the allocation of more foreign exchange to mining in the short-term and greater emphasis on diversification as well as basic reforms of institutions and economic policies for the long-term.

This is one conclusion in an article on Zambia in the World Bank's development report which has just been published.

Zambia's structural inflexibility will take many years to overcome and the country will remain vulnerable to terms of trade fluctuations.

Adjustment will be hard to accomplish without balance of payments support — in part provided by an International Monetary Fund extended fund facility approved in May, with special attention given to safeguarding the position of the poor.

The report says that Zambia's terms of trade deteriorated by 52 per cent between 1974 and 1978. From a peak in 1974 copper prices fell by 40 per cent in 1975 while import prices rose by an average 16 per cent a year.

Wars in neighbouring Angola, Zaire and Zimbabwe disrupted Zambia's rail links to the coast and increased transport costs. In 1979 a serious drought contributed to a nine per cent fall in agricultural production.

Mining accounts for 95 per cent of the export total and exports make up 40 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product.

The terms of trade deterioration therefore caused a huge reduction in national income.

GDP has been falling continuously since 1965; the fall accelerated in 1974 to 78, so GDP was less than half of its 1965 level.

Part of this fall was born by lower investment, but consumption per person also declined sharply.

Rural households, especially those in peripheral areas, have suffered declines in already low incomes; there are serious shortages of basic consumer goods as well as medicines, drugs, school equipment and transport.

Child health and nutrition have deteriorated. One indication of this is the spread of scabies, a disease associated with unhygienic conditions, reported cases of which increased 18-fold in 1973 to 78.

Wages

In urban areas, wage employment and real wages have fallen and expenditure on community services has been cut.

Since Independence the Government has had only limited success in diversifying the economy away from mining.

Agriculture, in which Zambia has abundant potential, has been neglected. The rural-urban terms of trade have shifted against agriculture.

Despite increases in official producer prices, agricultural prices generally have been below border equivalents.

State farms, rather than small farmers, have absorbed large resources; marketing arrangements have been cumbersome and wasteful.

NATION TO BUY CARS FOR HAULING GOODS ON BENGUELA RAILWAY

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

ZAMBIA will buy 235 wagons worth K11.4 million from Zimbabwe for hauling Zambian goods on the Benguela Railway to the Port of Lobito in Angola.

Minister of Power, Transport and Communications, Mr. Rajah Kunda said this in Lusaka, yesterday following a tripartite meeting in Kinshasa in Zaire last week between Angola, Zaire and Zambia on the rehabilitation of Benguela Railway.

Mr. Kunda said the European Economic Community which is providing funds for buying the wagons, had given Zambia K10.5 million as the original estimated cost of the wagons.

He said, however, that Zambia would ask the European Economic Community to provide the K800,000 short fall to meet the estimated K11.4 million for the cost of the wagons.

He said the EEC has not released the K10.5 million it had offered Zambia for wagons unless Zaire, through which the railway line passes supported the rehabilitation programme.

Mr. Kunda, who described the Kinshasa meeting on Benguela Railway line as a success, said Zambia received tremendous support from Zaire.

The Minister explained that the K800,000 short fall came about due to inflation and the devaluation of the European Sterling and the Zimbabwean Dollar.

Mr. Kunda also said it was up to the Zambian transporters to choose the best route to the sea.

"Zambia looks at Benguela Railway with a view to diversifying her import and export routes to the sea," he said and added that Lobito had been Zambia's traditional port.

The meeting in Kinshasa was also attended by Minister of Works and Supply, Mr. Haswell Mwale, Angolan Transport Minister, Mr. Fernando Muteka and the Zairean Minister of Transport and Communications, Mr. Mushohekwa Kalima Wa Katana.

AUDITORS CONDEMN UNZA FOR FAILING TO MAINTAIN ACCOUNTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

MORE than K10 million cannot be accounted for by the University of Zambia.

This disclosure is contained in a report of independent auditors who have condemned the university as failing to maintain their accounts.

The audit report, by Coopers and Lybrand, is to be tabled before the current session of Parliament.

Because the university accounts "have not been properly maintained" the auditors were unable to:

- Verify the existence of fixed assets amounting to K8,434,838;
- Relate the real value of title deeds held by the university to the cost of leasehold land and buildings which are shown in the accounts at K30,354,568 and:
- Failed to determine if K1,036,142 shown as being owed to the university together with prepayments for items would be recoverable because the institution's books are in a mess.

The university books also show that K2,205,458 is owed to various creditors but the auditors doubt if K1,466,264 of that amount is accurate.

"The university accounting records," note that auditors, "have been continuously in arrears and, in our opinion, have not been properly maintained."

The auditors report is for the accounts of the year ended December 31, 1978.

The accounts show that during the year, the university had also written off K333,000 in bad debts — an increase of more than K100,000 from the previous year's figure of K200,000.

The amount owed by sundry debtors to Unza had also increased from K459,000 in 1977 to K637,005. But staff loans and advances had been decreased from K587,787 in 1977 to K575,221 in 1978.

President Kaunda who is Chancellor of the university last month appointed a commission of inquiry to look into the affairs of Unza. No reason was given for the move.

The commission according to its terms of reference would inquire into the effectiveness of the administration and administrative structures under the federal organisation of the university.

Particular emphasis will be put on the administrative controls, accountability and supervision, discipline and attitudes by both staff and students would also be probed by the commission which is being chaired by former member of the Central Committee Mr Wesley Nyirenda.

Announcing the appointment of the commission a State House spokesman had also said student affairs including union matters and the financial affairs of the university and effective use of property would also be examined.

The commission is expected to end its work before the end of the year. Its members who include auditor-general, Mr Stubbs Nundwe was sworn in by Chief Justice Mr Annel Silungwe.

Others are former member of the Central Committee Mr Fwanyanga Mulikita, provincial political secretary at Freedom House Mrs Lily Monze, Roan Consolidated Mines managing director Mr David Phiri, Dr Edwin Koloko and permanent secretary for Lusaka Province Mr Mbangu Mumbwe who is secretary.

DISMISSED MINERS ADVISED TO APPEAL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia Rokana branch has advised its sacked members to appeal to higher authorities.

Branch chairman Mr Moses Bwalya said in Kitwe yesterday the union had told the sacked miners and those who had been given comprehensive final warning letters to appeal to higher authorities according to the disciplinary code.

According to the industrial disciplinary code any employee could appeal against a management decision.

Last week a spokesman for Nchanga Consolidated Mines announced the sacking of 590 miners for various offences following the recent strike and said 825 others had been given comprehensive final warnings pending dismissal if they contravened the strict disciplinary code of the copper industry.

But the spokesman said the 590 had not been dismissed because of the strikes alone but had accumulated disciplinary cases over a long period. The sacked miners could appeal against the dismissal if they wanted.

It was the feeling of the union that any further punishment to be meted out to the workers might not be accepted by the union.

Early last month Mr Bwalya apologised to Minister of Labour and Social Services Mr Basil Kabwe for his branch for the damage to his car and the manner he was treated by miners.

LINTCO TO INCREASE COTTON PURCHASES THIS YEAR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE Lint Company of Zambia expects to buy more than eight million kilogrammes of cotton from farmers in the Southern Province this year.

This is an improvement on the 1.3 million kg of cotton bought from the province last year, according to Lintco provincial manager Mr Alfred Machilika.

The company has so far bought 2.4 million kg of cotton and Lintco expects to pay out K3.7 million to farmers this year. Last year the company paid out K3.2 million.

Among the leading cotton-producing districts is Gwembe where some roads are inaccessible. But Mr Machilika does not foresee transport problems in collecting the crop from the district.

He said feeder roads to production areas were being improved and Lintco had five trucks to transport cotton from the district.

"Everything seems to be going on according to our expectations. We have in fact already started buying cotton from Gwembe valley and the plateau", he said.

Improve roads

In Ndola, Senior Chief Mboroma of Mkushi yesterday called for urgent measures to improve roads and bridges in his area to avoid wastage of cotton, reports Zana.

Chief Mboroma said Lintco was having difficulties in reaching his area because of poor roads and bridges.

He emphasised the need for the improvement of the Mulungwe-Mboroma road which is the main approach road to his area, and the Chinsenda bridge in Chief Mulungwe's area.

The chief said the Kafubula wooden bridge needed immediate attention to improve the collection of produce in his area.

Cotton grown in his area would go to waste if it was not collected in time and regretted that efforts by cotton growers would be wasted.

Lintco has bought 286 bags of cotton representing 7,184 kilogrammes — from his area although collection was being impeded by bad roads.

ANGOLAN REFUGEES AT TWO CAMPS REFUSE REPATRIATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] More than 10,000 Angolan refugees at Maheba and Mayukwayukwa camps have refused to be repatriated to their country--and the Zambian Government cannot force them to leave.

Minister of State for Home Affairs Chieftainess Nkomeshya said this in Parliament yesterday in answer to a question by Liuwa MP Mr Nathan Namuchana who wanted to know how many of the refugees had been repatriated since Angola's independence.

Chieftainess Nkomeshya said so far 2,727 refugees had been repatriated and 10,792 were unwilling to go back to Angola.

Members of Parliament wondered whether this was not detrimental to relations between the two countries since Angola might take it that these people belonged to rebel groups like UNITA.

But the minister said repatriation was voluntary and until the refugees showed willingness to go, they could not be forced.

"Zambia and Angola have had discussions on the issue and the only problem is that the majority of the refugees are not willing to go home. But they are harmless people to their country of origin, they are not freedom fighters, although they have their own fears", she explained.

REPORT NOTES FIFTY PERCENT INCREASE IN 1976-1979 CRIME RATE

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 9 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] THE crime rate in the country has shot up by 50 per cent in just three years between 1976 and 1979, according to the Ministry of Legal Affairs report released in Lusaka this week.

In 1976, 56,322 persons were arrested or summoned to appear and tried in the courts this went up by 28,006 as at December 1979.

The annual report for 1979 says judges heard 462 criminal cases as compared with 445 in 1978, and heard 1,256 criminal appeals as compared with 1,149 the previous year.

The number of persons committed to the High Court for sentence from subordinate courts rose from five in 1978 to seven in 1979, but the number of cases reviewed by judges of the High Court decreased from 1,138 in 1978 to 1,056 in 1979.

During the year under review the High Court dealt with 3,369 civil cases — 393 more than in 1978.

But the number of receiving orders remained at zero for two years in succession — 1978 and 1979.

Of the 31 civil appeals to the High Court against decisions of subordinate courts only three were successful.

Forty-six lawyers were admitted as legal practitioners while the total number holding practising certificates were 127 as at December 1979. This figure included three persons who do not normally practise in Zambia.

'BIG SHOTS' REPORTEDLY INVOLVED IN IMPORT RACKET

'No-Nonsense Circular'

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Richard Theo]

[Excerpt] BIG shots are involved in a high-level racket involving the importation of goods without paying excise duty or sales tax in complete violation of the rules of the country.

Secretary to the Cabinet Mr Evans Willima has written to all Party and Government officers and parastatal executives clearly stating that the culprits are big shots.

In the no-nonsense circular copied to special assistants to the President and to general managers of quasi-Government agencies, Mr Willima says the racket should stop immediately.

He has copied it to Freedom House as top Party officials are involved and the circular has also been sent to the Secretary of State for Defence and Security, Zulu.

He directs that customs officials be more vigilant in executing the law against defaulters of the Customs Act. The law, he says, must be applied strictly.

The circular says some senior Party and Government leaders ignore or refuse to declare their imports contrary to Section 91 of the Customs and Excise Act.

The spokesman could not say how many senior Party and Government officials had defaulted nor how much the department had lost.

He referred all queries to Mr Willima who was unavailable for comment yesterday.

Under Customs and Excise laws and regulations Mr Willima says: "Everyone is liable to pay customs when it is due and your personal baggage is not immune from customs clearance.

"In spite of the contents of the Cabinet Office circular number ten of 1977, there have been increasing reports of incidents of non-compliance with the laws and regulations by senior Party and Government functionaries.

"These reports focus on some leaders who refuse to pay the customs duty and sales tax on imported goods. This, I must emphasise, is very disturbing and unacceptable," the circular says in part.

Asked on what action had been taken to stamp out the racket, a Customs and Excise Department spokesman said in Livingstone:

"Enforcement of the Act is not a new problem, but we try to persuade people using the VIP entrance to cooperate and pay customs duty and sales tax on their imports."

Circular 'Distressing'

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] It is a distressing circular secretary to the Cabinet Mr Willima has issued. Only last week Minister of State for Decentralisation Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula reeled off the figures of public funds our civil servants have spent on travelling outside the country on supposed Government assignments.

Now Mr Willima tells us that when they come back they flout the laws by not paying customs duty and excise on the goodies they buy with their travel allowances which, according to the Muchangwe report, are now as high as K120 a day for the top civil servants.

If senior Government officials are the ones who disobey the law who will not?

One wonders whether it is not true that these many overseas trips undertaken by our public officers are not actually shopping jaunts sponsored out of the taxpayer's money. Otherwise Mr Willima would not have been so concerned.

As a measure to control this daylight robbery by civil servants, the Party and its Government should restrict the use of that segregative VIP lounge at Lusaka International Airport.

It is being abused. Officers and their families who use it are not subjected to declare to customs. That is money (precious money for that matter) which is lost.

Wives of ministers, permanent secretaries and other senior Government officials come through the VIP lounge with mink coats, jewellery and the like without paying duty. Is that fair?

Really in Zambia where we are advocating for a classless society it is self-defeating to have a VIP entry gate and another for the common man.

Let everybody come in through the same gate, no matter how thin or potbellied they are.

DATA ON SCHOLARSHIPS, STUDY TOURS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 8 Aug 81 p 7

[Excerpts]

And the House was told that Britain has trained the highest number of Zambian medical doctors in specialised fields.

Minister of State for Health Mr John Mwondela told the House that 47 Zambians received scholarships between 1970 and 1980 to train abroad as doctors.

Mr Mwondela was answering a question by Mr Mukwe who wanted to now how many indigenous Zambians received scholarships to train as medical doctors in various specialised fields abroad.

The Minister of State told the House that 27 people had been trained in the UK, two in Ethiopia, one in China, nine in the USA, three in India and one each in Bulgaria, Tanzania, Yugoslavia, USSR and Israel.

And Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia told the House that Freedom House had sent more than 30 people to undertake political study tours abroad between 1978 and 1980.

Answering Mr Mukwe, the Prime Minister said although more people had undertaken such tours, he could only furnish the House with the information that four people were sent to Cuba at a cost of K2,400, 21 were sent to the USSR at a cost of K6,850 and nine went to China at a cost of K2,800.

TEKERE'S POLITICAL, PERSONAL SHORTCOMINGS AIRED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Too Many Tekeres"]

[Text]

IT IS often glib to state that a certain period will be "crucial" in the future of a nation — but even the most cynical must accept that the next few months could be decisive in several vitally important areas of Zimbabwean life.

The result of the intended ZANU (PF) reorganisation in the wake of the dismissal of the secretary-general by the central committee could set the scene for an era of reform long heralded by the Prime Miniser.

Politically Mr Edgar Tekere has long seemed to lie in the twilight zone between leftwing nationalism and his party's policies. He is a man who has always wanted to be considered revolutionary and belonging to the grassroots despite his lack of efficiency.

When he lost his job in January as Minister of Manpower Planning and Development Mr Tekere said that he was going back to the party to reorganise it. "The need to revitalise the party is obvious," he said.

As secretary-general, he failed "to revitalise" the party. It is true that as secretary-general he even failed to visit four of the eight provinces of this country to acquaint himself with the problems of the party. He was seldom seen at party headquarters. In plain and simple language, Mr Tekere was a talker and not a doer. He may have been one of the leaders the Prime Minister spoke of as being lazy and inefficent.

As an elected Member of Parliament and as a politician who professes to be concerned with the welfare of the poor and the disadvantaged, he has hardly been their voice in Parliament, for he rarely attends.

There are too many Tekeres in both the party and government who, too must be weeded out. Zimbabweans must reject leaders who spend most of their time drinking, womanising and burning the road at the expense of the taxpayers.

DECISION ON FERUKA OIL AWAITED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by David Linsell]

[Text]

NO announcement on the future of the Feruka oil refinery is likely to be made by the Government until it has received the World Bank report on Zimbabwe's energy requirements.

The report's findings are due to be presented within the next six weeks, and indications from Government circles are that among the recommendations is one against the re-opening of the refinery in its present form.

Diplomatic sources have also disclosed in the wake of last week's Business Herald account on the latest developments surrounding Feruka that Mr Ahmad Zia Mian, head of the visiting energy team here last month, privately told senior Government ministers that the project as it stands today is not economically viable.

The complex in modern terms is outdated and the owners, a consortium of oil companies headed by Shell and British Petroleum, have presented a plan to rehabilitate it on an "as built" basis at a cost of $63 million.

In other words Feruka would simply operate along the same lines as it did when opened in the mid-1960s.

The Government is also known to consider the demands made by the consortium, Central African Petroleum Refineries Ltd., on future profits and return on capital investment — almost 20 years ago — to be unacceptable.

Significant developments have occurred on the international oil scene during the last week, which can only mean good news for Zimbabwe and the rest of the world if agreement can be reached on a common pricing structure by 13 members of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries, OPEC.

On August 4 the oil ministers of OPEC hawks Algeria, Libya and Nigeria met in Lagos to discuss the world oil glut. These three have suffered large losses of revenue because of their insistance of maintaining the posted price of their oil at about US$40 to US$41 a barrel.

But their hard line appears to be softening for on Sunday a Kuwaiti Government spokesman said OPEC ministers are to meet in Geneva on Wednesday.

Previously Saudi Arabia, which accounts for 43 percent of total OPEC production, has stood out for its own price of US$32 a barrel or US$34.

The Libyan Government has indicated that it is prepared to compromise on US$36 a barrel and the signs are that Algeria and Nigeria will settle for the same.

Any agreement is dependent upon the Saudis, who have stood out for price unification and production sharing among OPEC members.

Despite years of argument and disagreement, these aims have yet to be achieved.

IMPACT OF BUDGET ON INVESTMENT EXAMINED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 pp 3, 4

[Article by Deric Bardo]

[Excerpt]

CERTAIN events of last week revealed a few of the possible "nasties" tucked away in the budget.

Two mining groups have had their profits slashed because, in their circumstances, the wording of the section repealing the depletion allowance has had the effect of making the change retrospective to January instead of April, the date contained in the budget speech and supporting bills.

The two corporations are Rio Tinto Mining and Bindura Nickel and both have accounting financial years running from January to December.

In contrast the taxation statutes provide for the tax year to run from April to March.

Now if a company's financial year ends at any date other than March 31 then the tax authorities may agree to accept the accounting year as the equivalent of the tax year.

Thus both Rio and Bindura lose the depletion allowances and get reduced capital allowances as from January — three months earlier than those mines whose year starts in April.

The magnitude of the change can be gauged from Bindura's tax bill for the half year ended June of $789 000 on a gross profit of $3,1 million compared with no tax in 1980 on $4,6 million.

Likewise, Rio now pays $596 000 on $1,15 million, an effective rate of 52 percent compared with 37 percent in the previous year.

Another possible ramification of the Capital Gains Tax Bill comes to mind when considering share capitalisation schemes.

Take the example of National Foods.

On July 10 Natfoods scheduled a meeting for last Thursday at which shareholders were to approve the capitalisation of $12 million of prior years' undistributed profits (capital and revenue) into shares by means of raising the nominal value of each share from 50c to 85c.

The meeting was adjourned until 9.30 a.m. today because one shareholder disliked the method because it would take the face value too close to the market price and thus possibly cause difficulties if new shares were to be offered in the future (say a rights issue).

However, I wonder if the board has considered the capital gains side of the issue?

The directors' plan is that the $12 million of undistributed reserves should be locked-in permanently within the company so that the reconstructed company's share capital balances the fixed asset investment. It is in fact to be nothing more than a tidying up exercise.

But Senator Nkala's CGT may upset the apple cart.

Would the $12 million if transferred from accumulated profits to share capital constitute a capital gain for shareholders?

If so, the company, because of the free disposition, would have to pay 30 percent of $3,6 million to the Treasury — a very costly good housekeeping exercise!

The layman would perhaps argue that there could be no capital gain and thus no liability for tax because there would be no real change in the company's capital fund or shareholders' wealth.

The company's structure would be basically the same; shareholders equity would still total $31 million; the change of $12 million would be simply a shifting between reserves and share capital.

Common sense indicates that the company would not have disposed of any amount nor would shareholders have gained any profits.

But the foregoing may not be a strict interpretation of the tax situation. Shareholders do not have a "right" to undistributed profits.

This right comes into existence only when the directors propose its distribution or conversion into shares and shareholders agree.

It is only by such means that the right to the undistributed reserves moves from company to shareholders; before that time there is but a hope that they will benefit from its possible future distribution.

Therefore, through acceptance of a resolution such as that proposed by Natfoods it could be argued that shareholders do benefit and the company does in fact dispossess itself of a right which may be taxable as a capital gain.

However, the matter is complicated by the ambiguity of the definition of "marketable security" in the CGT Bill.

But if the transfer of the $12 million into shares is indeed a "right" covered by the meaning of "marketable security" then Natfoods could find itself liable to pay $3.6 million on the book entry.

One wonders if it is the legislature's intention to tax this type of transaction?

Perhaps the wise thing for Natfoods to do would be to shelve the resolution.

As a compromise, which would achieve the same structural objective, shareholders could vote that the $12 million be moved from distributable to the non-distributable or capital reserve account.

This definitely would not attract tax.

There are other problems raised by the CGT Bill.

As an illustration take the proposed shareholders' resolution announced by Merlin last week.

The Merlin plan is to issue 55 400 shares to long serving workers at 40c a share (5 cents a share below market price) on the basis that a service bonus will be paid to the employees concerned and will be applied to payment of the issue price in full".

If Merlin had simply donated the shares to the workers it would have been liable for capital gains tax of about $7 500 on the allocation.

By adopting this approach of making workers pay for the shares the company's liability for capital gains tax is reduced to around $800.

However, the method is hardly ideal.

The workers will have the "service bonus" included in their annual income returns for tax purposes but the cash would have been "applied" to the payment of the bonus shares.

Thus they may suffer a "cash drain" and if so are hardly likely to appreciate the deal.

It is ridiculous to ask workers to pay for their bonus shares.

There is a solution — the Bill must be amended to exempt approved worker share schemes from liability for capital gains tax; otherwise the new legislation positively discourages share-schemes for workers.

Rio

RIO TINTO Mining operating profits before tax are way down (first quarter $572 000; second quarter $422 000) because of steadily rising costs and falling bullion prices.

The after tax profit picture is more depressing: first quarter reported as $518 000; second quarter, after adjusting for budget changes, only $39 000.

Because of the mining cost rises and the tax squeeze and uncertainties regarding the gold price the interim dividend has been passed.

Sadly (particularly as it is so out of character) Rio failed to provide a guideline on profits for the rest of 1981.

In May the chairman estimated earnings of about $2.5 million.

It seems as if extra tax could have reduced this to $2 million; but gold prices have not improved since May, so $2 million may be too optimistic.

A forecast based on disclosed assumptions would not only aid investors but could possibly strengthen the group's and the industry's case when dealing with the Treasury on the allowances issues.

It seems as if my estimate of a total dividend of 7c for the year may prove to be too generous.

ALGERIANS INVOLVED IN TALKS ON TWO-WAY TRADE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

DISCUSSIONS on economic co-operation between Algeria and Zimbabwe, with particular emphasis on developments within the Third World, was the purpose behind last week's visit to Salisbury of the Algerian Minister of Heavy Industry, Mr Mohamed Liassine (pictured).

Both countries must increase their economic bargaining power with the North, so that they can fulfil the rights of their peoples to a share in the world's goods, said Mr Liassine.

"Each developing country must bring its contribution to furthering development among its fellow nations," he said.

The minister felt it was important to have direct trading links between Algeria and Zimbabwe, as often it was the case that developing countries exported products to the North and then the same goods were imported by another Third World nation.

This meant the developing countries were losing part of the value of their products to a middleman, and other countries were paying higher prices.

Mr Liassine said talks had been held in Zimbabwe at the highest level to discuss these matters. He and his delegation were intent now on assessing the possibilities of bilateral trade between the two countries.

Mr Liassine added: "Both countries are in total agreement and all the legal instruments exist to begin trade".

He mentioned that while trade in Algeria was primarily conducted by state owned companies, his country was very willing to trade with both the public and private sector in Zimbabwe.

The minister visited a number of industries during his stay and was impressed with their efficiency.

Turning to training, Mr Liassine said Algeria had facilities to train industrial specialists at all levels. His country was ready to offer these facilities to the Zimbabwean economy.

RAIL HITCH CURBS SUGAR EXPORTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWE'S sugar industry, with foreign earnings of more than $63 millio in the year to March 31, has had to stockpile 51 000 tonnes of sugar in the Lowveld in the current milling season because of the rail transport problem.

All sugar is being exported through Maputo, and since the start of the new milling season early in May only 60 percent of production has been railed to the port.

The chairman of Hippo Valley Estates, Sir Raymond Stockil, highlights the "serious problem" in his annual report released today.

Shipments were also deferred earlier this year because of a mechanical breakdown at the industry's bulk loading terminal at Maputo.

This has been temporarily solved, but to ensure the continuity of future exports the industry is co-operating with the Swaziland sugar industry to carry out improvements to the terminal costing $1,1 million.

Sir Raymond forecasts that profits and dividends will fall substantially in the current year from last year's record profit of $22 365 million and total dividends of 25c a share.

Last year's profit was due entirely to the high world sugar price and this has now fallen to about £225 a tonne from the November peak of £410 a tonne.

Sir Raymond said it is impossible to assess the world price for the rest of the year, and costs of production have gone up substantially in the past year. "We are particularly vulnerable to further cost increases now that world prices have fallen to lower levels," he said.

Since independence and Zimbabwe's membership of the International Sugar Organisation many new export opportunities have been opened up to the industry.

Last year sugar was exported to Algeria, Finland, Portugal, Russia, Sweden and the United States. In addition, Zimbabwe has a quota to supply 25 000 tonnes a year to the EEC from mid-1982 at a preferential rate, Sir Raymond said.

Local consumption increased substantially last year, and it now absorbs just over 150 000 tonnes of total production of 340 000 tonnes. While there are indications of a levelling off of local market growth, there should be "steady growth" in the coming year, said Sir Raymond.

With the first cane from the new Mkwasine Estate being milled this season, Hippo Valley has increased its production target to 250 000 tonnes. Production so far in this milling season totals 83 000 tonnes compared with 63 000 tonnes at the same stage last year. — Ziana.

BULAWAYO.

A POLICEMAN'S task in Gokwe, the "wild west of the Midlands", does not end with just trying to keep law and order in a district which has had its fair share of lawlessness.

If you are a policeman in Gokwe you are expected to provide a variety of services to the community far beyond the accepted law officer's burden.

This task embraces the use of limited police transport and telecommunications facilities for the benefit, for instance, of the sick from outlying areas.

Acting police chief of the district, Inspector William Mkurazita, says: "It is a mammoth task to combine with our own police duties when we are so short-handed. But it must be done."

Stretching from Kana in the south to just south of Matusadona National Park near Kariba, Gokwe district is probably the biggest in the country.

The village of Gokwe, itself, is situated near the south end of the district, leaving the borders with places such as Binga and the far north at least 200 km away.

Road communications are non-existent even at the best of times, during the dry season. Large areas of Gokwe are still infested with tsetse fly which, according to Mr John Mangwani, the district animal health inspector, are the biggest threat to the cattle industry of the district.

Inspector Mkurazita has a staff of 100 men to police the district, of whom 82 are regulars. Among the regular forces, two are inspectors, seven patrol officers and seven sergeants.

He reckons another four police stations of the size of Gokwe are needed before the forces of law and order can be expected to provide effective coverage of the district.

He has four radio stations at vantage points of the district for communications, but he thinks what the district needs is a telephone network.

And before telephone links are established road communications must be improved and new ones built.

"It's not unusual for a crime to go unreported for several months in Gokwe just because people must walk long distances to reach a police post," said Inspector Mkurazita.

When the report finally reached the police, the culprit may have left the area.

The man whose burden it is to ensure that everything is moving smoothly in all sectors of community life in Gokwe is the chief executive of the district council, Mr Levy Paul Magede.

The Chenze-Gokwe District Council administers 300 000 people, most of whom live in the south-central region of the district, according to Mr Magede.

Gokwe has 150 primary schools, only 14 of them with Form 1, and no secondary school. Of 1 517 teachers in the district, only 329 are trained.

Mr Magede says most of the teachers are "expatriates" from outside Gokwe who were probably driven by desperation to seek employment there.

There is a dire need for trained teachers in the district, especially since two Government secondary schools are on the drawing boards for Nembudziya and Njelele which, it is hoped, will open next January.

Applications have also been submitted for another 16 primary schools to open next January.

The district has seven clinics and many more are needed, Mr Magede said. Road-making was being affected by lack of earth-moving equipment.

On the bright side of things, Gokwe has had a most rewarding season on the agricultural front, with peasant farmers expected to reap 483 836 bags of maize and 210 013 of groundnuts, with a total value of $11 141 750.

Add $12 163 000 expected from cotton this season, and Gokwe can claim an all-time record.

But there are problems even with the maize crop, because of a critical shortage of empty bags and soaring prices.

The council expects to earn at least $100 000 from the Department of National Parks and Wildlife Management's Operation Windfall in the Sengwa Gorge and Spangate areas, where a team is culling elephant.

This money will come from the proceeds of elephant skins and perhaps a bit more from sales of ivory.

RURAL COOPERATIVES 'RESCUE' PEASANT MINING SECTOR

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Keith Atkinson]

[Text]

THE vast potential of the peasant mining sector is being exploited by rural co-operatives.

Peasant miners in the past were faced with a number of daunting problems. Often they were working unregistered claims and inadvertantly transgressed mining laws.

Exploitation was rife as pirate traders roamed the rural areas buying minerals at rock bottom prices.

Few miners had the capital to buy equipment and pay for transport to the city-based markets for their production was lacking. And many miners did not have any expertise in efficient mining methods.

In an attempt to rectify the situation and bring profitability to peasant mining two complementary developments have occurred.

The Mgodi Co-operative has been set up and private trading companies have begun organising the marketing of the products.

Dohm Trading Company (Pvt) Ltd is encouraging the extraction of beryl, tantalite and microlite ores, tin ore and tungsten ore in the Urungwe, Karoi, Mtoko and Filabusi areas.

All these minerals are low bulk, high value base minerals that can be containerised and shipped to overseas markets.

Dohm proposes the creation of central warehouse points, with shop facilities for food and basic household goods. In time these could become economic growth points for the rural areas.

Mobile production units would travel within a given radius of the warehouses visiting new peasant mines. Other services offered would be drilling and blasting, and a centrally-based mechanic to service all mobile equipment.

Dohm assists mining co-operatives in the marketing of their mineral production, said a spokesman. The company is dealing with a number of small mine operators. All business is conducted on a standard broker-client arrangement and any quantity of minerals are bought.

The spokesman said: "Miners bring in quantities ranging from a few kilograms to several hundred kilograms. We take an assay sample and to ensure a fair deal pay for the load at current market prices."

Prices a miner can expect to receive at the moment are about US$37 for a pound of good grade tantalite and US$500 for a tonne of beryl.

Once a sufficient quantity of ore has been collected it is crushed at the company's warehouse in Msasa, blended to ensure a uniform quality, packed, and then sent by container to overseas markets.

The company recently shipped its first load of 18 tonnes of beryl to the US. The shipment was bid for by four major international companies, and Dohm is negotiating for a six-month set price for the ore.

Present markets are in Europe and the US, and interest has been shown by Japanese firms.

Dohm also has seven tonnes of tantalite, its first tonne of wolframite and half a tonne of shelite in storage.

The company believes that if the peasant mining sector continues to expand at its current rate the value of exports could be between US$150 000-US$175 000 a month.

Mr Johnson Ndlovu, a consultant to the Mgodi Co-operative, said: "The idea of a co-operative was essential if development was to take place in the peasant mining sector."

Mr Ndlovu said that when the co-operative is fully established it will provide the small mine worker with numerous benefits. There will be the facility to have a claim registered by an approved prospector. He acts as guarantor for the person in whose name the claim is filed.

The miner will be instructed in mining law and if necessary be given training in mining methods such as soil sampling of deposits.

Through the co-operative's resources members can acquire basic equipment such as compressors and gravity separation machines. Transport of minerals will also be arranged.

Members pay $10 to join and Mr Ndlovu believes a percentage sharing of profits system will be worked out. The money paid to the co-operative will be used to pay for the services of the approved prospectors, blasting costs, equipment bought and loans made to members.

Mr Ndlovu said: "There are two views on how co-operatives should operate. The one idea is that they be specific to a particular sector, the other is that they diversify into various projects."

In the Filabusi district, for instance, the community as a whole is involved in the development of the region.

Rural farmers, ranchers and miners have pooled resources and the end result is an equitable spread throughout the community of the inflow of cash from their operations.

Government assistance has not been sought for co-operative ventures but the Ministry of Mines is kept informed of developments.

One problem that both Mr Ndlovu and the trading company mentioned was the issuing of Exclusive Prospecting Orders to major mining companies.

They felt that if this trend continued the areas suitable to small-worker mine operations would be threatened. The result would be the removal of a potential rich source of income for the rural dweller.

RURAL STORES--Businessmen in the Shamva, Rushinga and Mount Darwin districts are drawing up a medium-term plan to co-ordinate purchasing and distribution for over 100 stores in the areas. The idea is to run the scheme along co-operative lines, said Mr Joseph Kaparadza, Member of Parliament for Mashonaland Central. The stores serve a population of around 200 000, but because of restrictions on credit and discount combined with transport problems, businessmen intend to band together to take advantage of their purchasing power. He said general dealers in the districts lack the funds to restock their stores hence the need to pool their resources. By forming a co-operative they should gain better access to credit and discount facilities in Salisbury. A central warehouse is to be constructed from which stocks and supplies can be distributed to members' stores by a pooled transport fleet, thereby creating a growth point in line with Government policy. One advantage of pooling transport, said Mr Kaparadza, would emerge during the cropping season when lorries going out to deliver supplies could bring back maize grown by peasant farmers to the central warehouse. From there it could be sent by road, possibly using the same fleet of lorries, to the nearest Grain Marketing Board depot. With this in mind the traders have formed the Munhumutapa Chamber of Commerce and elected Mr T. Garwe as its chairman and Mr K.A. Mpini vice-chairman. Secretary-general is Mr K.A. Sukuueri and his deputy is Mr S. Chiripanyanga. A further 13 members have been elected to the executive committee. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 p 1]

HIPPO VALLEY'S PROFITS--High world sugar prices in the second half of 1980 enabled Hippo Valley Estates Ltd to produce record profits of $22,635m for the 12 months ended March 31, 1981, compared with $2,713m in the previous year. Reserves are now at such a level that chairman Sir Raymond Stockil has announced that the issued capital is to be increased from $24m to $72m. Share capital, says Sir Raymond, is now significantly out of line with the value of fixed assets, hence the proposal to capitalise $18 000 of share premium, capital reserve of $32,136m and a proportion of the general reserve which stands at $21,308m. Turnover during the year leaped from $27,987m to $60,761m. "It is pertinent to record that 1980/81 was the only year out of the last five years when the ex mill yield on exports exceeded the average cost of production," said Sir Raymond. Despite record profits dividends have been restricted to 25¢ a share (1980, 4¢) in order to reduce borrowings from $32m. to $20m. at the year end. ZANU (PF) RALLY--Certain "devil's advocates"--party members who only criticised the Government and turned a blind eye to the positive aspects--were castigated yesterday at a ZANU (PF) rally at Mazoe by Mr Naison Muroyiwa, ZANU (PF) MP for Mashonaland Central. He said the time had come for the people of Zimbabwe to become a disciplined nation determined to repulse any irresponsible denunciations of the Government. He urged all the people to come together in unity and enjoy the fruits of "our independence" for which so many people died. The MP called on people not to be satisfied with their own independence, which he said was not enough without freedom in Namibia and South Africa. Calling for the strengthening of the party, Mr Muroyiwa said the people had to elect party officials who would not require immediate dismissal soon after their appointment because of laziness or indiscipline.--Ziana [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 13 Aug 81 p 3]

ORDER FROM JAPAN--Commercial farmers in Japan have placed a $360 000 order for pasture seed with a Salisbury company, Farm Seeds (Pvt) Ltd. The order is for 90 tonnes of grass seed, which will be sold at $4 a kg. Manager Mr John Roy said the Japanese order has increased substantially from last year. The seed will be sent to Japan by the end of the year, in time for spring planting. Mr Roy said: "One problem that has been encountered is the seed is an annual crop and is not stockpiled. We will be hard pressed to fill the entire order." However, the company, which is the agent for the Zimbabwe Pasture Growers Association, expected an excellent crop due to the favourable rains. SOVIET OFFICIAL ON INCREASED SPORTS TIES WITH AFRICA: REPORT OF INTERVIEW

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 29 Jul 81 p 5

[Text] The APN [Novosti Press Agency] correspondent has interviewed Vladimir Avilov, department head of the state committee for physical education and sports in the USSR council of ministers.

Question: What has been the effect of the 1980 Olympic Games on the improvement of relations between the USSR athletic committee and the athletic organizations in African countries?

Answer: One can say without fear of exaggeration that the Moscow Games were an important stage in the development of the Olympic movement and, naturally, they exercised great influence on the development of international relations in the field of sports. Recently, as part of a delegation from the USSR athletic committee, I had the opportunity to visit Madagascar and the Seychelles. During our talks with the leaders of the athletic organizations of those countries, these leaders noted that during the Moscow Games the representatives of African sports were convinced anew of the advantages of the Soviet school of sports. This is why, as soon as the games were concluded, protocols and agreements on athletic cooperation between the USSR athletic committee and the athletic organizations of Angola, Zambia, the Republic of Guinea, and several other countries were signed.

During the year which has gone by since the Olympic Games, Soviet athletes have visited about 20 African countries and everywhere with great success. It will suffice to mention the trip of the women's basketball team of Kazakhstan to Zambia, that of the "Zenit" and "Fakel" soccer teams respectively to Guinea-Bissau and Botswana.

Question: These contacts are doubtless of great importance for improving African athletic skill.

Answer: Certainly. In fact, the exchange of athletic delegations involves not only participation in competitive games but also the organization of joint training sessions, exhibitions, and seminars. Our Malian friends gratefully remember the recent visit of the Soviet basketball team to their country, when our athletes gave them substantial help in preparing the Malian team for the African championship competition.

The joint training classes also contribute to improving the athletic skill of our African friends. At the present time, in the Soviet Union, athletes from Angola and Algeria are preparing for the African Games, the Guinean swimmers have already had their preparatory training, and we are awaiting the arrival of the Angolan women's handball team and the training of boxers from Gabon. Also, the USSR's large athletic schools each year accept students and scholarship students working on these, from the African countries.

Acceding to the desires of our friends, we have established at the Moscow Central Physical Education Institute some 6-month accelerated training courses for coaches in various athletic disciplines who have come from developing countries.

Question: What can you say about the activity of Soviet coaches in Africa?

Answer: A great number of Soviet trainers are working in many African countries on a long-term basis. A number of Soviet experts are also sent to African countries on short-term assignments. They give practical and theoretical courses to African athletes, they take part in the preparation of national teams for important competitions. The leaders of the athletic organizations in Madagascar, Mali, Algeria, Benin, Cameroon, and other countries greatly value the work of Soviet trainers. Mr Ramchurn, the minister of youth and sports on the island of Mauritius, has noted for example that their activity makes an important contribution to the development of sports on the African continent, and to the strengthening of international ties in the field of sports.

CANCELLATION OF MCLN PRESS CONFERENCE--A press conference scheduled to be held by the Central African Movement of National Liberation (MCLN) in Paris on Tuesday, 28 July, was cancelled at the request of the French authorities. The MCLN, headed by Iddi Lala, has claimed responsibility for the bombing of 14 July in Bangui. The French authorities mentioned that while France was a country of asylum, the recipients of that right to asylum are under the "obligation to keep a reserved attitude." The invitation to attend the MCLN press conference carried the heading "the 14 July kickoff" using the same words as a communique in which Iddi Lala described the bombing as the first act carried out by his movement for the withdrawal of the French troops. PRESIDENT REPORTED TO HAVE ENGAGED IN IRREGULAR FINANCIAL ACTIVITIES

[Article by Thierry Maliniak]

[Text] Madrid--The attempted coup which the authorities of Equatorial Guinea claim to have foiled in April (LE MONDE issue of 30 April) is said to be really connected with the desire of the president, Col Teodoro Obiang Nguema, to assume control over the major import-export company in the country, according to reports published in Madrid, on Monday 27 July, by the newspaper DIARIO 16.

The government accused one of the company's major shareholders, Andres Moises Mba (who from his exile led a group opposed to former President Macias Nguema) of being behind the coup. Mba, who is in exile in Madrid, confirmed the truth of the facts reported by the newspaper.

His account of what happened claims that he was encouraged by the authorities of Equatorial Guinea to make investments in the country after the dictator Macias Nguema was ousted. This is why, in February 1980, he formed an import-export company called EXIGENCA in partnership with his compatriot Justino Mba Nsue and a Spanish businessman, Jose Rovira. President Obiang is reported to have demanded a 20 percent partnership in the company right from the beginning and before he would give orders for the Ministry of Finance to grant various import licenses for the company.

EXIGENCA went through a rapid growth and then, always according to Mba, Col Obiang asked for an increase of capital in favor of his 13-year old son, Teodorin. A month later, Rovira was deprived of his shares for alleged "irregularities" in the import of foreign currency. These shares were allocated to Col Obiang's wife.

Mba told us that through his son, his wife and his cousin, Col Obiang controls 50 percent of the shares of EXIGENCA while the other 50 percent are held by Moises Mba and Justino Mba Nsue, both of whom have been barred from returning to Equatorial Guinea. According to Mba, some relatives of the president and some members of the Supreme Military Council have imported many goods through EXIGENCA without making the required payments and have accumulated debts totaling 32 million pesetas (close to 2 million francs). Mba says that all the company's assets were recently confiscated by Col Obiang.

UDECEMA CONGRESS HELD AT ANTANANARIVO

400 Militants Attend Opening Session

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 29 Jul 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] The 9th national congress of UDECEMA/KMTP [Malagasy Christian Democratic Union-Committee for the Defense of the Revolution], meeting in Antananarivo on the general subject of production and ideology, opened yesterday at midday at the Tranompokonolona of Isotry.

Four hundred militants from 300 sections of the revolutionary organization (OR) are participating in this congress, which will end Saturday. At the opening ceremony, several OR's in the Front (VITM, AKFM, VSM) [unknown-Congress Party for Malagasy Independence-MONIMA Socialist Group] were represented.

UNECMA's national president, CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council] member Solo Norbert Andriamorasata, after the customary welcome and expressions of appreciation to the congress participants and guests, laid stress first of all on the necessity, at the present time, to strengthen collaboration within the FNDR [National Front for the Defense of the Revolution].

He followed up by proposing that the revolutionary government provide subsidies to the OR's (or political parties) in the Front that are working for the triumph of the revolution. And the same should be done (if not to greater extent), he said, for the associations and other organizations with social purposes.

He also suggested that the external support offered by friendly political parties should not be provided only to one OR, but should benefit all the members of the Front.

Finally, the national UDECMA president posed a question, to which the delegates should respond during these 4 days of work: should UDECMA still participate in the next elections? That question is on the table and deserves a concrete answer, he said, in view of the position this OR currently holds. In effect, he explained, it seems that people do not feel the utility of certain OR's, including UDECMA, except when it is necessary to resolve grave national problems. It should be stressed that the representatives of VITM, AKFM, and VSM took the floor in turn to speak of national unity, of which the Front should be the living example, and which should manifest itself in improved cooperation between the various OR's.

End of UDECMA-KMTP Congress

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 5 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] As we announced in our 29 July edition, last week UDECMA-KMTP held its 9th national congress in Antananarivo.

The congress enabled the 400 participants from the 300 sections of the revolutionary organization to resolve internal party problems as well as to take a position with respect to major current international issues.

With respect to internal party questions, the delegates had to examine, among other things, the overall national situation in the current stage of our revolution. The militants decided, among other things, to broaden their activities in the agricultural and stock-raising domains, particularly by means of production cooperatives.

Decisions were also made on other questions, especially in connection with work methods and collaboration within the Front, overall national policy, and reform of the press charter.

With respect to the upcoming elections, the 9th national UDECMA congress decided that before making any decision, the revolutionary organization should lay down several conditions to all the member parties of the Front, conditions which should be spelled out by the next congress, which meets in January 1982.

Also discussed was the building of an independent Malagasy economy, profitable methods of production, and equitable distribution of products. We note that this was also the occasion for the militants to elect the members of the central committee. Returned to office were Solo Norbert Andriamorasata, the national president; Razafintsoa Manaova-Alphonse, national vice president; Rapetera Desire and Razanarison Lucie, national secretaries; Soazafinantoandro Mathilde and Rasoamiarana Gilbert, national treasurers; and Razafindramboa Solo Rene and Randriahavana William, national advisers.

Now we will examine the achievements of the revolutionary vondrona UDECMA-KMPT headed by Solo Norbert Andriamorasata, who was once again elevated to the leadership of the party at the conclusion of its 9th national congress which just ended last weekend in Antananarivo. Numerous resolutions dealing with UDECMA-KMPT's future activities were passed. They only confirm, as a whole, the leading ideas which the latter has defended over recent years and which, with only a few differences, are also those of the other vondronas joined within the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution.

With regard to the internal affairs of the vondrona UDECMA-KMPT, it became apparent what role is to be played by the party in achieving the final victory of the Malagasy socialist revolution. Its supporters are unanimously agreed on the necessity of expanding agricultural and stock-raising activities, the main sectors of economic activity in Madagascar, cost what it may. They made certain firm decisions as to the cooperation that should be customary by now among the various revolutionary vondronas affiliated in the Front for the success of the common task: the victory of socialism. With respect to the next elections, UDECMA-KMPT intends to lay down several preliminary conditions to the members of its party and then to the Front. They have not yet been made public. They will not be elaborated until the next national party council which will be held in January. The national UDECMA-KMPT congress also considers it to be an urgent necessity to provide citizens with ideological training, which it judges is still "inadequate."

The members of the new UDECMA-KMPT national bureau are: Solo Norbert Andriamorasata (president), Manaova Alphonse Razafintsoa (vice president); Desire Rapetera (secretary); Mathilde Soazafinantoandro (treasurer); Gilberte Rasoamiarana (deputy treasurer); Solo Rene Razafindramboa, and William Randriahavana (advisers).

FISEMARE LABOR MEETING HELD IN ANTANANARIVO

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 3 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] The labor militants from 160 Antananarivo locals of FISEMARE [Union of Revolutionary Malagasy Workers] have held a meeting at the national headquarters of the AKFM-KDRSM [Congress Party for Malagasy Independence-Democratic Committee to Support the Malagasy Socialist Revolution] group at Andravoahangy, under the chairmanship of FISEMARE's national president and secretary general.

Mr Paul Rabemananjar, secretary general, explained to the audience the current international crisis, particularly the role of multinational companies which are established most often in the United States and which are going as far as provoking the fall of governments. "We, like many other Third World countries, are suffering from the malady of capitalism," he continued, and "only the determination of the working class and of progressive forces inspired by proletarian internationalism can guarantee success in the building of socialism."

The various maneuvers to discredit the revolutionary government were also raised and unmasked at the meeting. The national president, Ranoharison Eusebe, spoke about solidarity among progressive countries and unions; FISEMARE recently sent delegates to the constitutional convention of the Agricultural Federation of the African Continent, which was held at Ibadan in Nigeria, as well as to the meeting on information held in Arusha (Tanzania).

"In addition to the crisis of imperialism, we must face the forces of reaction, and each individual is responsible to thwart attempts to take us back to a bygone era," he stressed.

And The SRMM

Mr Telanosy, national president of the SRMM-Vonjy Iray Tsy Mivaky labor organization and Mrs Julienne, a member of the political bureau, held a lively ideological meeting Saturday with the SRMM unionists from Antsirabe in the chamber of commerce of that locality. The deputy secretary general of the local section pointed out the importance of such a seminar in the current context; such a seminar, he said, energizes the militants. The representative from the Antsirable political bureau, Mr Rakotondrabary, said for his part that only ideologically mature militants are capable of doing the utmost for the revolution.

As for Mr Telanosy, he recounted the history of the group and explained its institutional structures; to militate in a revolutionary union is a correct position to take to support the triumph of the revolution. Various theories, including the role of the labor organization in national industrial development; the labor organization and the workers; and the labor organization and the new state institutions, were discussed at this seminar.

BELGIAN AID TO BE INCREASED; TECHNICAL, COMMERCIAL TIES TO REMAIN

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 20 Jul 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] After coming to Antananarivo to give a reception honoring the celebration of the 150th anniversary of Belgian independence, His Excellency Victor Allard, the Belgian Ambassador to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar [RDM], returned at midday yesterday to his place of residence, Maputo (Mozambique). During his brief visit to the capital, the Belgian diplomat had talks with several government officials. But these were only routine contacts dealing with bilateral relations.

In that connection, Ambassador Allard told us yesterday of the continuing progress being made at this time in cooperation between his country and the RDM. After a listless period, relations between the two countries began to expand rapidly about 3 years ago. The projects envisaged at that time are beginning to come to fruition over time. The Belgian Government is also assisting--via a government-to-government loan totaling close to 525 million Malagasy francs--in the creation of a lime factory and the industrial cultivation of soya. Now that the funds to be devoted to those two projects have been found, it is to be hoped that the work itself will be started very soon.

Other Belgian-Malagasy projects are still under study: exploitation of the Sakoa coal-bed, the gray sandstone of Bemolanga, construction of a soluble coffee factory at Mananjary, a brewery at Toamasina, a cement-works at Mahajanga, etc. Despite Belgium's determination to come to Madagascar's assistance, the Belgian Ambassador to the RDM said categorically yesterday: "Like you, we are also hit by the present international crisis, and our means at this point are very limited." Ambassador Allard nevertheless declared that he was open to any negotiations. This is the case, for example, with respect to a number of projects for which the presence in Brussels of Malagasy Minister Rarivoson (economy and trade) was necessary. The latter returned to Antananarivo yesterday without touching on the subject. It would seem, nonetheless, that the minister appeared to be rather satisfied with the preliminary talks. Other talks will take place on a continuing basis. We will have to wait for the results. One thing is certain: the realization of these new projects will further solidify relations between the RDM and Belgium.

Beyond the financial relations we mentioned above, the details of which were published in the Saturday edition of the OFFICIAL JOURNAL, Madagascar maintains technical and commercial relations with Belgium. On the technical side is the current construction of the ZeRen-Toamasina chemical fertilizer plant; on the commercial side is the presence of Belgian equipment in the big Malagasy industrial enterprises.

For example one finds this at the SOTEMA [Majunga Textile Company] plant at Mahajanga where the existing and very sophisticated equipment is mostly West German and Belgian.

Unfortunately, trade relations between the two countries suffer a certain imbalance. The importation of products "made in Madagascar" is still at an embryonic stage.

The political will to cooperate thus exists between Belgium and the RDM. Will it be able to withstand the present ills of the international economic crisis? The future will tell us.

VIETNAMESE TEACHERS ASSIGNED TO UNIVERSITY

Contract For Six Teachers Signed

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 30 Jul 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] Six Vietnamese professors will soon be teaching in Madagascar. Their employment contract was signed Tuesday afternoon at the ministry of higher education and scientific research at Tsimbazaza by His Excellency Doan Van, the Vietnamese Ambassador to Madagascar and by Minister Rakoto Ignace.

Thus, less than a year after the signature of the economic, scientific, and cultural agreement between our two countries, Madagascar and Vietnam have signed a contract for the employment of professors. Minister Rakoto Ignace in his speech said that the signing is proof of our determination to give concrete form to the cooperation between our two countries, and also our determination to consolidate the ties of friendship and struggle against imperialism.

Five Vietnamese Arrive

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 5 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] The five Vietnamese professors whose mission to Madagascar was defined last week in a protocol signed in Antananarivo have now safely arrived. Yesterday they were presented to Minister Ignace Rakoto (higher education and scientific research) by the cultural attache of the embassy of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam [SRV] in Antananarivo.

On that occasion, Rakoto welcomed the Vietnamese comrades on behalf of the revolutionary regime which expressed its pleasure at "thus commencing the cooperation between Vietnam and the RDM by means of higher education."

The Vietnamese cultural attache emphasized that, despite the current problems his country is facing in national reconstruction, it will always be "prepared," within the limits of its abilities, of course, "to come to the aid of a fraternal country such as Madagascar."

These professors will teach at the University of Madagascar. They are Nguyen Dang Cha (philosophy), Vu Duong Ninh and Dinh Xuan Lam (history), Nguyen Thua Hop and Nguyen Huu Duong (mathematics).

We mention again that the Malagasy Government will provide their salaries and lodging.

HUMAN RIGHTS APPEAL--An appeal by the International Human Rights Federation: While being "pleased" by the recent release of several Malagasy academics (LE MONDE of 28-29 June), the International Human Rights Federation (27, Rue Jean-Dolent, Paris 14th, Tel. 707-56-35) has expressed "the hope that no further harassment will follow their release." In a communique it also mentioned that the three Malagasy officers who have been detained since 1977 (LE MONDE of 10 June 1980) "have been deprived of indispensable rights of self-defense," and called on the Malagasy Government to "permit a judicial observer, given adequate notice, to attend their trial and verify that the rights of the defendant and the guarantees of independent and impartial justice are respected." EUROPEAN PARLIAMENTARIANS' FRANK INTERVIEW ON NAMIBIA, U.S.

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Aug 81 p 7

[Interview by Migueis Lopes Junior with Martin Bangeman and Ulrich Irmer, members of the European Parliament in Maputo, date not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] During your trip to Southern Africa, have you gathered sufficient data to have a good overview of the Namibian issue?

[Martin Bangeman] I must say that until now we have come across very convincing positions. We believe that if we can, all together--the Contact Group, South Africa, the United States, Namibia and SWAPO--achieve an internationally acceptable position, it should be implemented.

[Ulrich Irmer] I was pleasantly surprised by our contacts so far, by the frankness and openness with which we were received. In Angola, for example, and without our having broached the subject, Foreign Minister Paulo Jorge told us: "We understand that you Europeans fear our ties with the Cubans and the Soviets. You see Soviet influence all over Southern Africa. But this is a grievous mistake. We did not fight for independence for so many years, to turn around and have our country led by foreigners. Of course we have friendly ties with the USSR and Cuba: we owe them a great deal. But we are independent!" This was very important and helped me to understand that the liberation movements have their own potential, their own need to sail on, to be successful. In the face of this, it is absolutely ridiculous to maintain colonialism, under any kind of pretext.

[Question] Does the Savimbi problem in Angola have anything to do with the Namibia problem?

[Ulrich Irmer] Of course. As soon as the Namibia question is solved, there will no longer be a problem with UNITA in Angola. Angola will be left in peace.

[Question] Are you willing to exert pressure on the United States so that this country will recognize the People's Republic of Angola in light of these considerations?

[Ulrich Irmer] Yes.

[Question] Are you going to bring it up at the European Parliament?

[Question] What do you think of UN resolution 435 on Namibia?

[Ulrich Irmer] The one thing the Europeans desire is the rapid and immediate implementation of resolution 435. It is a compromise that does not satisfy everyone. Whites in Namibia are not happy with it, SWAPO is not quite satisfied either, but it is a compromise to which everyone must adhere, as long as it is an international solution which must be carried out.

[Martin Bangeman] Free elections must be organized and power must go to the party with the most votes. It is a very democratic principle, and this is why we had accepted the election results in Zimbabwe, even those who had perhaps wished for a different outcome.... This is what I have expressed in all my contacts so far. If, by any chance, the DTA (Democratic Turnhalle Alliance) should win the election in Namibia, one should accept it. We may or may not hope for it--as a matter of fact, it may be difficult to achieve, but if it happens, this is democracy and we must accept it.

[Question] Does this mean that, in general terms, you advocate for Namibia the same type of solution that was found for Zimbabwe?

[Ulrich Irmer] In general terms, yes. As for the legal basis, the two cases cannot be compared. Even knowing that European conditions cannot be blindly transferred to post-colonial Africa, I would like to see in Namibia a system in which various parties can compete. I am personally convinced that SWAPO will win the election. But I still would like to see a situation in which, shall we say, 10 years from now, any other party could win the election and the majority change.

[Question] How does the European Parliament, and especially the liberal group, view the regional SADCC [Southern African Development Coordination Conference]?

[Ulrich Irmer] We believe that this is a very intelligent operation, both politically and economically, since this regional cooperation will tend to turn the countries participating in it less dependent on South Africa.

[Question] Do you think it is possible to increase EEC support to the SADCC, if all member countries are not signatories of the Lome Convention?

[Ulrich Irmer] I believe it would be difficult. This does not mean we do not wish to do it, but if we would grant special terms to Angola and Mozambique--which are not members--the Lome signatories would ask us why is it that they themselves do not enjoy these same terms.

[Question] Do you believe, then, that the People's Republic of Mozambique must join the Lome Convention?

[Ulrich Irmer] I do not think it is indispensable for Angola and Mozambique to join the Lome Convention. I only believe that this would make things easier. But you must note that neither I nor my president [of the liberal group] came to "sell Lome" to anyone. Actually, I stressed this in my talks with Joaquim Chissano. We are only interested in the conditions and the possibility for cooperation, because we would like to cooperate with everyone.

[Question] Then, do you think that it will be possible, for Mozambique, to be a member of both Lome and CEMA in the future?

[Ulrich Irmer] I would not exclude it. Why not? A principle of our cooperation is that we do not interfere with the political options of a given country. There are marxist-leninist countries with which we are associated in the Lome Convention. Europe and the EEC are in no position to interfere with the political option of any country in the world.

[Question] Can you comment on the fact that EEC cooperation with Africa, or even with the Lome Convention, is considered by some an instrument of neo-colonialist domination of European capitalism.

[Ulrich Irmer] We (the EEC) have made serious mistakes in this field, and everyone is aware of it. We have attempted to transfer our own ideas on the economy of many countries where conditions were very different. An example is food assistance. Our policy in this field was to consider Africa and other countries as purchasers of our surpluses. But the policy of food assistance must be to develop possibiliites in such countries as need it in order to make them self-sufficient in terms of food. At present, we are reformulating our policy within the European Parliament.

[Question] But would it be possible to establish such disinterested assistance between countries with different economic systems?

[Ulrich Irmer] I am not an idealist in this respect. I do not believe in disinterested assistance. Personally, I doubt that the question of relations between North and South can be put in terms of assistance. Our relations with Africa are now on a very realistic basis, because we see very clearly that if the South experiences difficulties, we shall also be involved. Our destinies are interconnected, and it is not possible for Europe to pretend to be living in the island of the happy, the unconcerned, the rich, while the South is starving.

[Question] From your previous contacts with the Reagan administration, do you believe that it is possible for the United States to abandon its position on Namibia, so far based on "cold war" convictions?

[Ulrich Irmer] On an economic level, we are agreed that Europeans, up to a certain point, are dependent on Southern Africa--and I do not mean South Africa. However, strategy-wise, we also agree that South Africa, the Cape route, is very important. At any rate, it would be totally wrong to maintain the positions we had in this area through the help of apartheid. It is much more logical to accept the fact that there will be changes in South Africa. Such changes are simply going to take place, and no one can prevent them. That is why I believe that it is more clever to associate with those who wish to see these changes implemented. If Americans do not see this, we do, and we shall attempt, in all sincerity and loyalty, to influence them on their role in South Africa.

[Question] But don't you believe that there is already a very large gap between the position of the United States and yours on Namibia, on the basis of resolution 435?

[Ulrich Irmer] The Zimbabwean minister of foreign affairs also referred to this question in these terms, that Europe would have to choose between the United States and Africa. I do not agree with this position. We do not have to choose. We wish to maintain our NATO alliance with the United States, of course, because we are dependent on this country. Simultaneously, however, we want to consolidate our relations with the African countries, because of all the ties uniting us, most of them through the Lome Convention.

[Question] ..re you optimistic or pessimistic in regard to the possibility for the United States to modify its position in relation to South Africa and Namibia?

[Ulrich Irmer] I am optimistic, because the United States knows that it is not isolated from the world. That country knows that it is, up to a certain point, dependent on Europe just as much as Europe is dependent on America.

[Question] But whatever Reagan has done until now tends to prove that these considerations are not taken into account....

[Ulrich Irmer] I go back to my meeting with Paulo Jorge. He told me that the Reagan administration is like a pregnant woman. One must wait 9 months to find out if it is a boy or a girl.

[Martin Bangeman] Let us hope that the Reagan administration is not an elephant....

[Question] Yes.... But there are already some Reagan-inspired facts, such as the lifting of the Clark amendment on support to UNITA....

[Ulrich Irmer] Personally, I also believe that Reagan was not a good choice for the Americans. I can tell you a story in this respect that Americans were telling before the elections. A gunman brutally grabs a man in the street, points his gun at him and asks him threateningly: "Carter or Reagan?" So the man answers: "Well, if this is the alternative, go ahead, shoot...." This is how we in Europe looked at the question. Carter was a very weak president. Such a great nation, and it could not find a better alternative than Carter versus Reagan.... However, we accept the fact that they have a democratic system that allows them to choose a better president every four years. And of course, it is wrong to blame Reagan for all the deficiencies in American society, such as unemployment, for instance. This is not Reagan's doing, and we too, in Europe, have a lot of unemployment. Many, many people out of work....

BRITISH PRESS ACCUSED OF OBFUSCATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Carlos Cardoso: "Truth Reiterated"]

[Text] Last June, Rober Mugabe, prime minister of Zimbabwe, stated that it behooved the West to initiate the application of sanctions against the Pretoria regime, since Zimbabwe was unable to do it alone.

When we arrived in London during the last week in June, Mugabe's words had been shamelessly distorted in the British press: what the local public heard and read was that Zimbabwe did not want sanctions. From the simple reader to the member of Parliament, the truth was but the "truth of the press."

Moreover, during all of 1980 and until the attack against Matola in January 1981, the pundits of the British press had literally bombarded public opinion with one more "truth." According to them Mozambique had established a sort of clandestine and immoral peace with the Pretoria regime. In sum, FRELIMO was afraid of the South Africans, FRELIMO had "betrayed" the South African people. Even the most biting passages of Samora Machel's 14 January speech had been carefully stored away. Responsible supporters of the Southern Africa cause were beginning to believe such allegations.

But Armando Guebuza went to London and the scenario was immediately and abruptly destroyed.

It happened on the evening of 26 June, in a London theater filled to capacity by 500 persons eager to know the true Mozambican position. The meeting was presided over by Oliver Tambo, president of the ANC.

Aware of this entire scenario, in which Mozambique appeared timidly pallid vis-a-vis the natural "invincibility" of the apartheid regime, Guebuza went straight to the point: "We know what is being bandied about here, but Mozambique's position is clear.

It is obvious that sanctions against South Africa will hurt the people in this area, and mainly the South African people. But these people have already suffered. The South African people has been suffering for many a decade. The problem does not reside in suffering or not. The point is this: to suffer for a long time to come or to suffer a little more, but for a short time. We experienced this in Mozambique when we applied sanctions against Rhodesia. Sanctions bring disadvantages in their wake, but if applied in common, they can contribute decisively toward breaking the enemy. That is why Mozambique supports the application of sanctions against Pretoria."

The applause was tremendous, frenetic, as if a great burden had been lifted from all those people's shoulders.

"And who must initiate the sanctions? It is with the West that South Africa transacts more than 90 percent of its trade. Let the Western countries apply sanctions in common, and we in Southern Africa know what we must do."

More applause.

The problem is repeated with the same dose of hypocrisy as always. Some Western governments used to give FRELIMO medicines while giving the Portuguese army tanks and planes. Medicines helped the FRELIMO soldiers, who could thus fight longer. FRELIMO soldiers continued the fight, thus forcing the Portuguese generals to purchase more arms. This is the way in which these governments preserved the Portuguese market for their weapons.

The same governments today are providing medicines for the ANC and at the same time, are supplying South African armaments factories. And, with characteristic Christian parternalism, they say that if they stop feeding the apartheid's war machine, the South African people will lose jobs.

There is more. Since they cannot openly state that they support apartheid, they claim that it is the unfortunate people of Southern Africa who do not want sanctions.

Armando Guebuza's visit to Britain was quite useful in many respects: it served to clear up a number of questions preoccupying people in the greater anti-apartheid front.

More than a few months of half-truths in the international press will be needed to launch a campaign of confusion again.

I ask my readers to forgive the inelegance of this editorial outburst, but the subject demanded no less.

DELAYS IN SEED DISTRIBUTION JEOPARDIZE AGRICULTURAL GOALS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 12 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] The lack of seed is threatening to seriously affect the goals set for agriculture, according to the reports presented during the meeting of the directors of state farms in the province of Maputo.

This meeting, which ended in Maputo yesterday, was chaired by Governor Jose Moiane. During the proceedings, the level of the implementation of the goals set for each agricultural unit in the province was analyzed.

Delays in the arrival of seed shipments to the production units, as well as the poor quality of the seeds, were unanimously blamed for the failure.

The importation and distribution of the seeds, of which the Boror firm is in charge, has been extremely deficient, threatening the success of the campaign in various provinces. This fundamental problem affecting our agriculture has been of great concern to peasants throughout the country.

During the meeting of the directors of state farms in Maputo, the delay in the arrival of the seed shipments was invoked as one of the reasons for the poor implementation of the goals in the production of potatoes, rice and corn.

State farms are presently involved in the potato harvest, as well as the transport of rice to hulling units.

During the meeting, it was also confirmed that the lack of packaging materials in the province of Maputo caused the deterioration of large quantities of citrus fruit for export, resulting in serious losses. Besides the loss of foreign exchange, this situation deeply affects the peasants, who see their products rot away.

Closing the meeting, Governor Jose Moiane stressed that state farms must set an example for the degree of organization and production in the entire country.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES SOLD AT SET PRICES FOR PRESENT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Aug 81 p 8

[Article by Rogerio Sitoie and Jose Pinto de Sa]

[Excerpts] The attempt to boycott the new prices for vegetables has failed, but it is necessary to set up permanent control mechanisms in their marketing.

Consumers protested vociferously, barring the way to speculators, who have been vanquished but not convinced.

Sales have become normal in the markets. The new prices are respected and consumers are happier. However, sellers continue to mutter.... At the first opportunity, they will again try to bite.

The rule of the game, for them, is to buy cheap and sell high, it is to defraud both producers and consumers while filling their own pockets. The prices of food items must encourage the producers and protect the consumers, but they should never enrich parasitical intermediaries.

Now that the boycott attempt has failed, the means for permanent control must be devised for the rigorous observance of the prices set.

To this end, a series of meetings was initiated yesterday between the GOAM (Department for the Organization of Supplies of Maputo), the Fruits and Vegetables Marketing Company and the executive council in charge of controlling markets.

One of the participants in these meetings disclosed that the sale of fruits and vegetables by private parties to market sellers will be subjected to close control. This kind of control has not existed until now. It is true that a department of the executive council exists, which is in charge of controlling product quality and price. However, this department has been totally inoperative.

Meanwhile, consumers are flooding the markets, where large quantities of tomatoes, lettuce, and other products are offered, without the need to stand in line.

NATURAL GAS--Large projects for the exploitation of natural gas in Pande are under study, including the construction of a number of complexes for the production of ammoniumurethane and the processing of iron ore. HUNGARIAN COOPERATIVES DELEGATION--A delegation from the national council of Hungarian agricultural cooperatives arrived in Maputo on Sunday for a one-week visit. The delegation was greeted at Mavalane Airport by state secretary for the cashew industry, Gaspar D'zimba. The leader of the Hungarian delegation stated upon arrival that the purpose of the visit is to reinforce existing ties between the cooperative movements of both countries. It is expected that a number of agreements will be signed to reinforce cooperation and the exchange of experiences. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Aug 81 p 2]

PORTUGUESE INDUSTRIAL COOPERATION--A total of 5 protocols were signed yesterday in Maputo with the Portuguese state firm QUIMIGAL, in relation to the renewed take-off of the production of oil, soap and pesticides in the country. The protocols are fundamentally aimed at technical assistance in this field, namely to the Boror Industrial (pesticides), the Cicomo, the Textil do Pungoe (textiles) and Socaju (cashews) firms, as well as to the Fasol, Saborel, Saboeira de Inhambane and Geralco state-managed enterprises. QUIMIGAL's program of technical assistance started in 1977 in the field of the textile and cashew industries. More than 120 Mozambican workers have attended technical specialization courses in Portugal since then. The present protocols are extending this cooperation to the fields of oil, soap and pesticides. To carry them out, QUIMIGAL will send to Mozambique approximately 20 technicians, besides the 25 who are already providing assistance. According to these protocols, about 50 Mozambican workers will be sent to Portugal for training. The protocols will only be implemented following their approval by the Ministry of Finance of the People's Republic of Mozambique. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Aug 81 p 3]

SHIP ACCIDENT AFFECTS CASHEW FIELD--The entire cashew industrial sector will be affected because the cargo ship "Castle Glory" ran aground at the mouth of the Zambezi River a week ago. This accident will irremediably affect the implementation of the second semester goals as set in the 1981 State Central Plan. The "Castle Glory," which is unlikely to be saved, was sailing to Maputo and Nacala, and later to Pemba. On its Nacala run, the ship was carrying, among other goods, 200 tons of tinplate and one vehicle in its hold, now under water. The tinpalte was intended for the manufacture of packaging material for the entire cashew industry in the northern part of the country, notably the six state and private plants in the province of Nampula. After offloading the tinplate in Nacala, the "Castle Glory" was supposed to load 750 tons of cashews to supply the factories in the southern area of the country, whose present stocks are only sufficient for the next three months. KOUNTCHE'S ROLE IN CAMEROONIAN-NIGERIAN FRONTIER INCIDENT HAILED

[Article by Issaka Garba: "African Wisdon"]

[Text] African wisdom and dialogue have triumphed again in the frontier incident between Cameroon and Nigeria.

When President Ahidjo announced that he was prepared to compensate the families of the five Nigerian soldiers killed during the unfortunate incident and when President Shagari issued an official invitation to President Ahidjo to go to Nigeria, not only did they thwart those who expected relations between the two countries to deteriorate but they also proved that African unity is not an empty word.

Africa has chosen to settle its disputes by peaceful means rather than by war. Nigeria and Cameroon have just proved it and set an example. We are delighted with the outcome of the various contacts.

Our head of state, Col Seyni Kountche, played a major role in bringing these two neighboring and fraternal countries, which are Nigeria and Cameroon, to settle rapidly and by peaceful means a frontier incident which would not have helped matters for either country.

President Kountche's recent trips to Illori (Nigeria) and to Yaounde, while tension was growing between the two countries, succeeded in cooling down tempers raised by the incident. From that moment onwards, tension dropped.

The friendly and fraternal relations between these two countries have not been jeopardized and African unity has not been shaken.

Meanwhile, our subregion will not be weakened by this brief misunderstanding because--and this is a very important point--we cannot remain indifferent in the face of a conflict between Cameroon and Nigeria, two neighboring countries, two friendly countries with whom we have good and manifold relations. The visit that President Ahidjo will probably make to Nigeria will further harmonize and strengthen relations between Cameroon and Nigeria. A happy ending which we sincerely hail.

REPORT ON CROP SITUATION--The winter season, the late arrival of which had many people worried in Niger, is now here for good. It has been raining all over the country as proved by the daily rainfall reports given on the radio. The crop situation is carefully followed by administrative and tribal authorities and by regional and central authorities. This is why committees are meeting every 2 weeks all over the country to take stock of what is happening to the young shoots of millet, sorghum, manioc and peanuts. On 30 June, the report on the crop situation noted that rainfall (from 15 to 30 June) was slightly higher than in 1980 and more or less the same as in 1979 for the whole of the country. As for the total amount of rainfall recorded, it was either the same (in Niamey, Agadez) or clearly below the amount of rain that fell in 1980 and 1979. The report states that millet plants are throwing out suckers in most departments of Niamey and Dosso, in the south and central areas of Tahoua, Maradi, and Zinder and that they have produced tufts in the southern region of the department of Dosso. During that same period (of 15 to 30 June), the millet has sprouted in the north and east of the country. But in many areas, the drought and winds have forced farmers to sow the fields again. The young plants of millet and sorghum were attacked by locust. The areas more severely affected were the departments of Niamey, Dosso and Maradi. In Dakoro and Goure, rats have damaged the crops. Campaigns to protect the plants have succeeded in killing these noxious animals. [Text] [Niamey LE SAHEL in French 23 Jul 81 p 3] 8796

LACK OF POLITICAL CHANGE DEPLORED

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 1-2 Aug 81 p 3

[Editorial]

> [Text] It cannot be repeated too often that the left is in power in France, but it is not yet so in Reunion. We have not sufficiently pondered this fact and its consequences.

In France, change is under way. Despite the enormous weight of the heritage left by the right--the effects of which will be felt for years to come- the situation is improving and prospects are brightening.

But if one looks at Reunion, one can see to what point the left is the great absentee excluded from government. The victory of 10 May did not bring a leftist majority of deputies to our island on 21 June.

The Dream of the Right

Contrary to what happened on Guadeloupe, for example, here we have two rightist deputies (and such deputies!) and one socialist deputy, to whom the right continues to say it owes its election. Moreover, the forces of reaction are in charge in the majority of communities and have an overwhelming majority in the assemblies: both general council and regional council.

We might add that the right still has the economic power and continues to wreak havoc in the various wheels of the administration, FR-3, etc....

Beyond all that, these rightist forces are dreaming of one thing. Revenge. They want it at any price in order to continue to impose their own policy and the defense of their own class interests.

The outbreak and the unfolding of the sugar dispute, as we showed yesterday, perfectly illustrates this situation. For the ceaseless round of regulatory changes and the artificial increase of all the prices in the stores amount to the same thing. They have amplified the scope of the fuel price increases.

Zorro

In order to get a better idea of the right's determination to take revenge, it is enough to read "Journal from the Isle of Reunion." This official spokesman for the opposition shows that the right is launching attacks from every direction. For the right, it is a question of blaming the left, by any means including the press, for the consequences of its own policy.

--Jean Paul Virapoulle suddenly discovers the plight of the producers;

--Jean Pierre Juan discovers unemployment, poverty, the noncreation of jobs, the price increases, and today finds many faults at dock customs.

--Debre steps into it, and after having done nothing for the jobless and producers in 18 years, puts on his old threadbare flag on the statute. He attacks the communists in "DOM" [Overseas Departments], on Reunion, implicates the government there, and threatens everyone.

To hear him talk, there is a vast conspiracy against the unity of France and the Republic, which he, like Zorro, will come on the scene to foil.

In reality, his habit of distorting the facts and misrepresenting the positions of his enemies, his questioning of motives, and his alarmist rhetoric partake more of intellectual terrorism than of politics.

The Price of Compromise

He must take comfort, therefore, from the fact that the recent electoral campaign showed these tactics pay off, to the extent that certain leaders of the Socialist Federation joined in to attack the PCR. And today, it is the left which is paying the price for these compromises.

But when will the Virapoulles and Debre understand that they will not be credible, so long as they do not publicly acknowledge their own responsibility for the present predicament of Reunion and of the majority of Reunionese?

The left has only been in power for a few weeks in France, but the right has been there 30 years governing, deciding, and determining.

No Gift

The forces of the left should thus as quickly as possible and the sooner the better, assess the danger represented by all these maneuvers. They should also realize that it is not only a question of a "Reunionese" offensive. The government should know--even if it is poorly or only slightly informed of what is going on here--that it is also being watched. The left, the entire left, must thus work together in solidarity, both here and in France, with the government.

All the leftist forces here, including the overwhelming majority of socialists, should realize that the right is not going to give anything away, and that if the PCR and its main enemy, the whole front for change is also involved [sic].

The Only Way

In the face of these rightist forces that want revenge, the duty of the left is to start negotiating, to unite, and to fight; unity is essential for widening the influence of the left; it is necessary therefore to break the alliance certain socialist leaders maintain with the right, and not to leave the latter any hope.

This is the only way for the left to come to power in Reunion. If not, it will be impasse and disaster.

PRC COMMUNIQUE ON NEED FOR CHANGE PUBLISHED

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 21 Jul 81 p 5

[Statement of the General Committee of the Reunionese Communist Party [PCR]]

[Text] Following its deliberations at Port on Sunday 19 July, the general committee of the PCR published the following statement:

The general committee of the PCR met Sunday 19 July 1981 at Port. It examined the political, economic, and social situation of Reunion after the major elections which just took place, and also the first measures taken by the government.

In the report of the secretariat of the central committee, the accent was placed on the fact that no change, nor any democracy, is possible so long as the Reunionese are unable to express themselves freely and make their choice of elected representatives free of pressure, constraints, or threats, and so long as they are deprived of impartial information.

This requires a merciless struggle against electoral fraud and the defrauders. The appeal filed by Paul Verges before the constitutional council asking for the anulment of the fraudulent election of Jean Fontaine is an important element in that struggle. But it cannot be the only one; the PCR will soon take new steps in line with it.

This also requires that radio and television news be freed from all political constraints that existed under the rightist regime, and that it be open to all who are involved in the economic, social, political and cultural life of the country's inhabitants.

In economic and social terms, the general committee of the PCR reaffirms the PCR's determination to see that the urgent problems are rapidly resolved. In connection with the current sugar season, it is pleased with the initiative taken by the secretary of state for the DOM-TOM [Overseas Departments and Territories] to invite representatives of the producers to Paris, as CGPER and SDEAR [General Confederation of Planters and Livestock Raisers and Reunion Departmental Trade Union of Farm Workers] had desired, with a view, on the one hand, to resolving without further delay the problem of producer income for the 1981 sugar season, and on the other hand to establishing a dialogue on the status to which the former rightist government had relegated the producers.

Concerning the problem of increasing the price of rice and other consumer goods, the general committee condemns the attitude of some officials who in an opposite spirit do not hesitate to raise the rice of merchandise without any consideration. The general committee endorses the approach made by Reunion's elected communist officials to the government to ask it to freeze certain prices and strengthen controls, and to ask for a broad dialogue on wage-price policy on Reunion. In connection with social security for artisans, businessmen, and the self-employed, with their contributions to the system, and their affiliation with the CMRR [expansion unknown], a dialogue of the interested parties is desirable as soon as possible.

Finally, on economic, social and cultural questions, the general committee of the party notes the position of the PCR set out the day after the victory of 10 May; a quick review of the overall record of the policy followed for more than 25 years by the rightist government and, starting from there, the elaboration of a coherent development plan for Reunion.

In political terms, the general committee considers that the left is in power in France for many years, but that it is not in power yet on Reunion. It would be desirable to put it in power here, as well as in France. But to do that requires, more than ever before, Reunionese unity, and in the first place the union of the leftist and progressive forces.

The general committee endorses the position of the secretariat of the central committee of the party, which among other things calls for unity among the leftist parties of Reunion, and in the first place between the PCR and the Socialist Federation. However, it deplores the fact that certain leaders of that federation seem much closer to union with the right than to union with the left. That alliance of those socialist leaders with the right must be broken in order to create a real union of the left on Reunion, a union that is ready to struggle together to defeat the right and work in solidarity for the future of Reunion and the Reunionese.

In order to resolve urgent problems in accordance with the interests of the greatest masses of the Reunionese people, and in order to elaborate plans for the future bringing together the greatest possible consensus, as well as to achieve that larger unity needed for real change, it is important to strengthen the PCR, qualitatively and quantitatively.

From this point of view, special effort must be made by TEMOIGNAGES to increase its readership and improve its coverage of events.

The general committee of the PCR commits itself to spread the good word in support of TEMOIGNAGES this year, and to fight hard to strengthen the party's daily newspaper, to work toward a stronger and greater TEMOIGNAGES.

EXILE OF FATHER REYNOLDS MICHEL ENDED

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 18-19 Jul 81 p 4

[Article--passages enclosed in slantlines printed in boldface]

> [Text] In a communique given to us yesterday, the Christian Witness Movement of Reunion [MTCR] informed us that the decree of expulsion which the rightist [government handed down against Father Reynolds Michel on 29 December 1970 and on 6 March 1972 was abrogated by the leftist government on 20 June 1981. Father Michel was notified of the abrogation of the decree by the French Embassy in Mauritius.
> This is a great victory for freedom and democracy against arbitrary power. Father Michel's former parishoners at Riviere des Galets, like all other Reunionese, welcomed this news with profound emotion and great joy.

They still recall the brutality which accompanied the arrest and abduction of their priest. It was 29 December 1970 at 0530. The rectory of Riviere des Galets was surrounded by the police forces; gendarmes were posted at the doors and windows, and some even climbed to the top of the house to occupy a more strategic position in order to watch the courtyard in case Father Michel, treated like a common criminal, were to escape. He was led straight to the Gillot airport by a very large escort without being allowed to say good-bye to his friends in the Christian Witness of Reunion group.

At 1530, Father Michel, accompanied by two policemen in civilian clothes, got aboard the airplane which took him to the island of Mauritius. The same night, the parishioners of Riviere des Galet responded to the expulsion measure by massive participation in a protest meeting. Father Michel was in their eyes a man of solidarity who witnessed his faith and his evangelical spirit in concrete actions alongside the oppressed and the exploited.

The expulsion took place in a general climate of repression, both political and religious. Communists were being hounded out of elective and every other kind of office, while the church saw an attempt to marginalize those who were demonstrating their faith in Christ and also belonged to the PCR [Reunionese Communist Party].

As was mentioned by our fraternal publication TEMOIGNAGE CHRETIEN DE LA REUNION in this week's edition, it was a time when some priests refused to perform the sacraments for the families of militant communists, and when others exploited the privacy of the confessional to apply moral pressure on the eve of elections.

The explusion of Father Michel--who, according to longtime Bishop Mgr Guibert, was guilty /of having wanted to do his duty as a priest as he saw it/--has been denounced by all the democrats in our country.

And in issue No. 5 of TCR, our comrade Paul Verges said: /"Father Michel was arrested and expelled under scandalously arbitrary circumstances, because, though an outsider, he loved this people and this country. In the face of the authorities and the rich, it requires singular courage for a Reunionese priest to live his priesthood as he lived it, in the midst of the workers and the poor. He was for us communists a living example of a Catholic, a priest standing with the workers and reflecting their aspiration, expressing an inalienable dimension of Reunionese Man in his present struggle for the dignity of each and the freedom of all."/

After his expulsion from Reunion, Father Reynolds Michel was named vicar of the parish of the Visitation of Vacoas, on his native island. In September 1971, he was invited to France, where Monseigneur Ancel of Lyon entrusted him with the responsibility for Reunionese migrants. Several months later, the minister of interior of the time, Ramond Marcellin, handed out a new decree expelling him from metropolitan territory.

Thus, Father Reynolds Michel was prohibited from carrying out the mission of solidarity to which he wanted to devote his life.

During all his years of exile, various initiatives were taken with the rightist government to try to lift the expulsion measures. With no success. As recently as 14 April 1981 the minister of the interior declared that it would be impossible "to reconsider the banishment measure affecting Father Michel, or to suspend its application."

It took the arrival of the left power in France to bring about a constructive solution. We note that several weeks ago, our party along with other democratic organizations signed a letter to the minister of interior asking him to make this kind of decision.

In an interview given this week to the newspaper TEMOIGNAGE CHRETIEN DE LA REUNION, Father Michel Reynolds announced his intention to "return to Reunion to resume a ministry in communion with his bishop and the priests of the diocese, after a visit to France."

In its communique, TCR also advises that Father Michel will pay a brief visit to Reunion in early August, during the course of which his liberation will be celebrated. And TCR "calls on the Reunionese to prepare for the festival of his return."

A Statement by Father Michel

(We were able to obtain from Father Reynolds Michel a statement, after the announcement of the abrogation of the expulsion decree. We publish it in full below.)

I welcomed this news with great joy. Francois Mitterrand's victory on 10 May engendered in me the hope of finally seeing the expulsion measures taken against me in 1970 (Reunion) and 1972 (Lyon) lifted. This hope has been brought to fulfillment today after long years of struggle and suffering.

This measure, it seems to me, is an integral part of a new direction the government is taking with the idea that "France should once again become the land of the free and the champion of human rights in every domain," to use the very words of Pierre Mauroy.

This victory is not just my own; it is a victory for all my friends of Christian Witness on Reunion, my friends in Lyon, Paris, Fribourg, and the island of Mauritius. They stayed with me faithfully during these last 10 years, supporting me in my trials and struggling for a favorable solution to my problem. It is also a victory of the Reunionese people and of the poorest, who have taught me where to find true loyalty to Christ and the Gospel, and who felt themselves too to be the victims of these various measures taken against me.

This victory finally puts an end to a long exile and makes it possible now to take up my rightful place in the clergy of the diocese of Reunion where I am attached by sacerdotal ordination.

I want especially to thank the head of Christian Witness in Paris, my friend Georges Montaron, and Mr Robert Boyer of Lyon, who took the final initiatives that resulted in the happy outcome we have seen. My thanks also go to my friends in Lyon, Paris and Reunion who have been in the breaches these last few weeks in the effort to see that these initiatives came to a happy conclusion.

BETTER UTILIZATION OF FRENCH AID URGED

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 15 Jul 81 p 3

[Editorial: "Who Favors Change?"]

[Text] Since its creation in 1959, the Reunionese Communist Party [PCR] has been analyzing the economic and social structures on Reunion and the policy of integration. The logical conclusion it drew from this analysis was that such a system could never lead our country along the path of development. To the contrary.

And, unfortunately for Reunion and for the majority of the Reunionese, this diagnosis has proven to be correct. Today, everyone acknowledges the impasse to which this kind of system has led us. We will not belabor it.

Similarly, for more than 22 years, the PCR has ceaselessly pleaded for a policy of development. Tirelessly, we have said that this is the highest priority; that we must change our political orientation in order to achieve self-centered development; that we must make use of French assistance loans in different ways, base everything on the idea of a producing economy, change people's attitudes and promote a mystique of development; that we must mobilize the Reunionese in support of such a plan to achieve dignity, equality, and freedom.

And today, what do we see? The overwhelming majority of Reunionese want development and reject comprehensive womb-to-womb welfare. Only a small coterie of people getting rich on welfare are happy with such a system and praise the era of colonies and special privilege.

What one might call "the development front" extends far beyond the Communist Party. Within the presidential majority, in the left, there is also the Socialist Party, most of whose militants are sincerely in favor of the country's development; but there are also in that same presidential majority many other "nonparty" activists who are inspired by the passion for development.

But one must look still further, beyond what we habitually call /"the political class";/ we are thinking here of the various cultural and religious currents in the country, within which there are great numbers who support the development of the country and the advancement of the Reunionese. Whether we speak of our compatriots who are Tamoul, Muslim, Catholic, or others, a large number of people exist who believe change is necessary and salutary; many think there is no time for hesitation; that public assistance loans must be disbursed differently, and Reunionese given the responsibility.

Thus, for example, would Monseigneur Aubry have spoken the words he did Thursday at his press conference if there were not, even in the Church, many believers who share the aspiration for development, justice, and love of country? Even among capitalists, at least among those who are not directly tied to the dominant import-export system, there some who are determined to move toward development and direct their capital toward production.

All these currents, these organizations, these individuals, etc., constitute a major force. They are the hope of Reunion, if dialogue and negotiation are established and advanced. This is the only way to achieve a coherent development plan, re-establish economic equilibrium, and reduce social inequalities.

This perspective will inevitably lead to some political reordering, and everyone will have to reposition himself in relationship to the basic objective, development. And that is when we will see who is really for change.

NEED TO LEARN CREOLE LINKED WITH CULTURAL IDENTITY

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 24 Jul 81 p 6

[Article by Alain Armand]

[Text] The people of Reunion will be better able to speak other languages if they master their mother tongue.

The place of Creole in the educational system has long since been a burning subject of debate, and one over which much ink has been spilt. And regardless of our personal opinion on the question, one fact should be noted: three teachers' unions--SNES [expansion unknown], SNI-PEGC [expansion unknown] and SNC [National Confederation of Colleges]--at their general assembly as well as in internal deliberations--have brought the matter up for discussion, and this has once again heated up the debate. The SNC invited Mr Baissac, a linguist, to discuss the problem of Creole and bilingualism on Reunion at its general assembly. We will not go back over the anti-Creole positions taken by a goodly number of teachers who attended that general assembly or their questions directed to Mr Baissac.

We would like to return to the letter Dr Gilbert Gerard sent to the QUOTIDIEN which appeared Wednesday under the title: "You Said Bilingualism."

In Dr Gerard's view, "to teach Creole would simply be criminal, because the Reunionese would then be locked into a cultural ghetto." "What will be their chances for social advancement...." "Will children of modest circumstances be condemned to speak only Creole?"

Excuse me, Mr Gerard, but I should tell you that I do not understand, I do not understand how a Reunionese who has used French and Creole interchangeably since childhood, who today has political responsibilities, can have such a negative attitude to his mother tongue and moreover be so unperceptive.

Mr Gerard, it is dishonest in the extreme to create the impression that all those who think about the place of Creole in the school system want to wipe out French and French culture. Linguists, researchers, and teachers think in fact that the best way to defend French is to defend...Creole. One must understand here that these people think that real advancement, under all forms of Reunionese language and culture, can only encourage the Reunionese child to acquire and improve his command over the language of widest communication, French.

Mr Gerard, you speak of a "cultural ghetto."

For myself, I would think that it is people like you who are shutting Reunion in this ghetto. To tolerate Creole in pre-school only if it is matched by French is to ignore the fact that a language is, among other things, a unique vision of the world by a human community; to agree in the name of some great civilizing principles to consider a person's culture as a blemish and to try to replace it with another that begins with a "capital C" is to deny Reunionese the right to exist as such; Mr Gerard, is it not a fact that the best way to deculturate the Reunionese is to acculturate them in such a way as to shut them in a ghetto in which one can no longer be Reunionese without being French?

So that our meaning is quite clear, Mr Gerard: to demand that we carry out our responsibilities by teaching our culture in no way means to exclude French. It is more than legitimate for the school system to reconcile the Reunionese with his identity, and that includes his mother tongue.

INFLATIONARY PRICE SPIRAL PROTESTED, WAGE INCREASE REQUESTED

Text of CGTR Telegram to DOM-TOM

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 13-14 Jul 81 p 3

[Text of telegram sent by Bruny Payet, secretary general of the General Confederation of Labor of Reunion (CGTR) to the secretary of state of overseas departments-overseas territories (DOM-TOM)]

[Text] On behalf of the workers of Reunion, we protest the excessive increase in the price of rice--basic food commodity of the people--STOP--Such a decision provokes growing general discontent following the numerous price increases that have occurred on all products and services during this period--STOP--Such a policy can only result in demands for general wage increases.

Text of CGTR Statemnnt

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 13-14 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] The leadership of the CGTR, echoing the profound discontent which is developing among the workers, raises the strongest protest against the most recent increase in the price of rice that was announced on Monday 13 July. Coming after all the other increases during the same period on other commodities--in the first place those on basic necessities--and above all on services, especially rent and transportation, the increase in the price of rice--the basic food commodity of Reunion, can only aggravate the anger of the workers, who see their purchasing power, already insufficient, gravely impaired.

This they cannot accept.

Under these conditions, and in order to defend their purchasing power, the workers can only demand a general wage increase. [Signed] For the directorate of the CGTR, the secretary general, Bruny Payet.

Communist General Councilors

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 16 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] Here is the text of the telegram sent yesterday by the communist general councilors of Reunion to the secretary of state for DOM-TOM, Mr Henri Emmanelli:

Since 11 May, prices on Reunion have continued to climb, and the increases have affected construction, food commodities, and services as well. Stop.
The most recent increase in the price of rice, coming after the harsh increases in the price of numerous other commodities of basic necessity and widespread consumption, had created serious anxiety and strong indignation among the working classes of the country. Stop.
Urgent measures need to be taken to stop this vertiginous inflationary spiral. Stop.
The freezing of some prices and the strengthening of controls could constitute a few of these first measures, while a concerted study is made on the general price policy on Reunion. Stop.
Highest considerations. Stop.
For the communist general councilors of Reunion: Claude Hoarau, general councilor.

Effects of Expected Price Increase

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 9 Jul 81 p 8

[Text] For almost a week now--it began in the middle of last week--there has been a run on rice in the shops and supermarkets. Of course, it was the end of the month again, the time when everyone more or less stocks up on provisions, especially rice; but this was something out of the ordinary; there was so much activity that the stores have almost been stripped of all their rice; in the supermarkets, the bags were bought by the twenties, even by the fifties, and more; and since Monday a number of retail stores had run out completely.

The activity was encouraged even more by the rumors that were circulating that there would be a shortage or a price increase on rice coming.

What is really the truth? We asked both SOBORIZ [expansion unknown] and the secretariat for economic affairs of the prefecture.

No Shortage Now Or In the Future

And "there is no danger of it in the months to come."

On the one hand, officials say, Reunion has a permanent reserve stock equal to 2 months of consumption, or 8,000 tons of rice. Well, the amount of rice presently in stock is much greater than that minimum safety level (it is on the order of 13,000 tons).

On the other hand, a call for suppliers for 18,000 tons of rice has just been issued; which therefore will satisfy consumption needs ntil the end of the year. On this score, they say there is "no reason for alarm."

Bagging Problems

While the shopkeepers may have lacked rice in recent days, sources at SOBORIZ believe the problem is really at the local level; between SOBORIZ and those who market the rice at the retail level.

For some time now, SOBORIZ officials say, demand for bagged rice is increasing, and the company's bagging equipment is no longer able to satisfy damand. Two new pieces of equipment have been ordered; they will arrive in the next few weeks, to make it possible to respond to this constantly increasing demand.

Bigger Demand

All the same, the technical problem of bagging is not the only one, for at SOBORIZ it has been noted that there is greater demand for rice on the part of the merchants, which itself must correspond to bigger purchases made by the consumers. Thus the level of daily deliveries made by SOBORIZ, which was previously on the order of 180 tons, has nearly doubled, going in recent days up to 350 tons (which would correspond to an annual consumption on the order of 100,000 tons, or twice what it is at present).

Once Again the American Dollar

This activity is incontestably the expression of a real anxiety on the part of the consumers.

This anxiety is not without foundation, given that if the price of rice paid by the consumer is fixed, its purchase price has not remained steady, for at least one reason: that in large part it is subject to pressure from changes in the exchange rate of the U.S. dollar.

In effect, all trade is transacted with the U.S. dollar as the currency of payment. Hydrocarbons--gasoline, premium, natural gas, etc.--are bought with U.S. dollars; rice is bought with U.S. dollars.

Thus when bids were accepted for an order of 18,000 tons of rice 6 months ago, the time before last, it was handled on the basis that 1 U.S. dollar equals Fr 4.50, while in the most recent bidding, it was handled on the basis that 1 U.S. dollar equals Fr 5.70.

In other words, while approximately the same number of dollars may be needed to buy the same quantity of rice, by contrast more francs are needed to buy the same number of dollars.

This is the direct consequence of the policy of the United States, particularly since the accession of Ronald Reagan as the leader of the U.S. Administration; a monetary policy which is all to the advantage of the United States but which weighs heavily on the economies of other countries; and which weighs dramatically on the underdeveloped countries; it considerably aggravates the already inhumane conditions in which hundreds of millions of starving men, women, and children find themselves, because the dollar is increasing immoderately, and they must in effect pay more for the inadequate nourishment they are already getting.

On Reunion, we are not immune from the disastrous consequences of that U.S. monetary policy.

Compensation Fund Provisioned

The situation is cause for concern: the secretariat for economic affairs does not try to hide it. But it says that the rice compensation fund has substantial funds available. Which is not the case for the compensation fund for hydrocarbons (gasoline, oil, natural gas, etc.)

The principle of this compensation fund is the following: deluxe rice is sold at substantially higher retail prices; the difference, which goes into the fund, makes it possible to modulate to some degree the price of ordinary rice.

Such is the situation at this point, and, for the secretariat of economic affairs, "there is no reason to panic." Nevertheless, developments will be followed closely and with interest.

Unjustified Price Movements

In addition to all these factors in the situation, there is another.

Since the change that occurred on 10 May, a campaign has come to light aimed at creating panic in the public: this is the jumping around of prices that took place immediately after 10 May, for example in the chain of SCORE stores, a measure which was justly condemned at the time.

But since then, instead of ceasing, it has only gotten worse. Lately we have been seeing wild fluctuations in prices: increases as ill-considered as they are unjustified.

In this respect, there are actions which the public authorities need to take urgently if we do not want--in the quite accurate words of the CGTR's communique that has just been made public--"to provoke a deterioration in the social climate on Reunion."

UNITY, VIGILANCE URGED AS SUGAR HARVEST RESUMES

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 1-2 Aug 81 p 3

> [Text] Now that the cutting has resumed everywhere, unity and vigilance are needed more than ever, in order to support and advance the cuase of the small and medium growers in the dialogue which is to begin.

Now that the sugar harvest has resumed--under pressure from the growers and their trade-union organizations--CGPER, SDEAR, [General Confederation of Planters and Livestock Raisers, Reunion Departmental Trade Union of Farm Workers], the former CDJA, [expansion unknown] and is back to normal, a second stage is beginning. So, how does the situation look?

First of all, and this is extremely important, the producers have shown firstly, by the unanimity with which they observed the strike, then secondly by their rallying to the cause and their determination to force those bent on political revenge to listen to reason, that they were really determined to defend their cause. In other words, the time is gone when a small number of self-proclaimed producers tied to the sugar-mills could speak indiscriminately in their name.

So the producers have shown that they understand that things are different now and that they had no intention of being shoved aside. That is important. The direct involvement of the producers was instrumental in clarifying the situation somewhat. It showed everyone what role Jean-Paul Virapoulle and Paul Ferrand were really playing. By isolating them, as they did, the producers began to clean things up and thus they created conditions for the sequel.

Now that a second stage is going to commence, the producers, by their actions and by the defeat that they inflicted on Jean-Paul Virapoulle and Paul Ferrand, ensured the best possible conditions for the launching of the dialogue announced by the government, and have created better conditions in which to support and advance their cause, which in the last resort is the cause of the country.

In a memorandum of 22 July, the government announced the setting up of a working group whose mission will be to take a fresh look at the state aid to sugar and cane, as well as social assistance.

This working group is supposed to finish its work before 15 October, and its work will assist "subsequently in the payment of social assistance for the current sugar harvest."

Quite obviously, as this is emphasized in the document, independently of the 3F [as published] already accorded.

Also, there will be "during the next 3 months" an expert mission sent to study the problems encountered.

So now that the sugar harvest has resumed, a new battle is beginning and under quite new and unprecedented conditions for the producers.

The fact that by their struggle, by their unity and their determination they have created better conditions for this new stage is important. But the game is not over yet, all the same.

The recent weeks have shown that the right--those who for years and years betrayed the cause of the producers, those who still today dream of revenge--has not demobilized. No more than they have lost all their resources. The class interests--the political interests, too--which these people are defending are substantial; they are powerful levers, powerful inducements for them.

All the more reason for the producers to reinforce their unity and to be more vigilant than ever.

Their strengthened unity, their continuing mobilization, their determination will all carry decisive weight in the weeks to come.

New Forms of Action Contemplated

In the communique they made public Thursday, the leaders of Fedecanne, Jean Paul Virapoulle and Paul Ferrand, announced their intention of carrying out "new forms" of union action.

Considering who these two individuals are, one might find it amusing to ask whether they intend to carry out actions of "new forms" or on "new terrain"...perhaps to side with the weather bureau or SUAD [expansion unknown] which are really their preferred field. But in truth, it is fair to ask exactly what they mean. Since in another paragraph of the same communique they state that "having in vain utilized all the legal and democratic means of dialogue with the government," they believe "that it is useless to continue a dialogue of the death with the governmental authorities...."

What then are we to deduce from these statements made by the leaders of Fedecanne? What exactly do they mean when they say that "having in vain utilized all the legal and democratic means of dialogue," they are contemplating "new forms" of union action?

These are words that should not be forgotten.

DETAILS IN 1981-1982 BUDGET OF MINISTRY OF ARMED FORCES

Paris AFRIQUE DEFENSE in French No 40,Jul 81 pp 54, 55

[Text] The Defense Commission met on Thursday, 30 April 1981, under the chairmanship of President Demba Koita and in the presence of Daouda Sow, minister of the Senegalese armed forces, to discuss the 1981-1982 draft budget for the Ministry of the Armed Forces of Senegal.

Opening the meeting, President Koita congratulated Minister Daouda Sow and expressed his best wishes of success in his new post as head of the armed forces department. He dealt briefly with the program of visits to garrisons which the Defense Commission will make before the end of the budget session. President Koita did not forget to congratulate the government, and the armed forces, in particular, for the perfect organization and way in which the parade of 4 April 1981 went off. In passing, he mentioned the new standard complaint of the members of the Defense Commission who want invitation passes to attend the national day parade since the privilege cannot be extended to every member of the National Assembly.

In his reply, the minister of armed forces thanked the president and the members of the commission. He repeated that the government is determined to cooperate with the assembly and his ministry with the Defense Commission. The visits to the garrisons should take place starting on 8 May 1981 and will cover the eastern zone and the Cap-Vert region. Invitations to the Fourth of April Parade are not exclusively with the sphere of the Armed Forces Ministry. However, note is taken of the commission's complaint.

The minister then went on to talk about the draft budget for his ministry and supplied the following data:

The 1981-1982 draft budget for the Ministry of Armed Forces contains expenses amounting to 16,009.204 million CFA francs which represent 12.75 percent of the operational budget. It consists of chapters 321,322,323 and 324 which the following provisions:

--Chapter 321 concerns personnel and amounts to 9,973.13 million CFA francs.

--Chapter 322 concerns equipment and amounts to 5,539.83 million CFA francs.

--Chapter 323 concerns maintenance and amounts to 424 million CFA francs.

--Chapter 324 concerns transportation and totals 72.244 million CFA francs, which brings it to a total of 16,009.214 million francs.

Only chapter 322 contains new items costing 200 million CFA francs. Most of this sum is intended to cover the cost of feeding the troops and supporting the training schools. As can be seen, the present draft budget is a compromise between the needs of defense and the means available to the state. If adopted, the draft budget will still allow the armed forces to fulfill their mission of defending the integrity of the national territory and to carry out their task for the training and advancement of the Senegalese youth.

The commission members, who were unanimous in congratulating the armed forces for the success of the Fourth of July parade, asked many questions and made the following remarks:

--What is the situation regarding the Senegalese forces in Lebanon?

--Is the Senegalese participation in the UNIFIL [United Nations Interim Forces in Lebanon] too much of a financial burden for the national budget?

--Why did the Senegalese Army intervene in Gambia and who paid for it?

--The Casamance region is in a strategic position. Are there enough troops in that area and do they have enough logistic means to allow them to respond, should the need arise, in view of the proximity of some turbulent states?

--The security of the rural areas in the Cap-Vert region does not seem to be sufficiently protected. In fact, one gendarmerie unit for the distirct of Pikine with 400,000 inhabitants does not seem adequate, particularly in view of increasing crime.

--How are the armed forces participating in the efforts made by the state to train young people and to train the cadres required for the development of the country? Among the trainees sent to the United States, are there any specialists in remote sensing?

--Regarding the coastal surveillance, only the modest sum of 2.5 million francs is being allocated to that item (champter 322, article 2,270).

--What is happening with the project to redevelop the Thies Air Base?

--Finally, many young people would like to join the training for reserve officers. What has been done in that direction?

Replying to these questions and remarks, the minister of armed forces had to expand on his statements about the draft budget.

"Our forces in Lebanon, in spite of the complex situation prevailing in that country, are satisfactorily carrying out their mission which is to maintain peace in the framework of the UNIFIL.

"--As for the expenses specifically incurred as a result of our participating in the UNIFIL mission, they are mostly paid by the United Nations.

"--The government is aware of the strategic position of the Casamance region which is classified as a priority area and duly garrisoned.

"--The gendarmerie unit of Thiaroye entrusted with the security of the rural zones of Cap-Vert has a normal strength. In addition to regular patrols, this unit helps protect the people and their property.

"--Regarding the surveillance of our coasts, article 2,270 of chapter 322 has been eliminated. The Secretariat of State for the Fishing Industry will provide funds to the tune of 90 million francs to enable the armed forces to carry out that difficult mission.

"--Studies dealing with the training of young people as reserve cadres of the National Army are in progress. These studies will raise the age limit to start that training.

"--The intervention of our armed forces in the Republic of Gamiba, at the request of the Gambian Government, falls within the scope of agreements signed between our two states.

"--The project to redevelop the Thies Air Base is making good progress. Agreements signed with France will enable us to carry out that important project. In fact, the future National School for Regular Army Officers (ENOA) will be located on that base.

"--There are no specialists in remote sensing among the trainees who are in the United States for the simple reason that this very modern technique requires equipment which is still beyond our reach.

"--The armed forces have always participated in the efforts of economic and social development undertaken by the government without prejudice to the general military and technical training received by every Senegalese who is called up into the armed forces and apart from the scholarships offered by friendly states or from the advantage derived from the facilities and logistic means offered by ministries specialized in education.

"Training is given at the Military Prytanee of Saint-Louis, at the National School for Non-Commissioned Officers of the Regular Army (ENSOA), at the Military Medical Service School (ESM), at the Gendarmerie Training School of Ouakam, at the Thies Politechnical School (EPT), at the National School for Regular Army Officers (ENOA). The project to create a Pilot Training School in Saint-Louis is underway. As for training received abroad, this takes place in Bingerville, Ouagadougou, France, the United States, Canada and Morocco."

On the strength of these remarks, the Defense Commission unanimously approved the draft budget for the Ministry of Armed Forces.

FORMER EAST AFRICAN COMMUNITY ASSETS MAY BE DISTRIBUTED

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2818, 11 Aug 81 p 16

[Text]

NAIROBI, August 8 - After years of negotiations, a breakthrough is in sight for resolving the distribution of the liabilities and assets of the three countries that had been part of the now-defunct East African Community, World Bank mediator Victor Umbricht has said.

Mr. Umbricht, speaking at a news conference yesterday, indicated he was optimistic that negotiations among the community countries - Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania - could be wrapped up towards February, 1982.

Any agreement would have to then be ratified by each of the three countries of the former community, which broke up in 1977 for political and economic reasons after a life of 10 years.

Mr. Umbricht made the comments following a meeting here Thursday of ministers from each of the countries.

The community had operated 28 services and had owned eight firms, including an airline, railway, ports and an electricity company. After the community fell apart, each country seized what it considered to be its rightful assets and the Kenyan-Tanzanian border was shut down.

Divvying Up

Mr. Umbricht said it was not within his competency to discuss the matter, which was up to the two countries involved. World Bank mediation on the issue began in January, 1978, and continued throughout the war in Uganda.

In the last three-and-a-half years, ministers have met three times to discuss divvying up the assets. Mr. Umbricht, a Swiss citizen, refused to divulge the exact sum of money involved, but the assets reportedly amount to more than 1,000 million dollars. Major creditors of the former community are the World Bank, Canada, West Germany, Britain and Sweden.

Mr. Umbricht has worked with a group of 42experts in attempts to estimate the value of the assets. Many of the accounts were reportedly not in order and some had been lost, notably during Uganda's war.

He said that negotiations were to resume in November. A fact-finding report is to be submitted in September and a consolidated mediation report is to be finished in October.(A.F.P.)

FRENCH DIPLOMATIC TEAM BEGINS AFRICAN TOUR

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2817, 7 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

PARIS, August 5 - France's new diplomatic team, after settling in and taking stock with a study of the relevant dossiers, is on the move this week in Africa, where 25 countries have "privileged" relations with France.

Co-operation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot left at the start of the week for his first trip to Africa, where he is spending two weeks in Cameroun, Ghana and Senegal.

He was followed yesterday by President François Mitterrand's adviser on African affairs, Guy Penne, whose trip agenda includes Niger, Bénin, Gabon, Congo, Angola, Mozambique, Zambia and Djibouti.

In Mozambique and Zambia, Mr. Penne will be joined by one of the president's specialists in international matters, Regis Debray, whose brief can be expected now to include the issue of an independence settlement for Namibia.Mozambique and Zambia are among the black "front-line" states closely involved in the problem.

Mr. Penne made a first swing through Western Africa shortly after Mr. Mitterrand took office in May, visiting Senegal, Ivory Coast, Guinea, Cameroun, Gabon and Mauritania.

And at the end of next week External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson is due in Algeria and Morocco.

Special Envoy

In another development, special envoy Jean-Pierre Campredon was dispatched to Chad. A former ambassador to Madagascar and Sudan, he was in Kenya in June for the annual summit of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) and also visited the Sudanese capital, Khartoum.

Several heads of state and ministers from French-speaking Africa have for their part come to Paris to meet members of the new socialist government here.

Africa looks set to be a priority for the new foreign affairs team, which intends to develop a third-world motif in policy, while respecting prior government commitments.

For the moment, many African countries are favourably disposed towards the Mitterrand administration, in view of its approach to southern African issues and its emphasis on economic development.

French attempts to reactivate North-South dialogue are also being followed with interest.

One test for the new policy will be the United Nations conference on least-developed countries - the majority of them African - being staged here in September.

BUHIGA HYDROELECTRIC PLANT--A hydroelectric plant is to be build in Buhiga. This has been planned since 1979. The financing was guaranteed by two German church bodies in cooperation with the Protestant Episcopal Church of Burundi and the Burundi Alliance of Protestant Churches. The the project is a part of the rural electrification program of the Ministry of Rural Development, which will cover the cost of expert studies. The plant will serve public and ecclesiastical institutions in Buhiga and Karuzi, and will have a capacity of 200 kilowatts. A committee of future consumers was established and held its first meeting, with Mr Hakiza, director of the rural electrification department of the Ministry of Rural Development, participating. AGREEMENT WITH JAPAN--On Tuesday afternoon, a protocol of agreement between the government of Japan and the republic of Burundi was signed at Government House. This document provides for a gift of 200 million yen (86.16 million Burundi francs) as a contribution to the implementation of the plan for the provision of medical equipment to medical establishments. Unless a joint agreement between these two governments is extended, the gift will be available for 1 year. Thanks to it, Burundi can purchase products from Japan and the services of Japanese nationals needed for the implementation of said project. This will involve in particular medical equipment for hospitals and other medical establishments and the services necessary for the transportation of these products. The two governments have agreed to consult in the event that any problem develops in connection with this arrangement. [Text] [Bujumbura LE RENOUVEAU DU BURUNDI in French 8 Apr 81 p 1] 5157

SITUATION AGAIN 'EXPLOSIVE' SINCE 14 JULY

Paris LE CONTINENT in French 24 Jul 81 p 4

[Article by L. A.: "Opposition Asks People To Resist"]

[Text] Since 14 July, the situation has once again become explosive in the Central African Republic. The relative calm that the country experienced lasted only a few months.

In a few days, President Dacko banned or suspended opposition political parties, decreed a state of siege throughout the territory and, as a crowning measure, called on the army to "lend the help of the necessary troops and break up any gathering in Central African territory." For his part, the French Ministry of Defense announced, upon hearing this latest step taken by Central African authorities, that the French troops in the Central African Republic were confined to quarters and would intervene only if the safety of French civilians were threatened.

The Central African opposition also reacted, issuing appeals to the Central ' people to resist.

Gloomy Picture

Francois Pehoua, president of the Independent Reflection and Action Group (GIRA), and Abel Goumba, of the Ubangi Patriotic Front-Labor Party (FPO-PT), who are now in Paris, spoke on Wednesday, 22 July, and condemned the "exceptional measures" taken by President David Dacko and called upon the people to resist.

At a press conference, Pehoua severely condemned the Dacko regime and drew up a gloomy picture of the political situation in the Central African Republic. He touched upon the Bangui movie theater attack, which was the reason for the measures taken by the Central African president. For the president of the GIRA and according to information reaching him from Bangui, French soldiers "were among the first to reach the Le Club Cinema and they waited for the second explosion before they entered the theater to aid the rescue workers. They were also the first to go without hesitation to places where bombs that did not explode had been placed." Was this a mere coincidence? Not for Pehoua, who believes that there can be no doubt that the French soldiers acted in such a way in order to remain in the Central African Republic, in contradiction with instructions from Paris. Clearly, the former presidential candidate was hinting that the French Army was perhaps informed of the laying of the bombs before the explosions and was therefore implicated in the attacks.

Patasse Not Arrested

Pehoua's statements were formally denied by Bangui, which claims that "contrary to Pehoua's assertions, it was presidential guard units and not elements from the French Army that arrived first at the site of the bombing."

While awaiting light to be shed on the real circumstances surrounding the attack, the leader of the GIRA said he favored a joint approach by the Central African opposition in order to ask the French Government to withdraw its "barracudas." Finally, he asserted that Ange Patasse, president of the Central African People's Liberation Movement (MLPC), was not arrested, contrary to what had been announced, and that he is still in Bangui, "protected by his militants."

In answer to LE CONTINENT's question about whether he expected to return to the country soon, Pehoua, whose party is not affected by the ban or suspension, indicated that there is no reason he would not return to Bangui, if the authorities allow him to do so. Insofar as Pehoua is in fact president of the Provisional Command Council of the opposition (CCP), which includes the MLPC, the FPO-PT, the PPR [presumably People's Revolutionary Party] and the GIRA, and insofar as the FPO-PT is banned and the MLPC suspended, can he calmly return to Bangui and continue his political action amidst a state of siege climate?

Panic

For his part, Abel Goumba, of the FPO-PT, has launched an appeal to the entire Central African opposition to rally to him and put an end to the "reign of incompetency and disorder" of President Dacko. "I consider myself to be the authentic representative of the entire Central African opposition by virtue of my past and I call on the other opposition movements to form a common front with the FPO-PT," Goumba said.

In an interview granted to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE on 22 July, Dr Goumba said that the measures taken by President Dacko against the opposition parties resulted from "panic."

Moreover, when questioned by LE MONDE on the French military presence in the Central African Republic (edition of 23 July), Goumba said that the number of French soldiers should be reduced and that they should be less visibly quartered. In addition, he said, "those soldiers should effectively perform their role of training a new Central African army."

CONCLUSIONS TO BE DRAWN FROM BUDGET REJECTION

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3340, 3 Aug 81 p 1747

[Excerpt] FOR THE FIRST TIME in Ghana's history Parliament last week rejected the budget proposals put before it by a government. In the old Westminster-model days this would mean the fall of the government or at least the resignation of the Finance Minister. Neither of those things follow in the new presidential system. It is, however, a statement of no confidence in the efforts the Limann Government is taking to pull Ghana out of the economic mire and must be taken seriously by the President and by Professor George Benneh, the Finance Minister.

There are other conclusions that can be drawn. The government lost by 54 votes to 51. As it should be able to depend on 71 votes, this indicates that party discipline is at a low ebb amongst the PNP; indications are that the defections on the budget were as much due to inefficient work by the government whips as to conscientious abstentions by PNP members. A brighter conclusion is that the vote is an indication that the constitution is working well: Parliament has shown that it has a role to play and can influence policy, and the way in which the result, and the Speaker's rulings, were accepted by the Majority Leader, Mr. Constance Fitih, demonstrated that the parliamentary conventions are being observed and the system is in good order. The new merger of the minority parties can chalk up a major victory in its first uncertain days.

The economics are of the greatest importance, however. The government is reported to be planning to reintroduce the budget in some way and it should be able to continue to operate. The main objections raised by the opposition were to the huge deficit proposed by Professor Benneh; to the inability of the government to tackle the loss of confidence in the cedi, manifested by the gap between the official and unofficial exchange rate; the low level of the cocoa producer price; the low and falling production in agriculture; the unacceptable high level of inflation and the intolerable hardships faced by the ordinary Ghanaian.

The lack of confidence in the cedi has been much written about. Negotiations are said to be going on with the International Monetary Fund, which is reported to be demanding a big devaluation. The opposition in Parliament, possibly in order to claim some credit if this does take place, have been suggesting that a devaluation is necessary. It would be helpful if this sensitive issue (every previous Ghanaian devaluation has been followed by a coup) could be moved out of the party political sphere. What is needed, of course, is not simply a devaluation but a package that will ensure future stability and credibility for the currency. It is difficult but essential, as without a sound currency nothing else will be effective.

In the matter of an increased producer price for cocoa, for instance — which the opposition urged as essential if the cocoa industry was to recover and smuggling be combated — the cedi price needed to persuade a farmer that he would do better by not seeking the illicit CFA francs across the border would be impossibly high. The distortions caused by a weak currency also make nonsense of attempts at price control. The government has accepted that price controls are ineffective, but has not yet managed to devise a distribution system that works well enough to give an impression of fairness or a way of overcoming shortages.

President Limann's Government has now been in power for 22 months. The difficulties it inherited were made even more formidable by the naive and harmful economic adventures of the AFRC regime. It was right to be cautious, to shun easy palliatives and to seek a long-term answer. However, the time has surely now come for decisive action in some direction. The real accusation against the Benneh budget does not lie in its details but in its lack of long-term purpose. There is no quick answer to Ghana's troubles. But Ghanaians need to be convinced but there is light at the end of the tunnel and that they are moving towards it. The rejection of the budget is an indication that President Limann's government is failing to carry this message to the people.

BRIEFS

COCOA TREE CUTTING WARNING--The acting manager of the Suhum Cocoa Project, Mr. J. P. Arhin, has warned that the attempt by some farmers to cut down cocoa trees would be disastrous to the economy. Mr. Arhin was presenting large quantities of insecticides, spraying machines, cutlasses and brunners for distribution to cocoa farmers in the Suhum district, when he gave the warning. The government had put ¢20,000,000 into the Suhum Cocoa Project and the cutting down of the trees would not be in the interest of the country, he said. Those farmers, Mr. Arhin revealed, had also gone to the extent of using insecticides meant for spraying their farms for fishing purposes. He reminded the farmers that their farms were established with public funds and their own money, and that it would be both morally wrong and criminal to destroy the farms. He regretted that most of the inputs had either been misused or smuggled out of the country. Mr. Arhin hinted that cocoa production experts from the World Bank were currently in the country to revive the industry, and that massive replanting and rehabilitation of cocoa farms would soon resume. POSSESSION OF FIREARMS--A total of 5,783 firearms have so far been imported and registered in Ghana this year, reported THE MIRROR. It said an average of 8,500 firearms are imported each year. These include shotguns, rifles, pistols, revolvers and airguns. Superintendent S. S. Appiah, director of Police Public Relations, said importers most often say they want the guns for self-protection or for hunting. THE MIRROR said that many households in Accra, "especially in the residential areas" now have guns due to the recent rise in armed robberies and "some people even keep guns in their cars and offices". ANTI-SHIFTA DRIVE CLEARS AIR IN HORN

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2818, 11 Aug 81 p 17

[Text]

NAIROBI, August 9 - The Government of Somalia took a step toward easing tension in the Horn of Africa last week when it told Kenya that it had undertaken a "protracted war" against Shiftas - the ethnic Somali bandits who operate on both sides of the Kenya-Somalia frontier.

The Kenyan News Agency reported that the local governor from Bardera, a Somali town near the frontier, had had a border meeting with his counterpart from Wajir, in Kenya, where he reported that 21 shiftas had been killed and 50 arrested since the first of the year.

Since Kenya's independence in 1963, the shifta problem has dogged relations between Nairobi and Mogadishu.

The Kenyans have suspected the Somalis of supporting the bandits with an eye to gaining control of Kenya's north eastern province - home to 300,000 Kenyans of Somali ethnic origin - as part of the "Greater Somalia", including Ethiopia's Ogaden as well, that Mogadishu has long envisioned in the horn.

From 1963 to 1967, Somalia seemed to be backing guerrilla activity in the region. Since then, however, Mogadishu has denied doing anything for the shiftas, which it also calls bandits.

'Commitment to Continue'

At the end of the Organization of African Unity's summit in Nairobi in June, President Mohammed Siad Barre of Somalia met President Daniel Arap Moi of Kenya. They agreed to see each other regularly and expressed their "commitment to continue to promote better understanding" between their countries.

This development was considered something of a thaw in Kenya-Somalia relations, which had become chilly over the territory issue, pushing Kenya into closer contact with Ethiopia and isolating Somalia in the Horn.

At the border meeting last week, the Somali local governor was accompanied by Bulle Ahmed Ali, a member of the ruling Revolutionary Council in Mogadishu - a clear sign of the importance Somalia placed on the gesture.

The Somalis promised to cooperate with the authorities in Wajir "to end shifta activities which have been straining relations between Kenya and Somalia".

The two local officials suggested that police posts be built on either side of the frontier to keep tabs on the shiftas, because Bandera is 100 kms (60 miles) from the border and Wajir 150 (90 miles) - too far to supervise the operation properly.(A.F.P.)

DELEGATION RETURNS WITH GOOD IMPRESSION OF UGANDA

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 6 Aug 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Kenya, Uganda Co-operation"]

[Text] A TEAM of Kenyan parliamentarians have just returned from Uganda, where they made an extensive tour of the country. The story that they tell is far different from what has been reaching us through the news media.

The team toured 23 of Uganda's 53 districts and said they did not find any unusual security problem. They said that Ugandans were now peaceful and had settled down to the serious problem of rehabilitation of the country after the ravages of Idi Amin.

Apart from touring the country, the M.P.s also held wide-ranging talks with both political and government leaders, including an audience with President Milton Obote.

The Kenyan M.P.s said that good relations exist between the two major political parties, the ruling Uganda People's Congress and the Democratic Party. This would mean that democracy is currently working satisfactorily in Uganda.

We must believe these M.P.s, since they have first-hand information. Although they were in the country at the invitation of the Uganda Government, they are mature leaders in their own right, with a credibility to protect.

Ugandan leaders have often complained that reports on the country by the international media are distorted or highly exaggerated. This would appear to be the case, judging from what our M.P.s have seen.

Many of these reports originate from people who have run away from Uganda claiming that they are victims of political harassment. It is more than likely that many of them have simply broken the law and want to claim some political status.

Some of these people live luxurious lives in hotels, seeming to have dubious sources of income. Quite a number have fallen foul of the law in the countries to which they have fled, for crimes centring around smuggling and fraud. We suggest that they go back and help reconstruct their country.

One of the things that impressed the Kenyan M.P.s was the opportunities for mutual co-operation between the two countries, and Uganda's willingness to restore to the full the former economic ties between the two countries. Of course, there are also the other cultural, scientific and technological ties that must also be restored.

Kenya and Uganda have always operated as complementary trading partners, in addition to co-operation in other fields. It was only the lunacy of Amin's rule that interrupted these ties. With a popularly elected government restored in Uganda, there is no reason why these ties should not be resumed and strengthened.

Similar ties have existed between the two countries and Tanzania. Without necessarily returning to the formalised status of the East African Community, it is becoming more and more apparent that East African co-operation will have to be enhanced in order to deal with the growing economic problems in the world today.

Uganda urgently needs this co-operation in order to rebuild the country. It is, however, not Uganda's wish alone. It is the desire of the vast majority of East Africans to co-operate for the benefit of the entire region.

It is heartening to note that exchange visits between people of the three countries, some of them very informal, are increasing every day. The road to enhanced co-operation might, in fact, lie with these unheralded contacts.

GAS SHORTAGE CONTINUES TO IRK POPULACE

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 6 Aug 81 p 17

[Text] HUNDREDS of people spent yesterday queuing for gas in Nairobi.

And at the end of the day most had to return home with their empty gas cylinders and explain once more to their families why there would be no cooked food for supper.

The queue outside Shell Afrigas' Kimathi Street premises began at dawn and grew steadily. By midday, a line of dejected people and cylinders was snaking down the city centre street.

Mr. Martin Nabangi had brought his cylinder from Riruta in the hope of buying gas early in the morning. But the gas never came and the would-be consumer had to keep pumping shillings into his parking meeting and fork out for breakfast and lunch only to learn that the day off he had begged from his employer had been wasted.

Mr. Nabangi said employees would run into trouble with their bosses if they had to keep asking for time off to queue for gas.

Mr. Z. Obwocha said it was time the Government stepped in to save the situation. He said wananchi were being forced to pay money they could ill afford on transport to bring their cylinders into Nairobi and on high-price city meals.

Mrs. Caro of Parklands told the NATION that many children were being forced to go to school on an empty stomach because there was no means of cooking their breakfast.

The gas shortage is not confined to households. Kenyatta National Hospital's catering unit, which has to feed 3,000 patients and students, has been without gas for almost two months.

The shortage continues to bite despite Ministry of Energy assurances that a committee had been set up to investigate the matter.

Consumers of Afrigas, a product of Kenya Shell, are among the hardest hit. Said one frustrated man in yesterday's queue: "People should be told the truth about the gas shortage in clear terms".

An official from Afrigas went to the depot at 7 a.m. yesterday in the hope of obtaining supplies. He was still waiting there in the evening.

While many people endure the queues, others have lost their patience and have switched to charcoal or paraffin. Wealthier consumers have traded in their useless gas stoves and empty cylinders for electric cookers.

IDLE TRUCKS--Two giant American-made trucks, designed to be used as field workshops by water drillers in North-Eastern Province, have been lying idle at Wajir for seven years. According to an official at the Wajir range water workshop, the two trucks, which are the size of a train wagon, cannot move on the local sand-laden roads to water drilling areas in the province without getting stuck. The vehicles are suited only to tarmac roads, the official said. He added that because the trucks have been proved unsuitable for the local terrain, the Water Ministry has decided to take one truck to its Eastleigh workshop in Nairobi and another to Mogosio in the Rift Valley. The trucks are part of a multi-million-shilling loan given to Kenya by the American government to develop range water in North-Eastern Province. Meanwhile, about 15 American-made, large-engine vehicles have been boarded at the workshop because they are either too old or their spare-parts cannot be obtained on the local market. A mechanic at the workshop said the vehicles were costing the Government a lot of money to maintain as their fuel consumption was very high. A Wajir D. O., Mr. Aura wa Aboye, disclosed that due to the poor condition of the vehicles none of them could be valued at even Shs. 2,000. Mr. Aboye blamed staff at the workshop for removing several spare-parts from the vehicles which he claimed had contributed to their loss of value.--K.N.A. EFFLUENTS CAUSING RIVER POLLUTION--Discharge of effluents into the Nairobi River by industries and unprotected sewers is causing pollution in the Athi River. Dr. George Ongweny of the Geography Department, Nairobi University, yesterday called for strict control of the effluents. He said this yesterday in his paper, "The development of the water resources of some of the arid and semi-arid areas of Kenya", presented at an international workshop on the subject at Kenyatta International Conference Centre, Nairobi. Dr. Ongweny stressed the need for an evaluation of the economic impact of sedimentation of all reservoirs built or planned in the upper Tana catchment. He said the public should be made aware of the need for soil and water conservation through the mass media and other means of communications. He said the communal watering points should be operated in the form of "kiosks" to properly manage and retail water resources within water supply schemes. Dr. Ongweny also called for urgent investigations into the water treatment technology in the processing of flourspar effluents in Kerio Valley. He said the impact of fluorspar pollution on health and the environment should be given high priority. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 6 Aug 81 p 17]

AGRICULTURAL FAILURE--Recent harvests in Mali are well down on last year's results. Cottonseed is down 42,000 tonnes to 108,000 tonnes, groundnuts are down 11,000 tonnes to 28,000 tonnes, cereals are down 4,000 tonnes to 22,000 tonnes and rice is down 2,000 tonnes to 57,000 tonnes. Despite increases in the prices paid to the producers, the rural revenue is down on all products except for rice. The balance of trade for 1980 is in deficit to the tune of 98bn. Malian francs (worth half the CFA franc), mainly because of the import bills for oil (35bn.) and cereals (12bn.), which are both higher than 1979. The balance of payments (which includes financial and capital movements) is in deficit too, and stands at 51bn. Malian francs. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English 3 Aug 81 p 1795]

SWAPO SYMPATHIZERS DECIDE TO RESUME MILITARY SERVICE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] WINDHOEK: A number of national servicemen conscripted into the SWA Territory Force who had admitted to Swapo sympathies earlier this year and objected to serving in armed units had changed their minds after an orientation course in the operational area, the General Officer Commanding SWA Territory Force, Major General Charles Lloyd, said in Windhoek yesterday.

Addressing a press conference, General Lloyd said earlier reports had created the wrong impression that Coloured and Black national servicemen who had affiliations with Swapo would be treated as conscientious objectors.

"That is not true. We decided to send them to the operational area after their basic training to show them around."

"While on the orientation course in northern SWA the servicemen, who had been drafted in terms of compulsory military service for all race groups since the beginning of the year, were shown what military service entailed and why SWA needed a defence force.

"My orders were that these men were not to be exposed to combat while on this orientation course," General Lloyd said.

"After having seen what we (the Security Forces) do, what Swapo does and what the civilian population has to suffer at the hands of the terrorists, 10 of the eleven (Swapo supporting servicemen) we sent up there have changed their minds."

Asked whether the men had been subjected to intimidation and indoctrination, General Lloyd said: "We granted them five days home leave after they had returned from the operational area.

"If there had been any intimidation, they could have told their parents so."

One of the group had returned from home leave and declared himself willing to return to the operational area in northern SWA to resume his service.

"We will interview the other as they return and see what they have to say," General Lloyd said.

Asked why the Security Forces had instituted the orientation course, General Lloyd said the advanced training of the servicemen received at the Military School at Okahandja would have been pointless as long as some of the trainees professed Swapo sympathies.

"We gave them the opportunity to obtain first-hand information and discovered that much of their resistance was based on a lack of information."

They had believed Swapo propaganda because they had been poorly informed, General Lloyd said.

The conditions of national service would not be changed.

"If we take in men who do not change their minds after an orientation course, we will have to treat them along the guidelines laid down for conscientious objectors by the South African Minister of Defence."

General Lloyd said he had spoken to Mrs Ottilie Abrahams, a leading politician who chaired the "Parents Action Committee" to defend draft resisters, and explained the Security Force policy regarding self-confessed Swapo sympathisers.

"I spoke to her to clear up all misunderstanding and to emphasise that the Security Forces do not discriminate against national servicemen for their political beliefs."

Asked whether there had been any instances of harassment of Swapo sympathisers in military camps, General Lloyd said there had only been initiation.

"We have had an incident where a White officer organised initiation of all men coming from basic training to the Military School at Okahandja for advanced training.

"The incidents have been investigated and normal disciplinary steps will be taken against the officer responsible," General Lloyd said. — Sapa

EXPERT CLAIMS ECONOMY IS VULNERABLE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2817 7 Aug 81 p 25

[Text]

WINDHOEK, August 4 - The economy of South West Africa (Namibia) is viable but vulnerable and heavily dependent on South Africa, a leading official expert told visiting journalists here.

Dr. Johan Jones, Secretary for Finance for Namibia, said recently that the country's principal industries were cattle-raising and mining.

Only 10 percent of Namibia's meat production was consumed locally, and the remaining 90 percent was exported to South Africa where it found a ready market because of its low cost.

At present, following a severe drought, thousands of head of cattle were being exported to South Africa because there was nothing for them to eat.

The South African-based Consolidated Diamond Mines(CDM) was the biggest contributor to Namibian finances, Dr. Jones said. Taxes on profits from the diamond fields north of the Orange River formed 40 per cent of the government's total revenue.

The finance secretary said that 60 percent of the diamond profits went in tax.

The situation was different with the other two big mining companies operating in the territory - Rossing Uranium and the Tsumbe Corporation.

Low Tax

It was the policy of the Namibian authorities to encourage investment by keeping corporation tax as low as possible, Dr. Jones said, noting, however, that any future government might take a different view.

The mining companies had a concession under which they could write off all development expenditure before tax. Although Rossing started to pay a dividend last year, it still had some accumulated loss, according to Dr. Jones.

Because of its development costs the company had not yet paid any tax. Tsumeb had taken over an abandoned copper mine at Otjihase near Windhoek and as a result its tax payments had dropped to practically zero, Dr. Jones said.

The government official told the visiting journalists that Namibia was highly dependent on South Africa for its skilled manpower and technology.

Imports from South Africa accounted for 90 per cent of the goods consumed in Namibia.

Dr. Jones shrugged off the idea that South Africa was exploiting Namibia economically. What it could gain by exploiting Namibia would be so small as to be not worth the effort, he said. (A.F.P.)

IMPACT OF SA BUDGET ON SWA IS SCRUTINIZED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Editorial]

[Text] SWA is by no means immune from the SA Budget which will be presented today.

Council of Ministers' Chairman, Dirk Mudge, presented our Budget about a month ago. And in that respect we will not be directly affected by the SA Budget until April next year.

Clearly, however, SA is moving into a critical deficit situation for the reasons mentioned in the accompanying report, and this ultimately can be expected to affect us too.

Indeed, the allocation to SWA in 1982/83 could be extremely restricted, putting considerable pressure on the already frail local economy.

It has been said that SWA is not really all that dependent on the SA Government; we say absolute nonsense. Excluding Defence, the net inflow of SA public funds into the Territory is probably about R600m a year at present.

More immediately, SWA will probably be hit by the increase in SA excise duties and the high interest rates.

It is official policy of the Reserve Bank to keep the rates high to fight inflation and this will be consolidated by Senator Horwood having to go to the capital market to finance his deficit.

Increased building society rates are expected in SA and it is not impossible that the SWA Building Society may have to follow suite.

It goes without saying that with probable increased local bank rates, credit buying in SWA will also be considerably affected.

Unlikely as it may seem in today's Budget, there is the outside chance that Senator Horwood will increase the general sales tax by a percentage point, also to finance his deficit. If he does not do it today, it is highly likely that he will do it next March.

This will obviously hit Southwesters, and as such, contribute further to the already high cost push inflation rate.

On the broader economic front, real economic growth in SA will undoubtedly be slower (about 4,5 percent this year and maybe half that next year) and make no bones about it, we are going to feel it.

PEOPLES ACTION COMMITTEE PLANS LARGE DEMONSTRATION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Karl Kowaseb: "Anti-Conscription Sentiments"]

[Text] THE NEWLY-FORMED Peoples Action Committee last night promised to stage one of the country's biggest demonstrations — directed against the conscription of Southwesters into the Armed Forces — at the National Assembly when it opens for the next session on September 15.

Notice of the demonstration was given at a public meeting called by the PAC in Katutura last night.

The aim of the protest would be to get the National Assembly to repeal the law on military conscription which, it was said last night, was not passed in the interests of the people of SWA.

Mrs Ottilié Abrahams, who chaired last night's meeting attended by about 100 parents of sons presently serving their call-up in the Army, read a statement delivered to her by General Charles Lloyd, Commander of the SWA Territory Force, last week.

General Lloyd said in his statement that 10 of the original 32 army trainees who identified themselves recently as Swapo members at the Okahandja Military School, would be given leave.

Referring to tape recordings made at the time of their enlistment and after some had returned from leave, General Lloyd was quoted as saying in his statement that all the trainees had expressed themselves in favour of national service.

A press conference was also held by General Charles Lloyd yesterday, where he said that he was not aware that the SWA Territory Force was training Swapo members. The General denied that there is even one Swapo supporter within the Army and if there are any, they were free to complain in case of any victimisation.

Yesterday at the PAC meeting, two national servicemen arrived from the Suiderhof military base, and contradicted General Lloyd when they addressed the meeting.

They are Rifleman Abraham Darius and Rifleman J S J Kustaa. They told the meeting that they wanted to send a tape recording to the meeting, but due to the press conference held by General Lloyd they felt obliged to address the meeting in person.

Rifleman Abraham Darius acted as a spokesman for all Swapo supporters who have been conscripted into the Army.

He said that he was a member of Swapo, not a supporter and he spoke on behalf of 32 other service men, whose training was stopped on May 5 this year, at a training farm 20 kilometres outside Okahandja, where they identified themselves as members of Swapo. Since that date, they were separated and not only discriminated against, but also victimised.

BEAM TRAWL METHOD MAY REVOLUTIONIZE FISH INDUSTRY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 13 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by David Pieters: "Exciting Fishing Prospects"]

[Text] AN EXCITING new experiment in the local fishing industry gets underway today which, if successful, will open up new avenues for SWA's own white fish export economy on an unprecedented scale.

Secretary for Economic Affairs Mr Piet Kruger this morning confirmed to the Windhoek Advertiser that the launching of the experiment with beam trawling for valuable species such as soles and monk will be monitored closely by the Sea Fisheries Institute and is being regarded with interest by the industry and the authorities.

The newly-arrived Dutch-built deep-sea trawler named Geertruida leaves Walvis Bay today on a 10-day trial run and is operating under the only beam trawl licence in Southern African waters.

The 40-metre steel vessel is equipped for catching mid-water fish such as hake as well as bottom fish such as soles and is capable of sea-processing and packing its catch for direct export on the international market — a first for a SWA-owned and controlled operation.

Existing deep-sea trawlers owned by SWA companies have as yet not managed to gain access to the world market because the strict quality standards demanded can only be met by sea-processing the catches into their final form.

Owner of the Geertruida is a Windhoek-registered company called Cape Cross Fishing Ltd, with its majority shareholding in the hands of Mr Charles Courtney-Clarke who is a third generation Southwester.

The beam trawl method, which ranks as one of the most sophisticated fishing techniques, has been used in the northern hemisphere with success for the past decade as well as in SWA waters for a brief period from 1976.

The Geertruida will also play a leading role in scientific research measuring this country's sole resources which are known to stretch across extensive and largely untapped fishing grounds for this species.

SWA is renowned for its West Coast Sole on the SA market and has also been recognised for its overseas export potential in this valuable commodity.

Next to crab, lobster and crayfish, sole and monk rank as the highest revenue earning fish species.

The Geertruida is manned by a highly-skilled fishing crew of nine and skippered by Mr Gerrity Van Urk.

The boat will later be manned by an additional six men responsible for preparing catches for sale.

SWA's white fish industry has come into its own since the decline of the pelagic branch began to emerge at the beginning of the decade and is increasingly being regarded as a viable supplement to the country's pelagic stock.

Mr Courtney-Clarke, who has been active in the white fish industry for the past five years, told the Advertiser that he was "fully confident" in the new project which not only has created an incentive for attracting highly-specialised fishing skills to the local industry, but promises to open up export opportunities not possible before for the domestic fishing sector.

PUBLIC URGED TO HELP ERADICATE SALVINIA MOLESTA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 13 Aug 81 p 5

[Text] WITH OUR water resources seriously depleted as a result of drought, it would seem that there could be another threat to our dams too — a water plant named Salvinia Molesta — which carries with it all the dangers of the water Hyacinth that posed such a great threat to the Hartebeespoortdam.

The Department of Water Affairs has discovered that at least two nurseries in Windhoek have provided the public with the damaging water weed Salvinia Molesta for the decoration of fishponds.

In the Republic of South Africa this plant has been declared a prohibited or forbidden weed. It was first noted in SWA in 1958 in the Eastern Caprivi and originates from Zambia.

Large sums of money have been applied by the Department of Water Affairs to prevent the spread of this plant and a research station was established at Katima Mulilo to develop biological control measures.

The plant propagates rapidly and given favourable conditions can double it's size within four days.

On water it forms a thick floating carpet which weakens the quality of the water and destroys all water life.

Salvinia Molesta is also known as "Kariba weed" because of the vast problems it caused after the completion of the Kariba Dam. By transpiring the plant also causes greater evaporation from the surface than if the surface had been open and free of the weed.

In an announcement from the Department of Water Affairs, it was stated that everything possible had to be done to prevent the establishment of this weed in dams in SWA.

Once established, it is virtually impossible to eradicate. All the nurseries have been informed about this weed and have been ordered to destroy all such plants. If anyone suspects that this weed is flourishing in a fishpond or dam, they can contact Mr H W R Koch at Telephone 62141, ext 14 so that the necessary steps can be taken to eradicate it.

The Department has appealed for the co-operation of the public in eradicating Salvinia Molesta as soon as possible. The continued existence of this weed holds a serious threat to our water resources. Under no circumstances must the weeds be flushed away via the sewage system or down stormwater drains.

GOVERNMENT CONDUCTING LIBERAL COMMERCIAL POLICY

Paris LE CONTINENT in French 31 Jul 81 p 8

[Article by N. B.: "Senegal Wants To Back Initiatives of Nationals"]

[Text] Despite its socialist orientation, Senegal is following a liberal commercial policy. It has rejected a government monopoly over trade, as practiced in Guinea or Mali, as a brake on development. Some sectors of commercial activity have been reserved for Senegalese, without thereby discouraging foreign private ventures. According to Senegalese Minister of Commerce Falilou Kane, the expulsions of foreigners from Zaire or Uganda have had only disappointing results.

Measures have been taken so that Senegalese businessmen will no longer be excluded from the more profitable sectors of the economy. The government has transferred part of its shares in several companies in the industrial or tourist sector to Senegalese private entrepreneurs. However, the cost of these operations has often been underestimated. The small shareholder has also been encouraged.

At the present time, Lebanese and Syrians hold 28 percent of the local textile trade and 30 percent of all equipment transactions, sharing the market with French companies, which control 28 percent. For their part, Mauritanians dominate the retail trade. The government has provided young Senegalese with commercial facilities, "model stores," in order to help them compete with the Mauritanians. These enterprises will also receive the support of the European Development Fund, 100 million CFA francs, and the government, 118 million.

Certain commercial sectors are exclusively reserved for the Senegalese, such as the sale of rice, sugar or cooking oil.

The Senegalese market has encountered various supply problems concerning these products. In fact, the peanut harvest was very poor in 1980-1981: 200,000 tons instead of 800,000, and rice imports went from 250,000 tons in 1978 to 400,000 tons in 1980 due to the increase in domestic consumption and in neighboring countries for which Dakar serves as a relay station. The same is true of sugar, which Senegal supplied to Gambia, Mali and Mauritania at competitive prices.

However, under the current circumstances, Falilou Kane believes that Senegal no longer has the means to supply its neighbors and must limit its imports strictly to what is consumed nationally.

ORIENTATION OF NEW POLITICAL PARTIES NOTED

Paris LE CONTINENT in French 31 Jul 81 p 4

[Article by Justin Mendy: "The New Senegalese Political Scene"]

> [Text] Since the adoption, in April, of an unrestricted multiparty system, the Senegalese political scene has substantially changed. Six political groupings of diverse allegiances are officially recognized, which brings the number of parties now involved in Senegalese political life to ten. Nor is that all. Others continue to pound on the door of the Ministry of Interior in order to obtain legal status. This is the case of the Rally for National Salvation, which filed its by-laws in Dakar on 23 July. Although the political orientation of this new group is not precisely known, reliable sources say that its action is based on the principles of Islam. Authorized circles in Dakar believe that this reference to the religion of Islam is not in keeping with the constitution, which forbids any political party to "identify itself" with a race, religion, sect, ethnic group, sex, language or region. The multiparty experience in Senegal may well constitute an interesting test for democracy in Africa.
> The 1983 presidential and legislative elections will measure this experience, which is arousing definite interest inside and outside of Africa.

Dakar--Senegal has distinguished itself recently, on the political level, by the impressive number of officially recognized groups. From four in the month of April, it has now gone to ten. This modification in the Senegalese political scene has been made possible to the April constitutional reform, which instituted a total multiparty system.

This is a return to the unrestricted pluralism that reigned in Senegal since independence, in 1960. The de facto single-party system, symbolized for nearly 10 years by the Senegalese Progressive Union, which then became the Socialist Party, was set up in 1966. The monopoly of the Socialist Party of former President Leopold Sedar Senghor came to an end in July 1974 with the creation, by Abdoulaye Wade, of the Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS).

But the liberalization instituted in recent years by the regime of President Senghor did have its limits. Initially, the constitution admitted the existence of three parties and, beginning in December 1978, of four.

The change came about since Abdou Diouf's coming to power. The only restriction still in effect concerns the ban on parties "identifying themselves with a race, religion, sect, ethnic group, sex, language or region."

Among the figures of the officially recognized opposition, two stand out. Professor Cheikh Anta Diop, who is a politician, Egyptologist and scholar, leads the Democratic National Rally (RND). His party was formed in February 1976, but did not obtain recognition until this year. A fervent nationalist, Cheikh Anta Diop has always refused to identify with traditional ideologies.

For his part, Mamadou Dia, former president of the Senegalese Council, heads the People's Democratic Movement (MDP), which claims to follow self-management socialism.

The socialist option defended by Mamadou Dia is not at all surprising. It was under his authority in 1960 that the Senegalese Government adopted the country's first development plan. That plan introduced socialization, rural development and agricultural cooperatives and already pointed toward the first elements of a takeover of the economy by nationals. But he had to spend 12 years in prison, from 1962 to 1974, for an attempted coup d'etat.

Pro-Soviet PIT

The constitutional reform enabled four Marxist groups to come out into the open. Formerly, they had conducted semi-clandestine activities.

These four groups emerged from successive splits of the African Independence Party (PAI), the only Marxist group recognized before the April liberalization. The main rival of the PAI is the PIT-Senegal (Independence and Labor Party), headed by teachers such as Amath Dansoko, a teacher, Magatte Thiam and Samba Dioulde Thiam, mathematics professors. Although it is not very different ideologically from the PAI, the PIT appears to be more orthodox.

While the PIT-Senegal is considered to be pro-Soviet, the Democratic League-Movement for the Labor Party seems to espouse Chinese positions. Its main leaders are also teachers, including Babacar Sane and Mamadou Ndoye, secretary general of the Sole Democratic Trade Union of Senegalese Teachers (SUDES). In the past 2 years, SUDES has launched several strikes.

The Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy of Landing Savane follows a pro-Chinese line as well (NB: In the interview below [not reproduced], Savane refutes this pro-Chinese orientation), but is closer to the positions of Lin Biao.

The newest member of the Marxist family is the Union for the People's Democracy of Hamedine Racine Guisse. It claims to be "an organization of workers, peasants and revolutionary intellectuals." The tenth party on the political scene is the Senegalese Republican Movement (MRS) of Boubacar Gueye. This group represents the conservative trend and it was already present under Senghor.

The first election test for all these groups will not come until February 1983, the date of the presidential and legislative elections.

But the parties are already aware that a certain unity of action will be necessary if they want to try to break the long monopoly of the Socialist Party.

Contacts are now taking place between the different groups in order to set up a front whose shape is far from definite. The liberalization has generally been considered by the opposition as a "positive act" on the part of the government.

For Mamadou Dia, it is a "spectacular victory of the democratic forces," but "there are still more battles to be won." In the current National Assembly, 86 seats are occupied by the Socialist Party, 14 by the PDS of Abdoulaye Wade. No other party is represented. (REUTER)

MABUZA APPEALS FOR INVESTMENT IN KA-NGWANE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Aug 81 p 9

[Article by Lawrence Mayekiso]

[Text] SOUTH AFRICAN investors were at the weekend called upon to be forerunners in the economic development of the homelands so as to attract foreign investors.

The call has been made by Mr Enos Mabuza, Chief Minister of Ka-Ngwane, a homeland of Swazi-speaking Blacks in the Eastern Transvaal.

Speaking at a conference at which he had invited investors to look into the economic potential of homelands, Mr Mabuza praised the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, for his initiative in encouraging the development of the whole of South Africa.

He appealed to his audience not to be afraid that an independent Ka-Ngwane would one day nationalise all industries as it had happened in other African countries.

Irony

"I am both a Swazi and a South African", he said.

"My commitment to the development of Ka-Ngwane is in keeping with my commitment to the well-being of South Africa.

"To us, Ka-Ngwane is a region whose political and economical future is inextricably linked with South Africa.

"The irony of our economic prosperity is that it has always been and is still being shared by those who happen to be in the centralised and developed regions," he said.

"Under-developed regions such as Ka-Ngwane have but satelite economies and are predominently labour dormitories.

"It is against this background that we should understand why my kinsmen would rather incur the wrath of influx control laws while seeking better employment in Johannesburg, than remain in Ka-Ngwane where they have to live from hand to mouth. "Economic development and economic prosperity in this country should be evenly spread beyond and across the superficial boundries between 'White South Africa' and the so-called "national states'."

Cheap labour

Mr Mabuza said most Blacks thought the existence and the creation of the homelands were deliberate means by Whites to keep Blacks living in these areas in adject poverty for the White economy to draw cheap labour from them.

Blacks with their labour had contributed to the development of the country's metropolitan centres.

But they were being denied political, social and economic rights in the urban areas.

"Fortunately", Mr Mabuza said "we have at last come to our senses. The permanence of Blacks in the urban areas is now being accepted as a fact.

Multiracial society

"To me, this is attributable to our economy, which has proved more than anything else, that in spite of our cultural, language and colour differences, South Africa is a multiracial society."

Mr Mabuza told his audience that for many generations Blacks had helped to build prosperity in the heartlands of developed South Africa.

"Blacks and Whites were partners — often unknowingly so — in building that prosperity.

"Let us now strive in a conscious partnership to develop the same prosperity in Ka-Ngwane", he said.

NEW ADMINISTRATION SYSTEM FOR JOHANNESBURG PROPOSED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Aug 81 p 19

[Article by Peter Moscardi]

[Text] A PROPOSAL outlining a two-tier system of local government for the inner Witwatersrand with Johannesburg as its core city has been submitted to the President's Council by Mr Nigel Mandy, chairman of the Johannesburg Central Business District Association.

The motivation surrounding the proposals made by the Johannesburg CBDA is contained in an observation made by Mr Mandy, who says: "A strong metropolitan Johannesburg is not an alternative to decentralisation. It is a prerequisite for viable decentralisation."

The submissions of the Johannesburg CBDA, contained in a memorandum, are based upon a 1953 report concerning the city of Toronto. This report concluded that "the present form of organisation is inherently inadequate and outmoded as a means of providing local government services for a large metropolitan area under modern conditions".

This conclusion, says Mr Mandy, applies in greater Johannesburg today. The provincial system established in 1910 is outmoded and its supervision of a major metropolitan core city like Johannesburg is inappropriate in modern conditions, stresses the memorandum.

Commenting on the constitution of a new metropolitan authority, the CBDA suggests that representation might, in the first instance, follow the Jomet pattern — with one metropolitan councillor from each local authority in the area and two from the core city of Johannesburg.

The CBDA warns that no sensible planning can be undertaken on the assumption that Johannesburg or its metropolitan area is or will remain predominantly White. Residential separation can be maintained and is desirable for many reasons, but the central city complex with its commercial and factory employment is irreversibly multiracial, states the report.

"The metropolitan area should be excised from the Transvaal Provincial Administration area insofar as that relates to local government, roads, transportation and services. Part of the present provincial revenue should be diverted to the metropolitan authority."

The most rapid expansion of job opportunities and employment would occur in the major metropolitan areas, suggests the report. "Not only do greater Johannesburg and other major metropolitan areas supply most of the job opportunities and the productivity, they also provide the revenue on which the whole edifice of central and provincial government rests."

TERREBLANCHE EXPLAINS AWB GOALS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 17 Aug 81 p 5

[Article by Dan Marais]

[Text] MR EUGENE Terre'-Blanche leader of the extreme Rightwing Afrikaanse Weerstandbeweging denied yesterday from his farm near Ventersburg that he envisaged a military dictatorship for South Africa.

Commenting on reports in the Sunday Press branding him a dangerous demagogue, he said there was a massive swing away from the present political structure and the aim of his movement was to give people who were "sick and tired" a new way to express their sentiments.

He had a new national congress in mind where people who voted every five years for an unknown mandate could come together to discuss the future of South Africa.

Asked to comment about allegations that he was trying to form a paramilitary blitz commando using motorcyclists dressed in black with the emblem of an eagle, he said many young people were interested in joining a pack of motorcyclists and his movement could use such rallies to present its point of view.

He said meetings of the AWB had been disrupted in the past and the presence of these motorcyclists could be a deterrent.

Referring to the tar-and-feathering of Professor Floors van Jaarsveld, he said this was an isolated incident but it was sometimes necessary to use harsh methods when "a covenant between God and man had been trampled upon".

Mr Terre'Blanche was adamant that the Weerstandbeweging was not a party political movement. It wished to retain the cornerstones of the Afrikaner tradition which was more and more threatened by outside pressure.

The White Christian in South Africa had to survive whatever the cost, he said.

'THE CAPE TIMES' COMMENTS ON DEFENSE BUDGET INCREASE

Cape Town DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 Aug 81 p 8

[Reprint of 'THE CAPE TIMES' editorial: "The Cost of Apartheid"]

[Text] The statistic of overwhelming significance in the budget is the amount set aside for defence spending which appears to reflect an increase of 40 percent. Whatever discussion there may be about the merits of Mr Horwood's medicine for the country's economic health, it is the massive increase in defence spending which says the most about the present-day South African reality. This, in effect, is a "siege" budget, indicating the government's priorities and its estimate of the dangers to this country's security. The drop in the gold price, in its own way, constitutes another kind of siege on the economic front. In all, this rather colourless budget with its British-style reliance on taxing liquor and tobacco, is preparing South Africa to go on a semi-war footing. Hard times are ahead. It is turning out as the Opposition warned during the election campaign when largesse was scattered around pretty liberally. It was pointed out that the largesse would dry up once the votes had been counted and so it has turned out. But it is the defence spending which is the striking feature. Does the government foresee no let-up in the Namibian-Angolan conflict? Has all hope been abandoned of a successful negotiation to end the war? Are the current negotiations just going through the motions with no real hope of a settlement? Likewise, are new threats expected to materialize on the Zimbabwean and Mozambican borders? Clearly, the government is preparing for massive military expenditures. It is difficult to see the light at the end of the tunnel. Anyone who suggests that much of this expenditure could be avoided by a return to rational domestic policies and proper negotiation between groups will be denounced, no doubt. Soviet expansionism certainly represents a genuine threat to South African security. But like it or not, this increase in defence expenditure, in part at least, is the price that is paid for apartheid. There is no use pretending otherwise.

'THE CITIZEN' COMMENTS ON NEUTRON BOMB ISSUE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "The Bomb"]

[Excerpts]

WE ARE so immersed with our own troubles — the low-level war on the border, the tensions within our country, the squatters' issue in the Cape, rampant inflation, the argument over whether the Prime Minister is going to introduce reform or has decided that it is better not to split his party — that we tend to forget about the world outside.

But we shouldn't be so insular.

What happens between the two superpowers is of the utmost importance to us, because it is in the outcome of the power play between the two that global peace rests.

Thus, when President Reagan decides to produce the neutron bomb, we should sit up and take notice, even though we are not directly affected, because his decision signals the final closure of the policy of appeasement that President Carter followed.

It means that the President is rearming America to achieve parity with, and then exceed, Soviet strength.

It means also that the dangers of war will increase in the immediate future, since the Soviets may well opt to strike — for example, in Poland — before the Americans are able to challenge them militarily.

But in the long-term, the stronger America becomes, the less chance there will be of Russia risking war with the United States.

There will be the timid who will say: Better the doveishness of a President Carter than the hawkish stance of a President Reagan and his Secretary of State, General Haig, who is accused, incorrectly, of being a militarist thirsting for open conflict with the Soviets.

President Carter's timidity, however, merely encouraged Soviet expansionism and adventures, either directly or through Russia's surrogates. And as Neville Chamberlain demonstrated before World War II, appeasement merely hastens the inevitable conflagration.

President Reagan is still willing to negotiate an arms limitation treaty — but only from a position of strength.

One item of special interest to South Africa is the news from New York that the United States plans to confront the Soviet Union at the United Nations with a demand that it stop using Cuba as a surrogate for Third World intervention.

An official says cryptically that if the Soviets do not respond, the Reagan administration will consider measures "going beyond words".

We certainly would welcome any action to get the Cubans out of Africa — and particularly Angola.

If the US can achieve that, it would help to resolve the South West African issue, as the presence of the Cubans adds fuel to the flames set by Swapo and its Angolan allies.

All in all, what we are witnessing is a new ball game in international geopolitics. There may be times when the world may teeter on the brink of war, but hopefully, neutron bomb notwithstanding, the major Powers will remember the awful consequences of a nuclear conflict, even a limited one.

FACILITIES NEEDED FOR MENTALLY HANDICAPPED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 17 Aug 81 p 12

[Article by Marilyn Cohen]

[Text] THERE are about 2,5-million mentally handicapped people in South Africa and less than 20 percent are receiving counsel or care.

And although mental retardation is a life-long condition, some retarded children can benefit from special training. But to meet the most basic needs of these people at present will costs more than R75-million.

These were some of the facts revealed at the launching of the new National Foundation for Mental Health in Johannesburg yesterday.

Mr Justice M T Steyn is the national president of the foundation whose committee includes Dr Zac de Beer and Nicholas Oppenheimer of Anglo American; Anton Rupert of the Rembrandt Group; Louis Luyt of Triomf; Jan Steyn of Urban Foundation; Steve de Villiers of the SABC, and many other prominent business personalities.

The foundation's main task will be to look at ways of providing facilities for the mentally handicapped in South Africa which are at present hopelessly inadequate. At the moment only one in 3,6 Whites needing care are in protective workshops. For Coloureds the figure is one in 31,2 and for Indians, one in 18.

There are no protective workshops for Black handicapped adults anywhere in South Africa. Training centres for mentally handicapped children is little better. Only one Black child in 72 can now be accommodated in a training centre. For Whites the ratio is one in 2,3; Coloureds one in 6,9; and Indians, one in 4,8.

There are two day care centres for mentally handicapped chilren in Soweto which cater for a total of 140 children between the ages of six and 18.

But what happens to those children when they get too old for the centres? And what about the estimated 2 000 children in Soweto who require this type of facility?

It would be senseless to place these adolescents back on the streets of Soweto where they would be exploited and abused, "so we bend the rules a little and allow some to stay on," said Mrs Martha Tshoke, principal of the Pumelela Training Centre.

But this means the admission of new children is held back.

The solution — build sheltered employment workshops as an urgent priority. Plans for this are already underway and permission for such a workshop adjoining the Pumelela Centre has been granted by the Soweto Council and by the Minister of Co-operation and Development.

The cost of the workshop is estimated at more than R280 000.

Mr Justice Steyn listed these absolute mental health priority needs for all population groups to be met as soon as possible: counselling services for 5 000 more patients; halfway houses for 500 patients; training centres for 6 000 children; special care centres for 800 children and protective workshops for 7 500 adults.

The cost is estimated at R75 825 000,00.

"The cost of establishing one hospital bed for a psychiatric patient is between R20 000 and R50 000," he said.

REFERENDUMS OF POPULATION GROUPS PROPOSED

Sunday Newspaper Report

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 17 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] IMPORTANT legislation that could lead to referenda among all population groups — Whites, Coloureds, Indians and possibly also Blacks — was being prepared and would "see the light" next year, a Sunday newspaper said in a front page story from Cape Town yesterday.

The Afrikaans Sunday paper said this legislation was significant evidence of the Government's intention to work democratically. It was a definite step towards a new dispensation in government policy, the paper said.

According to information gathered by the newspaper, work on the new legislation has been in progress for some time. Preliminary legislation, so far dealing only with White referenda, had apparently been presented to Cabinet Members.

The preliminary legislation had been referred back to the department concerned with a directive to be broadened, according to the newspaper's source.

The legislation now being prepared did not include provisions for all three population groups to discuss together all matters, although that could possibly come about. Referenda within one population group on affairs concerning it exclusively, would also be possible.

One aspect of legislation now being considered include Blacks, so that their opinions could also be sought and given equal weight.

The legislation would provide for testing by referendum of not only Government policy and constitutional matters but also other questions, according to the paper's source.

At present there us no provision for referenda. Since Union in 1910 only one referendum has been held among Whites, who on October 6, 1960, voted for a republic. The law that made the 1960 referendum possible has been repealed.

The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, mentioned the possibility of referenda when he spoke at Ladysmith last November.

Mr Botha then also indicated the Government might call a referendum after consulting the National Party congresses should the President's Council make a recommendation deviating significantly from current National Party policy. — Sapa.

'THE CITIZEN' Comment

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Referendums"]

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr Botha, is going to fulfil his promise that if any contentious recommendations are made by the President's Council that require national consensus, he will hold a referendum.

That is why legislation to allow for the holding of referendums will be introduced.

At present, there is no law providing for this type of procedure.

Since Union in 1910, only one referendum has been held among Whites, who voted in 1960 for a Republic.

That law has been repealed, hence the need for new legislation.

It appears that under the proposals, which are still being worked out, only the Government will be able to call a referendum — and it will only do so, in terms of another pledge by the Prime Minister, after National Party congresses have been consulted on any controversial constitutional or other changes.

Would split

One can assume that if the congresses reject the proposals, that would be the end of the matter.

We don't think that the Prime Minister would say to his own party: "If you don't go along with what is suggested, I'll go to the country in a referendum."

That would be a sure way to split the party, something the Prime Minister will do everything possible to avoid.

The value of the referendum, however, is that it is not just the National Party and Government that will finally determine policy, like they do now, without consulting anyone, and with the National Party's programme being pushed through Parliament because of the party's huge majority.

Now everyone will have a chance to express his viewpoint and it will not be just the Whites, but the Indians and Coloureds as well, for all three groups will take part.

The three will not record their votes in one, but in three separate referendums on the same issue.

For example, they could vote on the proposal for an executive State President.

Each group could also have a referendum of its own in which it would be able to express its views on an issue exclusively concerning it.

Excluded

Again, the Blacks will be excluded.

This will create as much controversy as the exclusion of the Blacks from the President's Council.

But this in itself will not invalidate the scheme, since it is a very vital starting point in obtaining consensus on matters affecting Whites, Coloureds and Indians.

Those who don't want Blacks to participate will argue that by sheer preponderance of numbers, Blacks could determine the outcome of any referendum.

But, as it is only the Government that can go to the country to test its will, by way of a referendum, and it is only the Government that can decide the issue on which the referendum is held, we cannot see that Blacks will be able to do anything to upset the existing order — or the new order that will be coming into being.

We ourselves would prefer to see Blacks as part of the referendum process, in the same way as we would have preferred to see them participate in the President's Council.

But the Government's policy still remains that Blacks should exercise their political rights through the homelands, with urban Blacks running their own affairs at municipal level, and nothing will change that policy for the present.

Still, there will have to be some method of consultation with Blacks at higher-than-municipal levels.

And if they will not be allowed to take part in referendums, there will have to be other machinery whereby their views can be made known or tested.

Sparingly

We hope, we may add, that referendums will be held only sparingly, because it is a procedure that should not replace the normal working of our electoral process, whereby the ruling party goes to the country with its platform covering all aspects of policy, and the Opposition parties have an opportunity to put forward their own programmes as alternatives.

Nevertheless, judiciously used, the referendum, will be a very important way of cutting across party lines and colours, and to that extent, a most welcome democratic innovation.

MATANZIMA ON TERRORISTS--Umtata.--The Transkei President, Paramount Chief Kaiser Matanzima, said at the weekend it was imperative both Transkei and South Africa took stern action to deal with "a nearby terrorist base" in Lesotho. Speaking during a welcoming function on his return from a State visit to Cape Town last week, and cleary referring to recent terrorist incidents in Transkei and South Africa, he said stern action should be taken to deal with the situation. On the question of more land, the President said South Africa was always sympathetic towards Transkei's problems and was still aware that land was a "vital issue".--SAPA [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Aug 81 p 3]

GOLD OUTPUT--South Africa's total gold output last month at 1 788 105 ounces was 117 261 ounces lower than the output in July last year of 1 905 366 ounces and 10 943 ounces less than this year's June figure of 1 799 048 ounces. Until the end of July total production for the first seven months amounted to 12 321 361 ounces, 442 400 ounces less than last year's corresponding 12 763 761 ounces.--Sapa. SUGAR WORKERS STRIKE--Durban.--About 1 000 Black workers employed by Africa's biggest sugar company, the Tongaat group, went on strike yesterday. Shortly before 7 am the workers congregated near the entrance to the Maidstone mill on the Natal North Coast and refused to go on shift. The company management said they also tried to intimidate workers in the flour and mushroom sections to down tools. The striking workers succeeded in closing a filling station, adjoining the mill, and a shop. The owners and assistants in the two businesses were threatened with death if they did not join the strike. The managing director of the Tongaat Group, Mr Alan Hankinson, told THE CITIZEN that the strike was illegal. Some of the grievances put forward by the workers were irrelevant, he said. A committee had been appointed to discuss grievances with the workers but, so far, they had been unwilling to co-operate, Mr Hankinson said. RECOMMENDATIONS ON LOCAL AUTHORITIES--House of Assembly--The Government had accepted recommendations which could change drastically the role of local authorities, the Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr Danie Steyn told the Assembly yesterday. In the Budget debate, Mr Steyn said a special study group--the Croeser study group--had been appointed to examine the financial situations of provincial administrations and local authorities and had nearly completed its work. This would be followed by the establishment of a permanent committee to consult with the Government. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Aug 81 p 4]

STATISTICS ON EXECUTIONS, PROHIBITIONS--Fifty-seven people were executed in the first six months of this year, the Minister of Justice, Mr Kobie Coetsee, said in the Assembly yesterday. Replying in writing to a question by Mrs Helen Suzman (PFP, Houghton), he said 32 Black and 25 Coloured men were hanged--50 for murder, three for murder and robbery, two for murder and rape, one for rape and one for robbery. Eleven prohibition orders in terms of Section 9(1) of the Internal Security Act were issued and two were withdrawn in the first six months of 1981, Mr Coetsee, told Mrs Suzman in another written reply. Mr Coetsee said that a further eight notices expired, none of which were renewed. One hundred and forty four notices in terms of Section 9(1) and nine notices in terms of Section 5(1) (e) of the Act were in effect on June 30 1981, the Minister said.—Sapa. LEYLAND-RENAULT AGREEMENT--Johannesburg, August 7--Leyland South Africa will modernize its auto assembly plant near Cape Town, at a cost of 15 million rand (16 million dollars) to produce a new Renault model under license, a spokesman said today. The Leyland spokesman said a contract had been signed with the French state-run automaker, and that the new model would be available in South Africa in 1983. The new model will be an intermediate between the Renault-14 and Renault-18. The South African version will have a one-cylinder engine of between 1,300 and 1,600 cc, the spokesman said. Only high-technology parts will be imported from France, under South African law that requires that 66 per cent of the components be locally made. (A. F. P.) OIL PROSPECTING CONTINUES IN EQUATEUR, BANDUNDU

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 17 Jun 81 p 7

[Text] First State Commissioner Udjuu Singa met with the general director of Esso-Zaire, Mr Michel Bertrand, at the council headquarters on Tuesday morning. Mr Bertrand reported to him on the oil prospecting his company is doing in the Equateur and Bandundu regions.

"We have not yet found oil," Mr Bertrand stated after the interview. He said that the geological prospecting drilling in Mbandaka, which has just been completed, yielded no indication of the existence of hydrocarbons in that region. However, he said, this negative result does not negate the potential of the central basin area.

Last Saturday, Esso-Zaire began drilling at a second site at Gilson (located 15 km from Lokolama, in the Bandundu region).

The drilling will be pursued to a depth of 5,000 meters. The general director of Esso-Zaire added that if the results are encouraging, his company will undertake a surface prospecting campaign, which will make it possible to detect the existence of hydrocarbons in the subsoil.

This second operation in Bandundu will allow the company to decide whether it should continue prospecting in the central basin.

The mining prospecting agreement signed between the executive council and Shell in 1973 was taken over by the Esso-Texaco partnership, which signed an endorsement in December of 1979 with the executive council calling for a first segment of financing totaling 40 million U.S. dollars. This sum is to be spent over 3 years.

The Esso-Texaco partnership is financing 100 percent of the prospecting campaign in Zaire.

Courtesy Visit

The first state commissioner was then paid a courtesy visit by the director general of the Zairian-German Industrial and Forestry Company (SIFORZAL), Mr Maurice Ongaro, who took the opportunity to report on the activities of his company.

The SIFORZAL, established in Zaire since 1973, has three work sites in Bandundu, Equateur and Haut-Zaire, and a plant in Maluku. The latter has two units: the veneer unit, which produces a million cubic meters per month, and the sawmill, which has a capacity of 4,000 cubic meters per month. The work site in Equateur, recently established, required an investment of about 8.5 million deutschmarks. This company exports products worth 28 million zaires, while the estimates for 1981 come to 40 million.

Apart from its own resources, the company receives financing in the form of loans from the mother company, the German DANZER group and the DEG, a German cooperation bank.

SERIOUS DROP SEEN IN PRODUCTION OF FISH

Lubumbashi MJUMBE: LE QUOTIDIEN DU SHABA in French 22 Apr 81 pp 1, 6

[Article by Mbuyuwanza]

[Text] Citizen Bakenga Mbaya, secretary of the Bukama fish sales outlet commission, has just released the sales report for the first months since fishing began. The first figures for the month of March show a sharp decline in relation to the statistics for the last quarter of last year. In fact, production of more than 220,000 tons per month was achieved last year. The production for the whole of the month of March was in fact equal in practice to the daily production recorded for last year.

It should also be mentioned that there were only 16 market days during the month of March. During these days, 163,584 kg of salted fish and 26,775 kg of smoked fish were marketed, yielding a total of 190,359 kg sold.

As was the case during the last quarter of 1980, the lion's share went to Kasai Occidental. The Kananga merchants in fact purchased 82,530 kg, followed by the merchants in Mbuji-Mayi, with purchases of 65,425 kg. Merchants in the Shaba purchased only 17,792 kg. The total for the other regions was 2,856 kg. Agents and officials of the state, army, etc, for their part, purchased 10,726 kg. The inhabitants of Bukama themselves consumed 11,030 kg.

In short, sales averaged 11,897.4 kg, costing 83,287 zaires, per day. The drop in production, the fishermen explained, is due to the heavy rainfall in the months of February and March. Instead of remaining in the lake or the riverbed, the fish dispersed, even into the marshes.

It was also reported that the fish being sold at the Bukama outlet currently come from Malemba Nkulu.

With this shortage of fish in Bukama, speculation is beginning to gain ground. This is why the commissioner for the Bukama zone, citizen Mpundu and Liobo Bomolongekopo, has just instructed the commission in charge of the sales outlet to allow only sale operations between fishermen and tradesmen, thus avoiding all middlemen.

DEVELOPMENT OF FORESTRY INDUSTRY DISCUSSED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 5 May 81 p 3

[Text] The national production of rough timber came to about 370,000 cubic meters in 1980, approximately the same figure as in 1979.

Exports, for their part, saw a substantial increase of 37 percent for undressed timber and 17.2 percent for veneer. Sawn timber, on the other hand, showed a drop of 23.7 percent.

The Finance Company for Development (SOFIDE), which provided these figures in its annual report, said that the situation was not favorable for timber during last year.

Both the domestic and international markets showed signs of a weakening demand.

On the national level, this phenomenon can be laid to the proliferation of intermediaries, causing an increase in the price for final use, to the slowdown in construction activity, and to the limited purchasing power of private individuals.

The SOFIDE attributes the weakening of foreign demand to the reduction in the need (particularly for sawn timber) resulting from the slowdown in the activity of the building sector.

The estimates for 1981 drafted by the wood committee of the UN economic committee for Europe are pessimistic. They indicate a decline in consumption in Europe, the main market for wood from Zaire.

European demand for rough timber of tropical origin is in fact estimated at 5.7 million cubic meters for 1981 as compared to 6.08 million cubic meters in 1980. For sawn timber, the estimated need is 3.22 million cubic meters in 1981 as compared to 3.64 million cubic meters in 1980.

SCHOOL OF ADMINISTRATION--A school of administration will be established in Zaire shortly to train high cadres in this important sector, State Commissioner for Civil Service Samba Kaputo announced last Friday during a working meeting of the members of the regional payment commission. Samba indicated that this short-term project will be supplemented by a longer term plan which calls for the creation of institutes of administration and execution in the region. The implementation of these projects, the state commissioner for civil service said, will allow the state to upgrade the public administration. As of the present, he went on to say, a group of Zairians has already been sent abroad by the civil service department for studies in higher schools of administration. Once these individuals have returned to Zaire, they will constitute a civil service training body. [Excerpt] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 18 Jun 81 pp 1, 7] 5157

TEA PRODUCTION DROPS--In 1980, Zaire exported 1,461 tons of tea as compared to 2,710 tons in 1979, representing a decline of 46 percent. Although there is no other information at the moment for assessing the level of Zaire's production of tea, it can be assumed, in the light of the data on exports, that the supply has further declined in 1980, as was already the case in 1979. A study made by the Department of Agricultural and Rural development shows that this situation is due to the growing lack of interest in tea on the part of the peasants. The Finance Company for Development (SOFIDE) says for its part that several million hectares of tea plantations have been converted to pasturage in Kivu, the main tea-producing region. The SOFIDE also reports that tea prices are continuing the decline which began three years ago. [Text] [Kinshasa ELIMA in French 5 May 81 p 3] 5157

JAPANESE FINANCED PLANT--On 22 July, laying the cornerstone for a sulfuric acid plant in Kafue, 50 kilometers south of Lusaka, President Kenneth Kaunda asked the nonmining sectors of Zambia to participate more in the country's exports during the period of recession now being experienced by the country. The Kafue sulfuric acid plant will be built with the financial and technical cooperation of the Japanese firm Kobel Steel. It will meet Zambia's need for fertilizer with an annual capacity of 65,000 tons. It joins a government-owned chemical industry with 40 production units, whose exports to countries in the region brought in some $7 million out of a total of $575 million. Some 95 percent of Zambia's export earnings are from mining production, particularly copper and cobalt. Sixty percent of all production is held by the government. On 22 July, officials of the two state mining companies: Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) and Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM), showed a timid trend toward the resumption of work. However, an NCCM spokesman told the Reuter press agency that the current personnel was inadequate for resumption of copper treatment operations at the central foundry and refining unit in Rokana. On the same day, officials sent warning letters to strikers. Normalization would be more rapid at the RCM. [Text] [Paris LE CONTINENT in French 24 Jul 81 p 12] 11,464

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN NIGERIAN, IVORIAN DELEGATIONS

Bilateral Trade, ECOWAS Discussed

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 2 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpts] An important economic mission led by Amoakon Edjampan Thiemele, the minister of commerce, went to Lagos, Nigeria 26-29 July.

This delegation comprised 17 people, also including individuals who work with the minister, and 10 businessmen from the private sector representing six branches of activity: asphalt, vegetable oils, fatty substances and soap-making, the mirror business, tunafish canning, tires, and import-export.

The most important working session between the two delegations, chaired by (Nigerian) industries minister El Hadj Adamu Ciroma, with the minister of commerce as vice-chairman, was held on 28 July.

That meeting was followed by a long private talk between the two ministers. In his message to the Nigerian chief of state and people, the Ivorian commerce minister stressed the necessity of beginning the process leading to a new era of Ivorian-Nigerian cooperation.

"What matters," he maintained, "is for our two countries to strengthen their cooperation and relations so that ECOWAS [Economic Community of West African States] becomes a living reality."

In effect, the economic and political clout wielded by Ivory Coast and Nigeria predispose them quite naturally to the role of leadership of that vast 16-nation community.

After the official start of negotiations, the experts of the two countries met to study in detail the provisions of the commercial agreement.

The significant element was the mutual determination to reach the signing of that agreement. The Ivorian experts agreed to work from the document proposed by the federal Nigerian government.

The amendments proposed by the Ivorians were unreservedly accepted by the Nigerians, and the products Ivory Coast submitted for List B were adopted without restriction. List A, containing 27 Nigerian products, and List B, containing 43 Ivorian products, will account for most of the bilateral trade. The two countries also accorded each other "most favored nation" treatment.

In addition, the two delegations agreed that the draft agreement should be signed in Abidjan by no later than 3 August.

The Ivorian minister of commerce took advantage of his visit to acquaint himself with the prospects and measures established for eliminating customs restrictions among the 16 states of the community.

This problem, a basic one in the eyes of Minister Thiemele, was the subject of a working session between our delegation and two ECOWAS representatives, including Mr Seck, head of the division responsible for customs, trade and immigration, in the absence of the executive secretary, who was on another mission.

Mr Seck, in his clear and concise presentation, presented extremely valuable and instructive information to the official Ivorian delegation. The talks, which lasted an hour, made it possible to discuss in turn the various problems related to "tariff disarmament" and the elimination of non-tariff barriers.

On the first point, it was instructive to learn that since 1 May 1981 products grown from the earth and handicraft products have been circulating freely among the member states. The elimination of duties and barriers was in effect from that date.

Concerning industrial products, disarmament is gradual and follows a schedule going from 1 May 1981 to 1 May 1989.

With regard to commerce, the businessmen also had a well-filled schedule. An important working session brought them together at the Lagos chamber of commerce and industry, for a meeting during the course of which they were informed about various import prohibition measures enacted by Nigeria. The financing law of 20 May 1981 establishes new restrictions on importation and sets forth lists of the products that are prohibited, those that are unrestricted, and those that are subject to licensing, as well as the import duties on each.

The president of the chamber of commerce informed the Ivorian delegates that the chamber of commerce and industry was in favor of more flexibility in these measures, which were harmful to trade and to economic interests. The Ivorian businessmen also paid close attention to the conditions regulating establishment of foreign-owned companies.

Altogether, the commercial results might be estimated at more than F CFA 180 million, including vegetable oils, fatty substances, the glass-works, the mirror-works and textiles. Prospects are also encouraging for asphalt, tires, and fish canning.

Trade Statistics

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 26 Jul 81 p 4

[Article by Felicien Kourouan]

[Excerpts] Ivorian sales to Nigeria went from F CFA 1,321 million in 1975 to F CFA 4,685 million in 1979. The principal export products remain soluble coffee, oil products, cola nuts, refined palm oil, veneer and plywood, etc.

As for our imports, they fluctuated considerably between 1975 and 1979. They reached their lowest level in 1976, at F CFA 1,990 million. Nigeria sells us, besides petroleum (98 percent of our purchases), fish netting, tires, etc.

Our trade balance with Nigeria has always been unfavorable. In 1977, however, it reached its worst level with a total of F CFA 14,754 million. Since that time, it has registered an overall mild improvement. Thus, the deficit which was 14,754 million in 1977 fell to 10,706 million in 1978 and to 9,474 million in 1979.

COMMUNIQUE CLAIMS DEFEAT OF SOUTH AFRICAN FORCE

EA181220 Luanda Domestic Service in Portuguese 0500 GMT 18 Aug 81

[Defense Ministry communique issued in Luanda 17 August]

[Text] Following the violent aggression unleashed against our country by the South African racist forces as a result of the steps taken by our military units deployed in the southern region of the country to repulse this renewed aggression and defend the integrity of our fatherland, our glorious troops of the People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola clashed with apartheid armed forces between Changongo and Cahama, over 100 km inside our country on 15 August.

In the fierce fighting the enemy forces suffered heavy losses, being forced to withdraw in disarray to the illegally occupied territory of Namibia. They left behind the body of a white South African soldier painted black. The enemy also abandoned three radio sets, 9 60-mm mortar bombs, 12 antipersonnel landmines, 2 hand grenades and other explosives.

In the fighting, one of our soldiers was killed and one of our vehicles was destroyed. Three civilians, passing through the area as the fighting was in progress, were also killed.

Meanwhile, the Angolan authorities are prepared to return the body of the dead South African soldier should the Pretoria racist government ask for it.

Death to the South African invader and his lackeys. The enemy will not take a single inch of our land. The struggle continues. Victory is certain!

PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY ADJOURNS, SUBJECTS REVIEWED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 21 Jul 81 p 1

[Article by Manuel Augusto]

[Text] The People's Assembly, the highest body of government in the People's Republic of Angola [RPA] met in regular session for 3 days in Luanda to analyze and discuss various issues affecting the nation's life.

Under the presidency of Jose Eduardo dos Santos and attended by a majority of the deputies, the proceedings were divided into sessions open only to deputies and general sessions, at the end of which several laws and resolutions submitted by the assembly committees were amended and approved.

The General Labor Law, presented to the assembly in draft form, was unanimously approved, becoming an important legal instrument for productive-labor activity in the RPA and hence an essential arm of the Angolan working masses in defense of their rights and in the building of a nation of workers.

After extended and lively discussions, proposals for amendments and revision of some of its articles, this important document was approved, designating the rights and duties of all workers, permitting more scientific organization of labor according to the principles of the MPLA-Labor Party and finally revoking the colonial labor laws. The active and constructive participation of the deputies present throughout the discussion of the now approved law adds to its importance, reflecting, above all, the concern of the people's elected representatives to incorporate everything that respects the workers in the steadfast defense of their rights. In fact, regardless of their educational level or origiin, the deputies were concerned with sufficiently clarifying every point of the law in which the workers' rights and obligations might come under question because of any problem of interpretation.

Defend Revolution, Resolve Most Pressing Problems

The People's Assembly deputies approved other important documents, such as the Wage System Law, the Amnesty Law, the Collateral Law and the General Population Census Law, in addition to other documents dealing with the function of the assembly itself and the rights and duties of the deputies, as well as the financial report for the fiscal year 1979.

For a more general view of the nation's problems and the factors involved in its economic development, on the last day of the proceedings the deputies heard and discussed a report presented by Planning Minister Lopo do Nascimento on the need to introduce some revisions in the 1981 National Plan. As President Jose Eduardo dos Santos had already noted in the opening session, the current international economic situation is characterized by a noticeable decline in the price of products that generate foreign exchange, such as petroleum and coffee. This situation and the continuing imperialist attacks against our country are the main reasons for the revisions in the plan.

For the same purpose, to give the deputies a more general view, Afonso Van-Dunem (Mbinda), coordinator of the assembly's Foreign Relations Committee, drew a broad picture of the current international situation, which is characterized by an intensification of the open confrontation between the forces for peace and progress and the forces of international reaction.

Study advised on Renunciation of Citizenship and on Social Security

Other items not initially included in the agenda were brought up by the deputies where relevant, specifically, regarding situations that have been occurring with greater intensity in the nation's capital.

Issues more national in scope were also brought up, such as the need for social security legislation and for closer study of the phenomenon of Angolans renouncing their citizenship. The results of these studies should be presented at the next session of the People's Assembly.

There were 3 days in intensive work in which it was clear to the deputies that they must find ways to solve the problems presented to the greatest benefit of the people.

IMPROVEMENT TO RAIL NETWORK DESCRIBED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 17 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] Rehabilitation of the lines and installations of the nation's railway syste[illegible] [illegible]anda, Benguela and Mocamedes railways and the Amboim exchange), in accordance with a directive of the First Extraordinary Party Congress, will make it possible to overcome most of the problems confronting the rail sector.

The railway rehabilitation project, to be carried out over the next 4 years, includes acquisition of 280 freight cars, 67 coaches and 25 new locomotives for normal circution and shunting.

Detailing the projects in statements to the ANGOP press agency, the national director of Angolan Railways reported that the "plan contemplates the design of the layout for the great North-South axis, a factor in strengthening national unity."

Speaking further about the projects, Armando de Sousa e Silva added that, within the framework of technical assistance, the Angolan Railways maintains relations of cooperation with Portugal, specifically, contracts already established for the repair and maintenance of material and for instruction and retaining of railway cadres in the various specialities in the sector.

Besides these cooperation accords, the railway transport official announced a project for creation of a National Professional Training Center for the various careers in the sector, in addition to the already existing centers.

Improvement of CFL Radiocommunications

Projects to improve the national railway network include creation of a radio communications system for the CFL (Luanda Railway), enabling more secure rail operations in 1982. There are also plans to build complementary maintenance facilities and to renovate the connecting rail line.

In addition to restoration of the CFL line, there are studies to extend a branch line almost 200 kms, establishing a link between Zenza do Itombe and Cacuso, including intermediate lines to the Kitungo iron mines, Kassala, Kissequel, Tumbi, and Saia.

Some changes will be made in the present route, because the deterioration of the existing infrastructures and rolling stock has hampered service on the line.

De Sousa explained in detail the new traffic system, which breaks down as follows: urban and interurban exchanges Luanda-Viana, followed by Viana-Zenza, Zenza-Cacuso and finally Cacuso-Malanje, the last station on the line. The route is somewhat over 400 kms long.

On the Cacuso-Malanje exchange, the Portuguese firm SOMAFEL is being entrusted with designing the entire renovation project, following up works based on studies for reactivation of the stone quarries to produce ballast and a plant to produce concrete crossties. The contracts will be finalized this year.

Benguela and Mocamedes Railways To Receive Modern Transport Equipment

According to the plan, the Benguela Railway, the important rail link with Zambia and Zaire, will receive significant locomotive equipment, namely, freight cars and newly acquired modern locomotives, to expand its transport capacity.

In his remarks to ANGOP, the national director of the Angolan Railways also mentioned improvement of the telecommunications system for the Mocamedes Railway. There are also plans to replace tracks and crossties and to rehabilitate the roadbed on the line.

The Amboim Railway is included in projects to renovate and rebuild the nation's rail system. The program includes maintenance and renovation of two imported diesel electric locomotives.

Concluding his statements, Arlindo de Sousa e Silva added that the locomotives which serve the Amboim Railway are currently inoperative because of a dispute with Moyse, the industrial plant which supplied them.

PORTUGUESE HYDROGRAPHIC, OCEANOGRAPHIC COOPERATION

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 21 Jul 81 pp 12, 5

[Excerpt] The Portuguese Navy's hydrographic ship, the "Almeida Carvalho," arrived in the port of Praia on the 6th of this month. It will remain in our country (the first that it has ever visited on a mission of this kind) until the 29th of this month under the terms of the cooperation agreement between Cape Verde and Portugal.

This scientific cruise by the "Almeida Carvalho" results from a decision reached at the fourth meeting of the Portuguese-Cape Verdian Permanent Joint Cooperation Commission, which considered it imperative that there be "specific action by Portugal" to satisfy the Republic of Cape Verde's needs in the areas of hydrography, oceanography, navigation, and ocean pollution.

The schedule for the scientific cruise by the "Almeida Carvalho," which is to visit every island except Fogo and Brava, includes the following in Praia: contact with the entities connected with shipping and ports, surveying the port of Praia, setting up a tide gage (a device for measuring the height of tides), doing sounding work, and determining the coordinates of conspicuous points and the wharf. On Maio Island, it will visit Porto Ingles to survey and research the port structures to be established there. It will then go to the islands of Boavista (Sal Rei) and Sal (Palmeira) to exchange impressions concerning the putting up of port structures. On Sao Nicolau Island, it will research the port structures to be built there and will also survey the port of Tarrafal. In the Janela region of Santo Antao Island, it will analyze problems related to the port and inspect the tide gage that exists there. On the 15th, the "Almeida Carvalho" will return to Sao Nicolau Island, where it will spend 5 days making a hydrographic survey of Tarrafal. From there it will go to Porto Ingles (Maio Island), where it will do the same thing, also over a 5-day period. At the end of its mission, the "Almeida Carvalho" will return to Praia to hold its final talks with Cape Verdian authorities and perhaps make a few recommendations. It is scheduled to leave for Lisbon on the 29th, conducting research projects along its course.

DACKO PRAISES SPIRIT, DYNAMISM OF ARMED FORCES

AB241029 Bangui Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Address by CAR President David Dacko to the first paratroop intervention regiment at Kasa camp on 22 August--recorded]

[Text] Generals, senior officer, noncommissioned officers and soldiers of the CAR Armed Forces: First of all, I wish to congratulate you for the very beautiful performance we have just witnessed. I appreciated particularly the perfect organization of the entire show, the great quality of the displays and mock combats as well as the very smart turnout and dynamism of the officers and soldiers.

By its diversity and great quality, this display clearly demonstrated the progress you have achieved in the instruction and guidance of the armed forces despite our numerous material difficulties. They also demonstrated that excellent spirit of cooperation which has developed between the cadres of the CAR Armed Forces and their French counterparts be it in the field of operational assistance or of technical military assistance. The armed forces have thus given an example of what could be achieved with little means but with the sense of organization, cohesion of the cadres and especially the firm determination to succeed.

The government and I am fully aware of your problems and we are making efforts to solve them in a difficult national context and with the constraints imposed by our task of economic development. Our armed forces are the guarantors of our national independence, internal peace and territorial integrity and they deserve the attentive care of the nation. We should not forget this.

Major, I sincerely thank you for the reception you have accorded us. Long live the CAR Armed Forces! Long live the republic!

OPPOSITION LEADER SAYS DACKO IS FRIGHTENED MAN

London WEST AFRICA in English 3 Aug 81 p 1794

[Text]

Despite assurances during a visit to Paris by the Prime Minister, Mr. Simon Bozanga, that the Central African Republic is committed to political plurality, the recent bomb explosion at a Bangui cinema has brought into the open the repressive nature of the regime, writes a correspondent.

The situation is complicated by the fact that the opposition is largely composed of people who worked with the deposed "Emperor" Bokassa.

The African National Liberation Movement, headed by Idi Lalla, which has claimed responsibility for the cinema attack, has since been banned. The Movement for the Liberation of the Central African People, headed by Mr. Ange Patasse, is now also illegal and Mr. Patasse has been arrested. Mr. Patasse held 11 ministerial posts under the Bokassa regime.

The other major opposition movement is led by Dr. Abel Goumba, who has been in exile in Paris for the last 17 years. His party, the Patriotic Front, has also been banned by President Dacko. The President has accused the Goumba and Lalla factions of plotting the bombing together, and says that he has documentary proof of this.

Dr. Boumba, however, told West Africa that his party has no armed section, and has condemned the bombing as "blind terrorism". He described the state of siege (nearly martial law) as the "reaction of a frightened man". He said that the recent events were but a replay of the events of 1960, when President Dacko banned the Movement for Democracy in Africa, of which Dr. Goumba was leader. The slim electoral victory in March, when President Dacko was reported to have gained 50.23 per cent of the votes, was invalid, said Dr. Goumba, who claimed that President Dacko had only actually won a third of the vote.

Dr. Goumba, however, told West Africa that his party has no armed the most credible of the opposition leaders. This is partly because he has been out of the country for 17 years (and so can hardly have been involved in the widespread corruption that took place), and partly because the Patriotic Front is the only party to have put forward a coherent recovery plan for the economy.

The new Socialist regime in France has said that it will not go back on its commitment of non-interference in internal affairs. There are about 1,500 French troops in CAR, mostly based in the town of Bouar. Their role is to protect the country from external aggression and to look after the French community in CAR. When the state of siege was declared they were confined to barracks.

Dr. Goumba has confidence in the Mitterrand administration, and finds it "completely natural" that the CAR Prime Minister was not received by President Mitterrand during his recent visit to Paris. Mr. Bozanga is the representative of a "facist regime", Dr. Goumba said.

Meanwhile, the state of siege is taking hold. Night flights into CAR have been banned, and security measures at the airport in Bangui have been stepped up. Travellers reported scattered street fights between civilians and CAR soldiers in Bangui. A Western businessman, who slipped out of Bangui said he saw rioting civilians clash with troops. He said: "On one side of the road I could see civilians coming towards me, smashing cars and taxis. On the other side of the road were soldiers smashing civilians." He said that he had reached the airport by hiding under a tarpauling in a large truck which roared through the crowd. Another businessman who arrived in Cameroon from Bangui said that he saw troops with machine guns conducting house to house searches in the African quarters along the airport road.

FPO-PT PRESIDENT DISCUSSES HIS POLITICAL ORIENTATION

Paris LE CONTINENT in French 4 Aug 81 p 4

[Interview with Abel Goumba, leader of the Ubangi Patriotic Front-Labor Party (FPO-PT), by Lucien Ahonto, in Paris; date not given]

[Text] Fifty-three years old and balding, Abel Goumba, who holds a degree in medicine, is one of the founders of the Central African Republic, along with the late Barthelemy Boganda.

Leader of the Ubangi Patriotic Front-Labor Party (FPO-PT), Dr Goumba is one of the few men of the Central African opposition who has had no relations with former Emperor Bokassa. Consequently, he has the reputation of being an honest man.

Since 18 July, following the bombing of the Le Club movie theater in Bangui (LE CONTINENT, 17 and 18 July), his party has been dissolved and there is an international warrant for his arrest. But President Dacko's decision scarcely seems to bother the leader of the FPO-PT, with whom we talked in Paris.

[Question] An international warrant for your arrest has been issued (or is going to be issued). What do you expect to do in this situation?

[Answer] It is ridiculous, even grotesque, that Dacko should want to issue an international warrant for my arrest. Everyone knows that Dacko was Bokassa's personal adviser. Consequently, he bears the responsibility for many crimes. I have difficulty understanding how a man such as Dacko can issue a warrant for my arrest, especially when Bokassa lives in the Ivory Coast in complete freedom. As far as I am concerned, I have committed no crime. My only crime, perhaps, is that of defending the interests of my country for 20 years.

That type of arrest warrant is generally issued for individuals who have committed common law crimes. If one were to extradite all politicians, I think we shall have to have more prisons to contain them. Dacko looks at the world as if it were in the tiny Central African sphere in which he is free to do what he wants.

[Question] You are presented as the "pet" of the new French authorities. Does that not bother you?

[Answer] Presenting me as the "pet" of the new French authorities is too much. The press undoubtedly has the right to give its opinion on a given political personality. This being the case, it is true that the advent of the left in France is a good thing that I defend and that we all defend. If it is for that reason that I am presented as the "pet" of the new French authorities, well....

[Question] Where is your base in Africa, since you have been an international official for so long?

[Answer] The fact that I have been an international official has not brought me any particular support. My past as a political leader in the central African Republic introduced me to heads of African nations that are part of the so-called "progressive" Africa. I am a man of the left and consequently, I had to make contact with leftist regimes.

On the Central African level, I was obviously the leader of the first government under the law-framework, formed in 1957 and lasting until about 1964, the date of my departure in exile.

[Question] Your party, the FPO-PT, is part of the Provisional Political Council. Why is it that you only recently called upon the opposition to rally around you? Is there not a kind of struggle within the Council for leadership of the opposition?

[Answer] The Provisional Political Council was formed following the presidential election of 15 March 1981. It is a simple organ aimed at coordinating the activities of the four candidates: Francois Pehoua, Ange Patasse, Henri Maidou and myself, in order to annul the rigged elections. Consequently, there is no president. The meetings are held alternately in our homes.

I have mentioned my past as a resister since 1957, the date of Boganda's "mysterious" disappearance. In 1960, I set up the MEDAC (Movement of Democratic Evolution in Central Africa), which was a response to the deviationist line of the MESAN (Movement for the Social Development of Black Africa), followed by Dacko.

Resister From the Beginning

Upon Boganda's death, Dacko, supported by the colonialists, totally distorted the line laid out by Boganda. Since 1960, I have led the struggle, which brought me 3 or 4 years in prison and many years in exile, particularly in France, where I led discussion groups. In January 1976, the Revolutionary National Liberation Committee (CRLN) was formed in Bangui, in order to overthrow Bokassa.

In other words, since the very creation of the Central African Republic, I have fought, whether under Dacko or Bokassa. It is for those reasons that I consider myself as a resister from the very beginning, who fought for the country's true independence.

[Question] You have certainly played a great role in Central African political life in the 1950's. You have also spent some 20 years outside your country. Do you not believe that that exile has cut you off somewhat from the true national situation in the Central African Republic?

[Answer] Throughout all the time I have been underground, I have never ceased fighting and I can say here, publicly, that it was thanks to the FPO that Bokassa began to suffer the first blows that finally brought about his downfall. It was thanks to the actions of the FPO in the field that the students went out into the streets, bringing a large share of the people behind them. This is a detail that everyone tends to forget. Obviously, since I am not in the country, in the eyes of a people that for over 70 years suffered the yoke of colonization and that could not vote once in 20 years, that absence has certainly had an effect. But for me, the essential thing was to present myself, explain to the people the country's situation since Boganda's death. If Dacko dissolved the FPO-PT, it was because it forms the most structured, the most combative movement in the field and Dacko was afraid of it.

[Question] You do not seem to demand the departure of the French troops from the Central African Republic any more. Is this not a shift that might surprise people, and what are your reasons?

[Answer] That shift cannot surprise anyone who takes the trouble to make a thorough political analysis. We demanded the immediate withdrawal of the French troops because their intervention was the exclusive work of Giscard d'Estaing. Moreover, that is what is complicating the situation now. They would not protect the Central African people, but only Dacko. The situation has now changed. Politics is also the art of choosing.

It is a leftist government that is in power in France and, in keeping with its principles, the principles of socialism, that government no longer wants foreign troops in any country of the world, particularly Africa. The new French Government has clearly stated: The French troops in the Central African Republic must no longer intervene in the domestic affairs of countries as they did during the time of Giscard. At the present time, the Central African National Army is not capable of ensuring the protection of all Central Africans and all foreigners, including French people in the Central African Republic.

Moreover, another reason that caused me, not to change positions, but to establish an order of priorities, is the current presence on Central African soil of Moroccan mercenaries and, in the near future, of South African, Egyptian and Sudanese mercenaries. Under such conditions, between two evils, one must choose the lesser one. The presence of the French Army under these conditions represents the lesser temporary evil. But the principle of withdrawal is still maintained.

BRIEFS

OPPOSITION INCREASES ACTIVITY--The Central African opposition has never been so active as it has since President David Dacko, following the 14 July bombing in Bangui, decided to "restore order at home" at the cost of the burial of a democratic experiment that could have made the people forget the antics of an incompetent, megalomaniac emperor. It is as if the government and opposition had a different, if not contrary, interpretation of the basic freedoms and democracy, as defined and guaranteed by the constitution. Actually, the 14 July bombing could have provided the occasion for a national burst of energy, a sacred union of all Central African patriots against the rampant terrorism that threatened the future of democracy and the principle, accepted by nearly everyone, of the conquest of power by legal means. The main beneficiary of this new political situation would undeniably be David Dacko, who preferred the cudgel to dialog, suspended the Central African People's Liberation Movement (MLPC) of Ange Patasse and banned the Ubangi Patriotic Front (FPO) of Abel Goumba. Such an attitude did not come as a big surprise to the Central African opposition, which claims that the author behind the loathsome attack of 14 July was none other than the person crying wolf, a crushing hypothesis for the Central African authorities. Abel Goumba, whose interview we are publishing in this issue, holds Idi Lalla, who publicly claimed credit for the attack on behalf of his group, the Central African National Liberation Movement (MCLN), to be an "irresponsible individual linked to Qadhdhafi while maintaining secret relations with Dacko." Machiavelli is not African. The Central African opposition maintains that the author of "The Prince" has many followers on the banks of the Ubangi-Chari. Is it possible? PRESIDENT MEETS WITH PENNE; NEW STAGE IN RELATIONS BEGINS

[Article: "Mr Guy Penne Met President Goukouni Oueddei in Libreville"]

[Text] Guy Penne, Mr Mitterrand's adviser on African and Malagasy affairs, presently on a trip to Africa accompanied by Regis Debray, charge de mission in the Elysee, met Thursday 6 August in Libreville with Goukouni Oueddei, president of the GUNT (Transitional National Unity Government of Chad). This meeting had been arranged by Mr Bongo, the president of Gabon. Mr Oueddei gave notice of his intention to send a memorandum to Mitterrand on the reconstruction of Chad and, according to Mr Penne, and elaborated on the "positive role" reserved for France in this project.

Coming after the sending of French experts to Ndjamena (LE MONDE of 6 August) and the missions carried out in Nairobi at the OAU [Organization of African Unity] summit, and in the Chadian capital by Mr Jean-Pierre Campredon, the emissary of the French Government, this meeting marks a new stage in the present rapprochement between Paris and the Chadian Government. President Bongo is one of the architects of this negotiation, despite his hostility--at least initially--to the Libyan military intervention on behalf of President Oueddei.

Penne and Debray, who have already been to Niamey and Cotonou, are to continue on to Brazzaville, Luanda, and Maputo, before returning to Paris via Djibouti.

Jean-Pierre Cot, deputy minister for cooperation and development, is himself supposed to go to Accra Saturday for a 48-hour official visit, following a 5-day official visit to Cameroon, during the course of which he had long talks with President Ahidjo. Mr Cot will then go to Senegal before returning to Paris 17 August. He should return to Africa 21-23 August for an official visit to Nigeria, where he will meet Shehu Shagari.

PRESIDENTIAL RESPONSIBILITIES RETAINED--Libreville, 20 Aug (AFP)--The forthcoming appointment of a prime minister and head of government should not be construed as an abdication or as paving the way for a possible succession, according to a communique published on Wednesday at the end of meeting of the Gabonese Democratic Party political bureau presided over by President Omar Bongo. The Gabonese head of state told the members of the political bureau that he was not renouncing his highest responsibilities: to ensure the leadership of the state, determine the national policy, ensure the continuity of the state and act as arbitrator and custodian of institutions. In this respect, the communique adds, the president of the republic still exercises supreme executive power. The prime minister will head the government while being responsible to the president of the republic, the Central Committee and the National Assembly. The meeting of the political bureau follows President Bongo's message to the nation on 16 August, in which he announced a review of the constitution. The prime minister and head of government probably will be appointed after the cabinet meeting today and the meetings of the Central Committee and National Assembly on Saturday. POLITICAL PARTIES' MERGER IS EXCITING COMMENT

Merger's Success Doubted

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 1 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Sam Clegg]

[Text]

THE wild excitement which has gripped some notable sections of the public in regard to the merging parties is distracting.

If you do not share this view I have no qualms about it but I am entitled to my views.

Since the Eastern Region youth wings of the five merging parties rather pressured the fusion, I have kept my ears to the ground, trying to discern the colour, size, shape and tenderness of the knees of the horse which is yet to appear on the horizon.

The horse may appear but the noise heralding its expected appearance is unnecessary.

Nothing stopped the five parties involved from doing what they are now trying to do right from the time the ban on political activities was lifted. Nor does anything stop them from merging now.

However, their often repeated charge of incompetence levelled against the Limann Administration is misleading and therefore I particularly find the noise around the merger distracting.

If anything the "merger party" is trying to give the People's National Party (PNP) its collective guilt. The guilt being the inability of any one of the five parties involved in the merger to win the last general and Presidential elections.

I know for certain that secretly the minority parties have been applauding the organisational ability of the PNP which enabled the party to win 71 out of the 140 Parliamentary seats.

All the furore about the Limann Administration's supposed failure is therefore just a political gimmick being applied by the opposers in the hope that their party will catch the eyes of the electorate in 1983.

So obsessed are the opposers in applying this ploy that even the attempts being made by the government fo find aid to help buttress efforts towards the resuscitation of the economy mean nothing to them at all.

The Vice-President's recent tour of Brazil, where he was able to sign a loan agreement running into million of dollars, is even seen as a waste just because he used the Presidential jet for the tour. The idea that anything initiated by the government is not right is disconcerting.

But surely a government that is gradually coming out of the mess created by immediate past governments cannot be easily written off.

Be that as it may what is being awaited now is 1983 when the "merger party" will pitch its strength against the PNP in elections.

Already, there is a school of thought that has made the merger party winner in 1983, as a result of the addition of the total votes cast for the five minority parties in the 1979 elections.

Contrary to this belief, the PNP is likely to make nonsense of the forecast of the book-makers.

For one thing Ghanaians are beginning to disabuse their minds of empty boasts and are perceiving things in their true perspective. For another a deep rooted party such as the PNP cannot be easily dislodged.

Looking at the composition of the "merger party", and its strength one is tempted to take the parties involved one after the other.

The Third Force Party (TFP) did not make any impact in the last elections. Its following, if any, must have evaporated into thin air and its present lost identity is not going to help the merger in any way. The top hierachy may be intact but one cannot say the same thing for the grass roots support.

The Popular Front Party (PFP), the biggest of the minorities, and its stronghold which is the Ashanti Region will certainly make the "merger party" functional.

This is good for democracy but beyond that there is no guarantee for nation-wide regional cleavage.

The Action Congress Party (ACP) is centrally regionalized. Its supporters' disrespect for the highest office of the land has become an albatross which the "merger party" will certainly hang around its neck.

The Ghanaian is no fool. Those who would like to rule must first learn to be ruled and I wish to add that they must also first learn to respect authority. Knowing the organizational ability of the PNP, it is likely that the trend in voting will sway in its favour in the Central Region.

The United National Convention (UNC) is thought of as comprising only defecting PFP members. Well, perhaps this is largely so at the top but not at the grass roots. Mr Harry Sawyerr's supporters, for example, cannot be said to be PFP defectors. And there are many more of such people in the UNC.

When the chips are down, the supporters are likely to go their various ways. At the moment there is a pressure group trying to suppress the fact that some UNC supporters have already opted for the PNP. But what good will that do on voting day?

From the ambit of a socialist manifesto the Social Democratic Front (SDF) has turned in the opposite direction to embrace a fusion with parties of different ideology, so to speak.

It is therefore not surprising that some of the founding members have kicked against its inclusion in the merger. The rebuff won't end there as it will certainly touch the grass roots.

Indeed the SDF alone seems to be giving a lot of headaches to Mr Victor Owusu. Recently at a political rally at Tema he was reported as having now taken a middle-of-the-road stance. No capitalism no socialism.

The SDF is certainly the problem child of the merger. There are so many issues which make the merger seem farcical but the case of the SDF tops them all.

By all means the new party is welcome but the noise being created around its formation must be turned into a dim. For as the saying goes "the race is not for the swift neither is the battle for the strong."

The year 1983 will come as surely as dawn follows pitch darkness but until then those in power must be given some peace to carry on their onerous task of repairing the wrecked economy.

Leadership Question Addressed

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 3 Aug 81 p 4

[Article by K. Cab Addae]

[Excerpts]

DOUBTLESSLY, the first major announcement about the "conclusion" of the merger of the five minority parties made to newsmen by Col. Frank George Bernasko (retired) on Tuesday June 3, was a disappointment.

But if as observers rightly pointed out, that announcement which came after nearly seven months negotiations was no more than a declaration of intent, the tit-bits that have been trickling in of late give proof of seriousness on the part of the negotiators.

Reactions to the whole affair have been varied, though. Some people, especially majority party members and ideologues, have said that the whole business is a non-starter. They think for example that if SDF can join with PFP then it means miracles can happen even in the twentieth century.

Some others, this time not just from majority party quarters, think the fact that it needed not less than five parties to pool forces against PNP, ipso facto acknowledges the PNP as a giant: the only viable party among the lot which contested the 1979 elections.

As such the "Merger Party" they say, would start from a position of weakness. True or False?

Next, some critics say if the object is to reduce the number of parties in circulation then it has misfired because already more parties are coming out i.e. Commoners (or is it communist?) party and Kwame Nyanteh's incoming Gold Coast Renaissance Party.

Whatever it is those engaged in the negotiations are hopeful that they would succeed, especially now that the minority parties have been able to defeat majority party motion for the acceptance of the budget.

That in itself may not provide hundred per cent certainty that the merged parties will win. But we may give them the benefit of doubt.

That benefit becomes even more realistic if one views the hurdles the parties have gone through before reaching the present milestone.

REALITY

So the merger is almost a reality, barring any political tricks from any contestant, and the major reaction from PNP quarters, per co-Comrade Kwame Agyei-Sakyi, Deputy National Education Secretary is that "we are not scared". Youthful General Secretary of PNP also says "we shall give them a thrashing of their lives".

And only last week the Vice-President called on Ghanaians to reject the merger because of "incosistent ideologies" of the parties in the merger.

To the supporters of the merger, especially the youth wings who seem to be in hurry more than their elders, their bother is whether the whole exercise will take off with enough strength to achieve the objectives of uprooting the Palm Tree at the polls. The whole fear centres around how to solve the leadership question.

That is one reason why some of them are worried about reported intrigues by some prospective leadership candidates.

On Monday July 3 Mr Obeng Manu, secretary general of TFP on behalf of his party hinted at "frantic attempts being made to pave the way for Mr Victor Owusu to emerge as the new leader.

Four days later three Popular Front Party MPs namely Hon. Alfred Badu Nkansah (Asunafo), Hon. S. K. A. Gyebi-Ofosu, better known among his colleagues as Presidential material (Birim Anafo) and Hon. Daniel Donkor (Atwima Mponua) scorned Mr Obeng Manu's effusions.

The writer would not like to assess the chances of the candidates at this stage. But it seems that with Paa Willie now wearing the garb of an elder statesman in the final analysis it will be MR LONGER EXPERIENCE versus MR DYNAMISM with the Northern factor still to be reckoned with and it is hoped whoever wins would have been popularly elected.

Lest I forget: should the new party be registered in a week or so what will happen to the Minority MPs in view of Article 79 (i) of the Constitution which says: "A Member of Parliament shall lose his seat in Parliament if he leaves the party of which he was a member at the time of election to join ANOTHER PARTY?" (caps mine).

PFP LEADER ON PRESENT ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

AB210900 Accra Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] The leader of the Popular Front Party [PFP], Victor Owusu, has urged Western investors not to write off Ghana because of her present economic difficulties. He said despite the failure of the present government to initiate moves likely to inspire either the people or interested foreigners with hope and confidence, this is no reason why the country should be written off. Victor Owusu was addressing a news conference at the London International Press Center.

He said although Ghana is a country of peaceful people with a lot of resources and capable of great achievements, she still needs assistance and her friends--especially in the West--should spare no efforts in providing the help. Victor Owusu assured foreign investors that there is a viable alternative in Ghana today to the present administration. He said when the time comes to rule, his party and those who share its ideals and programs will demonstrate their ability to rebuild Ghana. They will present to the world a more balanced and favorable picture much nearer the truth than has so far been painted of Ghana.

On measures to improve the economy, Victor Owusu said there is an urgent need for the government to end the rapid increases in Ghana's money supply which accounts for the high inflation rate. And in tackling the country's acute economic problems an ordinary mere devaluation will, however, not do in the prevailing circumstances. The economic difficulties can be tackled by what he termed the management of the economy, agriculture, government expenditure and the currency. While stressing the urgent need to rationalize the management of the economy to achieve efficiency, Victor Owusu said this entails the coordination of Ghana's economic policies, bringing some discipline and order into government's finances while cutting waste at all levels.

FISH WASTED--Several tonnes of herrings which were landed at the Tema Fishing Harbour at the weekend have gone rotten in the hatches of fishing vessels. The fish, brought in by vessels of the Ghana Cooperative Fishermen Association, Soli and Nova Fisheries, as well as canoe fishermen, who are of late reaping a bumper harvest in the Tema area, cannot be discharged because the only cold storage facility of the State Fishing Corporation (SFC) is filled to capacity. Stranded fish mongers who cashed in on the bumper to buy hundreds of crates of herrings apparently for salting, smoking and drying, were prepared to offer a crate of 35-kilo weight for anything below ¢209 as there were no lorries to convey the herrings to town due to transportation difficulties. CULTURAL AGREEMENT WITH GDR--Ghana and the German Democratic Republic (GDR) yesterday signed a cultural agreement under which the GDR would help Ghana in areas to be specified by Ghana. Mr Thomas Abilla, Minister of Sports and Culture, signed for Ghana while Mr H. Denzler, GDR Ambassador to Ghana, signed for his country. Picture shows Mr Abilla exchanging copies of the agreement with Mr Denzler soon after the ceremony at the Ministry of Culture and Sports in Accra. Mr Abilla revealed that the country would soon be sending cultural and sports teams to train in the GDR and hoped that the agreement would be of benefit to both countries. Mr Denzler said the relations between the two countries had always been cordial and promised to explore avenues that would help strengthen the relationship existing between the two countries, especially in culture and sports. STRONGER TIES WITH GDR URGED--The Ghana-German Democratic Republic Friendship Society has called for the strengthening of the joint commission for cooperation on scientific, cultural, technical and other related matters between Ghana and the GDR. This was contained in a press statement issued at the weekend on the occasion of the 11th anniversary of the founding of the society which fell on Saturday. In their opinion strengthening of the commission would enable Ghana to share in the rich experiences of the GDR in overcoming some of her problems. The society has, therefore, called for relations stronger than those that existed before February 1966. Ghana was one of the first African countries south of the Sahara to establish links with the GDR, even before her independence in 1957. The GDR "acknowledges her position as a true ally of all oppressed peoples and calls on Ghana and other developing nations to join the countries of the socialist community in their search for world peace based on equality and security," it said. Mr Abilla made the presentation to Dr Victor Narh, president of the society, on behalf of the Bulgarian Cultural Committee. The agreement, signed for the Ghana-Bulgarian Friendship Society by Mr Ken Daniels, general secretary of the society, provides for the promotion of cultural and educational relations and the organization of joint activities to mark the national days of both nations. Under the accord, Ghanaian member students of the society will be admitted to higher educational institutions in Bulgaria for specialized courses. TUC INDUSTRIAL PEACE PLEDGE--Mr Sarpong Boateng, acting administrative secretary of the Trade Union Congress, has repeated the TUC's commitment to total industrial peace in the country. Mr Boateng was speaking at the closing session of a two-week advanced trade union leadership course at the Accra Labour College jointly sponsored by the TUC, the Public Service International and the Friedrich-Ebert Foundation of West Germany for 26 participants drawn from governmental unions of the congress. He stressed that in this period of the country's history, it was incumbent upon the leadership from all sectors of the manifold problems facing the nation could be attacked from a positive standpoint. On behalf of the executive board, Mr Boateng thanked the Public Service International and the Foundation for co-sponsoring the course, assuring them that their contributions towards the qualitative growth of trade unions in Ghana would always be recognized. Mr Hans-Wener Loeber, the Foundation's representative, observed that the traditional role of trade unionism was to find solutions to the problems facing the working class in order to improve their standard of living. This, he cautioned, could not be achieved if the leaders and the workers were not united. Mr J.M. Hegarty, PSI African representative, praised the TUC for its democratic approval to raise the living standard of its members. [Excerpts] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 4 Aug 81 p 8]

JOINT BRAZILIAN VENTURES EQUIPMENT--Two new factories are to be set up at Buipe near Tamale and Takoradi under a $16 million Brazilian loan agreement. Construction work is to start soon on the two projects, a lime factory to be sited at (Bute) and a wall and floor tile factory at Takoradi. The projects are joint ventures of the Bank for Housing and Construction and a Brazilian firm, (Ceramica Codeiro). Some of the machinery have arrived at Takoradi Harbor and the offloading is being supervised by the managing assistant to the Brazilian company, Mr Eduardo Leao. He told our western region correspondent that the offloading exercise, which should have taken 5 days to complete, will now take about 18 days. This will cost his company about $10,000 a day for the delay of the ship in Ghana. OFFICIAL DISCUSSES PORTUGUESE CADRE TRAINING

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 15 Jul 81 p 8

[Report on interview with Vasco Cabral, minister of economic coordination and planning, date and place not given]

[Excerpts] On his return from consultation in Geneva on the occasion of Guinea-Bissau's admission to the United Nations as an underdeveloped country, Comrade Vasco Cabral, minister of economic coordination and planning, spent several days in Portugal, where he made various contacts regarding cooperation. As we learned in our interview, those contacts included a meeting with the Portuguese agency for cooperation to discuss provision of cadres for Guinea-Bissau, a meeting with the secretary of state for employment and a visit to the Zabregas Professional Training Center (where Guinea-Bissau cadres will be trained), a meeting with the Portuguese secretary of state for planning, a meeting with the Scientific Council of the Higher Institute of Economics to discuss creation of an undergraduate school of economics and finance in Guinea-Bissau, and a meeting with the directors of the magazine ECONOMIA E SOCIALISMO regarding the economic and financial stabilization program being drafted by Guinea-Bissau.

Explaining in detail, Minister Cabral told us first about his meeting with the Portuguese cooperation officials, with whom he evaluated the situation regarding provision of cadres for our country, particularly for the MCEP [Ministry of Economic Coordination and Planning]. "This meeting was important," he said, "because it enabled us not only to clear up the status of some cadres we wanted here and who had been delayed, but also to open broader prospects for cadre training for our enterprises and for MCEP activities."

In his meeting with Dr Alberto Regueira, secretary of state for planning, a number of bases were established for possible cooperation in the training of cadres for MCEP activities.

"I also met with the Scientific Council of the Higher Institute of Economics," the comrade minister reported, "in particular, with the president and some professors, to consider creation of an undergraduate school of economics and finance in Guinea-Bissau next year. I also visited the Zabregas Professional Training Center, and I met with Dr Luis Morales, secretary of state for employment, with whom I discussed the question of training our cadres at the center. A number of prospects were opened, and we are prepared to use them to the best advantage. There will be training not only for MCEP cadres, but we think that all the other economic agencies, to which we will be giving this information, could use these opportunities that have been offered to us to train cadres with practically no expense to Guinea-Bissau."

The Xabregas Center, with branches scattered throughout Portugal, is linked to the Secretariat of State for Employment and admits students who have completed at least the fourth class and fifth year, for such courses as metalworking, electrical mechanics, industrial design and accounting.

In his contacts, the minister of planning also consulted with a representative of the SORES sugar company about problems involving sugar supplies for our country. According to Dr Cabral, the firm is "prepared to send its technicians here to study and to offer specific recommendations that we can put to use in our Gambiel sugar project."

CAPITAL BUDGET ESTIMATES APPROVED--Bissau, 22 Aug (AFP)--The Economic Council of Guinea-Bissau's ruling revolutionary council has approved the 1981 capital budget estimates. The budget lays emphasis on the agricultural sector which is now considered top priority in the country's economic development, an official communique indicated. The basis of the budget's investment estimates is the budget drawn up by the former regime of President Luis Cabral who was overthrown on 14 November 1980. That budget which totalled 4.876 billion Guinean pesos (about 41.5 billion CFA francs), gave priority to prestigious projects and industrial projects of doubtful economic output, according to the present authorities in Guinea-Bissau. However, no radical changes were made on the budget drawn by the former regime because most of the projects are in the process of execution, the communique adds. But the capital budget will be totally reviewed to bring it in line with the recurrent budget, taking into account the priority of each ministry, concludes the communique. HOUPHOUET-BOIGNY ADDRESSES PARTY MEETINGS

AB201424 Abidjan Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The head of state and chairman of the party recently presided over meetings of the Political Bureau and the Steering Committee. The following communique was published following these two meetings:

As he announced on his return from Europe on 12 August, the head of state, President Felix Houphouet-Boingy, who is also chairman of the party presided over a meeting of the Political Bureau on Monday, 17 August and over that of the party's Steering Committee on Tuesday, 18 August. These two meetings were held at the presidential palace in the presence of all the members of the government. Both meetings were devoted to the same subjects. There were three main points on the agenda: first, a report on the president's recent friendly, working visit to Paris at the invitation of French President Francois Mitterrand; secondly, the forthcoming conference of heads of state in Mexico on the North-South dialogue and finally the social situation in Ivory Coast in the light of the serious crisis now facing the entire world.

Concerning the second point on the agenda, the president of the republic confirmed his forthcoming participation in the Mexico summit conference on the North-South dialogue to be held next October. The Political Bureau expressed happiness about the choice of our president to participate in this important international conference which will be attended by eight heads of state of industrialized countries and 14 heads of state and government of developing countries including four from Africa. This choice honors both Ivory Coast and the whole of Africa. At this conference, the president of the republic--supported by his African colleagues--will again utter words of wisdom, realism and justice.

Finally concerning the third point on the agenda, that is the effects of the world crisis on our country, the president of the republic, who--when in Europe--thoroughly examined the international economic situation which is mainly dominated by monetary disorder, inflation and unemployment, made a long report emphasizing that this crisis does not spare any country. The head of state disclosed, in this connection, that as far as he is concerned, Ivory Coast can honorably weather this storm on three main conditions: the first condition is to maintain social peace by closing our ranks in unity and harmony and by demonstrating patience and understanding in facing our difficulties. The social peace being enjoyed by our country is the first condition for progress and it must be maintained and consolidated.

The second condition is that we must work harder. Ivorians must stand up and redouble their zeal to work. Only serious and organized work will enable us to overcome the situation and to achieve self-sufficiency in food, which is so essential to the developing countries. Party delegations will hold meetings throughout the national territory in order to launch a vast general information, training and mobilization campaign to enable us to pursue in unity and a sense of responsibility the path of progress despite the crisis. In this connection, the party's Steering Committee expressed happiness that the confidence being enjoyed by our country in its relations with all the developed countries has never been compromised even in these difficult moments despite the behavior and attitude of some national cadres who, instead of having the courage of clearly explaining to our compatriots the causes of the internatinal crisis affecting us, have been indulging in cheap demagogy. The Steering Committee denounced this attitude and these methods which are foreign to our country and invited the persons indulging in this practice to put a stop to this behavior which is not in the general interest.

The third condition is that we should live within our means. Ivorians have not enough sense of saving and of reasonable spending. It is urgent that a new mentality should emerge, a mentality of crisis which will make each and everyone to live within his means and with moderation in order to overcome the situation.

Very conscious of the social situation prevailing in our country and which affects the lives of our compatriots, the head of state decided that the examination of certain demands and compalints presented to the government should be continued. Moreover, missions have been dispatched to certain brotherly countries and a concerted work is in progress.

After examination of the results of this work and the conclusions of the studies that have been going on for some time now within the commissions of the Political Bureau, the head of state will make an important statement to the country. The party chairman will announce at the same time the measures which could be taken so that Ivory Coast may be able to continue its march toward progress and prosperity in unity, social peace and harmony.

SECURITY MINISTER DISCUSSES IMMIGRATION, INTERNAL SECURITY

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 27-28 Jul 81

[Report on address by Minister of Internal Security Ouassenan given 27 July]

[27 Jul 81, p 4]

> [Excerpts] People in all walks of life in the Ivory Coast are concerned by the mounting lawlessness and criminality. Such is the feeling we had last Friday evening at the Treichville Congress House where Mr Ouassenan Kone, minister of internal security, was holding a conference on a topic of burning interest, namely "Security and the Ivorian Citizen."

Why does the Ivorian feel insecure? asks Mr Ouassenan Kone. What can be done to remedy such a situation?

In response to these questions, Mr Kone went back over the history of our region. Presently, despite poor world conditions resulting from the uncontrolled upward price spiral of oil, and especially because of the continuing and unacceptable deterioration in the terms of trade, which has affected us very seriously of late, particularly in the brutal collapse of prices for our key exports, namely cacao, coffee, and wood,--the Ivory Coast, more than most states on the continent, attracts and will continue to attract more and more nationals of other states less well-off than ourselves. Among these migrants the great majority of whom are good workers, excellent economic actors who play a significant and honorable part in the development of our country, unfortunately there has been an infiltration of certain "black sheep" who are our thieves and pickpockets, and who shamelessly, brazenly and inhumanely attack--often armed with weapons--peaceful citizens who are simply trying to earn an honest living.

How many Ivorians, sometimes even including high-level officials, have suggested to me that we hermetically seal our borders, and even the additional measures of round-ups followed by the depositing of non-Ivorians at our border?

There has been a deliberate decision to have a pro-immigration policy. Obviously every policy has advantages and drawbacks. One must first of all understand what they are and then try to cultivate the advantages and eliminate or at least diminish the drawbacks.

In the Ivory Coast, one must implement a policy of populating.

Statistics show us that the birth rate in the Ivory Coast is about 5 percent, and the death rate is about 2.6 percent. Thus our rate of demographic growth from births alone is about 2.4 percent. And even these figures are misleading, because of the large number of non-Ivorian women who deliver in our lying-in hospitals. Thus our growth rate from Ivorian births alone is in reality less than 2.4 percent. Nevertheless, for the purpose of discussing our labor theory, let us take that as the rate. We realize that in order to double our population by births alone it would take 31 years. But very rapidly this argument in itself would very quickly be shot down because of changed attitudes. If in our villages our parents used to accept all the children that Providence provided, this is no longer the case today, especially in the cities. The difficulties of modern life oblige couples today to introduce into domestic life new notions of family planning and, even better, pure and simple limitation of births. The contraceptive methods are there (the pill, sterilization, and others) to respond to these new needs. We must also note that the problems confronting parents at the start of each new school year (cost of supplies, enrollment, problems of finding a place for the average student...) are such that a good number of couples do not want to have more than three or four children.

Moreover, young couples are less and less inclined to agree to raise children who are not their own, because then they can better care for their own offspring. With everyone holding the same convictions, birth control will very rapidly become an everyday practice. Thus, it would be a mistake to claim that this annual growth rate of 2.4 percent can remain constant. On the contrary, with enrollment problems and the tragedies they engender at the beginning of every new school year, as already indicated above, with the concern everyone has to live better, since one only lives once, this growth rate is more likely to decline. Which in plain words means that the Ivorian population will not necessarily double in 31 years.

Now in economics we learn that for a country to really develop, three factors must work together: gray matter, capital, and manpower.

Thanks to the foresight of President Felix Houphouet-Boigny, we can proudly say that we have worthy cadres in the Ivory Coast. Mr Oussenan Kone then recalled that it was in 1946 that then-deputy Houphouet-Boigny sent 146 young students to France to provide the Ivorian administration with its first cadres.

With respect to the second factor, capital, Mr Kone underlined that providers of funds are not lacking in the Ivory Coast.

What seems to be lacking is the third factor, that is the muscle power, in a word, abundant and sufficient manpower.

And it is in this field that the policy of our country seems to upset ill-informed people. One hears frequently from the lips of the profane the remark that there are too many foreigners in the Ivory Coast. Very often we are reproached, as I have already indicated above, for not having taken the necessary measures to round up and expel the foreigners and seal up our borders, because most of the malefactors come from the outside. Certainly, many malefactors are foreigners, and the statistics show that the rate of major crimes is much lower among Ivorians than among foreigners. But that is understandable. On the one hand, we have citizens who are at home, who thus live in established and well-adapted structures. On the other, we are dealing with individuals, a majority of them rural types, who leave their village, their family, their traditional homes, who are thus deracinated, in order to live in a city far from home, with no preparation or previous information. This phenomenon of deracination is also found among Ivorians who abandon their village to come to the city. They very rapidly adopt lifestyles that are very different from their village customs. These newcomers are subject to the same unwholesome influences which assail non-Ivorians and are thus led to react, unfortunately, in the same reprehensible way as those whom we call foreigners, and thus become deracinated in their own country. With regard to non-Ivorians, the President rightly thinks that the three must not blind us to the forest.

If we have a few rogues, who slip in amongst a large number of good people who are trying to earn their daily bread honestly by the sweat of their brow and are participating thereby in the development of our country, we can say that the percentage is not disastrously large, and it is up to the security forces to take the measures necessary to limit the harmful activities of these individuals.

If two or three foreigners are arrested every week for theft, sometimes armed, how many good, honest, hardworking individuals, by contrast, are we using in our workyards, on our plantations, in our houses?

If out of every 100 non-Ivorians who come into the Ivory Coast, five are bad elements, it is those five who will be talked about, while no one will pay any attention to the 95 percent people who will be contributing to our economic and demographic growth. It is thus out of concern for manpower, for the Ivory Coast's demographic growth, that the head of state has deliberately chosen this policy of open borders. The ministry of internal security, which he created expressly to deal with this new situation, is thus charged not to reject workers who come here, but to seek out continually and regularly those among them, and also those Ivorians, who are the black sheep in our midst.

This explains the round-ups and above all the "blows of the fist" which we carry out from time to time when the situation requires it, and which are followed by systematic identification and the turning over to Justice of the undesirables who have been sought and apprehended.

[Excerpts] Can our good will, our sincerity, our feelings of brotherhood toward all citizens everywhere by itself act as a magic wand to make their animosities toward us disappear? To believe that is to fail to understand human wickedness and egoism. Nevertheless, one thing is certain: we profit enormously from our helping hand policy. And in terms of our security, we note with satisfaction that at the present time no state seems willing to attack us openly. On the contrary, what we as Ivorians must be alert to spot is subversive activities that might be carried out on our territory, brought in from outside by those who do not want to see us progress. These subversive activities, if we were not on guard, could result in an uprising which in turn, and to the misfortune of Ivorians and of all our real friends, engender a civil war.

Narcotics and all sorts of drugs that one country injects into another country in order to undermine the fighting and creative spirit of its population, and particularly of its youth: all these activities destroy the very foundations of the nation. "Disinformation aimed at civilians and psychological warfare aimed at soldiers, consisting in the circulation of false rumors or intentionally distorted and erroneous information, with the precise intent of shaking the morale of the people and sowing confusion in their hearts in order to create distrust, or even repulsion toward the country's institutions, is a part of the same destabilization technique.

Stirring up certain classes of the people over the least little thing and inciting them to join strike movements or demonstrate in the streets or commit acts of vandalism are all actions that impair the country's security.

For a jealous nation or one with hegemonic ambitions to send terrorists into the territory of another nation to organize acts of sabotage, which often result in the destruction of certain sensitive sites or certain public buildings with loss of human life, is a manifestation of the same strategy. The organization of attempts on the lives of eminent personalities in a particular country, with the aim of depriving that country of its patriotic and experienced leaders also constitutes an act of destabilization.

Patent and numerous examples which other countries have experienced, and which have led to practically inextricable predicaments, make the front page of the newspapers and are right under our noses, and we have no need to cite specific examples.

These are all unfortunate examples which have led the president of the republic to say that if he had to choose between disorder and injustice he would choose injustice, for an injustice can always be rectified. But when disorder is established there is practically nothing that can be done.

We always know how a strike or social agitation begins, but we never know how it will end.

We know where a demonstration against the authorities starts, but we never know where it will stop.

In the interest of our common fatherland, the Ivory Coast, we should all make sure that we are never the one who sets off the little spark that could start a row, because with our 100 different ethnic groups, with all different kinds of temperaments, and especially considering that our enemies sometimes pretend to be our friends, we cannot know how far the fire would spread and what would become of our country."

In conclusion, Mr Ouassenan Kone said that security was nowadays considered to be a synonym of peace and social progress. To establish real social peace, we would have to go beyond the concept of security and seek social harmony at all levels--in the households, the families, the schools, the streets, the factories, in relations between people and between different social groups. It thus requires a general policy of dialogue among all public authorities in the definition and execution of their plans of action.

The security forces have been and remain today the visible guardians of the law, and are resolved to spare no effort to provide security to all citizens and to their goods, in order that our dear country, the Ivory Coast, will continue its harmonious development in a spirit of order, union, discipline, and work.

REGIONAL SOLAR ENERGY CENTER--Under the chairmanship of Henri Konan Bedie, president of the national assembly, the members of parliament met yesterday in plenary session to vote the passage of seven measures. The ratification of the Act Establishing the Regional Solar Energy Center will go toward satisfying the demand of non-oil-producing countries for an energy replacement for oil in order to reduce the harmful effects of the oil crisis on their economic activities. This center is primarily intended to promote and stimulate research and utilization of solar energy. Our government has shown great interest in this and is considering offering Yamoussoukro as a site for the center, because it is a town located in an environment conducive to research and also because several complexes and big scientific colleges are already established there or will be built in the near future. Also, ratification of the act will increase our country's chances to become a primary location for, and beneficiary of the advantages that will be offered by, the training of Ivorian scientists and technicians. ASSEMBLY APPROVES PENAL CODE--The work of the first regular session of the national assembly, begun last April, came to a conclusion yesterday. During the course of the session which was to mark the end of their work, six bills which were the subject of debates several weeks ago were passed by the members of Parliament. Among these bills was one that was long-awaited dealing with the penal code: a juridical landmark of more than 500 articles, designed to prevent and repress "deviations of all sorts," which, according to the chief committee reporter for the committee on general and institutional affairs, Mr N'Takpe N'Cho, now more than ever before are a constant threat to the public peace and individual security. The new penal law, as it is described by the deputies, is marked by "a subtle balance between guarantees of individual freedom and the protection of society." It thus perfectly synthesizes, as explained by Henri Konan Bedie, president of the national assembly, in his closing speech, the fundamental objective which every organized society must establish: the reconciliation of freedom and public order. In every instance and in all its provisions, the new law appears to be "a courageous stand against criminality" that is constantly on the increase. ELECTRICTY TIE-UP TO GHANA--The work of the third meeting of the committee on interconnection of power grids between Ghana and the Ivory Coast, which started on Tuesday 21 July, was completed the following day on a note of general satisfaction. When the work, which will start in September, is completed, the Ivory

Coast will have 140 km of high-tension line and Ghana, 70. The two networks will meet at Elubo, an Agni village on the border between the two countries, in the southeast part of Aboisso department. We recall that the first negotiations which were to lead in 1975 to the signing of a protocol accord were begun with the visit of the EECI [Ivory Coast Electric Power Company] general manager of the VRA (Volta River Authority). Subsequently, the two parties contracted with the Tractionel firm to perform feasibility studies for the project. The positive results supporting execution of the project resulted in the creation on 29-30 April 1981 of a Joint Interconnection Committee, whose president was Dr Quartey, then the general manager of the VRA. Wednesday, at the final meeting, Mr Lambert Konan, who has been named by the two delegations to preside over the destiny of the joint interconnection committee, disclosed that "Ghana and the Ivory Coast will henceforth have an indispensable tool for the rational exploitation of their energy resources in general, and their hydroelectric resources in particular." In his conclusion, Mr Lambert Konan, after having emphasized the efforts made in the field of training the cadres needed in the future to service the two networks, expressed his pleasure at the fact that this project combines the "basic objectives of the UPDEA (Union of African Producers and Distributors of Energy), which has always worked toward solving the energy problems of the continent." We note that the transformer station is located at Prestea, a Ghanaian village located not far from Accra. [Excerpts] [Abidjan FRATERNITE-MATIN in French 26 Jul 81 p 3] 9516

PLANNED SOUBRE HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT--The Ivory Coast is going to build itself in the next few years a sixth hydroelectric dam, the Soubre, which will follow Ayame I and II, Kossou, Taabo, and Buyo. The development of our country requires this new project, which itself is integrated into an overall plan drawn up by EECI [Ivory Coast Electric Power Company] which aims at providing, by about the year 2000, the energy production "necessary both for the imperative industrialization of the country and for indispensable ordinary domestic and public consumption" by means of a series of hydroelectric projects. The Soubre dam, work on which will start at the end of 1982, or about one year after the signing of the financing agreement which should take place within the next 2 months, will cost about 168 billion [CFA francs?]. It will be located 80 km downstream from the Buyo hydroelectric project, 120 km north of the port of San Pedro, and 90 km east of the Ivorian-Liberian border. The dam will be built on the Sassandra, the Ivory Coast's third largest river in terms of the area of its watershed basin (74,500 km-square) but the largest in terms of its energy potential (6.575 billion KWH, or 53 percent of the nation's hydroelectric potential). The current project optimizes the potential of the site chosen, the Nawa falls, with an installed power of 360,00 KW corresponding to an annual production of 1.623 million KWH. MULTI-BANK DEVELOPMENT LOANS--The conference hall of the ministry of economic and financial affairs was the site late yesterday morning of the signing of 10 loan agreements totalling about F CFA 12.638 billion for the financing of major infrastructure projects in the country's interior. Ivory Coast was represented at the ceremony by Abdoulaye Kone, the minister of economic and financial affairs, and Mr Leon Naka, general manager of the Autonomous Amortization Fund. The loan is intended to finance the following projects: 1) A sum of approximately F CFA 3.36 billion coming from a consortium of abanks headed by American Express will partially cover work on the Agnibilekrou-Bondoukou road. 2) The work of equipping Bouake airport will be funded by BFCE [French Foreign Trade Bank] and BNP [National Bank of Paris] at the level of F CFA 3.197 billion. 3) Finally, the completion of the work on the Bouake road system and airport runway will be financed up to a total of about F CFA 6.341 billion with a credit provided by Credit Lyonnais, Credit Chimique, and Banque Worms. ANNIVERSARY OF 1ST BATTALION--A ceremony commemorating the creation of the first battalion of the armed forces took place Saturday 1 August. This event took place at Camp Akouedo. Everything started with the presentation of the battalion to the deputy chief of staff, Col Zinsou, who passed the troops in review. Lt Col Kone, as the acting commander of the first military region of the first battalion gave a historical account. This was the occasion for that high-ranking officer to render a stirring homage to those who have over the years led the battalion: Col Oulai (Ret.), General Issouf Kone, the initiator of this ceremony, who is currently Ivory Coast's Ambassador to Algeria, and Col Ory. But several days previously, athletic competitions took place, in which all the units at Camp Akouedo took part. "This year," remarked Capt Bakayoko, one of the organizers of the commemoration, "there was something new in the way the athletics were organized; instead of only one cup as in the past, we had three." The armored reconnaissance squadron carried off the handball and general athletics cups. [Excerpts] [Abidjan FRATERNITE-MATIN in French 7 Aug 81 p 7] 9516

MILITARY OFFICERS' GRADUATION--Minister of State Mathieu Ekra, representing the chief of state Saturday, presided at the Bouake Armed Forces School at the commencement of 52 officer-candidates from the "Volonte" and "Entente" classes. These officers belong to seven African countries: Ivory Coast, Gabon, Central African Republic, Niger, Senegal, Togo, and Upper Volta. The ceremony took place before the ministers of defense, internal security, and the navy, as well as high-ranking officers, elected officials of the region, and various lay and clerical personalities. This Saturday, 25 July, will remain a memorable date in the military careers of 45 second-lieutenants who have just received from the hands of Mathieu Ekra, the minister of state, their graduating commissions. They are 19 Ivorians from the "Entente" class, 2 Gabonese, 3 Central Africans, 4 Nigeriens, 7 Senegalese, and 8 Togolese. The first part of the proceedings was the graduation ceremony conducted by the minister of defense and civil service, of the class of 52 officer-candidates who have just finished their first year of study and whose sponsor is Henri Konan Bedie, president of the national assembly. Those officer-candidates are the nationals of seven African countries, namely 17 Ivorians, 5 Gabonese, 3 Central Africans, 2 Nigeriens, 4 Voltans, 6 Senegalese, and 15 Togolese. The EFA [Armed Forces School] is a permanent training center for the personnel of the armed forces. It provides retraining and supplementary training for these personnel. Two categories of civilians are admitted: active duty officer-candidates, and active-duty NCO candidates. Recruitment of officer-candidates from age 18 to age 25 who hold a BAC [baccalaureate] is by means of a competition. Applications from those intending to compete in the competition which takes place in May should be submitted by 15 February to the ministry of defense and civil service. There are separate written and oral examinations. For NCO's the age requirement is 18-25, and candidates must have first-rate minds. Applications should be submitted in October and the competition takes place in December. [Excerpts] [Abidjan FRATERNITE-MATIN in French 28 Jul 81 p 7] 9516

NEW BATTALION COMMANDER--Col Raoul Loba Yede, formerly with the Yamoussoukro presidential guard, is now the commander of the 2nd battalion and the second military region of Daloa. He thus replaces Col Marcel Dey, who has been transferred to the G-3. The ceremony of transferring command took place in the presence of Gen Bertin Zeze Baroan, chief of staff of FANCI [National Armed Forces School of the Ivory Coast], Prefect Daouda Coulibaly, Col Gustave Ouphouet Kouassi, palace military commander of the presidential guard and the militia, and head aide-de-camp of the chief of state, Mgr Pierre Marie Coty, bishop of Daloa, and high-ranking military officers and agency heads. After the transfer of command ceremony, the soldiers of the second battalion made up a "farewell flagon" at the officers' mess. This was the occasion for Maj Gouamba, second in command of the second battalion, to praise the inherent and intellectual caliber of Col Marcel Dey, who carried out his duties well over the last 2 years. MACHEL HOSTS BANQUET FOR SWEDISH PRIME MINISTER

EA171148 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 0430 GMT 17 Aug 81

[Text] In Maputo last night President Samora Moises Machel voiced the Mozambique people's condemnation of the irresponsible decision of the present U.S. administration to press on with the manufacture of the neutron bomb. Field Marshal Samora Machel stressed that by refusing to ratify the SALT II agreements, the U.S. Government is creating conditions for a world war. He said that the United States is challenging international public opinion.

Our revolution's supreme leader was speaking at a banquet he hosted yesterday in honor of Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin, who is currently making a friendly official visit to Mozambique. The ties of cooperation existing between Mozambique and Sweden were described by President Samora Machel as a logical continuation of the solidarity forged during the national liberation struggle, which is based on healthy and promising foundations. In order to enable cooperation to grow and become strong we need to strengthen it continually with vigor and determination so as to make it a solid future asset, Field Marshal Samora Machel said. He later said that Sweden's participation in industry, mineral exploitation and agriculture proves and reactivates the friendship between our two peoples.

President Samora Machel also reiterated Mozambique's support for the struggle of the peoples of East Timor and Western Sahara. He called for withdrawal from those territories by the Indonesian and Moroccan occupation forces in order to facilitate their people's right to self-determination and independence.

In reply, the Swedish prime minister said that despite the geographical situation, his country feels obligated to solidarize with the liberation struggle in southern Africa. Thorbjorn Falladin also stressed that Sweden is ready to give more support to the efforts being made by our country for its reconstruction and development.

The banquet hosted by President Samora Machel for the Swedish prime minister was attended by representatives of the FRELIMO Party, the government and mass organizations.

INCREASING SWEDISH ASSISTANCE REVIEWED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 28 Jul 81 p 3

[Report on interview with Swedish Ambassador Finn Bergstrand by Jose Pinto de Sa; date and place not specified]

[Excerpts] Sweden is the chief source of economic assistance to the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique].

Since 1965, when the first Swedish contribution was made to the Mozambique Institute in Dar es Salaam, Sweden has given the Mozambican people about 7 million contos.

In Ambassador Finn Bergstrand's opinion, Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin's upcoming visit to the RPM will confirm the growing cooperation between the two countries.

In 1980, Sweden was the major source of economic assistance to Mozambique, providing more than 1.25 million contos.

Finn Bergstrand, Sweden's ambassador to Mozambique, emphasized that for this year the amount has been increased to almost 1.5 million contos. Finn Bergstrand explained: "It is a gift, not a loan to be repaid. I want to emphasize that that is what Sweden means by aid."

The Swedish ambassador explained further: "About 560,000 contos represent direct aid in cash. It is what we call Import Support. This involves money that Mozambique uses as it wishes to pay for imports in any sector."

Explaining the kinds of Swedish aid to Mozambique, Ambassador Bergstrand continued: "Another portion of the budget constitutes the so-called Consultation Fund, and in 1981 it will total about 175,000 contos. This is a fund to be used by Mozambique to pay expert consultants for various projects."

That fund has already financed a large consulting project for surveying the existing situation in the transportation sector nationwide. After agriculture, transportation constitutes the most important field of cooperation between Sweden and the RPM.

In the same field, Sweden is involved in consulting services for improving the national airports, technical and administrative cooperation with the LAM [Mozambique Airlines], and the reorganization of coastal navigation.

The ambassador also discussed Swedish participation in consultation services for the future national telecommunications system and construction of the Cabora Bassa 2 hydroelectric plant.

Finn Bergstrand pointed out: "The biggest project using Swedish financing is, however, in the sector of agriculture. We are participating jointly with the other Nordic countries in a program known as MONAP [expansion unknown]. Swedish participation exceeded 300,000 contos in 1980." That Nordic program comprises about 20 different projects scattered around the country.

After detailing the aid granted in the form of Import Support and the Consultation Fund, the Swedish ambassador emphasized that there is also the Personnel Fund, which amounts to about 35,000 contos.

He explained: "This consists of supplying the Mozambican Government with the foreign-exchange portion of funds for recruiting foreign technical personnel." He added that about 1,000 cooperation workers are partially paid by that means.

We asked: "Are they exclusively Swedish cooperation workers?"

"Not at all! For that matter, none of them is Swedish. About 60 percent are Portuguese, and another 40 percent are South Americans."

After also mentioning cooperation in the field of education, the ambassador talked last about the forestry sector, where Swedish technology is traditionally tops. Commenting on the Manica industrial forestry project, which has already begun to be established by IFLOMA E.E. [expansion unknown], he said: "This is a big project being financed jointly by a Swedish grant, a loan from the Arab Bank for African Economic Development, and the Mozambican Government."

We remarked: "So there is solid cooperation between the two countries."

Ambassador Bergstrand said: "Certainly! Between the last two budgets there has been a considerable increase. And for this year, incidentally, it was the largest increase received by any country receiving Swedish aid. Allowing for inflation, Mozambique was the only country to show a real increase. Cooperation between the two countries is certainly increasing."

"In my country, we follow the problems of southern Africa with great interest." After emphasizing that the decision to support Mozambique was unanimous among the various Swedish political parties, the ambassador said that Sweden also cooperates with Tanzania, Zimbabwe, Angola, Zambia, and Botswana.

Finn Bergstrand said: "Sweden shares Mozambican viewpoints concerning the South African regime and wants to contribute, as far as it can, toward helping the peoples of southern Africa achieve political and economic independence."

And he concluded by saying: "I am certain that our prime minister and your president will have much to talk about on a common basis."

DECREE OF STATE JURISDICTION OVER PRECIOUS METALS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Jul 81 p 3

[Decree No 11/81 of the Council of Ministers dated 25 July 1981 on the marketing and exporting of precious metals]

> [Text] Following our publication yesterday of Decree No 10/81 regulating the trade in and exports of the country's natural resources, we are printing below Decree No 11/81 concerning the marketing and exporting of gold and silver.

Decree No 11/81 Dated 25 July

Considering the desirability of establishing clearly the regulations that must govern the domestic marketing and the exporting of gold and silver and the stockpiling of those precious metals by centralizing not only the processing and handling operations but also information as to their production, refining, and distribution;

Considering the necessity of exercising strict control over the production and all commercial movement of gold and silver with a view to safeguarding the interests of the national economy;

Therefore, under the terms of article 60, paragraph h) of the Constitution, the Council of Ministers decrees the following:

Article 1

It is the responsibility of the National Directorate for Geology and Mines and Protection of the Subsoil to regulate and supervise mining activity in relation to the extraction of gold, silver, and other precious metallic ores.

Article 2

The private industrial and commercial exploitation of gold, silver, or other precious metals is forbidden.

1. The Ministry of Industry and Power will determine which state-owned enterprise will be given exclusive rights to the industrial preparation and refining of gold, silver, and other precious metals in addition to its exploitation activity.

2. Gold, silver, and other precious metals resulting indirectly from the processing of other ores are also subject to the regulations of this decree.

3. The state-owned enterprise referred to in number 1 above is the authorized entity responsible for assaying and certifying the purity and fineness of gold, silver, and other precious metals.

4. The importation of gold, silver, and other precious metals and their exportation, if produced domestically, are the responsibility of the above-mentioned state-owned enterprise under the licensing, direction, and supervision of the Bank of Mozambique.

Article 3

The Bank of Mozambique is responsible for establishing regulations governing the trading, selling, or obtaining of gold, silver, and other precious metals, regardless of their form or stage of processing, and the respective licensing.

1. Only the Bank of Mozambique may buy or sell gold and silver in coin, bars, and ingots.

2. Any and all activity for the recovery through chemical or mechanical means of gold, silver, and other precious metals that may be a part of metallic alloys or of other products is subject to special licensing by the Bank of Mozambique and is also subject to the latter's supervision.

Article 4

All production of gold, silver, and other precious metals will be turned over to the Bank of Mozambique, which, in agreement with the Ministry of Finance, will determine its use for the following purposes:

Government or bank reserves.

Export.

The domestic market.

1. The Bank of Mozambique, in coordination with the National Directorate for Geology and Mines and Protection of the Subsoil and in consultation with the state-owned enterprise referred to in article 2, number 1, will determine the domestic stock to be used by hospitals, laboratories, and the local jewelry industry.

2. Establishment of the domestic stock, as well as the respective control function and management responsibility, will be the responsibility of the state-owned enterprise, which will have recourse to domestic production and imports when necessary and when given special authorization by the Bank of Mozambique.

3. Once the domestic stock has been established, the Bank of Mozambique will acquire the remaining gold, silver, and other precious metals at officially established prices.

Article 5

Individuals and collective persons are prohibited from exporting gold, silver in coin, bars, ingots, or any other form the metal may take, or other precious metals without proof of legal possession or temporary importation, as the case may be.

Article 6

This decree becomes effective immediately.

Approved by the Council of Ministers.

Let it be published.

FALLING SCHOLASTIC ACHIEVEMENT LEVEL AMONG STUDENTS IN CUBA

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 7 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpts] "Socialist emulation in our schools is the thermometer that measures the degree of commitment by students to the manifold tasks rounding out the educational and training process." That is what our reporters were told by the head of the delegation representing the group of Mozambican students and teachers in Cuba who, having been awarded the distinction of "the best among the best," have returned to our country for a vacation.

Virgilio Zacarias Juvane also said that in the four Mozambican schools in the Republic of Cuba, the practice of socialist emulation in the educational centers is not seen merely as a fleeting activity with meaning only during the school year. "For everyone"--students and teachers--"it is a constant and permanent practice that serves as an incentive to fulfill the obligations that each one must carry out."

Linking Theory With Practice

After saying that the quite reasonable level of political training characterizing the students generally is enabling the Mozambicans to maintain constantly greater esteem among students from other African countries, the head of the delegation of our students in Cuba said that "the link between technical work and practical knowledge explains the extent to which organization in our schools has increased."

This explains why the progress of the students and their classification as best among the best are not seen simply in terms of scholastic achievement. Along with scholastic achievement, there is practical achievement through the practical demonstration of each individual's psychomotor abilities.

Virgilio Zacarias said that the conditions in which the students study and work (with abundant teaching materials of good quality and well-equipped laboratories) are also factors which combine to insure them of good results at the end of the year. Discussing the level of scholastic achievement, which this year was lower than in the 2 preceding years, Virgilio, who is also a teacher, said that there was a combination of various factors making it impossible to compare this year's results with those of the 2 previous years.

In the area of production, however, this year's results exceeded the activity levels of the previous years. And in the opinion of the head of the delegation of students who have returned here for a vacation, "with every period that passes, our level of organization in the productive process also increases."

The vacationing students are going to engage in a few activities called for by the schedule assigned to them, and to the extent possible, they are to go back to their home provinces, where they will visit their families.

SELLERS REFUSE TO COMPLY WITH LOWERED FOOD PRICES

[Excerpts] The sellers at the market stalls in the bazaars and in some fresh vegetable shops are engaging in a genuine boycott of the lower vegetable prices recently established for Maputo by the Government of the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique].

The reaction by that significant class of small merchants may jeopardize supplies for the inhabitants as well as the production that will soon be available in increasing quantities in the rural areas.

Indifference and Insults

Complaints about almost every market in the capital have been cropping up from the inhabitants who visit those markets to buy vegetables and demand that they be charged the new prices that have been in effect since 1 August.

As a result of indifference, insults directed at customers, or statements aimed at challenging the recently adopted measure, the new prices and the marketing of vegetables are becoming the target of a general boycott.

Thousands of sellers with stalls in the bazaars or small vegetable shops have reacted to the measure with an obvious parasite-class spirit.

The lowering of vegetable prices has restricted the margin of speculation, but not the profit, that that "lower middle class of the bazaars" had been charging on essential items for supplying the population.

In the bazaars and some vegetable shops, commercial activity is turning into a violent political and social conflict between the merchants and consumers who demand that they be charged the new prices.

"Go eat the new price." "Go ask the Executive Council for tomatoes." "Season your food with that paper price." Those are some of the many insulting answers people get when they demand the products covered by the recent measure.

In other cases, the reaction has been to adopt less open methods. Instead of openly refusing to sell the products at the new prices, some merchants keep those items under the counter or in places where they cannot be seen by the consuming public.

They then claim to be out of those products and choose to sell them only to customers they know who are willing to buy them at speculative prices.

The disputes in which the inhabitants have been involved in those sales outlets mean that the measure for lowering prices, which was adopted to improve supplies, is turning against the consumers themselves. This contradiction results in large measure from the inefficient inspection mechanisms. The apathy of some of the few existing inspectors translates as tacit support for the reaction by the "bazaar bourgeoisie."

Inspectors in Complicity?

"Here we don't sell lettuce by the kilogram. If you want it, it is 20 meticais a head. And you can go tell the inspector if you want to--that won't cause me any problems." That was how one saleswoman in the central market responded to the lower price, as firmly and matter-of-factly as you please, when one customer protested last Saturday, the day when the new schedule went into effect.

Although we could not confirm any specific case, some of the complaints we learned about even include accusations of complicity by inspectors.

The lowering of prices was immediately reflected in increased consumption by the inhabitants.

The official drop in retail vegetable prices has brought a sharp increase in consumption, creating the conditions for insuring the sale of everything that reaches the market. In such conditions, many of the suppliers are no longer subject to blackmail by the numerous retailers on whom they previously depended.

In these new conditions, however, there are also appearing new parallel channels which, while not as blatant, are continuing to be based on speculation. In response to the large increase in demand made possible by the lower prices, some of those suppliers are in fact trying to sell their products at prices slightly higher than those authorized.

To quote one of those suppliers whom we contacted, "the tables have been turned."

But it will be necessary to demonstrate quickly and in practice in this specific case that in Mozambique the interests of the workers prevail over those of a handful of "candidates" for the lower middle class.

In our opinion, it would help a great deal to open up "model stalls" in the bazaars under the control of the organization concerned with marketing. Those stalls should be uncompromising in charging no more than the established prices.

SOLIDARITY WITH HAITIAN COMMUNISTS--Yesterday morning in Maputo, Samora Moises Machel, chairman of the FRELIMO Party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM], received Gerard Pierre Charles, member of the Political Bureau of the United Party of Haitian Communists, who is currently visiting our country. Gerard Pierre Charles came to Mozambique with the mission of delivering to the FRELIMO Party and the Government of the RPM an invitation to participate in the International Conference on Solidarity with Haiti, which will take place in Panama from 18 to 20 September this year. And yesterday afternoon, the Haitian delegation headed by Gerard Charles held talks with a FRELIMO Party delegation headed by Marcelino dos Santos, member of the Permanent Political Committee and Central Committee secretary for party economic policy. At the start of the talks, the secretary for economic policy said that as President Samora Machel had said during his meeting with the delegation that morning, the Mozambican people, the FRELIMO Party, and our government fully support the Haitian people in the struggle they have been carrying on to liquidate the dictatorship that is oppressing them. For his part, the head of the Haitian delegation stressed the importance of our country's participation in the conference on solidarity with his people, saying also that both peoples are engaged in a common struggle against imperialism. The FRELIMO Party delegation also included Antonio Hama Thai, first party secretary for the city of Maputo; Jose Julio Andrade, directeur de cabinet in the office of the chairman of the FRELIMO Party; and other party members. FIRE DAMAGE TO BAGASSE--About 1,000 tons of bagasse were destroyed by a fire that broke out in the early morning hours on the 20th of this month (at about 0030 hours) in one of the warehouses at the FASOL [Associated Oil Factories, Inc] oil and soap factory in Matola in Maputo. A brigade from the Public Rescue Corps (Firemen) arrived promptly but was unable to extinguish the fire until about 1830 hours the same day. According to information gathered by our team of reporters sent to the scene, the fire resulted from spontaneous combustion in the bagasse that has been stored there for a long time in excessive quantities. The damage is estimated at more than 5,000 contos. The 1,000 tons destroyed by the fire were located in a seed warehouse, but the seed was not touched by the flames. About 7,000 tons of bagasse have been stored at the factory since last year because no market could be found for it. It is known, however, that bagasse is a great fertilizer. The national director of industry and power said: "But so far there has been no response from the Ministry of Agriculture as to the best place to send it." But he did not rule out the possibility of extracting more oil from it. The official concluded by saying that the fire would in no way halt operations at the factory, which will continue its normal pace of work. He said: "Supplies are not endangered." BREZHNEV CONGRATULATORY MESSAGE--On the occasion of the sixth anniversary of the proclamation of our national independence, the secretary general of the CPSU and leader of the Soviet people, L. Brezhnev, has sent President Samora Machel a message referring to that date. After expressing the warmest and most sincere congratulations to President Samora Machel, the entire Mozambican people, the FRELIMO Party, and the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique, Brezhnev says that "the Soviets follow with immense interest and fellow feeling the consistent implementation of the line laid down by the FRELIMO Party, which is aimed at laying the foundations in your country of the socialist society and consolidating national independence and sovereignty." The message from the Soviet leader emphasizes: "The strong anti-imperialist orientation of your foreign policy and your country's resolute support of the national liberation movements identify Mozambique with the progressive forces struggling to eliminate all forms of oppression." After expressing his certainty that the friendly relations existing between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the USSR, as well as between the FRELIMO Party and the CPSU, will continue in the future to develop in conformity with the Friendship and Cooperation Treaty, L. Brezhnev concludes his message by expressing the hope for big new successes in the struggle to carry out the tasks of raising the national economy and culture and building socialism. MONEY FOR WALVIS BAY--Last week the South African administration made a special effort to stimulate the economy of Walvis Bay with SA decentralization board approval of comprehensive support measures for industrialists. The support measures comprise the following: a 5.5% interest subsidy on loans for land, buildings and other assets, making the subsidized interest-rate for a ten-year minimum 8.05% compared with today's base rate of 13.55%. A 30% tax break on the value of manufacturing machinery and plant, to be spread out in equal segments over three years, and a 40% tax break on the basis of salaries paid to colored and black workers over a six-year time period. Both breaks are converted to non-taxable cash allowances if the business is not liable to taxation. A railway rebate on freight of 30% on transportation costs of products manufactured in Walvis Bay and shipped from there by rail. Tender price preference of 5% on government tenders and 10% on tenders from black authorities. Housing loans for key personnel. [Text] [Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 23 Jul 81 p 2]

OWAMBO LEADER'S SPOUSE MURDERED--According to Owamboland secretary Callie Reinecke, SWAPO terrorists kidnaped and murdered the wife of a member of the Owambo legislative assembly. The incident happened last Thursday when a group of terrorists showed up in the Kwambi region. Reinecke stated that the terrorists threatened Mrs. Antuya Scimwetheluni with their rifles and took her with them. Her body was discovered two days later. EDITORIAL STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF AFFORESTATION

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 4 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Thank God: Niger has just celebrated the 21st anniversary of independence, the Tree Festival, and Idd ul Fitr, fervently and joyfully, but also with moderation. It is plain that these are three events of great importance in that they form an integral part of the history of our country.

As a Muslim country, Niger has continually observed the injunctions of our sacred religion. The Nigerian people have continually proved their adherence to the Islamic community, the Muslim world, a world accustomed to the virtues of tolerance, solidarity, peace and justice; a world which works for the health and the happiness of its sons, posterity, and the planet.

It is no accident that these terms--peace, justice, happiness, and prosperity--make up the essence of the message that President Seyni Kountche sent to all the heads of states of friendly and fraternal Muslim countries. It is no accident either that we are constantly talking about security. In Niger, we are religiously devoted to peace, for it makes possible the further consolidation of national unity and the naintenance of stability. Without peace or stability, there is no progress. The mediation efforts undertaken by Col Seyni Kountche himself, and the good offices he has extended to certain capitals, proceed from our determination to see peace prevail in the sub-region, in Africa, and in the world.

For countries like ours, without access to the sea, belonging to that fringe of the earth which always continues to find itself on the "path to development," and these activities affecting our environment. Information and awareness campaigns should be continued at all levels and in all parts of the country. We must save the trees! This objective must be among the foremost of our priorities.

The celebration of the 21st anniversary of independence was marked by the traditional message to the nation which establishes the new directions for the country. Twenty-one years in the life of a man, as in the life of a nation, are important. At the same time as it signifies the reaching of majority, this age suggests also that one has acquired some experience and had some contact with realities. Now with Niger moving ahead at a time when the international situation is very serious, one can only praise the efforts of its people. This courage and determination were saluted in the chief of state's message of 2 August. Yes, Niger will conquer the desert, conquer under-development, and poverty.

SHAGARI ON LIBYAN INTERVENTION IN CHAD

JN221900 Khartoum SUNA in Arabic 1735 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Khartoum, 22 Aug (SUNA)—Nigerian President Shehu Shagari has said that the Libyan forces entered Chad without the approval of the OAU and the special committee on the Chadian problem and without the approval of the Chadian people.

In a press statement he made before leaving Khartoum this evening, Shagari added that because of the Libyan presence in Chad, the OAU must shoulder its duty by immediately sending its peace-keeping force to Chad to secure peace and stability.

President Shagari explained that when the Libyans alleged that they entered Chad at Goukouni's request, we said that Goukouni had no authority to invite the Libyans because he is merely the head of a transitional government.

He added that the OAU made a mistake because it did not move quickly when a resolution was adopted on establishing the peace-keeping force. The failure of this force to take up positions gave the Libyans the opportunity to intervene and occupy.

He added that had he been given the chance to attend the recent Nairobi African summit, he would have submitted a proposal insisting the Libya agree to withdraw its forces from Chad and stop interefering in the affairs of the member states as a precondition for convening the next summit in Libya. He said that it was unfortunate that the OAU adopted the decision without any conditions.

He added that his talks with President Numayri tackled issues of mutual concern on the international arena, particularly the African issues like the problem of Namibia, struggle against imperialism and apartheid. He said that his and President Numayri's views on those issues were identical.

Shagari added that his talks with Numayri dealt in detail with the Libyan method of interfering in the internal affairs of the OAU member states, Chad's problem, means of establishing and securing peace and the situation in other African areas, particularly the Western Sahara issue.

He said that the dispute between Somalia and Ethiopia was discussed by him and President Numayri in their capacity as member of the good offices committee on the dispute. He added that they also discussed the subject of the north-south dialogue.

President Shagari said that he will meet with African leaders in Nairobi to discuss this during the meetings of the committee of wisemen on the problem of the Western Sahara in order to coordinate and discuss the joint strategy in preparation for the conference which will be held in Mexico next October on the north-south dialogue.

He added that his talks with Numayri were friendly and fraternal and were imbued with honesty. He said that he considers Sudan his second homeland. He pointed out to the historic ties between the two countries.

The talks between Shagari and Numayri were concluded in Khartoum today. Before leaving Sudan, the Nigerian president visited the Nigerian Embassy in Khartoum.

NIGERIAN, FRENCH VIEWS ON CHAD, LIBYA SAID SIMILAR

AB231133 Paris AFP in French 1701 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] Lagos, 22 Aug (AFP)--France and Nigeria have drawn up a strategy of joint action to help solve the Chadian problem, Jean-Pierre Cot, French cooperation minister, stated on the second day of his stay in Nigeria. Cot, who held discussions with the Nigerian head of state, Shehu Shagari, told AFP on Saturday that France and Nigeria have identical views on this subject; that is, that the solution to the problem should be above all African.

One identical viewpoint was noted concerning Libya's African policy, the minister explained. We have quite a similar position, which is that of a necessary steadfastness to check Libya's ambitions, he added. Nigerians, like us, feel that the actual capacity of Libyan action is less than the proclaimed ambitions, and that there is bluff in the Libyan policy. The best answer is simply to face things with steadfastness and discipline, without being carried away by the violence of speeches.

In this regard, the French cooperation minister repeated that France will not sell even one gun to Libya as long as the latter does not give proof of peaceful intentions, especially in Africa. He added that this decision has been enforced since 21 May.

Asked about French activities within the contact group on Namibia (France, the United States, Canada, Great Britain, West Germany), Jean-Pierre Cot affirmed that France's ambition is to become the progressive wing of this group. The functioning of the contact group is not easy, he said. It is at the edge of collapse. However, it appears to me that it probably represents, with the current process, the only chance to arrive at a solution to the Namibian problem through peaceful means. We hope that this group will make some progress in the weeks ahead, Cot went on to say. The UN Extraordinary Assembly in September will be an important time for everyone to explain his ideas.

Mr Jean-Pierre Cot, who suggested a diplomatic solution to the Namibian issue, also showed firmness. If the procedure does not begin concretely in the next [illegible] months, there is little chance that a diplomatic solution will be useful and as a result, he asserted, the Namibian people will have no other recourse but arms and violence.

On the problem of sanctions against South Africa, the French minister asserted that France was rather skeptical about its application as historically it has never solved much in international life. Such a decision would merely be a matter of principle, he said. We do n ot think realistic means of applying sanctions in the present international context exist unless we obtain the approval of all the permanent members of the UN Security Council, Jean-Pierre Cot added.

Referring to his talks with Nigerian leaders, the minister-delegate for cooperation explained that he primarily intended to establish political contact and that his visit was aimed at harmonizing the position of the two countries in the political sphere, especially in regard to South Africa and on the economic sphere with regard to raw materials.

In addition, we wanted to dispel a certain diffuse tension that had existed between our two countries for many years because of France's relations with Francophone Africa as well as the presence of French troops in Africa. The explanations that I was able to give to President Shagari were received, understood and otherwise accepted. The Nigerians, the minister said, understand our stand on the presence of French troops on the continent, which is explained by the need not to create distabilization by creating a vacuum which would immediately be filled by others.

I found President Shagari to be an attentive and warm person, Cot concluded. It was apparent from our talks that we not only share similar views, but that we also have similar ways of seeing problems, especially the hotbeds existing in Africa today, and that we have similar ways of dealing with them.

'NAN' REPORTS CRASH OF AIR FORCE PLANE ACCIDENTAL

AB211225 Lagos NAN in English 1155 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] Lagos, 21 Aug (NAN)--The Nigerian Air Force plane which was reported missing recently was said to have crashed into the sea shortly after take-off from Calabar airport, an investigation by the NEWS AGENCY OF NIGERIA (NAN) has shown.

An authoritative source at the Nigerian Air Force yesterday told a NAN correspondent that the aircraft was going on a routine mission when the incident occurred. The source said that the mission had nothing to do with the rebellion between Nigeria and Cameroon. The source said: It is unthinkable that Cameroon could seize our plane, adding, the fact that we don't make noise does not suggest that we don't know what to do when such an incident occurs.

Speaking to a NAN correspondent in his office yesterday in connection with the missing plane, the minister of defense, Alhaji Akanbi Oniyangi, said that such mishaps during routine missions in the military are not unusual occurrences, adding that it was unpatriotic for a newspaper in this country to link the incident with Nigeria's relations with Cameroon.

He said that there was no truth whatsoever in the story published by the NIGERIAN STANDARD, which linked the incident with the country's relations with Cameroon.

He said that at a time when Cameroon had agreed to pay full compensation for the five Nigerian soldiers who were killed at the border and when relations between the two countries were being normalized, enemies of Nigeria were trying to put a wedge between them.

He said that the federal government was determined to let peace and stability prevail in the country, adding that there was no threat from our neighbors because they are all friendly.

OIL IMPORTERS' CONTRACT DISCUSSIONS--London, 25 Aug (AFP)--Nigeria has invited petroleum importers to come to Lagos to discuss emergency contracts, it was learned Tuesday from petroleum circles in Lodnon, which think that these contracts could lead to an official price reduction of Nigerian crude oil. These invitations, which come in the wake of the failure of the OPEC conference in Geneva, were sent out by the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation to former customers who stopped buying its oil because it was too expensive. Petroleum circles think the discussion would enable Lagos to explore the way for establishing its new rates at a level which will restore Nigeria's oil sales. It will be recalled that it was Nigeria which called for the recent Geneva conference in order to remedy the considerable fall in its petroleum exports. According to London petroleum experts, Nigeria's crude oil price could be reduced to the $40-35 range, perhaps to $36.6 a barrel to become competitive again with Saudi Arabia. But it is not yet known whether the reduction will be made officially, through secret reductions or through new credit facilities. [Text] [AB252110 Paris AFP in French 1855 GMT 25 Aug 81]

GOVERNMENT RELYING ON INCREASE IN FRENCH AID

Paris LE MONDE in French 12 Aug 81 p 5

[Article by Pierre Biarnes]

[Text] After going to Cameroon and Ghana, Jean-Pierre Cot, deputy minister for cooperation and development, arrived Monday 10 August in Senegal, where he will stay until Friday before returning to Paris. In Accra, Cot reached agreement with President Limann, who received him twice, on the principle of strengthening Franco-Ghanaian cooperation.

Senegal's socialist leaders are expecting significantly increased aid from their French comrades at a time when they are confronted with serious problems caused by the drought which has hit the country hard for more than a decade, by unfavorable world economic conditions, and by certain mistakes in direction and management.

Following a steep decline over the last few years, barely 60,000 tons of unshelled ground-nuts--the principle resource of the country for more than a century--were marketed from last season's (1980-1981) production, compared to 800,000 to 1 million tons in the past. Neither the relative take-off of fishing and tourism, nor the fairly good performance of phosphates has been able to compensate for the disastrous effects of this collapse on most other branches of activity and also on the finances of the state. Since 1 July, external debt service (an annual burden on the order of F CFA 35 billion) has been suspended, in hopes of renegotiating it this fall with Paris. In recent months, even paying the salaries of employees has posed several problems.

In such a context, the social and political tranquility, both in Dakar and in the bush, is in a sort of state of grace that is probably not unrelated to the democratization of public life which has come about gradually in recent years and has clearly been intensified since Mr Diouf became the head of state. But the chances for an explosion are still no less real. If it is not carefully tended, this miracle may not last indefinitely.

The Disengagement of the State

Independently of the effects of additional international financial assistance and a courageous austerity policy, undertaken largely on the advice of the International Monetary Fund, two important series of measures nevertheless offer hope, at least in the medium term, of some recovery: a lightening of the bureaucratic grip of the state on the economic institutions, and (at last) the start of a serious struggle against corruption.

Addressing the implications of the inability of many of its agents to properly administer a goodly number of the big industries which have totally or partially passed over into the public sector since independence, the state has wisely moved in recent months toward a fairly significant disengagement in this field. This is notably the case in the agricultural sector, where the dissolution of the National Office of Cooperation and Assistance for Development (ONCAD), a year ago, should make it possible for the peasant cooperatives, which have thereby recovered substantial autonomy, to gradually resume the cultivation of ground-nuts, which had little by little been abandoned as a result of the large ground-rent charged in recent years.

The adoption at the beginning of the summer of severe measures to suppress illegal income and, even more, the recent ministerial shake-up (LE MONDE of 8 and 9-10 August) should contribute to rally the support of broad segments of the public, which is more and more irritated by the life-style flaunted, contrary to the principles being preached, by certain eminent individuals in the governmental organization. Over the longer term, and even though the plan may be criticized by the opposition, substantial hopes in Dakar remain pinned to the development of the Senegal River, the first phase of which is to begin in the next few months, with France making a major financial contribution.

LANDING SAVANE DISCUSSES AJ-MRDN'S PROGRAMS, GOALS

Paris LE CONTINENT in French 31 Jul 81 p 5

[Interview with Landing Savane, leader of the And-Jef Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy (AJ-MRDN), by Jerome Carlos and Aliou Diongue; date and place not given]

[Text] Since the adoption in Senegal, on 24 April, of a nonexclusive multiparty system, half a dozen parties have already been officially recognized.

Among them is the And-Jef, Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy (MRDN), led by Landing Savane.

About 30, tall, discreet and exhibiting great simplicity: Such was our impression of this engineer-statistician-economist and father of two children, whose party wants to build a "new democratic government" in Senegal, "that is, a government headed by the working class, linked to the peasantry." Landing Savane gracefully answered our questions on the objectives of the AJ-MRDN, its references to the thought of Mao Tse-tung, the class struggle in Senegal and the new party's African and international positions.

[Question] Your party, the And-Jef-MRDN (Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy), has just been officially authorized in Senegal. Can you introduce it to us, defining your main objectives?

[Answer] The Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy was set up in 1973 underground. It is not a Marxist-Leninist party, as part of the press claims, but rather, a movement that brings together Marxist-Leninist militants as well as patriots and democrats who have accepted the program which the MRDN has outlined.

[Question] What is that program?

[Answer] Our program is basically anti-imperialist, antifeudal and antihegemonic. The AJ-MRDN is a party that fights for the creation of a new democratic government, a government headed by the working class, allied with the peasantry.

[Question] You are also called "Maoist."

[Answer] I, myself, and some other comrades in the AJ follow Marxism-Leninism and the thought of Mao Tse-tung, but we are not pro-Chinese and we are not in agreement with the policy now followed by China, which is a big-power policy, with all that that implies. As Maoist militants, it is less a question of applying the formulas than of studying the specific situation of our country, Senegal, of assimilating general principles of revolutionary theory and of applying, independently, a strategy and tactic adapted to the conditions that are ours.

[Question] And if, in spite of all that, you should still be criticized for making most of your references to persons outside the country?

[Answer] You would agree that Marxism-Leninism was born somewhere. Created by Marx, it was continued by Lenin and developed by Mao. We want to integrate into the universal science of the revolution the teachings and experiences of Senegalese revolutionary militants.

Of all the parties, we are the only ones to make a real effort to rehabilitate some of the great unrecognized figures in the liberation struggle of our people. For that purpose, the Senegalese Cultural Front that we support has published brochures on Lamine Senghor, a precursor of the Senegalese communist movement, and Alin Sitoye Diatta, a prestigious female figure in the anticolonialist struggle of the people of Casamance.

During the 1979 and 1980 school vacations, the Patriotic Youth already organized the Lamine Senghor Festival. The And-Jef firmly intends to develop the fight for the popularization of the most consistent figures in our people's resistance fight against colonialism and imperialism.

[Question] What are your short-term tactics, given the prospect of the general elections in Senegal in 1983?

[Answer] Our party's National Executive Committee has just met but has made no decision on the elections. Although these elections are important, our view is that they constitute but a phase in the struggle we are waging. We are not an election-oriented party.

We have no illusions: The neocolonial power will always organize hand-crafted elections. It seems more important to us to make our people more aware, to organize their struggle better so that they will be able to make their voices heard in order to fulfill their aspirations.

[Question] What types of alliance will you be called upon to make? With whom and on what bases?

[Answer] The problem of alliances is an important problem that no party can avoid. However, the essential question is to know the principles around which those alliances are articulated. We shall be able to be more explicit after the publication of the programs of the different parties and after they have clarified the objectives of their struggle.

In the meantime, we are happy about the fact that the members of the Proletarian Democratic Organization (ODP) and some members of the Union for the People's Democracy have joined our ranks.

[Question] How can you truly make the people more aware by using an organ of information such as JAY DOLE BI [sic; JAY DOOLE BI], which is published in French?

[Answer] You are right to pose the problem of the use of national languages. JAY DOLE BI helps to make our views known, that is true. But it is not an organ of the AJ-MRDN. Our approach to the masses takes place more through the work of our members in the villages and enterprises and, naturally enough, in our different national languages. We will thereby be able to win the masses over to our policies and bring them to assume their historic responsibilities.

[Question] You define yourself as a worker-peasant party. How do you view the class struggle in a society such as Senegalese society, and what is your position on the religious bodies, for example?

[Answer] The class struggle is going on before our very eyes. In the enterprises, the workers are defending their rights vis-a-vis management with increasing firmness. In the rural areas, the peasants are rising up against the different types of taxes, as hard hit as they are by the absence of any strict water policy on the part of the neocolonial government. The latter enjoys the backing of certain feudal or even religious forces. However, we oppose the use of a religion in order to justify and continue the exploitation and oppression of our people. At the same time, we properly appreciate the action of some religious leaders, who have quite a clear idea of the problems of our people. Having said that much, we believe that the main force in the fight against neocolonialism cannot reside in the religious leaders or the traditional leaders. The workers and peasants show a sharper awareness of the exploitation of which they are the prime victims and can consequently mobilize, organize and fight to liquidate it.

I would add that the fight against feudalism implies the fight against obscurantism, particularly the fight against supersition, certain caste prejudices or others. That is why we are working to spread the knowledge of modern science among the workers and peasants.

[Question] Some accuse you of being "an antireligious party."

[Answer] Obviously, that is false. Our program explicitly contains the freedom to believe as one chooses and to exercise his religion, but within the framework of a lay state. Our movement contains members of all philosophical and religious beliefs. We are opposed to religious fanaticism and work for tolerance, which alone can consolidate national unity.

[Question] Making the masses aware is undoubtedly part of an overall strategy to take power, a necessary condition for seeing the accomplishment of desired reforms.

[Answer] In our opinion, it is not a question of reform. One cannot reform neocolonialism. It must be liquidated. To do so, we are working for broad, far-reaching support of the masses for the type of society proposed in our program. Once such support exists, no force can oppose the will of the people. Only the people can, using suitable means, impose a new society capable of bringing us out of the deep crisis in which our country finds itself.

[Question] Your movement, which is anti-imperialist and antifeudal, is also anti-hegemonic. What does that mean?

[Answer] That means resolute opposition to any domination by foreign powers, whichever they may be and whatever form that domination might take. We oppose the presence of French troops in our country. Moreover, the two superpowers (the United States and the Soviet Union) pose a serious threat to our country and its people. It is for that reason that we are educating our people in the spirit of political opposition to the warmongering of the two superpowers.

[Question] Senegal is not alone. It evolves in a given regional and international environment.

[Answer] Internationally speaking, Senegal is a neocolony of France. That situation has not changed. French imperialism remains the main enemy of the Senegalese people. The Senegalese neocolonial bourgeoisie, despite the changes that are occurring or that might occur in France, continues its policy of submission and servility to that country. Aside from the relationship of struggle that we have with French imperialism and with other forces of domination in the world, we are for relations of solidarity and mutual support among African nations, first of all, between Third World nations next, and naturally, with other nations in the world, for imperialism has created a world system of domination and exploitation that can only be abolished once and for all through the solidary struggle of the proletariat and of nations all over the world. Concerning the West African subregion, we give our active support to the struggle of the Saharan people, who are fighting annexation by Morocco, the struggle of the Mauritanian people, who are fighting Moroccan expansionism, and finally, the struggle of other nations of the Sahel opposing annexationist aims that could emerge in the subregion.

[Question] Your closing words, Mr Savane?

[Answer] I would conclude by saying, in connection with the preceding question, that we oppose all foreign intervention, which basically arises out of the desire of the imperialist powers to keep Africa under its domination.

Despite certain illusions spread in certain circles concerning the consequences of the coming to power of socialists in France, I should merely like to recall that they have just banned the main opposition parties in the Central African Republic, where the Dacko regime continues to reign without a crown after a brief democratic experiment. It is essential to cast aside our illusions about the liberation of our countries through the action of foreign forces and to work relentlessly to mobilize the people, who alone can guarantee their effective and lasting liberation.

PDS LEADER OPTIMISTIC CONCERNING PDS CHANGES

Paris LE CONTINENT in French 4 Aug 81 p 12

[Report on interview with Wade, leader of Senegalese Democratic Party, by Omar Foitih; in Athens, date not given]

[Text] On the eve of its seventh anniversary, which it will celebrate on Saturday 8 August, the Senegalese Democratic Party is organizing a public conference in which its main rival for power in Dakar, the Socialist Party, will participate. In the course of that contradictory conference, Wade's party hopes to demonstrate, facing the leaders of the government party, the inability of the current government to solve the economic crisis in which the country now finds itself.

Wade, who has just participated in the international conference on the situation in Egypt and the Middle East held in Athens, talked at length with us concerning the development of democracy in Senegal. "We say that we have reached the stage of 'democracy-discourse' -- that is, the beginning of democracy," he said, "because the formation of parties alone is not enough to make a democracy. There is no democracy unless there is an objective possibility of democratic alternation in government. If, one day, the people should come out for change, then that change must be effective."

When asked to comment on his party's situation on the Senegalese political scene, the secretary general said: "In 1974, upon the creation of the PDS, we decided to give up our doctrine, labor socialism, in order to go along with the constitution at that time. As soon as it was modified, we resumed our original doctrine. We are naturally not Marxists, but we are on the left of the Socialist Party, which is a socialist party in name only, insofar as the government is freeing itself from all national companies." However, Wade admits that "there is something quite difficult to understand in the PDS doctrine," especially since that party, along with the Socialist Party in power, recruits its followers from the same voters, sociologically speaking. "Although we are a party that claims to follow labor socialism," Wade said, "that socialism has nothing to do with the British labor movement, which is the reflection of the trade unions. Our socialism is more liberal than many types of socialism in Africa."

Concerning the 1983 elections, the secretary general of the PDS said that he was "truly very optimistic" regarding his party and his own chances, even if he thinks that in 2 years, "it is the left which, in a united front, will win the elections." Moreover, he added, "we have managed to start a movement toward the unification of the opposition."

PS ORGAN DESCRIBES GAMBIA AS 'THORN IN OUR FLESH'

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 11 Aug 81 pp 13, 14

[Text]

DAKAR, August 9 - Senegal's ruling party, reacting to criticism of the army's intervention against the coup in Gambia, says Dakar has always respected the enclave state's sovereignty and "personality" despite the inconvenience of economic loss its existence causes Senegal.

The weekend commentary in L'Unité Africaine, organ of President Abdou Diouf's Socialist Party, touched once again - and at a critical moment - on the question of how close should be Gambia's relationship to Senegal, which is larger, richer, better-armed and surrounds Gambia on three sides.

After Gambia became independent in 1965, a plan for political merger of the two states was drawn up.But it eventually stumbled over the opposition of Gambia's anglophone, urban ruling class, which feared losing its privileges in a union with francophone Senegal.

The two West African states then created a SeneGambian committee with a permanent secretariat, and settled for moving slowly toward unity along the path of bilateral agreements, 26 of which have been signed.

Only armed unit

Now, with the failed military coup against President Dawda Jawara having apparently destroyed Gambia's only armed unit - called the Field Force - Sir Dawda has announced that the security services of the two countries will be "integrated".

The Senegalese Socialist Party's commentary, issued after several opposition parties denounced Dakar's intervention to crush the uprising, ran along lines compatible with further integration.

"Gambia and Senegal are unique" said the article in L'Unité Africaine (African Unity). "Throughout the world, there are no other states so completely bound up one in the other.

"You must look to Europe, to the vestiges of the Middle Ages, to find - in the Vatican, San Marino or Liechtenstein - situations resembling even slightly the extreme complexity of Senegal and Gambia...

"Gambia and Senegal are irremediably one in the other, so that nothing that happens in Banjul (the Gambian capital) can leave us cold", the commentary said.

The Senegalese party said the Dakar government and the Jawara regime had always had cordial relations, the same political philosophy and economic aims.

"However, smuggling both from and in the direction of Gamb has come near ruining our economy and still causes shocks today. Despite tight customs control, our markets are full of products of every kind sent in from Banjul. Our groundnuts often find their way to the docks of the Gambian capital rather than to our oil-processing plants".

The commentary noted that travelers from Dakar, in the north of Senegal, to Ziguinchor in the south must cross Gambia, spending more time on the short ferry ride on the Gambia river than on the road.

"The many difficulties created by unthinking petty officials (across Gambia) cause delay with incalculable consequences in the shipment of merchandise, in the transport of the injured and ill, in administrative travel, etc.

"So here you have a Gambia that may be friendly, but still represents a splinter in the flesh of Senegal", the Senegalese party organ said.

"Because we respect international law andthe Gambian personality, we have always taken the trouble, whatever it cost, to put up with this situation... but there is a limit to tolerance, and for us it was crossed by Kukoi Samba Sanyang (leader of the Gambian coup) and his band of gangsters". IMPORTANCE OF TAKING NATIONAL ADULT EDUCATION TESTS

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] Next week the citizens who have been attending adult education classes will take examinations to test their progress. According to the Ministry of National Education those being instructed will take this examination along with those who either were ready to be tested but were unsuccessful or were not ready to be tested. This will be the third time that national examinations to test those being instructed have been held in the country since the campaign to eliminate ignorance began in 1970. Other national examinations for adult education students were held in 1975 and 1977.

The fact that it is important for those being instructed to take the examinations was explained last night with lucidity by President Nyerere when he was addressing the nation by radio.

First, the question of the individual having proof that he has studied and reached a certain level. It is the results of the examinations which give the individual this proof. As Mwalimu said, if people who complete the university are given their diplomas, the citizens who are obtaining the knowledge to read and write have the right to obtain certificates and documents and brag about these certificates.

Second, by means of examinations the nation can know the stage reached in the major work of eliminating ignorance in the country. By observing the results of examinations, the government will be able to know the steps which must be taken in the future in developing the important work of adult education.

Thus, the important thing for citizens who are registered in adult education courses is to take the examinations next week. Many examination centers have been established in the country to enable every person being instructed who is qualified to take the examinations to obtain the opportunity to do so.

We know that citizens who have registered in classes for adults have done considerable work to attend these classes. Some places in villages have compelled citizens to confront difficult surroundings in their effort to eliminate ignorance. The next examinations are an opportunity to test the results of these efforts. Those who are being instructed will not agree to lose this opportunity.

Another important matter to be borne in mind by those being instructed at every place in the country is the fact that education has no end. The next examinations and all those which have already been held here in the past do not mean that they are the end of studying for those who take these examinations.

Truly, an examination is intended to be an impetus to encourage a person being instructed to study further, whether or not he was successful in the examination he took. We should bear in mind the advice of the President, who said: "Without regard to the stage reached in education and without regard to the results of the examination which you will take, continue to go to class and develop yourself by reading and writing on your own."

NEED FOR CARE IN HANDLING EXPLOSIVES STRESSED

Dar es Salaam MZALENDO in Swahili 2 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] Page five of yesterday's edition of our newspaper UHURU had sad news to the effect that five people died in Mandai village, Nachingwea District after being blown up by a grenade which exploded at the place where they were resting.

This grenade was reported to have been for many days at the place where it exploded, and one police spokesman in Nachingwea said that the grenade exploded after a child, who died as a result of the explosion, amused himself by boring a hole in it.

There is no one who can blame this dead child who played with the grenade, because it is clear that the poor child did not know what he was playing with. It is possible also that the adults who were with him either did not see the child playing with this grenade or did not know that the child was playing with a dangerous object.

Thus this sad event in Mandai village, in Nachingwea must remind and warn us citizens everywhere in Tanzania about the undesirability of playing with objects with which we are unfamiliar.

The accident in Mandai village is not the first of this kind to have occurred in the country recently. Accidents involving people being blown up by grenades have already occurred in other places in the country, people's lives have been lost and other people have been wounded.

Sometimes these explosions occur by very bad luck to people who unknowingly tread on objects or to children playing with these objects. Other accidents are caused by people's instinct to know more about objects which they see. Objects like these are not picked up only in the bush and in rural areas, but also are encountered in buildings. It is possible that a person who handles explosives in his work, like a policeman, soldiers or even militiamen, put these objects in the buildings. Thus these objects usually explode and cause accidents for many people.

It is the responsibility of all citizens, soldiers and of those who are not soldiers to be cautious with these objects which endanger people's lives.

We citizens must avoid the practice of amusing ourselves with objects which we do not understand. If we see objects which we do not understand and which are perplexing, we should make a report to the police or to soldiers in the vicinity.

It is also important for citizens who live in the vicinity and in areas where our soldiers usually conduct exercises to be informed early and they should be alerted not to go in or near the exercise areas. But it is obvious that the request to be cautious should reach all citizens of the areas concerned. Thus they should avoid picking up objects in these areas.

It is the responsibility of all our soldiers who are continuing with work and who are not at work now to bear in mind the evil of placing dangerous objects like grenades in unauthorized areas, like in houses where people live. Grenades and other dangerous objects must be placed in authorized areas which ensure the people's security.

As proven in the war against the dictator Amin, it is the responsibility of all our citizens, soldiers and civilians, to [maintain] defense and security. Now we should join forces in avoiding accidents involving explosives which cause the loss of the lives of some Tanzanians.

DISMISSAL OF OFFICIALS--President Nyerere today retired for public interest three senior officials in Shinyanga region and dismissed two others from the prime minister's office. Those retired for public interest are: Ndugu Omari, a former assistant commissioner of police and regional police commander; (Ndugu Minja), a former senior superintendent of police and regional security office; and (Ndugu Mwashambwa), a security officer. A government statement released in Dar es Salaam today said the three have been retired following recent developments in Shinyanga region that necessitated the establishment of a special commission of inquiry into the matter. A report by the commission shows the involvement of the three officers into the matter as (?per) allegations. Those dismissed are (Ndugu Juma Wambura), an economist from the prime minister's office and (Ndugu Mpalagasa), a planning officer for Liwale District. A statement said (Ndugu Mpalagasa) lost his job because of his neglect of duty, being a drunkard, quarrelsome and undisciplined. TIENTARABOUM VISITS IVORY COAST, TOGO

Visit to Ivory Coast

AB142116 Abidjan Domestic Service in French 2000 GMt 14 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The head of state today received the Upper Voltan minister of foreign affairs and cooperation in the late afternoon at the presidential palace. Both men held talks which lasted for nearly 2 hours. Here is the statement made by Mr Felix Tientaraboum after the meeting.

[Begin recording] As Upper Volta has been chairing the Entente Council for 2 years, it is the duty of our head of state, Col Saye Zerbo, chairman of the Military Committee for Recovery and National Progress-following the events you know of which took place in our country--to enter into contact with his fellow heads of state to discuss entente.

It is our duty, which is quite normal, to report on its activities and to try to meet to discuss the activities of the council after 2 years. Therefore, the Upper Voltan head of state intends to convene a meeting of leaders to revive the council and to give a report on the 2 years of Upper Volta's period of chairmanship. This then is the aim of this visit. [End recording]

Ties With Togo

AB142048 Lome Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 14 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The president and founder of the Togolese People's Rally and president of the republic, Gen Gnassingbe Eyeadema, granted an audience this morning at his Lome II private residence to Colonel Tientaraboum, the Upper Voltan minister of foreign affairs and cooperation. Colonel Tientaraboum was accompanied by Diallo Suleiman, permanent secretary for internal affairs; Gbatiomo Ambroise, permanent secretary to the minister of finance; and Viato Jean, deputy director for state protocol. After a long talk with the head of state, Colonel Tientaraboum made the following statement to the press.

[Begin recording] [Question] Sir, on the bilateral level, there has been active cooperation between Upper Volta and Togo. This cooperation can be strengthened every day or every year. Can you explain how the Military Committee for Recovery intends to strengthen this cooperation?

[Answer] We have, through the Military Committee and its government, tried to create a climate of ture confidence with all friendly neighboring countries. This is one of the priorities of the committee and the government. These countries are our first partners and you know very well that with Togo, a brotherly country, our relations of cooperation are very many. With Togo, which is one of our outlets to the outside world--that is to the sea--we maintain (?cordial) cooperation and the Military Committee and the government want to strengthen these ties of communications through a rational use of the Lome Port and then construct modern communications networks; I mean good roads and railways, which will enable us to get more supplies than we have in the past. This is, for example, a field of cooperation. Moreover, there is always the need to further strengthen this cooperation, within the framework of what already exists; I mean within the ECOWAS, the Entente Council, both international organizations to which each one of us belongs.

'AZAP' PRAISES NATION'S RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

AB211651 Kinshasa AZAP in French 0750 GMT 21 Aug 81

[AZAP Commentary: "Strengthening France-Zairian Cooperation"]

[Text] Kinshasa, 21 Aug (AZAP)--The statement which Mr Albert Thabault, French ambassador to Zaire, made following his audience with President Mobutu on Tuesday gives more light on the state of the relations of friendship and cooperation existing between his country and the Republic of Zaire. These relations which have been happily maintained since the era of General de Gaulle are continuing their normal course, the French diplomat stated categorically.

The fairly long and important message which he delivered to the founding chairman of the MPR is, according to several political observers in Kinshasa, a sign that cannot mislead. Even though the contents are confidential, observers strongly believe that the message surely deals with ways to revitalize French-Zairian cooperation.

To this end, it is noted with satisfaction that relations between Paris and Kinshasa have always and constantly been at their best, contrary to the case with some of our partners--including the most important--who, reputed for their ambiguous behavior toward Zaire to the point that their sincerity convinces no one, backbite and do not miss a single opportunity to tread on us.

There is need to comment on the issue of political exiles. The French Government--taking into account the fate of 140 Frenchmen resident in Iran--has barred Iranian political exiles, in particular former President Banisadr, from making hostile statements about their home government.

Yet 20,000 Belgians live in Zaire. The opponents of the Kinshasa government live in Belgium where they have the tendency to make stupid statements about the Zairian authorities. Does the Belgian Government refuse to consider the lot of the 20,000 Belgian nationals living in Zaire? It is a simple link that we are establishing between the attitude of the French Government and that of the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium.

It is surely not out of complacency that the French diplomat asserted that Zaire was one of the most important African countries with which France shares evident cultural ties and that the French head of state stated in his action program that Zaire would have a sizeable share in the increased aid to the Third World.

Coming from the mouth of the representative of the Paris government, this assertion is rightly reassuring and cuts short the pernicious speculations continually being made by the enemies of guide Mobutu and his people since the installation in the Elysee Palace of the socialist, Francois Mitterrand. It is enough to make those who were expecting the contrary and were making fun gnash their teeth.

Mr Penne, the advisor to the president of the French Republic on African Affairs who will soon visit Zaire to meet General Mobutu is expected in Kinshasa with keen interest, because his visit will reveal the style that the new French president intends to give to the relations of friendship and cooperation existing between France and Zaire.

PM TO LEAD ZANU (PF) 'REBUILDING'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

ZANU (PF) has embarked on a massive rebuilding of the party to make it a "gigantic mammoth" by the end of the year, the party's secretary for publicity, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said yesterday.

He said in an interview that the exercise would be carried out under the personal direction of the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, in his capacity as president of the party.

"The president of the party has now called upon the central committee and provincial, district and branch executive committees to go flat out in rebuilding the party."

Dr Zvobgo, who is the Minister of Local Government and Housing, said Mr Mugabe had assumed personal leadership of the restructuring exercise.

Further meetings and arrangements to reconstruct the party would be announced by a commissariat headed by the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, and Mr Mayor Urimbo, the party's national political commissar and MP for Victoria.

UNANIMOUS

Dr Zvobgo confirmed that the central committee had at its last meeting resolved that Mr Edgar Tekere should be removed from his powerful party job of secretary-general.

"The vote was unanimous," he said.

"The central committee felt that Mr Tekere, for a variety of reasons, was unable to continue as secretary-general of the party," Dr Zvobgo said.

At the moment the Prime Minister as president of the party, and the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Simon Muzenda, as vice-president of the party had taken over Mr Tekere's responsibilities.

Mr Tekere would continue to be a member of the party and MP for Mashonaland Central.

At the weekend the former Minister of Manpower Planning and Development announced he had lost his job as secretary-general of ZANU (PF).

He said he was now a task man and that as a member of the party he would continue calling for the revival of the revolution which he said was "decaying".

He said he had also stopped processing passport applications from Zimbabwean residents in Zambia because Zimbabwe's High Commission in Zambia could deal with such applications. TUNNEL APPROVED--The Cabinet has approved the multi-million dollar Darwendale tunnel project and details of the loan finance are now being worked out, the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said yesterday. The Salisbury City Council has already approved the scheme and has been paying $82 000 a month, almost $1 million a year, to keep the tender open. When the city budget was presented at the end of last month, councillors were told the Government was still considering the request for loan funds. With a cost of more than $36 million for the tunnel and all its associated works, including the part of the project already completed, the scheme will bring water from Darwendale to the Morton Jaffray Works at Lake McIlwaine. The 15 km tunnel was first mooted in 1972 and the final design worked out last year. The tunnel was preferred over the alternative of a pipeline because it was cheaper, would cost less to maintain and would last for generations. It will bring an extra 315 million litres of water a day to the city. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Aug 81 p 1]

DETAILS ON 1981 CENSUS GIVEN

Due in August

Garborone DAILY NEWS in English 8 Jul 81 p 2

[Text]

THE CENSUS Office in Gaborone has provided useful information for public consumption in preparation for this year's census in August. The public is urged to study the following details closely for better understanding of what census is all about.

There are a the number of questions on the questionnaire. These are the questions that will be put to households by enumerators. We know of course that the main purpose of the cenus is to count the population and to measure the changes taking place in its basic characteristics and distribution. Over and above this, the census is designed to provide certain information on where and how people in Botswana live.

The main problem with the questions is to ask them in such a way that they are understood, and that the answers recorded by enumerators will give the information needed. An attempt has been made to phrase the questions as clearly as possible. The questions were tested at the pilot census. The enumerator is there to help respondents understand the questions in case any difficulties arise

A look at the questionnaire shows that some questions are asked of all persons. These are questions on sex, age, marital status, place of living, citizenship and migration. There are questions asked of all persons 5 years and over. The questions asked here are on education. The questions seek to find out if the respondent has ever been to school, whether left school or still in school and highest standard of schooling if has left school.

The next set of questions is asked of persons 12 years and over. These are persons who could or should be working. The questions are asked to find out the respondent's type of activity during the past month, what type of work he did, that is, his occupation, and the industry he worked for if employed.

It is hoped that the response to these questions will help to have an overall picture of how people make a living now - what they do where they work, whether they work for cash and so on. The questions do not ask for the amount earned. There are questions asked of females 12 years and over. These questions seek to find out the number of children born to an individual, how many of the children live and where they live; and whether any have been born in the last twelve months before the enumeration.

There are a few other questions. These are straight forward questions on members of the household in the last 12 months before census. There are questions on farming. Agriculture is still the most important activity in this country. The question, seeks to find out how many people keep cattle and plough.

Finally, there are questions relating to housing. The questions seek to find out how the ground or plot was obtained, materials of construction of house, source of water supply for the household, principal fuel for cooking and lighting. Finally there is a single question on sanitation facilities.

Maun Office Preparations

Garborone DAILY NEWS in English 23 Jul 81 p 1

[Article by Botswelejo Tlale]

[Text]

THE MAUN Census District Communication Committee is busy making preparations for the forthcoming population census. During the month of May, the committee held a meeting in which a sub-committee was formed to work out a strategy for covering the delta.

A Report of the sub-committee's findings indicated that 419 houses in the delta did not appear in the map.

The report also showed the inaccessibility of several settlements, some of which are in islands. Another big problem the report points out is that the Okavango River is overflowing and this is likely to give the enumerators a hard task during the enumeration period.

In view of these, the committee has already contacted the Ministry of Agriculture about the Tsetse Fly Control Department's helicopter for use during the enumeration period.

Should the helicopter be secured the committee recommends that the Delta people be alerted on time that during the enumeration period they should not be surprised and get scared when the helicopter lands in their areas.

According to the members of the sub-committee, the Delta people may run away and hide from the enumerators at the sight of a strange machine like a helicopter, if they were not alerted on time.

The committee further suggested that the Census Office in Gaborone should be contacted to approach the Botswana Defence Force to borrow from them radios which could be used by some enumerators who will be doing the delta area and other areas where communication would be difficult.

In an interview with BOPA the District Communication Committee Secretary Mr B.K. Mokonopi said he believed that the 419 houses in the Delta were not included in the 1971 population census because they did not appear on the map.

He further said that those settlements seem not to be known by even Government and the people there have not really been touched by development that is going on in other areas of the country.

The committee also revealed that some houses in Maun are not reflected on the map because they are newly built. The committee suggested that a mapping team should visit Maun before the enumeration period to set the record straight. The committee also has requested to be supplied with 20 vehicles and they are to apply for five more to have a total of 25 vehicles.

The enumerators who were recruited between July 15 and 16 will undergo some training in the Maun and or Gomare training centres from August 6 to 10. They will be distributed to their enumeration areas on August

'TWINNING' OF MAPUTO HARBOR, SELEBI-PHIKWE WORKERS URGED

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 30 Jul 81 p 1

[Article by Bapasi Mphusu]

[Text] Botswana and Mozambique should create a relationship of 'twins' between the workers at Maputo Harbour and those at the Selebi-Phikwe Mine. "Workers at the Maputo Harbour should treat goods to and from Mozambique's neigh bouring independent countries like a newly-born baby."

This advice was given by Mozambican President Samora Moises Machel during a luncheon at the Bosele Hotel in Selebi-Phikwe during his one-day visit to the copper/nickel town yesterday.

The visiting President, who toured the copper mine in the afternoon, said that the workers of Maputo harbour should visit the mine to see where the goods which give them jobs come from.

Likewise, he added, Selebi-Phikwe mine should visit Maputo to see how their products were treated.

Marshal Machel said that the workers would discover that their interests were the same. He added that the relationship of Botswana and Mozambique were based on a solid base which started during the struggle for political independence and now continuing in the struggle for economic independence.

Earlier, the Minister of Mineral Resources and Water Affairs Dr G.K.T. Chiepe said that the relationship between the people of Selebi-Phikwe and Maputo have been elevated because of Marshal Machel's visit.

She added that Botswana was happy at the facilities provided by Mozambique at Maputo harbour for the transportation of Copper and Nickel from Selebi Phikwe.

Dr Chiepe said that she was looking forward to stronger ties with Mozambique, especially when the two countries were members of SADCC.

Dr Chiepe added that the facilities Botswana gets from the Maputo harbour were a source of livelihood in Selebi-Phikwe and the country as a whole.

President Machel, his wife, senior Mozambique ministers and officials were led in the tour of the mine by the BCL General Manager Mr Mike Foreman.

Eariler in the morning, Marshal Machel was given a rousing welcome by the people of Selebi-Phikwe when he landed at the airport. He was met by the Ministerr of Education Mr K.P. Morake and the Mayor of Selebi-Phikwe, Mr Albert Paki.

COTTON GROWING AT TALANA FARMS DESCRIBED

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 16 Jul 81 p 2

[Article by Bapasi Mphusu]

[Text]

LOCATED IN THE northern part of the fertile Tuli Block in eastern Botswana, and sprawling at the confluence of Motloutse and Limpopo Rivers, is the over 6 000 hectare Talana Farms.

The farms, a 100 per cent subsidiary of the Botswana Development Corporation (BDC) is where the BDC is taking an adventure in cotton growing - the cash crop that is clothing us.

The pioneers of the farms were a group of South Africans who settled there sometime in the 1950s. The place was then known as the Gesond Farms. The group consisted of four men who formed a company and these were Ediega Goulbloom, King Gilrooi, Gauy Brathwiest and Philip Grape.

The four settler-farmers arrived in the area with wide ambitions which included the building of a huge canal to pull the water to the farm. The idea aborted after a lot of money was wasted. A number of boreholes was drilled and they managed to harness some water to start their project.

Before they abandoned the farm the four men attempted cotton growing.

The Tuli Block, the land criss-crossed with farms is one of the most fertile parts of Botswana which attracted foreign settler-farmers. The farms in the area are an indelible mark which bears testimony to the partitioning of the area by the settlers amongst themselves.

The BDC, the corporation which does business on behalf of the government came in the picture in 1974 when they bought the farms from that South African Company. It was then all bushes and thorny trees. They settled down to clear the area and by 1975 the first cotton seeds were dropped.

The place has now turned into a flurry of activity from morning to late afternoon. There is the curling black smoke rising into the sky underneath trees being cleared for an expansion. The drilling machine is blurring sinking a new well for irrigation. Workers spread out into the white sea of the cotton picking the white heads. The cotton-picking machine makes its way noisely through the white-headed cotton plants leaving behind beaten up worthless brownish bushes robbed of their valuable white heads.

Talana Farms is a complex of four farms of about 6 000 hectares out of which 350 is under irigation. There are three main crops grown in the farms, cotton, maize and wheat.

Cotton is the principal cash crop which the BDC concenprates on. It is grown on an entirely irrigation basis. There are seven boreholes supplying 40 000 gallons of water an hour for the irrigation. A new borehole is being drilled to cope up with the expanding field.

When the BDC embarked on this cotton growing venture they recruited a Zambian farmer to manage the project. Mr W.D. Faurie manages the whole Talana farms. He arrived in Botswana in November 1973 from Zambia where he did cotton farming and dairy.

The climate of Botswana is very good for cotton growing according to Mr Faurie because "cotton needs a lot of sunshine." The only problem is that Botswana does not have sufficient rainfall "but the Tuli Block has a lot of underground water," he added.

Cotton planting starts in the middle of October and gets ready for picking by April. The whole cotton acreage is under irrigation and on to hectares experimental irrigation is done by two centre Pivot machines acquired in 1979.

Mr Faurie said that unlike Botswana neighbouring countries South Africa, Zimbabwe and Zambia have sufficient rainfall and part of their cotton growing was not under irrigation. Some groups of peasants are also engaged in cotton farming in Zimbubwe's once tribal trust lands.

After planting, the farm is sprayed against insects after every 10 days. Almost all insects destroy cotton from four weeks of planting the field is scouted regularly to look for areas invaded by insects.

Mr Faurie explained that the spraying of the field continues until when the cotton opens. He said that cotton was a very weak plant to germinate. "We plant more seeds than we want," he added.

He explains that when the plant reaches the three-leaf stage "we start thinning up to get the right spacing between the crops." Cotton does not need a lot of fertilisers but just a reasonable amount because the soil in the Tuli Block is very good.

Some of the most dangerous enemies of cotton among the insects include the Red Bollworm, American Bollworm, Spiny Bollworm, Cocoon Aphids, Jassids, RSM (spider), Stainer which stains the cotton. Others are the predators which eat other insects, elephant grasshopper and cotton leaf worm and the last two eat cotton plant leaves.

Because of this army of insects, Mr Faurie said that chemicals for spraying the field was one of the most expensive aspect in cotton growing.

One exercise in eliminating insects is done immediately after the completion of the picking of cotton. After harvest, the stalks are ploughed down because they breed insects.

Mr Faurie also explained that when left the cotton plants start growing again. This is a two month dormant period in the field with no cotton plants around eliminate insects.

"In September we start our pre-irrigation to get the field ready for planting by October," he said.

The picking of cotton starts immediately when it gets ready because "the longer it stays in the land the more it drops and dries up and loses weight." Mr Faurie explained.

The Farm employs peasants from the surrounding villages for the picking. Recently a P65 000 cotton picking machine was purchased to facilititate in the picking because there is an acute shortage of human labour for hand picking.

The workers themselves are fed by the farm and paid profitable Delta Piner for machine picking.

For this year there are 180 hectares under cotton, 100 hectares for wheat and 80 hectares for maize

The area is busy being expanded and the target is to have 700 hectares of irrigation by 1983. The expansion will cover both the northern and southern banks of Motloutse River.

In addition the BDC had acquired the Merry Hill Farm but the arable space is small about 130 hectares towards the Limpopo River.

The growing of cotton rotates with wheat, cotton being a Summer crop with maize and wheat a Winter crop.

Like cotton, wheat is also sold to South Africa because it cannot be processed here. Its acreage is between 100 and 120 hectares and the yield is 4.5 tonnes a hectare.

Mr Faurie said: "We sell wheat to South Africa and the business people import the flour." Likewise, the maize produced mainly for the farm rations is milled in South Africa.

Mr Faurie explained however that if the road communications between the Tuli Block and the market in Botswana were good he would sell the maize supplies to the Botswana Agricultural Marketing Board (BAMB).

Other auxiliary crops are pumpkins and vegetables which are meant for the consumption of the farm labourers. Small Weights of pumpkins are however sold to South Africa.

Mr Faurie also said that they experimented with groundnuts and they grew well in the area, "but we discontinued the project because we have no handling equipment."

He added that the growing of groundnuts clashed with cotton "and I cannot divide workers between groundnuts and cotton."

He however said that if the market for groundnuts improves, they may resume the growing.

On the whole the Talana Farms cotton growing has shown signs of advancement since it was started. Since 1977 the yield as has been recorded is as follows: 1977 165 hectares 2 812 kg per hectare; 1978 acreage 160 hectares yield 2 837 kg per hectare; 1979 163 hectares yield 2 443 kg per hectare and 1980 150 hectares yielded 2 525 kg per hectare according to the amount they have picked. The wages are from three to seven Thebe a kilogram.

By the time of the visit to the farms there were about 86 workers picking the cotton.

Mr Faurie said that sometimes the farm gets about 150 school children for the picking during school holidays. The workers are fed from the maize grown in the farm and some vegetables and pumpkins. The rations include daily issues of meat.

The hand picked cotton has a 10 per cent advantage over the machine picked one. According to Mr Faurie, when selling, 10 per cent is deducted from the machine picked cotton because it was not clean. It has a lot of trash while the hand picked one is clean. The machine however picks faster than people.

The machine was being used because of the shortage of labourers. The picking starts in April and lasts up to August. After harvest the yield is packed, made ready for transportation to the market. It is sold to the J.L. Clark Cotton Company of South Africa.

Botswana is not an exception in the intricate problems faced by developing countries of lagging far behind in technological advancement. Developing countries have watched their raw materials siphoned away to developed countries for processing and then buying expensive finished goods.

With Botswana's inextricable economic ties with South Africa the nearest market for the BDC cotton is South Africa. Mr Faurie said that it was being sold there because the BDC had no processing machinery, that is ginneries.

The ginneries which do the processing, separating cotton from seeds is expensive, he added. The BDC buys back part of the seeds for growing. Cotton seeds are also processed to squeeze out oil which is rich in protein and the cake is good for cattle feed.

The BDC, according to Mr Faurie, has no plans to set up its own processing machinery "until we get sufficient cotton yield to warrant the buying of a ginnery." He added that it may take up to five years to start such a venture.

There are two varieties of cotton grown at the Talana Farms - the most profitable CS- for hand picking and the less

SERETSE: BDF WILL CHECK CONFLICTS

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 21 Jul 81 p 1

[Text]

BOTSWANA Defence Force (BDF) has a very significant role to play in ensuring that we adequately combat any threat to the Botswana Nation, said the Vice President and Minister of Local Government and Lands Mr Lenyeletse Seretse in a brief address during the BDF passout parade at Mogoditshane last Friday.

The Vice President said, it was very relevant to notice that every country along Botswana's borders was or had at some stage had some form of conflict raging within its borders.

He said, Botswana despite her long peacefull existence, had, both in the past and at present experienced the overspills of these conflicts.

Suggestions had been offered since the end of the Rhodesian bush war, that the BDF should adopt other roles that bear no resemblance to military functions, and others had even suggested that the BDF should be disbanded, the Vice President added

However, Mr Seretse said neither of these two suggestions were realistic, to say the least.

"We were caught off our guard at the onset of the Rhodesian war" and "we should realise from this experience never to be caught unprepared whilst there exists in the minds of apartheid South Africa the need to exercise the right of their forces in attempting to bulldoze a way of life that is unacceptable to all nations of the world," he added.

Mr Seretse told the soldiers, "Your performance on the border and your impressive displays of drill together with other activities for the entertainment of the general public are deeply appreciated and this you should continue in order to boost your image in an attempt to defeat the efforts of your critics, who are very few anyway."

The Vice President said, "your contribution to sporting activities in this country is beyond reproach, your own commander is the Chairman of the Botswana National Sports Council, and we look to you to lead the way in such fields."

He further said that there would never be any doubt in the Government's thinking that the BDF had to justify its existence since it had been justified already.

On the other hand the Vice President said armies in this continent had won a bad reputation and this he said was admittedly caused by chaotic internal political situations which gave rise to military adventurism.

He reiterated that here in Botswana there was a stable political situation, one of the most stable in Africa.

He encouraged the soldiers in question to take advantage of the continued training they would receive in the future in what ever fields they would enter within the force.

FARMERS URGED TO APPLY FOR NATA TGLP RANCHES

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 7 Jul 81 p 1

[Text]

THE ASSISTANT Minister of Local Government and Lands, Mr D.K. Kwele has adviced farmers in the North East District to form themselves into groups and apply for the Nata Tribal Grazing Land Policy (TGLP) ranches where there is adequate grazing.

Mr Kwele said this over the weekend when performing the official opening of Tati Agricultural Show at Masunga.

He said that priority in the allocation of these farms was given to farmers from that area because their district was too small and overgrazed.

"Farmers in this district are adviced not to apply for livestock loans from the National Development Bank unless they are prepared to take cattle outside the district," he said.

In the meantime, he added that there were 20 ranches at Nata and eight of them had already been allocated to some farmers of the North East District.

Mr Kwele said that work was going on to extend the railway-cross at Tshesebe in an attempt to improve livestock marketing in the district.

In addition, demonstration facilities such as kraals and crushes have been constructed at the Impala Government Ranch under Services for Livestock Owners in Communal Areas (SLOCA).

Mr Kwele said that last year the Land Use Division constructed eight water crouchs in the district and installed hand-pumps in the dams. He added that the Dam Building Unit would also dig wells around the lands areas where dams cannot be constructed.

He said that the Mtimbale Communal Grazing was under construction by the Animal Production Research Unit. This project he said was facilitated by the cooperation and initiative of the two communities at Mambo and Masingwaneng who were now registered at Mtimbale Agricultural Management Association.

The Minister disclosed that the opening of the Eastern side of the railway line for cattle to be sent to Botswana Meat Commission (BMC) would depend on the situation of Foot and Mouth disease in Zimbabwe as well as the cooperation of farmers in the area.

Mr Kwele added that a cordon fence would be constructed from Ramakgwebana to Basuto in order to minimise the infiltration of cattle from Zimbabwe.

Turning to the efficient running of Agricultural Snow, Mr Kwele said that people must be prepared to discuss their problems and should consult each other to ensure the success of the show.

BRIEFS

BATAWANA LEADER NAMED--Mr Mathiba Moremi (40) the late Chief Letsholathebe II Moremi's younger brother has been unaminously nominated as the regent of the Batawana until such time as Letsholathe's son, Tawana Moremi (12) will be old enough to take up the position. In a Kgotia meeting, held after the District Commissioner had anounced that the government had allowed them an opportunity to elect their regent. About 2 000 people voted in favour of Mr Moremi while Mohumagadi E. D. Moremi got only 18 votes. A few people felt that Mohumagadi Moremi should act in her son's position just like it happened in the past when the late Elizabeth Moremi acted when her son the late Chief Letsholathe was young following the death of Chief Letsholathebe II. The majority were strongly opposed to the suggestion, arguing that Letsholathebe II did not have any brother unlike is at present with the late Letsholathebe Moremi. The Batawana also rejected earlier claims made by the chairman of the meeting Mr Molathegi Dithotho that Mathiba was declared medically unfit to rule by a physician. The results would be brought to the District Commissioner who will forward them to the Minister of Local Government and Lands for consideration. REMOTE AREA DWELLERS--Remote Area Dwellers have been urged to integrate into the main society in order to dismantle feudalism. The Minister of Health, Mr Lemme Makgekgenene, made this appeal last week when addressing Remote Area Dwellers in the East Constituency. He urged them to bury their ethnic differences and to discard feelings of inferiority complex. Mr Makgekgenene appealed to the Remote Area Dwellers to reduce the deep-rooted sense of dependency by undertaking income generating projects such as arable farming nd livestock rearing. Mr Makgekgenene said that owing to colonial neglect, physical facilities were only extended to major villages. He added that people living in distant, inaccessible and scattered settlements were left out. "The government however has embarked on a programme geared towards extending the benefits of development to the Remore Area Dwelier," he said. The Remote Area Dwellers expressed gratitude to the Minister's speech but noted that they were confronted with the problems in the development of their lives. They indicated that the two major hardships were lack of water and inadequate payment of cattle herders. Some of them complained that there was insecurity of access to land for cattle used for ploughing in grazing areas because cattle destroy crops. [Text] [Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 7 Jul 81 p 1]

ADVANCED MISSILE-RADAR SYSTEM, LARGE FORCE OF CUBANS IN ANGOLA

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 7 Aug 81 p 19

[Excerpt] Windhoek--The nature of the war at and above the northern border of South-west Africa may change drastically in the near future as a result of the installation of advanced ground-to-air missiles and radar stations in Angola and a new involvement of Cuban soldiers in the conflict.

There is no longer any doubt now that the FAPLA (the military wing of the MPLA) has deployed some of the dangerous SAM-3 missiles and possibly even some of the greatly advanced SAM-6 missiles in Southern and Central Angola.

This coincides with the setting up of several radar stations in the southern section of the country which will ultimately cover the entire breadth of Angola. The Russian ground-to-air missiles are being connected to the radar system and together they form a deadly combination. This can force the South African armed forces to greatly alter its strategy (which so far has employed hit-and-run tactics and attacks on SWAPO bases), because no aircraft will any longer be safe north of the border.

According to initial information the SAM-missiles have thus far been deployed in at least two places: at the harbor town of Mossamedes and at Lubango, which was formerly known as Sa da Bandeira. At least one of the radar stations has been set up very close to the border. There is no information as to whether the systems are fully operational. The systems were installed by Russian and East German technologists and at the moment they are probably being manned by them.

Earlier reports by the UNITA liberation movement to the effect that a large force of Cuban soldiers is now assemblying in South-west Angola have now also been confirmed. The Cuban force is estimated at about 10,000 soldiers. They have assembled mainly in the Lubango region. It is also known that the Cubans have a large and well equipped armored base at Camaha between Lubango and Rocadas.

EDITORS OF 'NIGERIAN TRIBUNE' FACE SEDITION CHARGES

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2817, 7 Aug 81 p 18

[Text] Lagos, Aug 6--Sedition charges have been brought against editor Banji Ogundele and editor-in-chief Felix Adenaike of the NIGERIAN TRIBUNE, an opposition paper, all the national dailies reported here yesterday.

They said the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions had issued a three-count writ on Tuesday against the editors and the paper's publisher.

The charge arise from a TRIBUNE report on July 28 which alleged that President Shehu Shagari had personally taken over the "wooing" of federal legislators to enable his National Party "to go it alone" following the abrogation of an agreement with the People's Party that had ensured him a working majority in Parliament.

The story claimed that M.P.'s were being offered 50,000 naira (some 75,000 dollars) in cash, a monthly allowance of 5,000 naira, a Mercedes-Benz car, and a loan of between 100,000 and 150,000 naira for building a house.

The counts are that the editors published a seditious publication, that they knowingly published false statements likely to disturb public peace, and that the statements were likely to cause fear and alarm to the public.

Riot police moved into the premises of the publishers on Monday and searched the offices of the editors, who were reported to have been freed on bail on Tuesday. The TRIBUNE is owned by the Unity Party of veteran politician chief Obafemi Awolowo. (A.F.P.)

LIMITS OF COUNTRY'S POWER, INFLUENCE ABROAD EXAMINED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3339, 27 Jul 81 pp 1685-1687

[Article by Dr Stephen Wright, Department of Political Science, University of Sokoto]

[Text]

An editorial in the New Nigerian of July 2 titled "The need to shake up our foreign policy" highlighted the growing concern within the country over the nature and effectiveness of Nigeria's foreign policy. During recent months, there has been increasing frustration at the lack of success abroad, particularly in relation to West African issues and the Namibian question.

The New Nigerian's analysis presented two major reasons for the problems faced in foreign policy. The first reason was the lack of planning and organisation of foreign policy, while the second concerned the overtly rhetorical nature of policy, with its lack of action and effectiveness. These criticisms coincide with those of the eminent scholar, Professor Olajide Aluko of the University of Ife, who in his inaugural lecture in March as Professor of International Relations severely questioned the orientation and effectiveness of Nigeria's foreign policy. Aluko's attack was more significant in that it showed a marked change of attitude from his previous conception of a strong and powerful Nigeria having a dynamic and forceful role to play in African and global affairs. Aluko's perception now is that Nigeria has in fact over-estimated its power to act within the international system, and its leaders have tried in recent years to achieve things which were never really attainable. Aluko believes that by exaggerating the crusading element in Nigerian foreign policy, the government has tended to ignore and leave undefined the fundamental "national" interests of the country.

To some extent, all states are guided by pragmatic considerations in the formulation of foreign policy, and so no strict formula for defining national interests can be applied. However, in the Nigerian context there has been some contention about whether the focus should be egocentric, that is to say purely Nigerian, whether it should serve the West African region, Africa as a whole, or at its broadest, the interests of black people throughout the world. While none of these areas could be totally excluded from Nigerian foreign policy, the major concern is where the emphasis should lie.

This problem is increased by the growing unhappiness over the divergence between the expectations of foreign policy and the actual results. The general conception, supported by government pronouncements, is that Nigeria has the potential to shape important events within the international system. This view is based on its undisputed advantage of having an oil-based economy which provides the largest GNP of any state in Africa, coupled with the continent's largest population, somewhere in the region of 100 million people. Furthermore, diplomatic successes in bringing ECOWAS into existence (over French hostility), Angolan independence (over American opposition) and the British Petroleum nationalisation affair contributing to Zimbabwean independence all served to bolster the image of a dynamic and powerful foreign policy.

It may be more accurate, however, to see these events as separate or sporadic successes rather than as linked events in a constant chain of political power. These successes were also partly assisted by favourable external factors, such as the inability of the US to intervene in Angola, and Britain's genuine desire to grant Zimbabwe its independence, even though it was at the eleventh hour. The OPEC revolution provided Nigeria's leaders with the confidence and finance to act boldly in the world, while it pushed western states towards policies of caution and conciliation.

Events over the last year or so, but particularly since the election of President Ronald Reagan, have to some extent made conditions less favourable for Nigerian foreign policy. Any agreement with the US over policies towards South Africa is difficult to imagine with the Cold War imagery of the Reagan-Thatcher alliance, and with their need to cultivate South African support. In facing this challenge, Nigeria's leaders have been unable to mount an effective foreign policy mainly because the country does not possess the power to overcome Western intransigence. Most Nigerians grudgingly accept this point, but still feel that the country could present a stiffer challenge to the Western powers.

There are problems to face here, however. While it has already been agreed that Nigeria possesses some of the major attributes of power, it is too easy to fall into the trap of the old "realist" school to see power in terms of a series of static factors. Power is a relational term and must be understood in terms of the capacity to influence other states to do things they do not wish to do. It could be argued that Nigeria has "status" rather than "power", in that it has some of the major features of power, but at times cannot effectively utilise them to influence the actions of other states, whether at the global, continental or regional level.

In terms of relations with the West, the neo-colonial nature of the Nigerian economy is a major constraint preventing exports of primary products (albeit mainly oil) and imports of industrial and manufactured goods, with the shortage of indigenous manpower and the need to bring in expatriate personnel, the economy is open to manipulation by non-Nigerian forces, particularly the multinational companies. Nigeria's leaders are often exhorted to use the "oil weapon" in the country's foreign policy, but the ability to do this must be questioned. Admittedly, Nigeria supplies the US with a sizeable proportion of that country's imported oil and so could threaten supplies to gain political concessions. However, as Nigeria is virtually totally dependent upon oil money for the economy, and as over half of the exported oil goes to the US, any cut in supplies would threaten revenues and development projects, and so bring economic dislocation to the country. Given the depressed state of the oil market at present, the chances of finding alternative buyers for Nigerian crude must also be limited.

Even allowing for the accepted constraints on foreign policy, frustration has grown at the government's apparent refusal to use a limited amount of pressure on western states. For example, at the end of last year, President Shagari stated explicitly that he would pressurise the US to bring Namibian independence in 1981, and yet despite the Americans' obvious rebuff, Nigeria has recently signed large agricultural agreements with them. Similarly, on Shagari's visit in March to London, virtually all the major points proposed by him were rejected by the British Government, and yet the door was torn wide open to increased Nigerian imports from Britain. It is here that words and actions are poles apart.

Some frustration and unease have also become evident in Nigeria's relations with African states. The common perception in the country is to see Nigeria as Africa's natural leader, given its predominant size and wealth, and so many people appear confused as to Nigeria's apparent lack of "clout" within the continent. The most recent rebutt came when the Nigeria-Cameroon border issue was not included on the OAU agenda in Nairobi, so causing President Shagari's boycott (coincidentally allowing the President to remain in Lagos to handle the domestic crisis resulting from the Kaduna impeachment trial).

Professor Aluko has been very critical of what he described as the "psychological" error of Nigerians in seeing themselves as the automatic and preordained leaders of the continent. It is evident that such a position would not emanate purely from Nigeria's apparent "status" in the continent, but from the use of power over its fellow African states. Upon reflection, however, such a channel of influence does not exist. Nigeria has meaningful economic relations with only a small number of African states and so cannot hope to find any comprehensive means of leverage there. The country's Armed Forces stand as one of the largest in the continent, but military force has never really been considered as a resource of foreign policy, though some observers believe at least some threat of military action is now necessary to deal with the recalcitrant neighbouring states.

If one could turn the question around, then we could ask why should any African state want to accept Nigeria as its spokesman? Would any of the states of the European Community willingly pass on the mantle of de facto leadership to a single state? As in Europe, the desire for sovereignty and independent government in Africa is strong. Where African states may concur with Nigeria is if they do not perceive the issue to be contentious, or if they see some form of straightforward gain emanating from such a stance, but these are normal precepts of diplomacy. Furthermore, if one considers the continent over the past 20 years or so, the most respected leaders have been more vocal than powerful, whether being in Nkrumah or a Nyerere, so power may not be the only consideration. However, Nyerere's intervention in Uganda and Gaddafi's in Chad are pointers to the type of policy Nigeria may have to pursue to gain more influence in the continent.

ECOWAS strains

It is within West Africa that much of Nigeria's discontent originates. On the whole, ECOWAS has proved to be a useful and successful organisation, and Nigeria's relations with all the member states have been fairly cordial and stable. Despite this fact, irritating problems with some neighbouring states have at times soured relations. The recent border clashes with Benin and Cameroon, the mistakes and failure to act effectively in Chad, and the refusal to intervene in Equitorial Guinea in the late 1970s, all are issues which have troubled Nigeria and which have not received the appropriate response. The fact that Nigeria is surrounded by French-speaking countries is significant. Though one would like to think that the term "francophonie" is a political anachronism, it is unfortunately not so, and continuing French influence in these countries and other ECOWAS members, as Dr. Bolaji Akinyemi pointed out recently (New Nigerian, June 16), provides cause for concern for Nigerian decicion-makers.

Nigeria's position in ECOWAS is a somewhat paradoxical one. The country is as strong economically as all the other members combined, but it does not have the corresponding political influence. Given that it is a basic fact of international politics that weak states will join together to combat a stronger one, there is an obvious fear within the government that any attempt to enforce its will on others will alienate them from Nigeria and ECOWAS. Thus, Nigeria's supposed strength appears to be its very weakness. The New Nigerian raised the question of Nigeria reverting to "bully-boy" tactics to get its way with its neighbours, but saw that this would have serious repercussions. The interventions by Nigeria during the recent coups d'etat in Ghana and Liberia were not successful and only served to sour relations. Nigeria's strategy must be to gain influence through economic penetration, thus to promote subtle influence over its neighbours, rather than to pursue a "big stick" policy.

Nuclear problems

The final issue to discuss in this brief survey concerns the debate within the country over whether or not to "go nuclear". The Punch of July 2 reported that the Ministry of Mines and Power had finally decided to go ahead with the nuclear programme using ₦10m. earmarked by the Federal Government for initial research and development. The debate over a nuclear programme has generated some controversy, but the majority of people appear to favour such a plan. Stripped to its crudest form, the logic is that Nigeria is a leading power, and as all leading powers by definition should be nuclear, so Nigeria should also go nuclear. There is also, of course, the military dimension. Neither the former Head of State, General Olusegun Obasanjo, nor President Shagari have bothered with normal diplomatic niceties, but have stated explicitly that Nigeria wants nuclear military firepower to combat and neutralise the nuclear weaponry of South Africa.

The possession of a nuclear capability may do much to raise the strength and bargaining position of Nigeria within Africa and the world as a whole, but there are many drawbacks which should be noted. The issue of "status versus power" is again important, because possession of nuclear weapons, while conferring status, does not automatically give power. It is unlikely, for example, that relations with Britain or the US would change if Nigeria possessed nuclear weaponry, and yet it is through these relations that Nigeria's underdevelopment condition is maintained. Would Nigeria threaten a nuclear attack on the US or Britain or France?

If one turns to look at Nigerian-South African relations, then some intriguing questions arise. Possession of nuclear weapons of Nigeria is regarded as a way to deal with the obnoxious regime, but the realities of this should be considered. For anyone with any doubts concerning the limits to which the black sheep of the international community — South Africa and Israel — will go to maintain their survival, the Israeli destruction of Baghdad's nuclear reactor provides a useful lesson. If Nigeria's nuclear programme is specifically to fight South Africa, why should the apartheid regime not employ a similar tactic?

If one accepts the assumption that Nigeria will get to the stage of producing nuclear weapons — and whichever country supplies the technology and the enriched uranium will have to do some diplomatic somersaults to ignore the Non-Proliferation Treaty — there is the question of what type of weapon to produce. At present, there is rather a simplistic view that the bomb — a deus ex machina — is all that is needed and there is little thought as to its sophistication, delivery or power.

To take just one issue — though a crucial one — of the type of weapon, it is important to consider the implications of having tactical or strategic nuclear weapons. If Nigeria were to build tactical or smaller, weapons, then these would probably have to be located somewhere in the front-line states. It is fairly safe to predict that none of the front-line states would want nuclear weapons based on their soil for fear of retaliation by South Africa, or for fear of nuclear devastation.

International role

The possession of strategic nuclear missiles based in Nigeria and trained on South Africa presents an equally difficult problem. What has generally been ignored is the fundamental fact that South Africa is not a white country, but a black country, where non-whites constitute around 80 per cent of the population. If a future nuclear confrontation were to arise, would any Nigerian President risk the destruction not only of Nigeria, but also of the very people in South Africa whom he is supposed to be liberating? Such a question may not prevent Nigeria from going nuclear, but may well affect the credibility of its future nuclear policy.

In conclusion, it is necessary to state that the aim here has not been to paint too bleak a picture of the constraints and limitation on Nigerian foreign policy, because it is evident that the country does play a major role in the international system. The aim, however, has been to point to some of the factors responsible for the apparent lack of success in foreign policy. No real distinction has been made between the Obasanjo and Shagari administrations in the field of foreign policy because, in broad terms, none exists. If anything, the problems facing the Shagari government are greater because of the increasingly unfavourable external environment, as well as the domestic pressures from the competitive and volatile party system. Given these increased constraints, it is even more imperative to define and reorientate Nigerian foreign policy in order to attempt to match rhetoric with action.

BRIEFS

ARGENTINA GRANTS LOAN--Dakar, 21 Aug (AFP)--Argentina has granted Senegal a loan of $15 million for financing water and anti-bush fire projects. This agreement confirms Argentina's determination to strengthen its solidarity ties with the countries of the Group of 77, declared the Senegalese equipment minister, Mr Assane Seck, after signing the agreement with Mr Marcelo Delpech, the ambassador of Argentina. He recalled that last year the Argentine Government granted food aid to Senegal, a drought victim. [Text] [AB211509 Paris AFP in French 1354 GMT 21 Aug 81]

THOUGHTS ON PRESERVATION OF WHITE INTERESTS

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 29 Jul 81 p 10

["Political Perspective" column by Willem de Klerk: "Whites Demand Guarantees"]

[Text] It is the feeling throughout the country that the political accent in the Nationalist Party has shifted to a cautious reservedness with respect to many of the policy initiatives of the Botha government.

At this stage I would rather refrain from assuming a stand on this matter while waiting for the opening of parliament.

The point that I really wish to make is that the emphasis on white guarantees is neither untimely nor ultraconservative for the future development. This is a justified concern.

Demand

The whites see what is happening in our industrial revolution with the growing black labor force. We see and hear that a total attack is being directed against the white government; moreover, the many projections being made for the year 2000 are arousing the realistic fear that the whites will be engulfed.

The fact that the whites demand that their right for self-determination be fortified (before they have to make a final choice in a certain sense) is a sign of responsibility. This is the demand they put to the Nationalist Party.

This is exactly what the discussions in the inner circles of the Afrikaners are about. namely, whether the Nationalist Party's white policy is providing sufficient guarantees. The result of the election has disclosed this uncertainty.

For me it is clear that the Nationalist Party is the only party which can provide these guarantees to the extent that it is humanly possible.

I am basing this view on a national principle which forms the basis of the Nationalist Party policy. This political philosophy rejects a unitary state and a federation and builds upon self-determination by the national states. These leading thoughts are bound to the idea of a confederation in which common interests can be managed.

In Practice

However, these two points of departure (national states and a confederation) will not be the answer for the protection of white interests if they do not result in a total strategy by means of which certain things are established in practice.

I am listing a few of these concrete things:

A large-scale influx of blacks to the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vereniging area must be drastically curtailed and development in the black states must be tackled with as much energy as never before. As already stated, there must be a Marshall Plan. With the help of the development bank, collaborative projects and the inclusion of large consortiums, on the basis of an attractive rate of profit, it will be possible to concentrate on several regions which can lead to the final establishment of industrial decentralization.

If it turns out that development has no real growing power in the black states then it will be necessary to so locate black towns at border development areas that as time goes on these can be incorporated into these countries. Therefore it will be necessary to give continuous attention to consolidation plans and development must take into account the shifting of country borders which will be taking place.

Substance

The partnership of black labor and white capital must absorb the labor force of black nations. There will still be more than enough for the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vereniging area and for other labor-intensive areas and enterprises.

The confederation must obtain political substance as soon as possible in addition to the economic side of collaboration. What I mean by this are things such as the constitution of a city council where things can be considered jointly, a common passport, the conclusion of agreements, the establishment of a confederal secretariat and still other things which will visually bind the nations of South Africa together.

If progress is made to the point where the above-mentioned three things will be on their way then the other points of difficulty will fall in line easier.

Without the development as sketched out above it will be impossible for the whites in South Africa to manage their own fate.

ANTINEUTRON BOMB PROPAGANDA BELIEVED TO BE SOVIET INSPIRED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 11 Aug 81 p 10

[Editorial: "Sly Propaganda"]

[Text] As well as he could have, President Reagan knew that his decision to allow the manufacture of neutron warheads would unchain strong protests...even in his own country, but especially abroad. Three years ago his predecessor, President Carter, gave in to such protests which were nourished by a cunning propaganda.

In a sly manner propagandists latched on to an argument used by the advocates of the neutron weapon for justifying its possible use. They pointed out that the weapon kills only people by emitting radiation which can penetrate even armored plate without damaging buildings or polluting the environment as is done by the usual nuclear bombs. This was emphasized with an eye to one of the most prevalent objections against the employment of the usual nuclear bombs: these can destroy an inhabited area completely and render it uninhabitable for years.

The people conducting the propaganda against neutron weapons, using this as a basis, decried these advocates as heartless barbarians who are more upset about buildings than about people's lives! What is astounding is the number of people deceived by this false presentation.

Another argument against the neutron bomb is that its use can be presented by the opposing party as a justification for the employment of the usual nuclear weapons which are certain to cause the most fearful destruction and pollution. There is something in this, but the opposite is also true.

The situation is that the Western powers in Europe are being confronted with an enormous superiority in Russian tanks. It is generally accepted that the Soviet Union and its allies have three times as many battle-ready tanks as the NATO powers. The Americans and the others are of the view that neutron weapons, which evidently can be used against tanks very effectively, can help in restoring the equilibrium. Without it the Western powers could in the end be forced to employ nuclear bombs.

However, in some circles such arguments are being browbeaten by emotional outbursts. Pacifists and others who figure that the West must not in any case defend itself militarily against the Soviet Union, especially with nuclear weapons, are the ones to incite these outbursts. These protests are being zealously supported behind the scenes and even led by agents of the Soviet Union and their fellow travelers in the West who are bent on keeping the West as weak as possible.

Undoubtedly an attempt will now be made to subject Western unity, which is already showing disquieting flaws, to new tensions by stirring up feelings against the neutron weapon.

REFORM OF COUNTRY DISCUSSED; EEC TYPE PASSPORT SUGGESTED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 4 Aug 81 p 10

[Editorial: "A Glimpse of the Future"]

[Text] The bases for reform and change in South Africa as laid out by the government, which is continuously engaged in this activity, was the central theme of the comprehensive address in which the prime minister took the initiative in yesterday's censure debate in parliament.

The guideline for this was pointed out with emphasis by Mr P. W. Botha: vertical government systems for the various population groups, economic decentralization and the devolution of powers; however, with an uninterrupted foundation (with the decisive rejection of a national convention--"which must necessarily lead to a greater chaos.")

The first thing in the embodiment of this is a constellation of states concerning which an impressive amount of preliminary work on an economic level has already been done. In the political area the existing economic realities will be able to greatly facilitate and promote the idea of collaboration in a confederal context, especially between South Africa and the national states.

For the blacks outside the states even more measures are being considered this year for carrying self government to a higher level than that of a municipal status. At the same time work is being done on a burning question, namely, citizenship and in connection with this Mr Botha pointed to the possibilities of an EEC-passport for all the member countries of the European Economic Community. Perhaps the European model offers a way out for an especially difficult South African problem.

There is evidently haste with respect to a new constitutional arrangement for whites and coloreds, hence the prime minister's reference to the possibility of an interim report by the Presidential Council concerning local government and regional authorities. Regardless of the urgency it will be necessary to dedicate a great deal of skill and consideration to this matter in view of the fact that local government will be the broad basis for the pyramid of the new constitutional order.

The prime minister's emphasis on the necessity of economic decentralization (which among other things entails regional development, new growth points, the proper utilization of land and the stimulation of business) is indicative of the government's resoluteness in reforming South Africa in a fruitful manner with a solid forward-striving program in which the mistakes of the past will be avoided.

Viewed as a whole yesterday the prime minister demonstrated in parliament that the government is working on many fronts for changing South Africa in a drastic, but evolutionary, manner and doing so with a firm hand so that there will be a future for everybody. The government is engaged in a great task: building a house of many rooms to which additions are being made day after day and the walls of which, standing as they do on strong foundations, have already reached roof heights.

MINISTER DISCUSSES MASS DISPLACEMENTS, FACILITIES

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 5 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] The solution of the problem of mass displacement in South Africa lies in greater decentralization and in the creation of more facilities. Yesterday in Capetown Minister of Cooperation and Development Dr Piet Koornhof said that the provision of these facilities deserves special attention on the part of the government.

In an interview with DIE BURGER he further elucidated the points of view he set forth last week on black displacements.

Dr Koornhof said that wrong interpretations were given to what he said about displacement in the course of a seminar of the Nationalist Party in the constituency of Jeppe and during a later interview. The interpretation that the Nationalist Party or himself have disassociated themselves from the stated intentions of doing away with unnecessary discrimination is completely untrue and has been belied by the facts and the measures of the government.

United States

Fears of displacement of one group of people by another, especially mass displacement, is being manifested all over. He will not close his eyes to such fears, but will deal with them with fairness and justice to the best of his ability. An ostrich policy on such a matter is wrong.

Dr Koornhof said that he stands by what he said in the United States with respect to apartheid and also what he said in Jeppe. The two viewpoints are completely unreconcilable.

The more successful is the Nationalist Party in its policy of multinational development the more need there will be for contact between the various groups. It is impossible for groups to live in complete isolation just as it is hardly possible to live in complete integration in South Africa's microcosm of peoples.

Not Consistent

It is for this reason that the government wants to make available their own institutions to the various groups. At the same time the government is accordingly making efforts at creating joint establishments for complying with certain economic, labor and other requirements.

Interpretation to the effect that the government is supposedly reverting to zoning separate facilities along color lines or in a racist manner are misrepresentations and are not consistent with the elimination of offensive discrimination. Practical regulations, based on the merits of specific cases, is another matter especially in situations of mass usage where the capacities of the facilities must be taken into consideration.

"If this portion of facilities gives rise to situations of conflict and to the disturbance of racial relations it will be necessary to look after such situations, because nothing good will then be achieved."

Dr Koornhof said that it is the stated aim of the government to do away with offending discrimination and friction as much as possible. This may be taking place too slow to please the taste of some people, but for other people this is progressing too fast.

EXCESSIVE MILITARY EXPENDITURES QUESTIONED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Jul 81 p 7

[Text] The fact that in the financial year 1979-80 the armed forces spent more than was allotted to them by parliament can be ascribed in part to a sharp increase in operational actions. For example Operation Smokeshell of June of last year, in which SWAPO was dealt an especially hard blow in Angola, cost 11 million rand.

These facts are apparent from the minutes of a select committee on public accounting which this year has started an investigation also covering unauthorized expenditures on the part of the armed forces. These minutes were published yesterday.

Gen Constant Viljoen, the chief of the armed forces, testified that the excess in the authorized budget amounted to only 1 percent of the total amount. The actions of the armed forces are very unpredictable both with respect to the scale of the operations and the provisions of armaments.

Reconcile

"The scale of operations is determined by enemy actions which must be countered and prevented on short notice. Complex systems of the most modern technology, which cannot be obtained in the open market or off the shelf, are involved in the procurement of armaments."

"In practice these uncertain factors have always rendered it very difficult for the armed forces to reconcile scheduled plans as budgeted with the actual performances expenditures."

General Viljoen testified that an unauthorized expenditure of 496,104.90 rand was incurred for the transportation of soldiers by the Hire-a-Bus private enterprise. A certain major entered into a verbal contract with the enterprise without following the correct procedure and as a result the cost turned out to be much more than was necessary.

The police undertook an investigation of this case and found that the officer had not acted dishonestly; however, a police investigation of the enterprise has not been conducted and the chairman of the committee, Mr G. J. Kotse has asked General Viljoen to have such an investigation done "for the sake of our peace of mind."

THUGS REPORTED KILLING MORE THAN 80 IN JINJA

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 25 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] More than 80 people have died in Jinja and nine others critically wounded since liberation, after being assaulted by thugs armed with iron bars (Mitayimba).

Mrs Penina Kirunda, a nursing officer-in-charge of Jinja Hospital emergency ward has said in Jinja.

This act of indiscriminate killing started immediately after the liberation of Jinja and intensified during the political campaigns of 1980.

The alleged mastermind of the iron bar as a tool of killing was arrested in June this year and is helping the police with investigations.

Mrs Kirunda said the iron bar victims meet their fate between 7 to 8 p.m. and that they are hit only on the head.

She said the number of casualties increase by two or three every day but she did not rule out a possibility of recording ten in a day.

One has to be very daring to leave the town at about 6.45 p.m. to walk to his house, she added.

The most notorious areas are Masese, Mpumude, Walukuba and the industrial area.

The latest victim admitted to hospital was Mr Wilson Ajoli, a veterinary assistant in Soroti District.

Ajoli had travelled from Kampala and at 7.30 p.m. while heading to the railways' goods shed to meet his brother, was waylaid by the thugs.

His trouser pockets were ransacked and 6000/- taken. His graduated tax tickets for the years 1978-81 and his identity card were also taken.

Other victims in critical condition are Alex Odenyo, Owen Okongo, Oketta Basil, Abilo Okello and Zakaria.

Last April Capt. Were of the Uganda National Liberation Army was killed at Mailo Mbili by the thugs after he had escorted his wife to the railway station.

ZANU (PF) TO MOVE INTO PUBLISHING

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] ZANU (PF) is going into the publishing business to boost finances and make the party "the most powerful machinery in Africa", the party's acting secretary for publicity, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said yesterday.

A new financial control mechanism was being worked out to "thoroughly" revamp the party. The measures would be applied at branch, district, provincial and central committee levels.

Dr Zvobgo said in an interview that the Minister of Finance, Mr Enos Nkala, in his capacity as treasurer-general, and the Minister of Youth, Sport and Recreation, Mr Ernest Kadungure, as the party's secretary for finance, would be heavily involved.

He said the publicity department of the party was making a major effort to increase revenue by going into the printing and publishing business. Jongwe Publishing Company would be established on a commercial basis as soon as plans had been finalised.

A new weekly newspaper in Shona, Ndebele and English would be published by the new company in addition to Zimbabwe News, the party's organ. "It will also publish books, text books. literature used during the war and other Dr Zvobgo said.

The firm would be the largest publishers in the country, he claimed.

"The party is going flat-out to raise funds. There should be no problem because what the people want is an efficient party machinery that is gigantic," he explained.

Dr Zvobgo said the idea had already been welcomed by members who were keen on the restructuring of the party.

"I am quite convinced that by the end of the yar, ZANU (PF) will be the most powerful and efficient machinery in Africa."

The minister could not give an estimate, but the project was expected to cost a substantial amount. A printer had already been engaged, and another would soon arrive from Germany to take up his post.

The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, would start provincial tours to personally direct the reorganisation of the party starting with Manicaland province tomorrow.

The party congress would be held when reorganisation had been completed. Dr Zvobgo said the congress would be crucial because it would review and lay down the policy binding the party.

PM ON DANGER OF SOUTH AFRICA SUPPORTERS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday called for maximum vigilance among all Zimbabweans as there were "hundreds, if not thousands" of South African supporters in the country who had not yet repented.

Pretoria's sympathisers were "truly in our midst", he said, and everyone should stay ready because "the enemy is daily preparing for war against us".

Addressing mourners at the funeral of Mr Joe Gqabi, the ANC's representative who was assassinated in Salisbury on July 31, the Prime Minister said the killing was a bitter testimony to those Zimbabweans who thought the struggle had ended when the country attained its independence.

"Let this event shake them into a new awakening and consciousness of the need for greater vigilance . . . Our independence must not be destablised by our lack of will or military preparedness to defend it against invaders or saboteurs.

The death of Comrade Gqabi should be viewed as an event that fits into the pattern of South Africa's hostile strategy for this region, with particular reference to Zimbabwe.

"We should constantly remember that there are in the country still hundreds, if not thousands, of people who continue to be sympathisers or supporters of South Africa and have not yet repented," Mr Mugabe told the mourners.

Condemning the Pretoria regime for the "callous murder", he reaffirmed the Government's unwavering support for South Africa's liberation movements.

Zimbabwe would not be deterred by the "heinous murder" nor other naked acts of aggression from South Africa, which included economic sabotage against this country.

"Whatever the capacity of the Pretoria regime to unleash suffering and evil, the undeniable reality is that apartheid, together with its apostles, is fast becoming encircled and driven more and more into a laager for final annihilation.

Doomsday

"The masses of South Africa have risen against it and are maintaining the countdown for its inevitable Doomsday. Let us hope the revolutionary momentum that exists in the country is maintained."

Praising Mr Gqabi for having paid the "supreme sacrifice" for his country, the Prime Minister told the ANC president, Mr Oliver Tambo:

Let the death of Comrade Joe inspire you to greater strides in the unfolding struggle against the Botha regime now running berserk. The people of South Africa are up in arms and desire courageous leadership. Please do not fail them."

He then turned to the Gqabi family and said Zimbabwe was offering her deepest sympathies and regretted that Mr Gqabi's death had occurred in the country.

"They (Zimbabweans) fervently appeal to you to accept the event with courage and understanding which recognises the situation in which we live. We are all with you in this hour of grief."

Mr Mugabe ended his speech by saying Mr Gqabi's funeral had united the people of Zimbabwe and South Africa in their just cause--and this would continue until victory.

"May Joe rest in eternal peace, assured that the struggle for which he died will be continued."

DEFECTOR STEALS AIR FORCE PLANE, ASKS ASYLUM IN SOUTH AFRICA

Cessna 337

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] A young aircraft fitter with the Air Force of Zimbabwe on Sunday stole a light plane from Thornhill airbase in Gwelo and flew it to South Africa, where he has asked for political asylum, it was confirmed yesterday. Corporal Mark Jeffries (21), who is believed to have originally come from South Africa, stole the Air Force Cessna 337, also known as a Lynx, and flew it to Messina, a few kilometres inside the South African border.

A brief statement issued by the Defence Headquarters in Pretoria yesterday said Corporal Jeffries had landed the aircraft in the Northern Transvaal province at the weekend.

The Zimbabwe Government had been notified of the incident through diplomatic channels, it said, without giving any further details.

The statement added that Corporal Jeffries had asked for political asylum from the military authorities, but did not say whether this would be granted.

The Cessna 337 is a light military aircraft often used by the Air Force of Zimbabwe as a spotter plane. It can be armed with machineguns and rockets.

According to sources yesterday, Corporal Jeffries, who is understood to be normally based at the New Sarum airbase in Salisbury, was on a course at Thornhill before his illegal seizure of the plane.

The sources said that two Hawker Hunter jets had pursued the aircraft, but failed to catch up with it before it crossed the border.

Police in Gwelo confirmed the incident yesterday. A spokesman for the Department of Information said a statement on the issue would be released by the Ministry of Defence today.

Return of Craft Demanded

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Zimbabwe has initiated moves to have the aircraft stolen from Thornhill air base and flown to Messina on the South African border returned, the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, said yesterday.

He said Corporal Mark Jeffries who stole the air force Cessna 337 from Gwelo on Sunday had committed a serious offence but would not be brought back to face charges because there were no extradition arrangements between South Africa and Zimbabwe.

"We are only interested in our plane and not Jeffries," the minister said.

He said Corporal Jeffries was born in Zambia and educated in Zimbabwe and his parents were residents of Zimbabwe.

Mr Jeffries asked for political assylum when he landed at Messina on Sunday. It is not known whether this will be granted.

A Defence Ministry spokesman said in Salisbury yesterday that Mr. Jeffries "gained access to the security area by telling a guard that he required to carry out a pre-flight inspection and was admitted to the security area".

"He took off in the aircraft and when operational staff discovered that it was missing they reacted.

"Interception by jet aircraft was planned but discounted the light aircraft was flying too low to be traced by radar so this action would not have been possible," said the spokesman.

"Police were alerted and the ZRP at Beitbridge saw the same aircraft flying overhead at 4.55 pm. It was reported to have landed at Messina.

"Corporal Jeffries was in considerable financial difficulties and his sudden departure was connected with a theft from an air force fund.

"He was fully entitled and free to resign from the air force without any restriction but he had indicated a keeness to continue serving.

"The motives for his action were in no way political and arose from his personal problems."

Mr Munangagwa said the defector had joined the air force like anybody else and had been undergoing a course at the Thornhill base.

Mr Jeffries once before tried to take off on an unauthorised joy ride, friends said yesterday.

On that occasion the attempt merely landed the young man they described as "mad about flying" in air force detention barracks, reports the Herald Africa News Service.

Though he had no powered-flying licence, Corporal Jeffries was a member of the Gwelo gliding club and had solo sailplane experience.

Reading of the Sunday flight, which was front page news in Zimbabwe, the corporal's friends described the escape as "just the sort of thing he would do for a gas".

Referring to his recent trip to Mozambique where he headed a military delegation, Mr.Munangagwa said Zimbabwe would continue to ensure that no reactionaries from Mozambique crossed into the country.

He said the meeting was aimed at developing and reinforcing the existing military co-operation between Mozambique and Zimbabwe. The Mozambican delegation was headed by Lieut-General Sebastian Mabote, first Vice-Minister of Defence and chief of the general staff of the Mozambican armed forces.

The Zimbabwean delegates included the commander of the defence forces, General Maclean, the army commander, Lieut-General Rex Nhongo and airforce commander, Air Marshal Walsh.

KANGAI: 'WE WILL NOT HIT BACK AT SOUTH AFRICA'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] ZIMBABWE will not be moved by the provocative measures being taken by South Africa, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said in Salisbury last night.

Referring to the ending of the preferential trade agreement between the two countries, the delays in rail movements and more recently Pretoria's decision to repatriate Zimbabweans working in South Africa, the minister said Zimbabwe did not intend taking retaliatory action.

"We will not be moved by a few provocative measures taken by a bunch of racists in South Africa. We as a country are supporting those people who are fighting for the elimination of apartheid. We are not going to resort to a particular measure because of these acts taken by the lovers of apartheid."

Commenting on plans his ministry has drawn up to cope with the returning workers from South Africa, the minister said it was difficult to plan in a vacuum "because we do not know who is coming back. Most of the planning will be done when these people come", he said.

The minister said that it was estimated that about 8 000 Zimbabweans would return from South Africa by November. Many would bring with them personal property such as cars, which would be a boost to the economy.

Mr. Kangai was answering questions on the ZTV programme, The Nation.

He said Zimbabwe would be able to cope easily with the large number of workers returning. "We do not think that the figures which are being talked about are any larger than what we had last year in the form of refugees," he said.

Malawians working on mines in Zimbabwe would definitely not be expelled to make way for the returning Zimbabweans, the minister said: "We cannot throw them out. They are workers and we treat them as our own workers," he said.

Asked how the returning mine workers--the majority of those being repatriated--would get jobs in the country's ailing mining industry, Mr Kangai said that many of them had skills unavailable in Zimbabwe.

"Such workers will be easily employed here," he said.

Mr Kangai said a small unit in his ministry was working on the setting up of a national pension scheme. He said experts from the International Labour Organisation were assisting.

PRESIDENT: SUBVERSIVES WILL FACE WRATH OF GOVERNMENT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] President Banana has warned subversive elements that they will face the wrath of the Government.

"I must warn all those who have a propensity for subversion that my Government is capable of dealing a fatal blow to such criminal elements," he said in a weekend interview with the Ecumenical Development Educational Programme of the Churches of Canada.

The President said Zimbabwe had demonstrated a tremendous amount of magnanimity in dealing with sensitive and crucial problems.

"By our policy of reconciliation we forgave those who committed insidious atrocities against our people. We did this first as a matter of principle because we believe that it serves no useful prupose to indulge in recrimination."

The government did not [word indistinct] in negative pursuits that might result in the depletion of limited resources.

"It was out of this commitment to the belief in the utilisation of all our resources that we spared even those who were our forefront enemies and have even allowed them to participate in the process of reconstruction," the President said.

Having fought to remove the things that [words indistinct] the people, the Government was now embarking on a course of urging the people to bury the past and unite in a [words indistinct] endeavour to rebuild the country.

On South Africa, the President said Zimbabwe was committed to the total liberation of Africa and would give all the support at its disposal to the liberation forces in South Africa for the total dismantling of apartheid, and to SWAPO in Namibia.

"We will do this within the context of the OAU and the United Nations. That means we have to support measures initiated at the OAU and at the UN designed to bring pressure on South Africa to abandon its illegal occupation of Namibia and its vicious system of apartheid within South Africa itself."

On economic sanctions against South Africa, the President said Zimbabwe's position was clear. "We cannot stand in the way of economic sanctions by the international community against the Pretoria regime."

Zimbabwe was aware that any economic sanctions would affect its economy because of a history of economic ties between the two countries. The economic integration between Zimbabwe and South Africa was so vast that there was no way of doing away with it overnight.

The Government was exploring alternative trade routes, and its participation in the Zimbabwe that would be economically sound and strong enough to meet the internal needs of the country and take a lead in the economic development of the sub-region particularly the SADCC group.

"I also think that Zimbabwe is well placed to give a political lead and political direction in the political revolution now taking place on the continent," the President said.

He explained that Zimbabwe was following a political system that advocated an egalitarian society where equality of the individual would be the new social order. It was a political system that challenged the capitalist profit motive and the whole emphasis of individualism.

"I am convinced, myself, that revolutionary socialism holds the key to many pressing world problems here and at the same time serves as an example to many of our countries of Africa and hopefully other regions of the world as well," the President said.

On the church, he said it was difficult for one to be a Christian and a capitalist at the same time because capitalism ran counter to Christian principles. He said socialism had a biblical basis.

He said both developed and developing countries needed liberation theology. In the past the weakness of the church had been its inability to appreciate the nature of the liberation struggle.

He called on the churches in Canada to cultivate interest among the Canadian public and the Canadian Government so that they could appreciate Zimbabwe's problems.

The President said interested Canadians could help as technicians, doctors, engineers and in other areas where the country needed personnel.

MAYOR INSISTS COUNCIL MUST AVOID POLITICS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] Bulawayo's new mayor, Councillor Naison Ndiovu, says party politics must play no part in the city council's affairs.

In an interview yesterday he said: "Our rate-payers and all our people should be free to hold private opinions and attitudes to politics, and the council's total preoccupation must be with the progress and welfare of the city and the citizens."

He felt it "unfortunate" that Zimbabwe's municipal and local government elections had been conducted on a political ticket.

"Immediately after I and my 14 colleagues from the western areas were elected, our determination was to put the city and its people first, irrespective of party politics," he said.

His political utterances as a member of the central committee of the PF would be confined to ZAPU affairs.

However, it was an advantage to understand politics when dealing with central government on behalf of the city council. "One needs political foresight," he said.

On his statement that the council would be "more people-oriented", he said councillors would consult the people of their wards at every step on matters concerning their welfare.

"Our election was made possible by the common man. In former years he did not have the opportunity to vote in municipal elections. He deserves to be consulted by those he elected.

"The system of administration and development has been good and I would not want to make changes to it. We want to maintain standards and even improve them."

He would like people in the western areas to have larger residential stands and would like the road-surfacing programme speeded up, street trees planted, lighting installed, and public parks established.

PADIS CHIEF STRESSES NEED FOR DATA BANK

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] The establishment of an information and documentation centre is an absolute must for Zimbabwe, the director of Pan-African Documentation and Information System, Dr Julien Quirino-Lanhounmey said yesterday.

In an interview, Dr Quirino-Lanhounmey, who attended a five-day information and documentation seminar in Salisbury last week, said it would be fatal for Zimbabwe to shelve the idea of setting up such a centre, because there were other items high up on the priority list.

"There will never be any planning at all without information to guide you on any future development projects."

He said Zimbabwe would avoid the mistakes and pitfalls of other African countries if it considered information a priority and went ahead with the establishment of an information system which could be integrated into the Ministry of Education and Culture's proposed national library service.

"The infrastructure is already there and what is required is to incorporate it into the library project.

"Most of the development plans in African countries have failed because of lack of information from which to work and Zimbabwe is fortunate in that it has just embarked on its development projects and can adopt an automatised system of information documentation which is much cheaper."

Delegates to the seminar agreed it was necessary to establish a centre and their recommendations will soon be handed to the Government.

But four main issues arose at the closing session on Friday--whether there was a need for a computer to handle the information; whether such a system could be [word indistinct]; whether the country had the manpower to handle the system and whether information was really necessary for planning.

Dr Quirino-Lanhounmey said the computerised system had provisions for incorporating the manual system and his organisation would help with training of staff to run such a system.

The training lasting about six months would enable the operators of the system to be fairly competent in handling the computers.

"Padis is designed to serve the African countries in finding out the right people who can assist them at every level.

"We hope to help African countries establish a system where when you go to the rural areas you will find rural communication on a cheaper level. But the move to implement the system rests with your Government. As soon as they tell us they are ready we will come in to assist. We move much faster," Dr Quirino-Lanhounmey said.

Padis operates under the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa and is supported by contributions from the United Nations Development Programme and other United Nations bodies.

"A rational approach to development cannot be successfully formulated unless all relevant information is fully considered during the planning and programming stages, and accurate knowledge of the past and reliable projections are used to form the basis for planning the future course of action," Dr Quirino-Lanhounmey explained.

UMGUZA SETTLERS PROMISED LAND, WATER

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] A MEMBER of parliament for Matebeleland North, Mr Sidney Malunga, yesterday assured the people of Umguza resettlement that land would be found for those in need and urged them to co-operate with resettlement officers by filling in settlement application forms.

Addressing about 200 settlers who had gathered at Iguzi, about 40 km from Nyamandlovu, Mr Malunga told the people that by filling in the forms, they would only be helping the Government to lay down plans for resettling them in an orderly manner.

Most of the people were reluctant to fill in the forms because they believed the Government was going to evict some from the area as there were too many there.

Mr Malunga told the people that after they had filled in the forms, the Government would be able to assess how many people could be settled in the area. If it was found there were too many, land would be found for them elsewhere.

"Every able-bodied person will get a place to settle. It is the right of the people to get a piece of land on which they can make a living. But we do not want people to settle at random because there will be no order.

"You will all be resettled, but you must not argue with the resettlement officers because if you stay where you please the land will be turned itno a desert in no time. There is also bound to be conflict then because some people would start quarrelling over land," he said.

People had left previous areas because they had been crowded and their cattle had no pastures. Overcrowding must be avoided in the new areas.

From the forms, the Government could also decide where to build their houses, and where the farming land, schools, clinics and pasture land should be.

"If the Government sees there are too many people, they will obviously have to remove some. But no one will be dumped in the forest when one genuinely needs a piece of land from which to make a living.

"You came into this area because of problems you faced in your former areas, and the Government is well aware of these problems. By buying this land the Government wants people to have a better life. They must be productive so as not to turn the land into a desert."

On the water shortage, Mr Malunga said that when they were finally resettled, the Government would make sure that there would be enough water.

He said, at present the Government could not repair existing boreholes as they did not know where the people were going to be settled.

Besides people who have settled near the Umguza river, the shortage of water in the area is critical. Some people are having to walk up to 10 km to get water, and they have to drive their cattle that far to drink as well.

PM TO LAUNCH PARTY REORGANIZATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The massive exercise to revamp ZANU (PF) starts today with an address by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, to 48 provincial party leaders, the party's national political commissar, Mr Mayor Urimbo, said yesterday.

Six party officials from each of the country's eight provinces would be addressed by the Prime Minister on party reorganisation and policies, he said.

The one-day conference would be the beginning of the rebuilding of the party at both top and grassroot levels throughout the country. The role of the youth and women in party restructuring would also be discussed.

The exercise would be carried out under the personal direction of Mr Mugabe in his capacity of president of ZANU (PF).

Earlier this week the party's secretary for publicity, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said the party had now embarked on an exercise to make it a "mammoth" by the end of the year. He said Mr Mugabe had called on all the leaders to go flat-out in rebuilding the party.

Further meetings would be arranged by a commissariat headed by the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, and Mr Urimbo.

ZANU (PF) publicity secretary for Manicaland Province, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa, said she and the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, would address a rally at Chipinga today.

Dr Nhiwatiwa, the Deputy Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, also announced that the Deputy Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Moven Mahachi, would address a rally at Tsindi today.

Dr Nhiwatiwa and Mr Hove would address a rally tomorrow at Sakubva in Umtali. There would be another rally at Rusambwe and Inyazura to be addressed by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai tomorrow. All rallies will start at 10 am.

NEWSMAN SEEN AS LINK BETWEEN GOVERNMENT, MASSES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Institute of Mass Communications should train journalists who will bridge the gap between Government and the masses, the Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Frederick Shava, said last night.

Speaking at the official opening of the institute in Salisbury, he said that since the formation of the Mass Media Trust was aimed at localising ownership of the media, it was logical that the trust should seek to train local people to do the job properly.

The institute, the minister said, should produce journalists, who would:

- Bridge the gap between the masses and policy-makers by keeping the people well-informed of Government policies, decisions and anxieties.
- Keep the people informed of progress or problems in reconstruction, resettlement and development.
- Become teachers of the masses on major issues or problems facing the nation, through correct and objective interpretation of events.

Dr Shava said the advent of independence hailed the creation of journalists with minds focussed on peace, justice and equality.

In fulfilling these roles, objectivity and fairness were a must. Different or opposite opinions must be treated fairly without deliberate exaggeration or distortion.

"The task of a journalist in Zimbabwe is to inform the nation and the world of objective positions on whatever subject they may be reporting on.

"Reporters must be a source of correct information, not a source of misinformation and unfounded sensationalism."

He acknowledged the potency of newspapers, radio and television and the considerable influence they had on people and said the need for intelligent reporting could not be emphasised enough.

The institute would not only benefit groups and organisations in the country but also those in other countries in the region.

The institute was opened in April and is training 50 students taking one-year courses in news agency journalism, radio broadcasting and radio technical operations.

Dr Shava thanked the Frederick Nauman Foundation of West Germany, UNESCO and the Africa Educational Trust for assistance to the institute.

The official opening was attended by the Minister of Information, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira; the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, who said that $500 000 would be made available for technical education; the Deputy Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Mr Cephas Msipa; and the Deputy Minister of Information, Mrs Victoria Chitepo, who will supervise the work and progress of the institute.

MUGABE, SWEDISH PRIME MINISTER COMMENT ON TALKS

CA170904 Salisbury Domestic Service in English 0400 GMT 16 Aug 81

[Excerpt] The prime minister, Comrade Mugabe, has thanked Sweden for the assistance it has given to Zimbabwe. Comrade Mugabe was speaking to newsmen in Salisbury yesterday after holding talks lasting about 50 minutes with the Swedish prime minister, Mr Falldin. Comrade Mugabe said he would like Sweden to give more aid to Zimbabwe and also participate jointly with the government in the development of a number of projects, including those in the rural areas. The prime minister said he would like the two countries to strengthen their good relations, which were established during the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe.

Commenting on the situation in Southern Africa, Comrade Mugabe said the Pretoria regime is unrepentant on a number of issues. He said the minority regime is maintaining a military strategy for each southern African state aimed at destabilizing the whole region. Comrade Mugabe said Zimbabwe is not engaging in a war with South Africa but it is opposed to the policy of apartheid practised by the racist regime. He said Zimbabwe will defend itself in the event of an attack by South Africa but at the same time it hopes Pretoria will not engage in any military clashes with this country.

In reply the Swedish prime minister, Mr Falldin, said his country will continue aiding Zimbabwe and the subject of further assistance will be discussed when Comrade Mugabe visits Sweden and other Scandinavian countries later this year.

MUDZI FARMERS INVOLVED IN SUCCESSFUL RECONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Aug 81 p 12

[Text]

RECONSTRUCTION programmes were said to be going on very well in Mudzi on the border with Mozambique, and farmers in the communal area had embarked on self-reliance programmes in a bid to re-establish their war-battered infrastructure.

Although farmers had to battle to get draught power this season as most of their stock perished during the war, the spirit of farming has re-surfaced and last-minute plans are being made to ensure that the annual agricultural shows start again this year.

And in a bid to ensure that a successful show is held, the farmers have enlisted the help of Mudzi District Council, whose executive officer, Mr Samson Mombeshora, was in the capital this week making arrangements for the show, to be held from August 19 to the 21st.

Mr Mombeshora said exhibits will be mostly agricultural produce, and stiff competition is expected in the home industries section as housewives had developed a keen interest in domestic science.

Mudzi has a population of about 16 000 people. Although farmers tried hard to produce good maize, they did not get encouraging yields as their efforts were hampered by lack of draught power.

"They harvested just about enough for consumption," said Mr Mombeshora.

Some farmers have money to buy cattle, but they are confronted with the problem of where to get them. The matter was raised at a recent council meeting, and it was resolved that efforts to find out where livestock can be bought should be stepped up, so that interested farmers can go and buy.

Mr Mombeshora said interest in farming had shot up since the new Government came to power, but shortage of agricultural extension staff was giving cause for concern as people's aspirations were not being met.

"Although farmers have been growing munga in the main, interest in maize is growing," said Mr Mombeshora. "There is a new awareness of the need to grow cash crops.

"Reconstruction programmes are proceeding at a satisfactory pace. Only two out of about 30 dip tanks are still not functioning. We have applied for six new dip tanks to be constructed."

He said farmers had taken up the call for self-reliance, and such projects had been started in connection with the building of clinics, schools and roads. Locals were providing what they could and seeking Government help where necessary.

Increased effort, Mr Mombeshora said, was needed in reconstructing health facilities as only two out of the seven clinics in the area were operating. However, two new clinics were being built.

"There are not many co-operative societies at the moment because people, who need a lot of education, are beginning to come back to farming," he said.

"Efforts are being made to have a co-operative society at Suswe."

CHANGES IN EDUCATION COME UNDER SCRUTINY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Ministry of Education and Culture and the Dag Hammarskjoeld Foundation of Sweden are jointly sponsoring a seminar on education in Zimbabwe—Past, Present and Future — in Salisbury from August 27 to September 7.

Several countries have been invited to the international seminar which will examine the educational system Zimbabwe has inherited and work out practical strategies for a new system.

Zimbabwe's future education policies had been debated for years during the liberation struggle by the Patriotic Front alliance, a ministry spokesman said yesterday.

But, he said, the seminar would be the first attempt to bring the debate to the national level in this country. Previous conferences were held in Maputo in 1978 and Lusaka in 1980.

The seminar will aim at spreading ideas developed during the liberation struggle to a wider public in Zimbabwe who were unable to take part in these experiences during the struggle, the spokesman said.

"It is hoped that the seminar will examine the role of education in the colonial period, lessons and experiences from the liberation war and future trends.

"Experiences from other countries will enable Zimbabweans to look at their own situation critically.

"We sense the need for change and want people to initiate this change in schools. Ideas debated at the seminar will help accelerate some changes."

He said Zimbabweans were ready for change and open to new ideas.

The seminar will be opened by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, at the University of Zimbabwe on August 27 and will be closed by President Banana on September 7.

On the second day of the seminar the Minister of Education and Culture, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, will deliver the keynote address.

The seminar will deal with three aspects of education in Zimbabwe:

- Education in society as a whole;
- Formal education and the mechanics of change in school organisation, curriculum, teaching, education and production;
- Non-formal education including worker education and adult literacy.

The director-general of UNESCO, Mr Amadou M'Bow, will also deliver a paper at the seminar.

The Government has also invited the ANC and PAC of South Africa and SWAPO of Namibia to attend.

The Deputy Secretary in the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Ibbo Mandaza, will deliver a paper on the experiences in camp schools during the liberation struggle.

Countries expected to send representatives to the seminar include Cuba, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Tanzania, Korea, Romania, Yugoslavia, Sweden, Australia and China.

UNESCO, the Commonwealth Secretariat and the OAU have also been invited to send representatives.

All Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference countries have also been invited.

The ministry spokesman said: "Education exists in a socio-economic framework. To change the system we inherited will take a long time. It could take up to 10 or 20 years.

"But the seminar will begin by bringing people in schools and people from outside in touch with new ideas for the future," he said.

COMMUNITY SCHOOLS END IN FORTNIGHT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWE'S community schools will be abolished on September 1, before the start of the next term, the Minister of Education and Culture, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, announced yesterday.

The minister asked boards of governors to stay on and assured parents that pupils of former community schools could stay even if they were not zoned for that school.

"All community schools will revert to Government status as from September 1," he said in a statement. "But it is hoped that boards of governors, in the interests of the schools and to avoid the disruption of the children's education, will be prepared to assist in the administration of their respective schools until December 31."

Dr Mutumbuka said that all former community schools would function on the same basis as any other Government school. Normal Government tuition and boarding fees would be charged.

Legislation allowing former white Government schools to opt for community status was passed by the Rhodesian Front dominated Parliament during the life of the executive council and the first schools to opt for the new status did so from January 1979.

By independence there were 48 community schools, eight of them secondary, and four more in the pipeline. The new Government froze all transactions as soon as it assumed power and early this year introduced legislation to amend the Education Act.

The Bill passed the House of Assembly easily despite stiff RF opposition but had to be amended slightly after the Senate Legal Committee objected to two provisions in the proposed legislation. By July the Bill had been signed into law by President Banana and gazetted.

The chairman of the community schools association, Mr Richard Horn, said last night that the minister's move should come as no surprise. He was simply implementing legislation already passed.

"The ministry has obviously tried to make the transition as smooth as possible by their timing and by the fact that they have asked the boards of governors to stay on for a while and assured the public that pupils need not change their schools."

NEW YOUTH TRAINING CENTERS VIEWED AS 'KEY TO SOCIALISM'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Aug 81 p 4

[Text]

THE Ministry of Youth, Sport and Recreation is establishing 16 rural and urban youth training centres throughout Zimbabwe, it was disclosed here at the weekend.

The Deputy Permanent Secretary in the ministry, Dr Tichaona Jokonya, said in an interview that each of the eight electoral provinces would have two training centres, one rural and the other urban.

Dr Jokonya stressed that the training of youth in this country was the pivot to the success or failure of socialism in Zimbabwe.

"Many countries have ventured into certain political trends but have failed because there was no solid foundation in youth preparation through training."

To avoid the failure of socialism the Government was anxious to build such an unshakeable foundation at youth training centres.

The ministry, which is responsible for youth work, has started and will continue to acquire farms and property for training centres.

Urban centres, though not in towns at all, will serve to train youth earmarked for urban industry as motor mechanics, electricians, clerks and many other industrial jobs.

Rural training centres will have an agricultural bias, training young people in Pstoral, crop and commercial farming as well as poultry, pig and other animal husbandry.

"There will be a lot of overlapping between urban and rural training centres. We feel, for example, that for the successful running of a commercial farm one needs to be proficient in motor mechanics, some electrical work and accounting so we will teach these disciplines at all rural training centres."

The ministry will place greater emphasis on rural training centres, Dr Jokonya said, as more than 75 percent of the country's youth lived in the communal lands.

The ministry will also run a national leadership training centre in Salisbury to train young people in leadership and eventual administration at the rural and urban training centres.

Dr Jokonya said that training would take at least two years.

Those training in agriculture would spend six months each on pastoral farming, crop culture, poultry, and basics in motor mechanics, electrical work and accounting.

There will be no educational requirements for training. Trainees would also have a chance to do academic studies while there.

"What we envisage is a young person with, say, Grade 7, advancing to junior certificate and possibly O levels while at the centre," he added.

The main aim of the ministry was to avert a lack of employment opportunities for young people, Dr Jokonya said.

"We are liaising with the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development in an effort to rationalise our training so that our graduates will be able to do further technical training and apprenticeship in specialised fields.

"This could mean that a graduate from one of our centres with Grade 7 qualifications, with necessary training in motor mechanics, could join a polytechnic as a first-year student in motor mechanics.

"We want all our young people eventually to turn into self-supporting, reliable and loyal citizens of Zimbabwe and we believe the national training will provide the necessary background."

The trainees will also be given a chance to do physical culture, arts and music.

For the training the country had been divided into 60 districts, each manned by a district promotion officer.

"These officers will establish youth clubs and collect young people for holiday and special training."

All the 16 centres will be near centres earmarked as growth centres.

School pupils would be able to attend short intensive courses during holidays.

Apart from a technical centre in Bulawayo, a recreational centre in Salisbury and Pangani mine complex, the ministry has also acquired a farm in Indiva, Gwelo, where an agricultural specialist is already running small-scale agricultural courses.

Pangani mine will be developed into an urban training centre for Matabeleland South with workshops for mechanics, electrical and other industrial training.

Dr Jokonya said Pangani had room for at least 500 trainees.

FARMERS CALL FOR MOBILE BUYING DEPOTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

PROBLEMS of marketing agricultural produce this year were discussed during a closed session at the annual congress of the Zimbabwe National Farmers' Union held in Fort Victoria recently.

Among the problems highlighted were the availability of transport and the capability of depots to take in grains or cotton, plus time available to complete marketing before the onset of the rains.

Accepting that everything within the powers of the Agricultural Marketing Authority was being done, delegates noted that unless mobile purchasing depots were created, grain might not be taken in total before the rains.

A number of alternatives were suggested:

- That co-operative societies create transit depots in each district to buy grain and that the societies would buy grain from every farmer even if not a member.
- That the Ministry of Agriculture, with co-operative societies, form a front to buy grain from the districts.
- That AMA create transit depots in each district.

The delegates noted that most of the farmers with excess grain in communal areas had never had a marketing card before, and therefore had to make applications to be direct producers only this year after they had grown a surplus.

The president of the union, Mr Gary Magadzire, said: "It is my understanding that the registration offices are flooded with so many applications that the completion of the processing forms may take a very long time."

Delegates noted that farmers in Matibi One had this year grown enough to sell.

Farmers in Chibi had already got empty bags, but were not members of co-operative societies, nor were they registered as direct producers and were therefore stuck with crops.

The delegates felt that there was a strong need to encourage commercial banks to decentralise their operations. It was the congress view that banks should move in conformity with Government policy on rural development.

It was also felt that if banks were created in rural areas the impetus and enthusiasm that had been created by Government would be kept very high.

It was also noted that besides being an economic venture, the banks would play a greater role in ensuring that finance circulated where it originated, thereby encouraging speedy development of areas which responded to productivity.

Decentralisation would enable banks to understand clients they were dealing with, and be in a position to discuss with people who borrow money. Mutual trust would be built between subsistence farmers and the banks concerned.

It was also believed that if banks were located in communal areas farmers would make arrangements earlier and not wait until the onset of rains.

The delegates expressed concern at the way the open general licence was being controlled. Many organisations, individuals or co-operatives were keen to go into services providing products in agriculture.

GENERAL

Delegates called for the re-examination of the system with a view to giving open general licences to those who intended to offer their services to agriculture.

The delegates also recommended that the extension service ought to be improved as research findings were in some cases taking long to reach communal areas.

One of the burning issues discussed was the need to re-examine farm purchasing trends.

Delegates felt that financiers and buyers were wasting their time as the prices being charged were unacceptable to financiers. The most serious problem was that farmers did not understand what was going on and tended to blame financiers unnecessarily.

It was felt that if the pricing of land could be placed in the hands of competent people then it would be easier for the Agricultural Finance Corporation.

The farmers were concerned that prices of land were escalating, making large-scale farming prohibitive.

It was also noted that it had become common for some farmers to buy up neighbouring farms to speculate.

There was a strong feeling that more black farmers should go commercial and learn from the experience of white farmers.

SOLDIERS GET DETAILS OF DEMOBILIZATION TERMS

Army Reduction of 30,000

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] THE Government is giving soldiers details of a massive demobilisation exercise which will cost about $116 million and reduce the Zimbabwe National Army by about 30 000 men.

The plan, announced by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, in June, will be administered by the Demobilisation Directorate in the Ministry of Labour and Social Services who have been allocated $43 million for grants in the present financial year.

Each soldier wanting and allowed to demobilise will get $185 a month for up to two years while he or she is getting established. The package also includes educational and training benefits.

The exercise will be overseen by the demobilisation directorate headed by Mr John Shoniwa who is now back in Zimbabwe after being recalled from London where he was deputy high commissioner. Besides voluntary demobilisation, certain members of the former Rhodesian Army who are still on contract may not have their contracts renewed.

A pamphlet published by the Government for soldiers interested in the demobilisation package states that the allowance corresponds to the money, food, clothing and accommodation supplied to the ex-soldier when he was in the army.

"Schools will be directed by the Government to take all soldiers interested in education. In addition, those who qualify to go to university will be encouraged and assisted in every way," the pamphlet added.

Skills training would be offered at technical colleges, agricultural institutions and education colleges. Medical assistants and nurses would be trained, and administrative schools would turn ex-soldiers into district administrators and district officers. Special centres would train customs and immigration officers.

"Advice and assistance will be given to those seeking employment or who wish to be self-employed, whether or not they have taken advantage of the training or education schemes on offer.

CO-OPS

"Setting up co-operatives, which is part of Government policy, will be encouraged, especially if the ex-soldiers pool their earnings under the scheme in order to start small businesses for themselves."

The Government would make use of all Zimbabwe's natural resources and services to find jobs for ex-soldiers. "Thus the Government will ensure all ministries and departments will employ the ex-soldiers in any suitable vacancies which may arise.

"The parastatals, too, will be directed by the Government to take on those demobilised into suitable vacancies. Even the private sector will be urged to co-operate and take on the ex-soldiers not only in their training schemes, but also in their employment."

Explaining the need for a demobilisation scheme, the pamphlet stated: "It is not in the public interest to retain too large an army which the economy of the country cannot sustain. On the other hand if the soldiers leave the army they can be engaged in a more productive civilian role."

The pamphlet noted that not everyone who joined the struggle planned a military career and so to keep him or her mobilised was neither in that person's nor the nation's interest.

"Similarly some members of the Zimbabwe National Army may not have the necessary physical build or health to remain in the army, but they can contribute substantially to the economic growth of the nation if they are demobilised."

Demobilisation would not be automatically granted on request. Some categories of men or units could not have full freedom of choice as that would not be in the national interest.

Once a soldier was demobilised he would report to a demobilisation centre where he would be issued with a post office pay book. He could then collect his allowance from any post office once he produced the book and his ID card.

The centres which would be set up in Salisbury, Bulawayo, Gwelo, Umtali and Fort Victoria, would have counsellors on hand and would be run by the Demobilisation Directorate of the Ministry of Labour and Social Services.

Formidable Task

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text] ZIMBABWE has a surplus of soldiers and a shortage of skilled men. This is an unfortunate and wasteful position to be in, but the Government's demobilisation plans should do much to redress the imbalance.

It will be a formidable task to demobilise and train about 30 000 men in up to two years. But it must be done. Men who were trained for war and perhaps little else must now be trained for peace and progress.

Those affected were highly motivated to take part in the struggle. If they remain as highly motivated during their training the task of the Demobilisation Directorate will be made easier and the men will return quicker to normal life.

The extensive training facilities that are to be made available to them should result, in a year or two, in large numbers of people with agricultural, medical, administrative and other skills that the country desperately needs.

The cost, estimated at about $116 million in all, is high. But it is better to meet this than to continue to have an excessively large army — a burden on the taxpayer in itself — containing probably large numbers of men who would rather be in civilian life and would do better there.

The expertise gained during this demob exercise could prove valuable in other training courses and might be adapted for the youth training centres that are to be set up.

These two schemes underline the vital need for the National Manpower Survey to be completed accurately and early. Then the trainers and the trainees will have better guidelines to work to.

TOURISM FOR FIRST FIVE MONTHS DOUBLES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Aug 81 p 9

[Text]

MORE than twice as many people visited Zimbabwe in the first five months of this year than in the same period last year, the latest figures from the Central Statistical Office show.

If the trend continues, almost 350 000 people will have visited Zimbabwe by the end of the year, the highest since before the liberation war. Last year's total was 268 418, excluding people in transit.

In May this year, 32 147 people visited Zimbabwe, 809 of them in transit. Of the rest most were holidaymakers — 26 585 — but 4 505 people arrived here on business. Of the visitors 4 056 stayed for less than 24 hours.

Visitors from South Africa, Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland were the largest group, of 14 536. There were 10 828 from Zambia, 1 540 from Britain and Ireland and 987 from the Americas.

About twice as many tourists from South Africa and Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland visited Zimbabwe in the first five months of this year than the same period last year and more East Africans visited than in the whole of last year.

The visitors spent an average of 11,7 nights each in Zimbabwe during May and spent almost $2,8 million.

In May there were 786 immigrants and 1 606 emigrants. Most immigrants came from the United Kingdom, Zambia and South Africa.

British and returning Zimbabwe citizens were the main groups.

South Africa was still the destination of the bulk of the emigrants with Malawi, Britain and Australia the only other countries attracting more than 100 people.

UNIONS CALL FOR GRADED PAY SCALES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

TWO leading trade unionists yesterday appealed for a unified salary scale based on the rate for the job in all sectors of employment in Zimbabwe.

In interviews the labour leaders expressed concern that some employers were appointing people to responsible positions but did not give them the rightful remuneration.

"It is essential to have a unified salary scale for the same job — irrespective of colour," the general secretary of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, Mr Albert Mugabe, said.

He added: "We have had complaints that people are being promoted and are not paid what they are worth. This window-dressing by employers must stop. Employers must not continue to live in the colonial past."

Mr Mugabe said he would make a tour of commerce and industry soon to find out whether people were being paid what they were worth.

"We have had persistent reports of window-dressing and we as a national centre would like to investigate this. I must make it very clear to employers who practise this that we will not tolerate this attitude.

"It is diabolical to pay a man on the basis of the colour of his skin. We must learn to accept that we are one people in Zimbabwe and racial discrimination will not work."

Mr Mugabe asked those who were being victimised to "tell the whole story to us and we will not hesitate to deal with the culprits", adding: "We are not going to be idle and see our people exploited by employers when we can do something about it."

He urged employers not to use abusive language when addressing their employees.

"The description of workers as 'boys' is not helpful at all in promoting good industrial relations."

The general secretary of the General Engineering and Metal Workers' Union, Mr David Chimusoro, said his union was going "flat - out" to investigate cases of salary discrimination.

"If we prove this to be true, we will certainly take action. Such employers must be brought to book for the good of the country," Mr Chimusoro said.

He said it was unfortunate that some employers had not accepted the changes taking place, and "still lived in Rhodesia".

BOARD TO PROBE INKOMO DEPOT EXPLOSION

Great Damage

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] A Board of inquiry will investigate the destruction of the ammunition depot at Inkomo Barracks which caused millions of dollars worth of damage on Sunday.

A spokesman for the Department of Information said a statement would be issued saying that an inquiry into the cause of the explosions would be held.

The statement would also say there had been no casualties and the fires had been put out at 7 am yesterday morning.

The turn-off to Inkomo Barracks from the Salisbury/Sinola road was blocked off by military police yesterday to Press and public. A staff sergeant said it was dangerous.

Many buildings were flattened during the explosions which occurred about every second throughout Sunday afternoon.

The magazines, built above the ground, had been separated from each other by walls of earth which were meant to prevent any blast from spreading beyond the buildings in which they occurred.

One source referred to the official reason for the cause of the first explosion--the accidental detonation of a gas cylinder--and said there were many such cylinders stored near the ammunition.

People fled from Inkomo and the nearby camp of 1 Parachute Battalion during the first series of explosions.

One soldier described how hundreds of people ran for cover as red-hot shrapnel fell on the 1 Parachute Battalion camp.

"Women and children all fled and some went into Salisbury," he said.

But an officer said yesterday that very few had left the camp--and those who had were civilians.

Reporters who reached a spot within 500m of the exploding magazines on the Inkomo Barracks turn-off road on Sunday saw blasts occurring about every second.

Each blast sent up a wall of flames and hurled flaming shrapnel like a massive fireworks display for miles around.

The turn-off road was littered with debris as well as unexploded rockets and shells. Reporters also saw a full box of small arms ammunition.

The Salisbury Chief Fire Officer, Mr Vin Lowrie, said yesterday afternoon that all fire engines and ambulances had withdrawn.

"Our fire-fighting services were not required. There were still small pockets of fire but they are just being left to burn out."

A police spokesman said the roadblock on the main Salisbury/Sinoia road would remain in operation until 7 am today at the latest.

He said a man who had been arrested while taking photographs from the roadblock on Sunday had been interviewed by the police and released.

Ziana reports that helicopter surveillance of the area yesterday reportedly revealed no casualties.

Train services on the Salisbury-Sinoia line have been suspended until further notice, a spokesman for the National Railways of Zimbabwe said yesterday.

Rail traffic on the line was stopped on Sunday when the blaze at the barracks broke out.

The spokesman said: "Until military authorities authorise normal movements, the train service has had to be suspended."

Army engineers were at the scene yesterday morning to begin work on detonating the unstable shells, rockets, mortars, bombs and other explosives and were being assisted by air force helicopters carrying out reconnaissance of the surrounding area.

In the Defence Force statement issued on Sunday night the public were urged to keep well clear of the area and to report any explosives lying around to the army or police.

Inside the camp, however, routine appeared to be returning as groups of men went about their duties and women at the married quarters hung out their Monday washing.

Apart from burnt grass set alight by blazing fragments and debris yesterday, there appeared to be no damage to the barracks installations.

Evacuation of Residents

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Residents within 7 km and perhaps up to 10 km of Inkomo Barracks might have to be evacuated so that "several hundred tonnes" of highly explosure material could be disposed of, the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, announced in the House of Assembly yesterday.

Mr Munangagwa, said that during the series of explosions at the barracks on Sunday the roof of one storage building collapsed and the explosive contained in the building, having been exposed to high temperatures, might be volatile.

It might be necessary for military engineers to dispose of this in a controlled explosion.

Residents up to 10 km from the barracks would be given ample notice to evacuate the area, he said.

A Ministry of Defence spokesman has warned the public staying near Inkomo Barracks not to touch any suspicious objects.

"Anyone finding such an object should immediately contact the Army Operations Room on Salisbury 791841, and ask for the officer on duty. The officer will immediately arrange for army engineers to go to the area to examine and, if necessary, render such objects safe."

In answer to questions from members of the Republican Front, Mr Munangagwa said the only casualty had been a horse belonging to the Grey's Scouts. He said the cost of the explosion had not yet been quantified.

Mr Munangagwa said the explosion would not affect the security of the country. "We do not put all our eggs in one basket," he said.

He told the House that a board of inquiry had been convened to investigate the causes and circumstances which led to the explosions.

The board was also authorised to co-opt ammunition and explosives experts from two other countries "as independent sources of advice and assessment". He did not name the countries.

It was hoped the board would present their findings within two weeks, he said.

The board is to be headed by Major-General Javan Maseko.

Mr Munangagwa said he understood that individual gas cookers which ignited exploded in all directions--a number close to a building containing phosphorous grenades and other phosphorous-filled items.

These, being volatile, exploded and because of the high temperatures the phosphorous exploded and other buildings caught alight.

Active measures were being taken to locate and destroy live items scattered in the area, but it would take some time before the area was clear of danger, he said.

The minister said the findings of the board of inquiry would be made public.

The roadblock on either side of the turn off to Inkomo Barracks was sifted yesterday morning at 10 am, a police spokesman said.

The spokesman warned, however, that military police would "when necessary" be reforming roadblocks in the area, 40 km north-west of Salisbury, to stop vehicles while army bomb disposal experts detonated live ammunition hurled around the countryside on Sunday.

He also warned motorists not to stop at the side of the road between the Nyabira turn off, seven km from the Inkomo turn off, and the Dike, about 20 km from the turn off.

DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS MAIZE DETAILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The World Food Programme will distribute up to 100 000 tonnes of Zimbabwean maize to African countries this year, it was announced in Salisbury yesterday.

So far the organisation has sent 26 300 tonnes of the surplus maize to Zambia, Mozambique, Tanzania and Kenya.

The deal will net about $9 million worth of foreign currency in hard cash for Zimbabwe, WFP director, Professor Herbert Onitiri announced at a Press conference.

He said only last year the WFP had to find 15 000 tonnes of maize to feed Zimbabweans emerging from the war. "This year Zimbabwe produced a surplus of more than a million tonnes to feed drought-ridden African countries."

New operations in Zimbabwe were of great significance because WFP policy was to buy food from developing countries wherever it was available.

"This year Zimbabwe has been blessed with an excellent harvest of maize.

"This is of particular interest to the WFP which needs significant tonnages of maize to meet the needs of other countries in Africa where, as a result of drought, the harvests have been unfavourable and where there is no foreign exchange to buy badly-needed maize which is the staple diet in many African countries."

Early this year the WFP entered into negotiations with the Grain Marketing Board for the supply of about 300 tonnes to be shipped to Livingstone from the GMB depot at Gatooma.

Delivery of the shipment was started on April 13 and completed on April 29.

This was followed by three other contracts covering 7 000 tonnes for Mozambique, 7 000 tonnes for Zambia, 8 000 tonnes for Tanzania and 3 500 tonnes for Kenya. These were financed by WFP resources, Holland and Britain.

This consignment to Zambia was moved by a Zimbabwe transport company which delivered the first load early in June and finished the operation in July.

At the same time a shipment of 7 000 tonnes was taken to Mozambique from GMB depots at Timber Mills, Rusape and Umtali. It was taken by road to Vila de Manica, loaded into railcars and forwarded to Beira.

By August 17 some 6 187 tonnes had been transported through to Beira leaving only 813 tonnes still to be shipped.

Grain to Tanzania and Kenya was moved from the same depot from about the end of June to Beira via Vila de Manica.

By mid-August 7 263 tonnes of the 8 000 tonnes for Tanzania had been lifted from GMB depots and when this operation is complete it will be followed immediately by 3 500 tonnes for Kenya.

Last night the first vessel, Sigfried, arrived at Beira to deliver maize to Dar es Salaam. More ships will be chartered by the WFP to deliver the rest to Dar es Salaam and Mombasa.

Dr Onitiri said: "It is with pleasure that I can inform you that the cooperation of the GMB and the Mozambique railways has encouraged WFP to place further contracts which will raise its commitments from the 26 300 tonnes already referred to, to 60 000 tonnes by the end of the year."

Throughout the operation an average of about 5 000 bags of maize was being carried into Mozambique a day, heading for Beira.

Other surplus maize was now heading for East, West and Southern Africa aboard a recently started special train service.

Dubbed the "WFP Maize Train", it is a daily food express from Vila de Manica near Zimbabwe's border, through Mozambique, to Beira.

The 13-wagon train covers 346 km, loaded with up to 500 tonnes of Zimbabwe white maize, of which the country had a million tonnes surplus, with no means of moving it.

The service also fitted into the regional food strategy, aimed at producing external dependence. He said the WFP had bought no maize from South Africa.

Dr Onitiri said emergency measures and special assistance were necessary to ward off hunger, improve nutrition and to help raise the level of national productivity.

RESPONSE TO ARMS AMNESTY PROGRAM DISAPPOINTING

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Aug 81 p 8

[Editorial]

[Text]

WITH just less than two weeks to go before the end of the two-month arms amnesty the response has been described by several top officials as disappointing.

In some parts of the country there has been a genuine and fairly successful effort by some MPs and party officials to promote the exercise. In other areas the response has been poor.

Overall it has not been a successful campaign. It appears to have lacked vigorous promotion among the people by party and Government officials. The exercise has been left largely in the hands of the police and based on a poster campaign that was more threatening than it was encouraging.

Senator Moven Ndlovu set a fine example earlier this month when he handed in more than 100 weapons after a personal tour of the Chituripasi area east of Beitbridge. It is an example that should be emulated by other parliamentarians and party officials.

It is not too late. For the rest of the amnesty period efforts to promote the exercise should be redoubled. The Government should insist on a massive drive among the people by party and Government officials along the lines set by Senator Ndlovu.

The exercise is vital to the security and peace of mind of all Zimbabweans. No effort should be spared to make the amnesty a success by August 31.

AFRICAN WOMEN TO SHED 'MINOR' STATUS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 18 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

AFRICAN customary law is to be repealed so that African women will no longer be minors from the "cradle to the grave", Mrs Winfreda Jokonya, director of development and employment in the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs, said yesterday at Nyatsime College.

Mrs Jokonya was addressing a conference of the National Federation of Women's Institutes of Zimbabwe, whose theme is Women in Development.

The three - day conference, which started yesterday, is being attended by more than 60 homecraft representatives from five provinces — Victoria, Matabeleland, Manicaland, Mashonaland and Midlands.

Mrs Jokonya said women formed the majority of the population but were not fully involved in the development of the country. They were relegated to do secondary duties, in most cases household work.

"But we cannot let this big number do nothing. If women are not involved in development it means our nation will not forge ahead," she said.

"Women should get involved in order to get our nation going. We can get involved if we ourselves fight for it. If we leave it to the Government we will get nothing."

She told the women that as mothers, they should follow the Government's example of equal opportunities for both women and men and not discriminate against their children because of sex.

"African customary law inhibited us from performing certain duties or from doing certain things because we were women and as you know, a woman in the African context is taken as a minor from the cradle to the grave," she said.

"When all these things are removed I see no reason why we should not show what we can do. If one fails it should not be because she is a woman but a human tendency that one can fail. Our Government welcomes everybody to partake in the development of the nation."

Mr Douglas Sagonda the principal of Nyatsime College, who was guest speaker at the conference, told the mothers with children at the college not to give them more money than was necessary.

Mrs Bertha Jambaya the national homecraft secretary, said a delegation would be chosen from representatives at the conference to attend a national congress to be held in Triangle in September.

OIL LINKS TO SOUTH AFRICA TO BE CUT THIS YEAR

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWE will stop importing oil through South Africa by the end of the year and all petroleum products will instead come through Mozambique, the chairman of the Zimbabwe Oil Procurement Consortium, Mr Jerry Mussom, said yesterday.

The Beira pipeline would supply the country's total diesel and petrol requirements while other petroleum products such as aviation fuel and paraffin would be railed from Maputo, he said.

About $3,8 million was being spent at Feruka, converting it into a fuel depot, and another $650 000 would be spent on improving and expanding the installations at Beira. The pipeline would pump diesel for 20 days and then petrol for 10. The fuels would be separated by large rubber balls called pigs.

At present the pipeline contained light Iranian crude left over from the mid-1960s when it was last used and this would be sold to Mozambican refineries.

As much oil as possible was being shipped through Maputo at present but there were problems sending the largest rail tankers to the eastern ports, said Mr Mussom.

The National Railways of Zimbabwe had a fleet of 607 tanker trucks, with a capacity ranging from 40 000 litres to 60 000. The track on the Limpopo and Beira lines in Mozambique could not support the weight of the fully laden heavy trucks.

"But all our small tankers are used on the Maputo line," he added.

The larger tankers were sent to the Witwatersrand in the Transvaal to collect fuel piped from Durban. Both NRZ and South African Railways had problems moving the traffic as fast as Zimbabwe needed.

"The problems are purely those of transportation and we just cannot bring in enough diesel fuel to satisfy the country. The shortage will remain," he said, "until the end of the year when the pipeline should reopen."

He said there was no problem getting foreign currency allocations to buy the fuel and denied rumours that South Africa had imposed an oil blockade on this country. "We are still getting oil through South Africa."

BRIEFS

ARMS CACHES DISCOVERED--Umtali--Arms of war continue to be found in Manicaland, and unlicensed weapons are still being handed in, a police spokesman has said. On July 30, two magazines and a small quantity of 7.62mm intermediate ammunition were found buried in the Chiduku communal land. Police discovered the cache after tip-offs. Two days later information led police to an AK rifle, SKS rifle, two magazines and some ammunition burried in the Makoni communal land. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Aug 81 p 4]

PM'S TOUR--The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, who is president of ZANU (PF), today starts an extensive "meet the people" tour of all the eight provinces of the country, a Department of Information spokesman said yesterday. He said the main purpose of the tour was for the Prime Minister to inspect development projects, meet people and explain Government policies at mass rallies and at a series of informal meetings. The tour begins in Manicaland Province and in the Buhera and Marange districts where the Prime Minister will inspect schools, roads and clinics under construction, the spokesman said. After a busy day, Mr Mugabe "will dine with Zimunya and Marange ZANU (PF) officials and will on the following day inspect irrigation projects in the Chipinga districts", said the spokesman. The Prime Minister will wind-up his campaign in the Eastern Districts with two other rallies on Friday, one at Watsomba in the Inyanga district and another at Nyatowa in the same area.--Ziana. LOW POLL VALID--Gwelo--Although there was only a 4.8 percent poll in the recent by-election for the vacant Gwelo City Council seat that was won recently by Mr Dayalji K. Patel, he was properly and democratically elected, the council was told at its meeting this week. Voters in the relevant ward had reportedly complained to the major, Councillor Patrick Kombayl, that the result was not fair because the required percentage poll had not been achieved. They were accused by deputy mayor, Councillor Mabasa Chipandambira, of being "saboteurs who are hell-bent on seeing this council collapse". There are 4 069 voters on the roll in Ward Obe, but it is known that this is grossly inaccurate. The mayor suggested the actual number of potential voters was more than 1 000. Of these 195 voted in the by-election. Councillor Roy Futter said the percentage poll had nothing to do with it. If only one vote had been cast then the man who got it would be elected. With that Councillor Patel was formally welcomed to the council by the mayor. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Aug 81 p 9]

PARTY TO REPAY TEKERE--If the former secretary-general of ZANU (PF), Mr Edgar Tekere, incurred additional costs during the course of his duties, he would be reimbursed by

by the party treasury, the party's acting secretary for publicity, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said yesterday. He was commenting on claims by Mr Tekere that party work had left him in debt because he had used his car, fuel and money for party affairs. Mr Tekere, who lost his cabinet and party posts, said he had incurred a huge personal debt while working for the party. Dr Zvobgo explained that from time to time members of the central committee incurred expenses in the course of their duties and got reimbursed, "But if one is unable to account, he cannot be reimbursed." Dr Zvobgo said there were cars available to Mr Tekere, including one recently imported from Germany, for his use while on party duty. Mr Tekere had said after he lost his cabinet post he found that the party had no money for use in party affairs and had to meet some of the expenses from his pocket. CO-OP FOR PLUMTREE--Bulawayo--A group of about 400 villagers in Plumtree were yesterday urged to form a co-operative to acquire the 8 100-ha Tshankwa Ranch up for sale. Addressing a rally, the Patriotic Front Member of Parliament for Matabeleland South, Dr Calistus Ndlovu, said such a co-operative would convince the Ministry of Lands and Resettlement that the people of Tshankwa were not only looking for land but would go a long way to demonstrate that they were self-reliant. NRZ TO LIFT EMBARGO--The National Railways of Zimbabwe will lift its embargo on the loading of locally-bound traffic on Monday, a spokesman for the NRZ announced yesterday. The spokesman also said that the embargo from South African inland stations--which restricted traffic to Zimbabwe to certain priority goods as well as goods from ports--would be reviewed next week. The embargoes were introduced nearly three weeks ago and were designed to cope with a massive backlog of exports and imports that the NRZ, severely short of locomotives to move the goods, could not cope with. The spokesman added that both embargoes had been "effective". "For example, when the local embargo was placed we had nearly 60 000 gross tonnes of east-bound traffic at Dabuka, whereas today this has been reduced to 23 000 tonnes. Similarly, traffic under load for Zimbabwe standing in South Africa was nearly 50 000 tonnes, and it is now reduced to 22 000 tonnes."--Ziana. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Aug 81 p 1]

YOUNG FARMERS' CLUBS--Bulawayo--The Young Farmers' Club Association of Zimbabwe is folding up and all its land and moveable property is to pass to the Ministry of Youth, Sport and Recreation, says the Deupty Permanent Secretary in the ministry, Dr Tichaona Jakonya. The land and property will become the nucleus of the massive national youth training schemes that the ministry hopes to start before the end of the year. "Trainees are due to begin by the start of the rains and, as we have not been able extensively to develop most of the new centres, we will use the infrastructure of the YFC until we have fully developed these new centres." The YFC has been involved in training of youth in agricultural work, especially those who found themselves stranded after primary education. The training has been described at times as shallow and failing to provide the young people with any prospects. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Aug 81 p 4]

CATHOLIC AT YOUTH CONGRESS--About 3 000 people are expected to attend the Catholic Youth Association annual regional congress which began yesterday at Chishawasha Mission. The congress, being attended by groups from the arch-diocese of Salisbury, ends on Monday. The groups will compete in various skills such as handicraft and sports, the head of the publicity committee, Mr Simbarashe Muzuva, said yesterday. The youths will be addressed by officials of the Ministries of Youth, Sport and Recreation and Community Development and Women's Affairs. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Aug 81 p 3]

THREE NEW BRIGADIERS--The headquarters of the Zimbabwe National Army has announced the names of new commanders for three of the four ZNA brigades. Until the change, the commanders were all from the former Rhodesian army. Brigadier Dominic Chinenge takes over as commander of the Bulawayo-based 1 Brigade, Brigadier Sheba Gava commands 3 Brigade in Umtali, and 4 Brigade in Fort Victoria is now commanded by Brigadier Ramson Maponga. Brigadier Ian Stansfield remains the commander of 2 Brigade in Salisbury. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Aug 81 p 1]

MEDIA INSTITUTE--The Zimbabwe Institute of Mass Communications had had its problems since it was formed on April 1, but these are slowly being overcome, says the institute director, Mr Ezekiel Makunike. The institute, to be opened today by the Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Frederick Shava, was set up with the help of the Ministry of Information and the Mass Media Trust. Mr Makunike said yesterday the main problem had been the lack of adequate training premises and students' accommodation. "Most of the students who come from outside Salisbury are living with relatives," he said. "We have 50 students divided in three classes. Twenty are doing news agency journalism; 15 radio production and 15 radio technical operation," Mr Makunike said. He said these students were chosen from more than 3 000 applications received from all over the country. The institute was receiving both financial and material assistance from international organisations. "The initial funds came from the Friedrich Naumann Foundation of West Germany, and Unesco and the Africa Educational Trust are also helping us."--Zimbabwe Information Service. SASCAM MERGER--The merger between SASCAM and Hopelands Trust will not result in a sudden increase in fees payable to the organisation, the chairman of SASCAM, Mr Robert Marple, said yesterday. Mr Marple was addressing a meeting at the centre's headquarters in Salisbury, which voted to merge with Hopelands Trust from October 1, this year. The name of the new group for the care and education of the intellectually handicapped, will be Zimcare Trust. "Parents should not be alarmed by the high fees that Hopelands charges, because you are not going to pay that amount," Mr Marple told some of the parents who were at the meeting. The merger, Mr Marple said, was going to improve the position of SASCAM, enable it to continue with its expansion projects, standardise teachers' salaries and on the selection committee's recommendations, enable parents to send children to any of the organisation's centres nearest to them. The organisations will continue to run their own fund-raising schemes. Mr Marple said that a standing committee had since the beginning of the year been looking at ways and means of bringing the two organisations together. "We have now reached a stage where we are finally putting the whole system into legal form, which will come into effect from October 1," he explained. The Zimcare Trust would be able to organise new centres on a national level as well as provide training for staff. A newly elected council, to administer the running of the trust would come into effect on October 1, Mr Marple said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Aug 81 p 3]

SCHOOL FEES--Fees paid by parents of children at former community schools will drop sharply when the institutions come under full Government control next month. A survey of some Salisbury secondary community schools showed that fees will drop sharply from an average of $65 a term to the Government rate of $18. A $6 general purpose fee will also be payable. Fees for primary education will also drop sharply. Primary state education is free, but the general purpose fee of $12 a term is charged. Parents with children at former community schools will therefore save about $40 a term. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Aug 81 p 1]

HUNGARY INTERESTED IN CHROME--Hungary is interested in Zimbabwe's ferro-chrome and manufactured goods, the president of the Hungarian Chamber of Commerce, Mr Odon Kallos, said in Salisbury last night. Mr Kallos, who is leading a 13-man delegation, said there was no limit to the amount of trade that Hungary wanted to see developing between the two countries. But he stressed his country would like to see co-operation. "We do not want to take away business from others." The Hungarian delegation arrived on Thursday and has already held two meetings, with the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Moses Mvenge, and the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simba Makoni. Last night the delegation met more than 55 members of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Zimbabwe. When they left Hungary, Mr Kallos said, they had two specific areas of interest--industry and agriculture, but since arriving the delegation had decided to look at commerce, the farming community, mining and financial institutions. "Although our week-long visit is a fact-finding mission, we expect business to start as soon as we have submitted a report of our findings," Mr Kallos said. CALL FOR PAY RISE--The Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions has come out in full support of President Banana's call to raise wages for farm workers. The organisation's secretary-general, Mr Albert Mugabe, said yesterday that the ZCTU fully supported the statement made by the President when he opened the Marandellas Agricultural Show. There was an urgent need for an equitable wage for farm workers in the interest of social justice and common sense. The farming sector had always tended to be unpopular with workers. The ZCTU felt it was not only the farm workers who needed a wage increase but domestic workers too. "These two classes of workers are the lowest paid the country." He said in general the wages of all the workers in the country should be raised so as to enable them to meet the cost of living, and the sales tax increased during the last Budget. "The ZCTU feels that for a family of six to live a decent life the lowest paid worker should get $150 per month," Mr Mugabe said. There was a lot of underpayment among the farm and domestic workers in the country and the ZCTU would like to co-operate with the Ministry of Labour and Social Services and MPs in stamping out the "evil practice of unscrupulous employers". [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Aug 81 p 1]

SALISBURY NAME CHANGE--Salisbury will soon change its name to Harare, the mayor, Councillor Tixirai Gwata, said yesterday--but the decision was the Government's. Asked if the council could make the decision, he said: "As far as I am concerned it is up to the Government and it should be soon." The question of who would pay the costs of the changeover had yet to be decided. Meanwhile, all flags from the colonialist era, plus military plaques and lists of the members of the 1890 invasion force, will be removed from the flag room in Salisbury's Town House if the council agrees with a committee recommendation. The general purposes committee feels the collection should go to a museum or the archives and just the Zimbabwean flag and the plaques of foreign cities should be displayed. The collection includes a representative of every flag flown over Zimbabwe from 1890 to the present day. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Aug 81 p 1]

NEW ROAD--Umtali--A new road to link Inyazura and Dorowa will be finished by the end of the 1982/83 financial year, a spokesman for the Ministry of Roads and Road Traffic said here yesterday. The new road would include several two-lane, high level bridges, the largest of which would cross the Sabi and Macheke Rivers. The 62 km long road has been designed for a 100 kph seed limit and has been aligned to clear the high flood level of the Condo dam when it is constructed--Midlands Representative. BRIEFS

HYDRO-CONGO PETROLEUM PRODUCTION--The marketing seminar organized each year by the National Oil Prospecting and Exploitation Company (Hydro-Congo) ended Thursday 30 July in Matoumbou, which is situated 12 km from Kinkala, the headquarters of the Pool region. The seminar began 27 July. During their retreat, particpants who came from the four branches that make up Hydro-Congo and two experts from the World Bank came to a number of conclusions, primarily regarding expected sales of petroleum products, which as presented by the marketing director are as follows: In 1981, 239,000 tons are to be produced, with a value of F CFA 35,799,000. In 1982 the company predicts an 8 percent increase in production over this year, or 266,000 tons valued at F CFA 40,071,000. Also, a projection for 1983 was presented showing 282,000 tons worth F CFA 42,503,000; as for prospects in 1986, the plan calls for 490,000 tons. We note that the next marketing seminar will be held at Oyo (Cuvette region) in 1982. [Excerpts] [Brazzaville BULLETIN QUOTIEN DE L'ACI in French 5 Aug 81 pp 3, 4] 9516

Coastline: 350 kilometers.

A marine commando unit is currently being formed and trained.

Naval Craft

One Tecimar [patrol boat], the French ex-P771 given to Djibouti by France in 1977; displacement: 30 tons; propulsion: one GM diesel developing 350 KW; speed: 25 knots; armament: one 12.7-mm machine gun and one 7.62-mm AA52 gun.

One patrol boat delivered in 1980, a gift from France.

Two Arcor 38 patrol boats and two Arcor 22 patrol boats all for the port.

One 11-meter Plascoa patrol boat with two 7.62-mm light machine guns.

One 20-meter dhow.

Additional requirements include two CTM-type landing craft and one 20-meter patrol boat.

Foreign Aid

Pakistan: cooperates with the armed forces and has supplied them with fatigue clothes.

Libya: offers training courses in Libya particularly for the Djibouti police; grant aid includes Land Rovers with complete radio equipment, BTR-40's, and BRDM-2's.

Algeria: cooperation with the police forces.

United States: Foreign Military Sales (FMS) credits of $1 million in 1982 plus $100,000 under the IMET (International Military Education and Training) program.

France: aid agreements are governed by the military protocol of 27 June 1977 which provides for the gradual reduction of French forces--4,150 men in 1978 and 3,600 in 1980--and consolidation of all remaining forces within installations near the Djibouti-Ambouli Airport. These forces shall not intervene unless the Republic of Djibouti is subjected to foreign aggression and expressly requests such assistance. Under no circumstances may they participate in maintenance of law and order operations. These forces are to be withdrawn gradually as the training of the national armed forces progresses. They are currently furnishing aid to those national forces in such matters as logistical support, technical assistance, instruction and training of officers and noncommissioned officers. In 1978, French military assistance in arms to Djibouti was approximately 10 million French francs. Total military assistance for that same year was 57 million French francs. In addition, the pay of French forces stationed in Djibouti in 1978 amounted to 270 million French francs. French forces in that country at the present time include the following: the 13th Foreign Legion Demibrigade consisting of three companies; the 5th RIAOM (Joint Overseas Regiment) composed of a headquarters company, two AMX 13 tank companies some of which are armed with Aerospatiale SS-11 antitank missiles, a field artillery battery of 105-mm howitzers and towed 155-mm howitzers, an antiaircraft artillery battery equipped with 40-mm and 30-mm guns, and ten Mirage 3C aircraft--one of which was very recently destroyed--from the French Air Force's Vixen squadron. It should also be noted that the French Naval Forces Indian Ocean Command has substantial support facilities in Djibouti and has a naval unit based there. Furthermore, numerous French warships regularly put into the port of Djibouti.

Oman: aid in the form of miscellaneous material, with recently 15 trucks, 15 cross-country [all terrain] vehicles, drilling equipment, and two tank trucks.

FRG: cooperation with the security forces, with equipment aid including, in 1980, a tank truck and 11 Mercedes transport vehicles.

It is important to note that from a general assistance standpoint, Djibouti receives aid also from Saudi Arabia, Persian Gulf countries, and Iraq, the latter reportedly having also supplied equipment to the armed forces. In addition, cooperation agreements have been signed with the Republic of China, the People's Republic of China, and South Korea.

ECONOMIC SITUATION ON 21ST ANNIVERSARY REVIEWED

London WEST AFRICA in English 3 Aug 81 pp 1749-1750

[Article by Alex Rondos]

[Text]

THE TWENTY-FIRST anniversary of Ivory Coast's independence takes place at a particularly difficult time in the country's development. With pride, Ivorians will be reminded of the quantative success of policies followed during the last 20 years. To a large extent, the success can be attributed to the driving force of President Houphouët-Boigny, still robust in spirit — as his recent skirmishes with the western commodity market will show — but less so in body.

Over the next two years restraint will have to be shown by a governing group which has had little reason, until recently, to indulge in austerity and political patience. This is necessary if, that is, they wish to enjoy the fruits of high revenue which beckon on an oil-drenched horizon. Politically, the country plunges deeper into specuiation about the succession to President Houphouët-Boigny. In the meantime, the economy's problems which are mainly financial in their immediate effect on the livelihood of Ivorians require an image of stability which will attract the foreign investor. That is what last October's party congress of "change in stability" was about and the challenge still remains.

The decline in coffee and cocoa prices has affected both the Ivorian farmer and the Treasury. President Houphouët-Boigny said recently: "Ivorian planters will see their revenues diminish by half this year. In fact receipts for cocoa exports have fallen from 700bn. CFA francs to 350bn. CFA francs." Bearing in mind that cocoa traditionally accounts for at least a third of Ivory Coast's exports, such figures are worrying. The Ivorian response has been belligerent and led by the President himself. He has accused speculators, in London especially, of gambling with the lives of Ivorian peasants. He has refused to accept non-Ivorian producers' analysis of what constitutes the production price of cocoa. In the Ivorian calculations this would include infrastructure that has required considerable investment. While other producers are prepared to accept the 100 cents/lb. practical minimum which would be the basis of the new International Cocoa Agreement, the Ivorians have held out. But the financial pressure on the Ivorian Treasury has forced them to sell cocoa, even 170,000 tonnes of next year's crop. It is being sold, generally below the minimum price. This year's crop is expected to be 400,000 tons, yet the estimates suggest that Ivory Coast will, because of its continued refusal to participate in the cocoa agreement, lose up to $200m. this year. The market, and some producers, believe that the Ivorians are being almost naive in their approach; the Ivorians have, however, taken an uncharacteristically tough stand which has been welcomed by the African states that regard the Ivory Coast as being too closely identified with France and Western nations in such matters.

To aggravate the problems, Ivory Coast is still importing at the same level and inflation is well beyond 10 per cent. It is now over 18 months since the minimum wage was raised and the government is going to have to dig deep when it comes up with the inevitable increased wage. Stirrings among labour have already been detected. The February strike against the planned government cuts in salaries in the public enterprises was a vigorous manifestation of union reaction against a clumsy government procedure. Even though if the government backed down on that occasion, labour will not remain happy for long under the present circumstances. Bus fares throughout Abidjan, for example, have been raised to the extent that they are more expensive than taxis in certain areas.

The eventual consequence of all this has been a recourse to external sources of finance. As in 1980, a budget deficit is expected this year. Last year, when budget receipts were calculated at 610bn. CFA francs, the deficit was about 310bn. CFA francs. This year's receipts have been put at 645bn. and the deficit is expected to be some 230bn. CFA francs. By the end of 1980 Ivorian external reserves had fallen to a deficit of 240bn. CFA francs; another balance of payments deficit is expected of about 180bn. CFA francs and the ratio of debt servicing to exports has risen to 29 per cent and is expected to go higher.

After three years of budgetary austerity, the drop in government revenue, induced by the remorseless decline in commodity prices, has forced the government to start borrowing again. This can be reflected in the latest investment budget (BSIE) where in spite of its total decline as against last year, the proportion of contributions from the Caisse Autonome d'Amortissement, the body which has assumed control of all external borrowings, has risen this year by 11.9 per cent. Whereas last year's investment budget depended upon internal domestic revenue for 65 per cent of the total, this quota has now fallen to 55.8 per cent. In the last few months the IMF has stepped in — negotiations with the Ivorian government were carried out at the end of last year — with a 146bn. CFA franc line of credit spread over three years and this has been followed by a $275m. credit put together by Chase Manhattan and a 74bn. CFA franc loan from 48 European banks.

The IMF conditions offer a fair indication of the direction that the government will follow over the next few years. The conditions come under what is now the fashionable institutional heading of "structural readjustments". For Ivory Coast this means an improved budget structure which is coupled with the need for more efficiency in allocation. While the revenues from Petroci, the state oil company, are to be integrated into the budget, the revenue of the Caisse de Stabilisation des Prix et Produits Agricoles still continue to be spent first rather than allocated. Restrictions on money supply are to be imposed and methods of raising internal savings will be encouraged. Similarly transfers abroad have to be reduced. One of the more delicate subjects discussed during President Houphouët-Boigny's recent visit to Paris was the financial aspect of foreign technical assistance. Ivory Coast currently assumes 80 per cent of the costs of 4,500 French technical assistants. There are some 60,000 French nationals in Ivory Coast who under the franc zone system can transfer savings back to France with almost complete freedom. The loss to the Ivorian Treasury is considerable. The general principle of reducing government subsidies has not only resulted in the demolition of the state sector — only seven state enterprises out of 36 remain — but also in IMF advice that even the distribution system of such sensitive products as rice be turned over to private hands. On the last issue, the government has yet to act. Finally, some of the foreign advisers to Ivory Coast would like to see real estate taxed more rigorously. One shudders at the thought of the political reaction of those who speculate in land.

The IMF measures could have been more stringent. But in view of the high revenues expected by the mid-eighties, the Fund took a more lenient view. Depending on the extent of last year's finds off Jacqueville, oil revenue could be 400-800bn. CFA francs by 1985. It may well be more than coincidental that whereas the negotiations over the sugar projects in the north were riddled with disastrously expensive errors, the same mistake was not made over the oil fields. Astute negotiating gave Petroci a 60 per cent cut in the agreements and if the Espoir field meets projections by producing between three to five million tons by 1985, the government will be in a happy financial position. A word of warning should be sounded, however. Initially, amortisation in the high fields near the shore will be self-financing, but a technical and financial problem emerges with the deeper fields. A platform costing anything up to half a billion dollars and the possibility of a series of small fields rather than a large one raises the financial stakes substantially.

The immediate future is a mixed one. With the current hydro-electric projects the government believes that in two years 80 per cent of the country's electricity requirements will be met from this source. The prospects for oil, in spite of the government's secrecy on the issue, are good with at least 5m. tons in production by 1985. But in the meantime the IMF's prescription requires a 1.5 per cent growth rate for this year. The economic structure has become accustomed to growth rates of between 7 and 10 per cent.

Already the decline in the construction sector will result in the loss of some 30,000 jobs this year. Because of the fall in commodity prices, the government is being forced to revise its cocoa programme. At a recent meeting of the ICCO, M. Bra Kanon, the Minister for Agriculture, informed the audience, not without some bitterness, that because cocoa "no longer pays", the government plans to reduce production, with new plantings dropping from last season's 25,000 hectares to 10,000 hectares in the forthcoming season. The Ministry of Agriculture is also being reorganised to devote more land and manpower to food production. The proposed handing over of rice distribution to private traders will inevitably raise the price for consumers, at a time when the latter can ill afford further rises in their costs of living.

There are many individuals in Ivory Coast who would acknowledge privately that because of the economic difficulties the changes that have been wrought in the political structure of the country are little more than a facade; by offering some advantages to those who might have asked the most penetrating questions, President Houphouët-Boigny managed to draw a veil over the real crisis in the country.

Ten months ago there was a lot of truth in that observation. Now the situation is more perplexing to Ivorians. The President, in his desire to prevent the barriers of his inscrutability being broken down, has managed to generate rather than dampen speculation about his succession. Yet since the PDCI Congress of October, 1980, when he first announced that he would name no successor, there has been a change in the constitution which created a Vice-President and removed the right of succession from the Presidency of the National Assembly. Since then no one has been appointed Vice-President.

What really matters is not so much who is named Vice-President, but the conditions under which the decision might take place. The President has dithered so long that he may well be on the point of losing the initiative. The in-fighting among the next generation of potential leaders of Ivory Coast — the 45-50 year olds — is so bitter and merciless, and so much money has been spent by some of the candidates, that in the event of the President's departure from office in the near future one wonders whether this élite will in fact close ranks à la Kenya for the sake of an image of stability. In the current atmosphere, the President will come under increasing pressure from the Comité Executif of the Party to appoint someone, and they will be in a position to force a compromise on the President.

Who does the President want as his successor? The political demise of his spokesman of 20 years, M. Philippe Yacé, has almost thrown up more problems than it has solved. Not only has it opened the way to the campaigning that is going on at the moment, it has also exposed the President himself. M. Yacé's counsel is valued and still regularly taken by the President. In the last few months the view of M. Yacé being the tough, uncompromising and dour member of the leadership (which indeed he was) has given way to the realisation that the President can be equally tough. The creation of a French-trained riot police (in the image of the French CRS), which was recently paraded on the campus at Abidjan's university, is a sharp reminder of the point where the desire for change must hand over to the need for stability, in the President's view.

It has also become apparent recently that some names that were previously discounted now have to be taken more seriously. Ministers whom everyone took to be mere technocrats have suddenly revealed an appetite for politics. This should not come as such a surprise for those who have revelled over the last five years in the intrigues of the same generation of Senegalese technocrats. There is also a tribal factor. Will the Baoule demand one of their own as a successor to the President? If so whom? M. Henri Konan Bedie's name is still on every lip. His campaign has been vigorous and generous. But almost a year since his return from his stint with the IFC in Washington he remains the President of the National Assembly, a position stripped of its real constitutional significance.

In wilder moments some will speculate about the army. They can never be discounted, though it has to be noted that since the last time there was trouble with the army in 1973, the top echelons are completely tied in with the leadership of the party and with the President. An interesting sidelight, though, is the respect with which the Minister of Defence, M. Jean Banny, is treated. Also a member of the Executive Committee of the Party, M. Banny has been described as "dangerous" (to the interests of others with political ambitions) "because he has no faults".

One is struck more by the variety of possibilities for the political future of Ivory Coast. But only those who can read into the mind of President Houphouët-Boigny — and they do not seem to exist — could be certain of the immediate future. His decision will have to consider the unhappy coincidence of a serious economic crisis and the arrangements for his own succession, which he knows have to be made soon. So, Ivory Coast's 21st anniversary of independence is not so much an unrestrained celebration of countless statistics indicating success, but rather the acknowledgement of the beginnings of the end of an era and which prompts a sober gaze into the next decade.

BRIEFS

GASOLINE PRICE INCREASE--Abidjan, August 4--The price of petrol in the Ivory Coast was today r sed by about 13 percent as a result of "persistent increases" in the U.S. dollar, the Government announced. The price of a litre of super grade petrol is to be hiked from 242 CFA francs to 275, and ordinary grade was set at 118 CFA francs. There are about 290 CFA francs to the U.S. dollar. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 4 Aug 81 p 13]

COCOA ORGANIZATION OBSERVER STATUS--London, August 5--Ivory Coast, which refused to sign the new agreement recently signed by producer and consumer countries, will still be able to play a part in the International Cocoa Agreement Organisation, it was learned here. The new agreement came into force on August 1, and on Monday the agreement's governing council decided to allow observer status to all member countries who had signed the previous international agreements of 1972 and 1975. The world's biggest cocoa producer will thus be able to attend all meetings of the council, but without taking an active role in the deliberations. This will allow it to maintain close contacts with its former partners. (A.F.P.). [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 7 Aug 81 p 3]

PLEA IS MADE FOR MORE GOVERNMENT PRESS OPENNESS

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 8 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Hiding From the Press"]

[Text]

IT is easy for the Press to be accused of being wrong in reporting about a particular issue. Yet those who accuse the Press of either being unable to get to the bottom of some stories or being incompetent should sympathise with it at times with respect to just trying to find information.

Consider the story we carried this week about deaths in Nakuru Prison. This story was filed by our Nakuru correspondent after interviewing some sources in Nakuru. Since the issue touched on the police, prison, and medical authorities, we in Nairobi attempted to get comments from all concerned Ministries.

The comments of one senior prisons official is typical of the set responses one usually gets from officialdom. He told us that not all the facts of our story were "true". Yet he would not tell us which facts. He advised us to "carry out research properly and find out the right position".

This reaction indicates that some officials assume that we deliberately write erroneous stories. It is possible to make mistakes since those who write stories are human. It is even easier to make those mistakes when the people who are custodians of that information would neither confirm nor deny, or say "yes" or "no" to our questions.

In this country where most of the socially relevant and therefore newsworthy information is basically held by officials, it is extremely important in our view that officials give information freely to the Press. To stay with the prison story we mentioned earlier, it was important that we establish clearly the facts of the story that we had. The information was important to the families of the prisoners concerned and the public at large.

The fact that only two or three people can speak on issues like this is not terribly convenient for the Press nor is it healthy for the dissemination of information which is of interest to this nation and members of the public.

For a long time we in the Press have felt that stories which break at the district or provincial level should be commented on at least in terms of ascertaining the facts at that level. The practice to date is that a report has to be made to Nairobi and comments then emanate from one or two top administrators in the capital city. These officials have learned, conveniently, to be "in a meeting" whenever the Press calls them for comment.

We believe that we would serve this nation better if we are given the information we ask from officialdom speedily. A lot of the information embargoed now would, we are convinced, greatly simplify and aid in nation-building. It is true that reporting on development has lagged behind. The responsibility for this lies mainly with officialdom who will not even discuss development problems with the Press freely. What are they hiding from?

COUNTRY FACES CONTINUING FOOD SHORTAGES

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 11 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

KENYA will experience a grain and milk shortage in the coming years, Agriculture Minister Gilbert M'Mbijjewe said yesterday.

But he said the Government does not envisage a food crisis like the one experienced in 1979/80 when the country had to import huge amounts of grain. He was speaking at a luncheon he hosted in honour of the Food and Agriculture Organisation secretary-general, Mr. Edouard Saouma who is currently in Nairobi.

Reserves

He said the country has been having a grain deficit for the last two years following the depletion of the strategic reserves.

It will take a number of years to bring the strategic reserves back to normal, he said.

"We cannot have enough to eat and enough to store," Mr. M'Mbijjewe said.

The Minister said Kenya would seek food aid from abroad until the reserves are realised.

He said there was enough milk in the country but with bad weather, a shortage was likely.

Mr. M'Mbijjewe said although a substantial harvest was expected this year, the Government anticipated shortages of the two food commodities in the coming years.

He said, the country would look to the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation, (FAO) for aid.

Mr. M'Mbijjewe said FAO, through its good offices in Nairobi, had, over the years, been friendly, sympathetic and helpful whenever assistance was needed.

He recalled the FAO gave Kenya food-aid amounting to $8 million for emergency purchases during the past two years of grain shortage.

He said FAO had financed projects in Kenya at the cost of $15 million. He said the aid, which included technical training for personnel in the agricultural sector, was highly appreciated by the Government.

He said as a measure to overcome another serious food shortage, the Government had introduced a food policy to help the country achieve self-reliance in food production.

JOINT ANTI-SHIFTA CAMPAIGN--Wajir D.C.--Mr Nicholas Mberia, and his counterpart in Bandera, Somalia, Major Jibril Ali Adan, have agreed to consult their governments for advice on simultaneous border military operations to end the shifta menace. This was agreed at Wajir-Bor in Kenya, during a security meeting convened to help find a solution to the shifta problem along the common border. Major Jibril said shifta activity in North Eastern-Province and along the common border was the cause of the poor relations between the two countries. He noted that the two countries should work out a scheme of eliminating shiftas. This would enhance mutual cooperation, he said. Major Jibril said the best way of eradicating bandits was through simultaneous military operations on either side of the border by security forces of each country. Mr Mberia said Kenya was a non-aligned country and did not interfere with the internal affairs of her neighbours. He added that Kenya did not claim any inch of land belonging to her neighbours because it respected the current borders as inherited from the colonial governments and which were recognised by the OAU and UN charters. They agreed to build police posts along the common border to monitor shifta activities. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 10 Aug 81 p 2]

ELECTRONIC PACT WITH INDIA--An agreement has been signed between Kenya's Ministry of Industry and the Electronic Trade and Technology Development Corporation of India which is responsible for the overall development of the electronics industry in India. This comes out of the mutual exchange visits by the Presidents of the two countries, followed by the recent high-powered Indian delegation which held discussions with Kenyan officials on mutual technical cooperation, exchange and assistance. During the signing ceremony at the Ministry's Headquarters, the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Industry, Mr F.N. Ondieki, said the electronic industry in India was quite advanced and produced simple electronic materials to the most sophisticated and advanced systems for its domestic use as well as for export. The managing director of the Electronics Trade and Technology Development Corporation said the Indian technology was "appropriate" for the developing countries. He said it would not be difficult to transfer to other developing countries. The project to be started under the agreement will raise the standard of living as it will generate increased employment opportunities by reducing cost on locally made products for internal use as well as exports. It was noted that the Kenya Government attaches great importance to the development of the electronics industry in the 1978-83 development plan such as establishing of an Electronic Development Centre (Kenya Electronics Development Centre--Kerdec) for testing, research and development of electronic components and equipment for the local industry. The Ministry has a 5-10 year programme to achieve this national target covering all aspects of development electronics industry in Kenya. Kenya's total demand for electronic equipment and components has to be met through importation and this has been growing at a great rate in the past few years, taking a lot of money in the process. SOCIALIST COMPETITION PROCESS DEEMED WORTHWHILE

[Text] The practice of socialist competition in the productive sectors is one of many important experiences to be applied in our country. This opinion is shared by the two Mozambican groups who recently visited the USSR and Cuba to participate in a theoretical seminar on the trade union movement and in a course for trade union leaders respectively.

The 25-member delegation representing all production branches of our country, including members of the CPUP [?Provincial Councils of Production Units], visited the Soviet Union at the invitation of the central council of Soviet trade unions.

The Mozambican delegation remained in the Soviet Union for 35 days and took part in conferences and meetings with trade union leaders for an exchange of experiences.

Jeremias Mucavele, head of the delegation, said in a press conference that delegation members believe that it is possible to apply some methods of socialist competition in our country.

According to him, the possibility of awarding prizes to exceptional workers, such as refrigerators, stoves, bicycles and others, will be studied. Another example he cited would be to send abroad for technical training those workers who demonstrate an interest in carrying out their production activities.

"We do not want to imitate, but this is an experience in a socialist country, in the kind of society we want to build. We would be able to apply some of these experiences in our country, in accordance with our ability and our social realities. This will certainly provide an impulse to the activities of our workers and peasants," Jeremias Mucavele said.

In Cuba, four Mozambican workers attended a 10-month course for trade union leaders. The Mozambican group was part of an African group including participants from Angola, Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde. It should be noted that a Mozambican worker distinguished himself during the course, receiving a socialist competition prize.

PRIVATE BUSINESS TAKES OVER HOTEL UNITS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] A total of 70 hotel units in the city of Maputo that have been under the provincial department of hotel management and a number of others controlled by administrative committees which had been taken over by the state will be transferred to private business until the end of October.

According to information from a CIT [Information and Tourist Center] source, the process has already begun. At least seven units are already under definite ownership and only final approval is awaited, which should come next week.

This transferral activity will be carried out under the supervision of two commissions, one in charge of liquidating and the other of appraisal activities.

Constituted by representatives from the CIT national directorate, the Bank of Mozambique, the Ministries of Justice, Security and Finance, the commission in charge of liquidating activities will carry out the verification, transaction and qualification of the units and will prepare proposals for the liquidation of hotel units and similar ones. It is projected that at least nine units will be transferred each week.

The appraisal commission, which is constituted by the same structures, will issue the "final judgment," according to previously defined priorities and each candidate's purchasing power.

The same CIT source disclosed that the funds received from the sale of the hotel units will be used to liquidate debts to the Ministry of Finance which had been contracted after these units had been abandoned and up to the intervention of the state.

The CIT has already prepared a list of the responsibilities of owners of restaurants that have been transferred so far. This list also includes a number of guidelines for the operation of the hotel units, work methods, maintenance and health regulations, as well as management.

The list will be presented to the new owners prior to the opening of the units and a 6-month time limit will be established for the rehabilitation of the unit and the implementation of the program established. In case obligations and guidelines are not carried out, lack of any justification will entail loss of ownership with no right to an indemnification.

SHORTAGE OF POWDERED MILK, BABY FORMULA AFFECTS MAPUTO

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 13 Aug 81 p 8

[Article by Leandro Paul: "The Crisis of Powdered Milk"]

[Text] Maputo has not had any milk for the past 2 months. Mothers were taken by surprise and have been desperate. Water with sugar and fresh milk were used as alternatives. Pharmacists and businessmen say that quantities have been insufficient and were rapidly exhausted. Meanwhile, of course, a good number of cans were also sold from the back of the store.

However, Maputo will get powdered milk and baby formula next week. Pregnant women, mothers of newborns and long-suffering fathers have been scouring the capital for 2 months in a persistent search for these products. Newborn babies, whose mothers cannot nurse them, have been fed only tea with sugar or fresh milk.

A number of mothers have come to our newspaper to register their protests. Others have been writing letters to the editor, complaining about the lack of powdered milk on the market. One of the mothers did not know whether to believe what she was told: that the department in charge of imports has not been importing powdered milk so that mothers are compelled to nurse their babies. "But I have no milk, how can I nurse?" Alice Sitoi asked with irritation.

Pharmacies, cooperatives and stores always give the same reply to inquiries: "We received powdered milk and formula in May and June. We allowed customers only two small or one large can of powdered milk each. We cannot sell more, because the quantities that arrived were very limited."

Next week, however, cans of powdered milk and formula will be available. Orders came in on 27 July, and on 3, 8 and 10 August.

Nutritionists offered some alternatives to be used in an emergency: "Meanwhile, we advise you to use mother's milk as healthier and more nutritious." For children less than 2 months old, mix one cup of fresh milk and one cup of water; boil it for a few minutes and when lukewarm, add a spoonful of sugar and feed it to the baby. For children between 2 and 6 months of age, the procedure is the same, adding two spoonfuls of fresh milk and one of water.

Children over 6 months can drink boiled fresh milk.

HUNGARIAN COOPERATIVE ASSISTANCE--Yesterday morning, the governor of the province of Maputo, Maj Gen Jose Moiane, received Gyore Sandor, member of the council of the presidency of the People's Republic of Hungary and member of the central organ of the "Tot Jozsef" Hungarian cooperatives, who has been in Maputo since last Sunday. Gyore Sandor disclosed during the course of the meeting that Hungary will participate in the training of Mozambican cadres from the cooperativist movement, as well as provide technical assistance in this field. Governor Jose Moiane said during the meeting that the People's Republic of Mozambique believes that agriculture is the basis for the development of the country, adding that the process of rural socialization is now underway. The Hungarian delegation includes four members. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 13 Aug 81 p 3]

MILITARY MANEUVERS--The entire Costa do Sol area in Maputo witnessed a heavy exchange of fire between 2030 and 2200 hours day before yesterday. The noise of automatic rifles came from the island of Xefina and created apprehension and even panic among the general population. According to information received by our newspaper and confirmed by a spokesman from the Ministry of National Defense, it was due to nighttime military maneuvers which had been previously scheduled. Because of the panic it created and also because it is something that happens in all armies in the world--and therefore previously announced--we believe it would be advisable to inform the press organs as soon as possible, so that the people are aware that military maneuvers are being carried out. BULGARIANS' DEPARTURE--Following 1 year of intense agricultural activity in the Angonia agro-industrial complex, part of the 100 young members of the Bulgarian Communist Dimitrovian Organization are returning to their country today. This group of 100 young people, which includes construction and agricultural technicians as well as mechanics, has been in our country since last February to train executive cadre in the agricultural field and even to assist in agricultural activities. At the end of the originally established period of 1 year, only 20 of the 100 young people are returning to Bulgaria. The rest decided to remain in Angonia to continue the work they initiated. One of their tasks has been to build 200 houses for peasants in the complex. At a press conference in Maputo, Zlati Zlatev, the head of the brigade, pointed out the fact that 86 young Mozambicans were trained as tractor drivers and mechanics. During their stay in Angonia, the Bulgarians improved the degree of mechanization and created the necessary conditions for the application of productive processes using advanced technology. OIL FIRM ALLEGEDLY FUNDS PARTY OPPOSED TO TURNHALLE ALLIANCE

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 23 Jul 81 pp 1, 3

[Article by Chris Jacobie: "Summers in New Alliance"]

[Text] Yesterday the REPUBLIKEIN revealed from Houston, Texas, the involvement of an American oil firm FOSTI (Fuel Oil and Terminaling Incorporated) in the creation of a political front in opposition to the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance (DTA).

The individual involved is the notorious Jack Summers who is viewed as an "expert on South-West Africa." According to FBI agent Raymond Fiveash the FBI in America is investigating about 250 fraud charges against Summers. His business deals are also under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States.

There was already secrecy surrounding the creation of the Namibia National Democratic Coalition (NNDC) that was set up earlier this year as an opposition party to the DTA.

After a top official of an oil firm in the United States, Fuel Oil and Terminaling Incorporated (FOSTI) was confronted by the REPUBLIKEIN with that firm's involvement in the Rehoboth National Investment Company (Pty.), Ltd., Mr Steven S. Knollenberg acknowledged that he and Ms Nancy Hulston, vice-president of FOSTI in America, had helped found the NNDC along with Mr Johannes Karuaihe, Mr Hans Diergaardt, Mr A.J.F. Kloppers and Mr Boela Freygang.

The head of FOSTI's international department, Mr Knollenberg, yesterday revealed that Rehoboth National Investment Company (RENIC) is a front for funneling funds for the intended coalition.

Basterland headman Hans Diergaardt also admitted later in an interview with the REPUBLIKEIN that FOSTI was by this time supposed to have transferred funds to the coalition. According to the headman, however, this had not yet come about because a bank account still had not been opened.

The REPUBLIKEIN checked this out and to date no account has been opened with Barclays Bank of Ausspannplatz--the branch where the account was supposed to have been opened--for RENIC or the alliance.

This disclosure came shortly after NNDC chairman Johannes Karuaihe left for Houston, Texas, where he is to receive medical treatment.

According to Knollenberg the oil firm is represented in New York by two "experts on South-West Africa," Jack Summers for whom a warrant has been issued in SWA, and "Prof" Mburumba Kerina (Getzen), who needs no further introduction.

"Mr Kerina is head of FOSTI in New York and Summers is second in command."

Kerina's secretary, one Dallas Boesendahl, said yesterday that Kerina and Summers are in Paris, France, to contact individuals interested in projects that will be jointly carried out by FOSTI and RENIC.

Yesterday Kerina and Summers were no longer lodged in the San Regis hotel. According to a hotel employee the two were already on their way to New York yesterday where they will be joined by Karuaihe on the 27th of this month.

Knollenberg also cast some light on what is expected from the coalition in exchange for the financial support that FOSTI is providing to the coalition and RENIC.

"Every quarter FOSTI will make about R128,000 available to the coalition. Any party joining the coalition will be $5,000 richer and will engage in joint projects of various sorts in Rehoboth and Hereroland.

"Money that FOSTI transfers to the Rehoboth National Investment Company (RENIC), will be used for a variety of projects.

"Our top priority is a search for minerals. Next in order we will consider a casino, then a motel complex, a glass works, a cement factory, and a large shopping center."

Yesterday Diergaardt also confirmed that the first phase of the plan is under way.

"Two vehicles designed for exploration activities were shipped a month ago from the United States to SWA. Meanwhile, two geologists, one for Basterland and one for Hereroland, will soon be here from America.

"The vehicles aren't here yet, but they are expected shortly," the Baster headman declared yesterday morning.

The REPUBLIKEIN can also disclose that in 1977 Knollenberg was co-chairman of the Kudu foundation. He admitted this and said the coalition will cooperate with FOSTI to revive the Kudu foundation. "We are now in the process of trying to set up scholarships for Southwesterns to pursue their studies in the United States."

Yesterday the headman of Rehoboth said he couldn't care less who is in the "setup" with him. "No one orders me around." When the headman was told of the activities of Summers and Kerina he declared he was unware of them. "But I couldn't care less."

The chairman of the coalition, Johannes Karuaihe, at first denied knowing Knollenberg or Summers' involvement.

"So I do know them. What do you plan to do now about it? Let me alone, I'm leaving. I am a sick man," said Karuaihe before his departure.

It is very revealing that the colored party has been dropped from the top leadership of RENIC. The colored and Baster parties in the coalition moreover occupy all the least significant positions in the coalition, while in the various ethnic elections they could pull in considerably more than Karuaihe's 400 votes.

Also revealing is the fact that many of Karuaihe's and Uazuakuani's family members are on the board of directors.

In regard to representation on RENIC's board, Diergaardt said that the Liberal Party's Kloppers was dropped since he was not present in Athens. "If he buys a hundred shares and files a petition, the doors are open."

In his capacity as secretary general, Kloppers was unwilling to comment on the FOSTI connection.

"You know what the procedure is. Get in touch with Diergaardt or Karuaihe. If they are prepared, they can authorize me to issue a statement to the press. Otherwise I have nothing to declare."

Kloppers also urged the REPUBLIKEIN to keep its nose out of matters that didn't involve the newspaper.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR LUEDERITZ--"What is proposed for Luederitz is being done for Walvis Bay," reads a strongly worded press statement from the Luederitz Bay Foundation. When the REPUBLIKEIN last week reported that the South African administration will pump "life into Walvis Bay," the Luederitz Bay Foundation made a fresh appeal to the SWA/Namibia authorities to furnish the same support for industrialists in Luederitz, to wit: subsidized interest for loans for land, buildings and assets; tax breaks on industrial investments; a rail-freight rebate on transportation of products manufactred in Luederitz and shipped from there; housing loans for prospective buyers; tender price preferences on government tenders. "At least furnish comparable treatment for the country's harbor and mother-town," is the Foundation's request. The Foundation believes that such support will make little or no difference in government revenue since the port city's current situation in any event contributes only minimally to government revenue. "Over the long term such concessions can only benefit the economy of the country since by means of them foreign capital is also attracted," the statement goes on to state. South Africa's administration is presently providing assistance to Walvis Bay along lines that long ago had been proposed for SWA/Namibia's own lone port city. The chairman of the foundation's regional committee, Anton Lubowski, issued the statement Friday. [Text] [Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 27 Jul 81 p 5]

BROWN PARTIES MERGER--The leadership of the Rehoboth-liberator's party and the Rehoboth Democratic Party resolved on Saturday to merge. Both parties are currently represented on the Rehoboth People's Council (RDP). A.J. Strauss, currently a member of the People's Council and a member of the RDP asserted to the REPUBLIKEIN yesterday evening that a merger had been resolved. The name of the new party will be, according to him: the Liberated Democratic Party. A commission has been appointed to draft a constitution for submission to a congress. The congress is scheduled to convene in August. Saturday's merger agreement followed reports that the two parties were eyeing unification "to give" Dr Africa's party "a bloody nose in the election." Yesterday evening Strauss said that was not the main objective of the merger. The main objective is greater unity in Rehoboth. Meanwhile it has been learned that voter registration is sluggish and the merging parties want an extension of the registration period. [Text] [Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 27 Jul 81 p 3]

IMPORTANCE OF 'VIABLE' LOCAL GOVERNMENTS NOTED

AB201320 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 20 Aug 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] Issues related to local government have always generated a lot of interest among Nigerians from time immemorial. This is because the local government, being the government of the grassroots level, has tremendous impact and influence on the general life pattern of the people. It is also directly related to the overall developmental process, especially for the rural population.

It goes without saying that whoever is genuinely interested in the systematic and even development of the nation must of necessity pay attention to the steady growth of viable local governments. This is what prompted the former military administration in the country to embark on the popularly acclaimed reforms of 1976, which were eventually passed on to the present administration. Also, for the first time ever, the system of local government has been enshrined in our constitution as the third tier of government, thereby consolidating its existence and role in the presidential system of administration.

Since the advent of the second republic about 23 months ago, the majority of the people of this country have been watching with keen interest to see what the new administration can do to improve upon the pattern of reforms of the local government system which was adopted in 1976 under the military regime. However, while some states have been experimenting with the existing system, others have embarked on sweeping modifications and reforms. In embarking on these reforms, there was no agreement by the states as to how the 1976 guidelines could be varied and modified. Besides, the creation of more local governments in the country has far-reaching constitutional implications affecting not only the lives of the people but other important national issues. These include the powers of the new local governments, election of chief executives, demarcation of constituencies by FEDECO [Federal Electoral Commission] for purposes of elections to national and state assemblies, as well as revenue allocation.

As all these issues affect the three levels of government--that is, federal, state and local governments--the need for a coordinated approach to the creation of new local governments has become more pronounced. The nation cannot afford to revert to the pre-1976 confused and uncoordinated arrangements whereby existing states carried out reforms of their local government systems. The end product was that instead of enhancing the powers and effectiveness of local administration, many of them were unable to satisfy virtually all the needs of their people. In most cases, local governments became mere pawns and agencies of state administration at the disposal of state governments instead of functioning as governments in their own right.

Even now, as more local governments are being created, intense pressure is being mounted on the state governments by villages, towns, clans and communities for separate local governments. On some occasions, such demands have led to open confrontation between communities. If the present hazardous trend continues the nation might end up having many local governments that are politically inexpedient, economically inept and resourcefully unviable to carry out constitutionally assigned functions. This is why the initiative of the federal government in convening the two special conferences of commissioners responsible for local government matters to look into the issue must be regarded as appropriate and timely.

The response of all the states to the two special conferences is a clear indication that they are as concerned as the federal government to settle the issue once and for all in the overall interest of the nation. It is necessary for all states to work toward the evolution of guidelines of national applicability with minor variations arising from peculiar circumstances. And any recommendations on the subject which the conference would have made to the president for the consideration of the National Council of State should be those that could stand the test of time.

ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT ON BORNO LEADER FOILED

AB121239 Lagos NAN in English 1224 GMT 12 Aug 81

[Text] Miaduguri, 12 Aug (NAN)--An alleged assassination attempt on the life of the majority leader in the Borno State, Alhaji Shugaba Darma, has been foiled by security guards at his residence in Maiduguri.

This was disclosed by the administrative secretary of the Borno State branch of the Great Nigeria People's Party (GNPP), Malam Ahmed Usman, to newsmen here yesterday.

Malam Ahmed said that the would-be assassin, Muhammed Hassan, came to Alhaji Shugaba's residence last Wednesday at about 11:30 pm and demanded to see him but was denied entry by the security guards because it was too late in the night.

In the ensuing confusion, Malam Ahmed explained, the would-be assassin pulled out a dagger and threatened to kill anybody who would stop him from entering the house.

The assailant was over-powered by the guards and handed over to the police in Maiduguri, Malam Ahmed explained.

Alhaji Shugaba Darman, who was present at the news conference, confirmed the story.

Contacted, the divisional police officer in charge of the Lamisula police station, Mr Abdclrasheed A. Fadeyi, confirmed the story.

Mr Fadayi said that the suspect claimed to have formally been in the employment of Alhaji Shugaba as a security guard and had gone to Alhaji Shugaba's house merely to greet his former employer. Mr Fadeyi said that the real motive of the suspect was yet to be ascertained through investigation.

AMBASSADOR ON BRAZILIAN TRADE--Brasilia, 9 Aug (AFP)--If Brazil must choose between ties with South Africa and with the rest of the continent, black Africa hopes it will make the right choice, the Nigerian ambassador says. The envoy, Timothy Mgbokwere, spoke at a seminar on African-Brazilian eocnomic relations at Rio de Janeiro this past week. For Brazil to penetrate the African market to the extent it deserves, perhaps African states may expect Brazil to reciprocate in a manner consonant with its historic links with Africa, Mr Mgbokwere said. Brazil has definitely shown understanding to African sensitivities over South Africa and apartheid, the Nigerian ambassador said. "African states expect Brazil not only to condemn apartheid but also to join hands with them to eliminate the inhuman practices of that system." Mr Mgbokwere noted that South Africa was one of the few African countries that had a favorable trade balance with Brazil. The Brazilians imported 150 million dollars worth of South African products in 1979, while exporting just over 53 million dollars woth to the white south. For the same year, Brazil's total exports to Africa were worth 650 million dollars. They soared to more than 1,000 million dollars in 1980. The Nigerian ambassador said Brazil had sold well in Africa, despite strong competition from Western industrialized countries, largely because this country had developed intermediate technologies better adapted to the tropics than those offered by the industrial states. LAKE CHAD OIL--The Nigerian Standard has published a statement by some members of the National Assembly calling for immediate oil exploration of the Nigerian side of the Lake Chad basin because of the unfriendly activities of the Republic of Cameroon in the area. It believes that Cameroon is already getting oil from Nigeria's own side of the border and calls on the Federal Government to do something to stop this. The Standard concludes by requesting the Nigerian National Petroleum Company, NNPC, to tell the nation the results of oil exploration in the Chad Basin which began during the military regime because, according to it, such exploration will help the government to determine what line of action to take. The Deputy Governor stated that social problems of the contemporary world could only be tackled through an increased well-trained and equipped police force. This assurance was given to the Minister of Steel Development, Malam Mamman Makele by the Japanese Minister of International Trade and Industries, Mr Rojusuke Tanka in Japan. Malam Makele was in Japan to negotiate for the acceleration of the construction of a rolling mill being built by the Kobe Steel Plant of Japan. DIOUF RECEIVES LEADERS OF POLITICAL PARTIES

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 6 Aug 81 pp 1, 7

[Excerpts] Yesterday at the palace the president of the republid individually received all the leaders of the nation's political entities. The latter had been informed several weeks ago of this initiative by the chief of state.

These meetings are taking place following the recognition of six new parties, which have emerged since the constitutional reform which instituted unrestricted party pluralism. By virtue of the new provisions of our basic law, all the parties committed themselves to respecting the constitution, the application of which the chief of state has often pledged to enforce.

In turn the president received the leaders of the RND [Democratic National Rally], the MDP [Peoples Democratic Movement], the MPT [Labor Party Movement], the PIT [Independence and Labor Party], the UDP [Union for Peoples Democracy], MRDN [Revolutionary Movement for New Democracy], MRS [Senegalese Republican Movement], PAI [African Independence Party], PDS [Senegalese Democratic Party], and the deputy secretary general of the PS [Senegalese Socialist Party].

Audiences With the Chief of State

Yesterday the chief of state received several notable including:

--Chiekh Anta Diop, secretary general of the RND;
--Mamadou Dia, first "mawdo" of the MDP;
--Babacar Sane, first secretary of the Democratic League-MPT, accompanied by Mbaba Guisse, second secretary;
--Amath Dansokho, secretary general of the PIT, accompanied by Samba Dioulde Thiam, professor, member of the party directorate;
--Mr Hamedine Racine Guisse, secretary general of the UDP;
--Landing Savane, secretary general of the And-Jef-MRDN;
--Boubacar Gueye, president of the MRS;

RESULTS OF PS POLITICAL BUREAU'S MEETING

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 31 Jul 81 p 3

[Article--"Run the Party in a Democratic Spirit"]

[Text] The political bureau of the PS [Solialist Party] met Wednesday 29 July 1981 at the national assembly under the chairmanship of its secretary general, Mr Abdou Diouf.

This meeting of the PS political bureau was devoted to deliberations on the following agenda items:

1. Communication from the secretary general.

2. Questions tied to party matters.

Reporters:

--Moustapha Niasse, political secretary;
--Amadou Cisse Dia, deputy first secretary;
--Alioune Badara Mbengue, deputy general secretary;
--Mamour Ousmane Ba, president of the political bureau's oversight committee.

Various questions

Going to the first item on the agenda, the political bureau heard an important communication from the secretary general of the party, Abdou Diouf, on the positive participation of the PS in international meetings to which the party has recently been invited.

The secretary general's communication discussed, among other things, the meeting of the presidium of the Socialist International in Bonn on 15-16 July 1981, where President Leopold Dedar Senghor, honorary president of the PS, represented the party.

Mr Diouf's account was complemented by that of Joseph Mathiam, international relations secretary, especially with respect to the most recent meeting of the Socialist International's committee on disarmament, held at Helsinki in mid-July 1981.
After taking note of the encouraging results achieved at these international meetings, the political bureau expressed its satisfaction with the progress which is being made around the world in the advance of democratic socialism based on the ideals of justice, freedom, solidarity, and peace, all of which are indispensable to effective cooperation among nations.

Next, the political bureau reviewed various internal party matters, in the context of the actions taken to carry out the program assigned to the base organizations in various domains.

In that connection, the political bureau stated its determination to encourage party enthusiasm at all levels, in the spirit of Senegalese democracy.

In that connection, the political bureau decided to spare no effort to facilitate the work of the PS in contributing to the flourishing and the consolidation of the democratic system established in Senegal for the good of the whole Senegalese people.

Before adjourning, the political bureau heard a report from Mrs Caroline Diop, the president of the national PS women's movement, on the recent visit to Iraq of a PS delegation at the invitation of the Iraqi socialist Ba'th party, as part of the close cooperation existing between the two parties.

EDF LOAN TO DAM ROAD

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 31 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] The European Development Fund [EDF] has just accorded a F CFA 4.5 billion loan for the construction of the access road for the future Manantali dam. The financing contract was signed Wednedsay by Robert Dellere, for the representative in Senegal of the Commission of the European Economic Communities, and Mokhtar Ould Haiba, the High Commissioner for the Senegal River Development Organization (OMVS), for the three states involved in the project. The financing will completely cover the [cost of the] construction of this 87-km long laterite causeway which is to link the Mahina railroad station on the Dakar-Bamako line with the future Manantali dam on the Bafing river.

The special loan, approved by the EDF for the regional program, goes for 40 years and features a 10-year grace period and an annual interest rate of 1 percent.

The proceeds are divided as follows:

Senegal: 2.1 billion' Mauriania: 750 million; and Mali: 650 million. The plans take into account the work entrusted to the Senegalese Industrial Company, and the inspection of the work, which will be carried out by the Rhein Ruhr research bureau. The work already started last month, and is supposed to take 15 months to complete. One must recall that the EEC already financed the study for the construction of this road, and that this financing is its second contribution under the Lome Conventions toward the development of the Senegal River under the aegis of the OMVS.

The Fund's contribution amounts to some F CFA 22.5 billion, or about 10 percent of the estimated cost of the infrastructure planned for the envisioned development of the valley of the Senegal River.

It is anticipated that ultimately the Fund will take care of part of the civil engineering work on the Diama and Manantali dams.

KOORNHOF CHARGES SOME WHITES INCITED NYANGA SQUATTERS

'Well-Organized Campaign'

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — The over 2 000 illegal Black squatters at Nyanga, on the Cape Peninsula, was the result of an orchestrated act of incitement Dr Piet Koornhof, Minister of Co-operation and Development, told The Citizen yesterday.

Dr Koornhof said the Government was aware who the Whites were who incited the squatters to refuse Government offers of jobs or train tickets back to the Transkei and other areas from where they had come.

He said the Nyanga squatting issue was not a bona fide situation but a well organised campaign to harm influx control and other control measures over labourers in the Western Cape.

Officials of his department had found that some squatters, who arrived by bus, immediately gave themselves up for arrest. Others were people who had been repatriated and who had been given money and train tickets.

Some of the illegal squatters arrived at Nyanga singing freedom songs and giving Black power salutes in what was considered by officials a challenge to the authorities even before action was taken against them.

Dr Koornhof said his department had information that the squatters were being incited to establish a presence at Nyanga by using a "relief organisation" system.

Groups are squatting on a rotation basis apparently to establish a permanent presence at Nyanga and so obtain a permit to remain in the area.

He has information that the squatters were told that, should they be repatriated, they would be helped to return to the Cape Peninsula. Certain emotional scenes were created solely for the publicity.

The Minister again gave the assurance the Government would not allow itself to be blackmailed by campaigning of this nature.

He said the Government did not have to solve an ideological problem at Nyanga but a very bad socio-economic circumstance. It had a duty to supply legal inhabitants with housing and jobs on the Cape Peninsula.

Dr Koornhof released a pamphlet printed and distributed by the Progressive Federal Party head office in which the Government was accused of barbarism at Nyanga.

He also released a letter which he had received from the Commissioner General of the Ciskei, Mr J J Engelbrecht, in which it was stated that the Chief Minister of the Ciskei, Mr Sebe, complained that the official Opposition had visited the Ciskei "illegally".

The letter read: "These people (members of the Opposition) have entered my country, the Ciskei, illegally. They did not even have the decency to consult with or inform the Chief Minister of the Transkei about their visit. They should know what the correct procedures are."

"I would not have allowed them in because the Wentzel Commission is doing something positive about the situation in this sad area. To show the concern of the Republic Government, the Minister of Finance was sent to the Ciskei. He personally inspected the circumstances and made R1,25m available to relieve the situation at Oxton.

"These people are only coming to stir up trouble and they will be held responsible for any disturbances that might occur in this area.

"They (the PFP) have never offered my people financial support to uplift the standard of living. Where were they during the catastrophe of the recent crippling drought. The Republican Government gave the Ciskei R7,5-million for drought relief which has enabled my Government to create 13 000 jobs and this is still in progress.

Another R2-million has now been granted to gradually phase out the drought relief programme.

"I despise these people (the PFP) for what they are —hypocrites, crawling like a snake in the night to poison the nations. They have exposed themselves as enemies of the Black people. They are all very rich but they do nothing for the poor Black people.

"I have not seen such people, lacking elementary manners, and yet they hope to solve the problems of the country. They were lucky my men were busy hunting terrorists, otherwise they would have been detained," Mr Sebe said in his letter.

Last week the Transkei Minister of Foreign Affairs and Information, Mr G T Vika, said in a statement that Transkei viewed it with great concern that, while Transkei and South Africa were engaged in solving a delicate problem of employment in the Western Cape, organisations, parties or individuals should find it necessary to interfere by inciting people.

PFP Members Accused

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Aug 81 p 4

[Text]

CERTAIN members of the Progressive Federal Party sided with people who encouraged civil disobedience, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof said yesterday.

Speaking during the Budget debate he referred to the squatter situation at Nyanga and said he wanted to make an urgent appeal to the Opposition, Dr F van Zyl Slabbert, and his party to stop what they were doing.

"They do not hurt the National Party, in fact they are strengthening it by acting in this way, but they are harming South Africa.

"This is not a political or race problem. It is a socio-economic need and the situation would have been the same had the people involved been White.

"There is nothing racist in the issue, nor is it an ideological one and it has nothing to do with the colour of the people's skin."

Certain members of the Opposition were using dirty tactics and they should stop it.

Helen Suzman Statement

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Aug 81 p 4

[Excerpts]

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY. — The removal and arrest of people in Nyanga East and the destruction of shelters there by police and government officials was an outrage, Mrs Helen Suzman (PFP, Houghton) said yesterday.

It was not surprising that offers made to the people had been turned down and it was clear that the Minister did not understand what Nyanga was all about.

"Many of them have been in the Peninsula for several years — some in steady employment, others out of jobs.

"It is here they want to stay, not be sent off to the mines or farms in the Transvaal and Free State.

"It is here that their wives and children have been able to join them in a family life of sorts. They want to continue to live a family life.

"Has the Minister forgotten that his department evicted these people after raiding the Langa barracks and arresting more than 1 000 people under the pass laws?

Mrs Suzman said the Minister should understand that the Nyanga squatters were not trying to defy him by staying on in the area. They had hoped that a survey would be taken similar to the one at Crossroads and did not want to be left off the list.

"They are determined to stay and only brute force will shift them.

Mrs Suzman called on the Government to declare a moratorium on "illegals" throughout the country, to stop making pass law arrests and to refrain from any further removals of people for any reason.

"Get a move on with the new deal on pass laws, call a stop to the nightmare policy that has caused untold misery to millions of people," she said.

[Editorial: "Toughness Is Not Enough"]

[Text]

WE DON'T know what possessed the Government to get tough with the Nyanga squatters, arresting all of them and removing them from the camp.

The Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Koornhof, says this move was taken to defuse the situation and to improve effective action.

It was clear that the squatters' camp was growing while the war of words between the squatters and the authorities continued, he declared.

It was equally clear that the squatters and their advisers had not accepted the offer of work in the spirit in which it was made, namely, to regularise and administer the situation, but had instead continued to make demands which could only lead to confrontation.

Dr Koornhof said that a number of clergymen had informed the Chief Commissioner that the squatters summarily rejected the agreement and were requesting permission to erect structures of a more permanent nature.

They also sought the right to move freely in and out of the camp.

Now it might be argued that the squatters, by refusing to accept the offer made by the Government, were being defiant.

It might also be argued that if the Government did not act swiftly and decisively, the squatting would grow to larger and more intractable proportions.

However, as Mrs Helen Suzman says, arresting the lot and moving them out of the camp "must be the most sterile way of handling a breakdown in negotiations which one could imagine."

There are bound to be more squatters' camps as the process of urbanisation continues.

As Professor H W van der Merwe, Director of the University of Cape Town Centre for Inter-Group Studies, has pointed out, squatting is the normal manner in which poor people — especially in the Third World — see to their housing needs.

Squatters' huts erected by families are being demolished, he said, "in accordance with one of the cruellest acts of our time, based on a false belief that urbanisation can be stopped by withholding legal rights or the removal of a roof or shelter."

The Government should be thinking of short-term and long-term solutions of the problem, because it simply cannot arrest hundreds of people without causing mounting resentment among the Blacks and increasing censure abroad.

Crossroads was eventually resolved; Nyanga must be as well.

And at all times the Government must act with compassion and with a sensitivity to the reaction that harshness causes.

Toughness is not enough.

SOWETO CIVIC GUARD PROPOSAL--The Soweto Council has been asked by the Department of Co-operation and Development to form a civic guard to maintain law and order in the townships and to establish tribunals to deal with disputes among the residents. "I think it is a good idea." said Mr Hanyane, chairman of the seven-man committee elected to advise the council on the matter. "If a civic guard can be formed, law abiding and defenceless residents will be protected from hoodlums. If all the townships can be policed by civic guards, crime will be drastically reduced, particularly violent crimes." Mr Hanyane said members of the civic guard would be registered and paid. "There are cases, I feel, which can easily be solved by us." Some of these cases involve: Illegal pregnancies; problems arising out of unmarried people living together; housing disputes among relatives; and petty crimes. Mr Hanyane said the Soweto Council wanted the same judicial powers granted chiefs and headmen in the homelands. Residents not satisfied with decisions taken by the tribunal would be free to appeal to the local commissioner's court. [Lawrence Mayekiso] [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Aug 81 p 5]

END OF SOUTH AFRICAN RACIAL DISCRIMINATION BELIEVED NEAR

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 3 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Text] The well-known leader of the citizens of South Africa, Joe Gcabi of the ANC, was killed last week in the city of Salisbury, Zimbabwe as a result of being shot by unknown persons.

Although the perpetrators of this crime were not recognized quickly, the report of the Government of Zimbabwe which was issued concerning this killing said: "The government believes that this murderous deed was done by representatives of the racist Government of South Africa."

We join with the report of the Government of Zimbabwe in saying that the murder of Gcabi is another crime of the Boors perpetrated against the citizens of South Africa who are fighting to liberate their country from colonialism and fascism. Because, who else would want to kill a citizen of South Africa who is fighting for freedom and justice if not the Boors who are withholding this freedom and justice?

The evil hand of the Boors has done its work again. Gcabi has joined many other citizens of South Africa who have lost their lives in the deliberate murders perpetrated by the oppressive government of Pretoria.

The murder last week in Salisbury was not a new or unique incident. It was a continuation of the killings conducted against the citizens of South Africa who lost their lives cruelly by various means, like being shot like animals during peaceful processions as occurred in Sharpeville and Soweto, tortured until they die when they are in jails and in detention and struck on the head and subsequently thrown from upper floors when they are in the hands of the Boor's police.

The Boors are not satisfied now with these methods which have been used for a long time. In addition to killing citizens within South Africa, they are crossing the borders of neighboring countries to conduct their crimes, either by the clear provocation of attacking the settlements of refugees in these adjacent countries, or by using agents to kill citizens as was done in Salisbury last week.

Thus it is that the fascists do. The fascists and colonialists of Portugal did thus. They used every kind of threat and crime to reach the level of killing the leader of FRELIMO, the late Eduardo Mondlane. The settlers of Zimbabwe did thus and killed many citizens in Zambia and Mozambique by provocative attacks. But, as crimes and atrocities were unable to prevent the wave of liberation in Mozambique and Zimbabwe, so the cruel and criminal acts of the Boors will be unable to prevent liberation activities in South Africa.

The Boors must understand that the citizens of South Africa have resolved to liberate themselves. If they are supported by all independent Africa, the citizens will not permit the blood of their comrades which is being shed and the lives which they are sacrificing to be lost in vain. Colonialism and discrimination in South Africa must be buried without delay and the days of the final burial are not remote.

PRODUCTION OF REBUILT SUGAR PLANT TO START NEXT YEAR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 11 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Omar Al-Amoody]

[Excerpt]

DAR ES SALAAM, Monday.

RECONSTRUCTION of a multi-million Kwacha sugar plant in Kagera in western Tanzania, devastated by air raids during Idi Amin's aggression against Tanzania in 1979, is expected to be completed soon and production will start next year.

Details of the plant production, labour force and amount of external finance involved were not disclosed. But the plant will greatly help to reduce the on-going government-approved rationing of sugar, resulting in endless queues in the country.

In view of the continued scarcity in the past two years, the price of sugar has rocketed by 200 to 300 per cent.

In Dar es Salaam, the black-market price of sugar is K2 and in up-country stations K3 while the government-controlled price is K1 a kg.

The progress of the construction at Kagera plant was disclosed to President Julius Nyerere at the weekend during an inspection tour of development projects in Morogoro region, 150 km west of Dar es Salaam.

During the tour, Dr Nyerere opened a K54-million sugar training institute which is expected to produce some 2,000 middle and senior management cadres by 1985.

The completion of the plant, Agriculture Minister Joseph Mungai told Dr Nyerere, will help to boost national sugar production to help off-set the perennial sugar deficit.

Statistics show that Tanzania's sugar consumption stands at 205 million tonnes while the local production does not exceed 120 million tonnes.

It has been the policy of the Tanzanian government since the 1970s to increase sugar production to saturate the local market by 1980 but the efforts have been thwarted by repeated droughts, lack of foreign exchange for the importation of machinery and spare-parts and shortage of skilled manpower.

Measures are now under way to expand three sugar factories at Kilombero, Mtibwa and Arusha-Chini and to open new ones so that the country is self-sufficient in sugar production by 1985.

SINOTANSHIP CREW BONUS--Dar es Salaam, Tuesday. Chinese-Tanzanian shipping line, Sinotanship, formed in 1967 through a K3 million Chinese loan, made a profit of K2.1 million last year and has decided to give bonus to its crew of 350 to make them work harder this year. Each crew would be given a K200 bonus but 60 other seamen on "Sino-Afrika" ship will be given additional K50. The decision to give the line workers a bonus was reached yesterday during the company's board meeting chaired by the line's managing director who is permanent secretary in the Tanzanian Ministry of Transport and Communications, Mr Odira Ongara. Sinotanship, according to official sources, was earmarked to make a profit of K800,000 in 1980 but because of diligent and hard work by the crew, the line succeeded to earn a K2.1 million profit--an increase of K1.3 million. The jointly-owned shipping line was formed in 1967 with only one cargo ship but after a few years it increased its fleet to four ships. NEIGHBORS ASKED TO HELP CONTROL ARMS SMUGGLING

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 21 Jul 81 p 13

[Text] Lagos, July 18--Togo has asked its neighbours to work effectively with it to combat arms smuggling in the region, according to a statement issued here Friday by the Togolese embassy.

It was responding to Nigerian press reports calling Lome, Togo's capital, one of the main points for illegal importation of weapons into Nigeria.

The Embassy said its Government was trying to dismantle all arms trafficking networks operating into Togo itself or aimed atother African countries, and had set up a special squad to detect any attempts to use Togo as "transit station for the merchants of death."

The Embassy referred to subversion encouraged by "international imperialism" and said the arms smuggling was one of the links in an international mercenary movement.

The Embassy reported three cases this year relating to Nigeria when suspected arms smugglers were caught in Togo. In April three Ghanaians we arrested at the border with five revolvers on their way into Nigeria. In May, a Nigerian was caught by border police in a similar incident.

In the first two weeks of last month, the Embassy went on, three more Nigerians were picked up at Lome airport as they were allegedly trying to get 119 hunting rifles and some 200,000 cartridges into Nigeria. (AFP)

'WEST AFRICA' REVIEWS PROGRESS UNDER ZERBO REGIME

London WEST AFRICA in English 3 Aug 81 pp 1761-1762

[Text]

MILITARY CONTROL and order continue to manifest themselves in the life of Upper Volta, most particularly in the capital city. But eight months after the coup that brought the Military Committee to power, there are now a few worrying signs that all is not as well structured underneath this surface of well-regulated rule. Decisions seem to be being prepared for the sake of immediate achievement rather than for reasons of long term economic viability.

The Military determination to run Upper Volta along more orderly lines has been most vividly illustrated in the transformation of Ouagadougou over the last few months. Most crossroads in the town have been kitted out with a set of traffic lights, and several new one way streets have been introduced. This has already resulted in a sharp fall in the number of road accidents in the city.

The weekend of 27/28 June saw a clean-up Ouagadougou campaign. Teeshirts were produced with the Motto "Ouagadougou: Une ville propre" emblazoned across them, and the city's traders were encouraged to loan lorries and drivers to the campaign so that the refuse could be collected. Teams of people cleaned up their own streets and the President, Colonel Zerbo, was featured in the national newspaper the next day out inspecting the work.

Perhaps the most distressing part of this face-lift has been the police shooting on sight any animals out in the streets and not tied up in people's courtyards. Clearly, action of some kind was called for, since the never-ending stream of pigs, sheep, goats and dogs that used to roam the streets was the cause of many accidents. However, the howls and whines of wounded animals, combined with the sight of pick-up trucks piled high with the dead bodies has been most unpleasant. So too has been the thought of armed policemen prowling the streets of Ouagadougou as hunters.

Interestingly enough, the Mayor of Ouagadougou, André Diallo, was in power before the coup and even before the country's legislative elections in 1978 and has never before displayed this amount of authoritarian interest: it would seem that successful Military pressure has been put on him to smarten up his city.

Bars remain more or less closed around the country during working hours, and the only place you can buy a cold beer now during the day in Ouagadougou is funnily enough in the new Army Supermarket. As if to reinforce this position, the Council of Ministers recently turned down proposals for two new breweries in the country.

Following this display of power, further control of the country's activities has been achieved simply because of people anticipating what the Military will control next and then taking the necessary precautions. This has been the case with grain prices, which this year have remained lower than usual. Traders thought that the price would be regulated by the government, and consequently they did not buy up their usual large stocks for resale later in the year. House rents, too, have more or less stabilised after their vicious increases of recent years: again, owners have been expecting penalties to be announced against those charging the highest prices, and nobody has wanted to be seen in the forefront.

The Military Committee plan to consolidate this hold with the introduction of compulsory military service, announced by the President in his important May Day speech: "Every citizen must feel concerned by our defence problems . . . Our plans for national defence are conceived as a permanent mobilisation of all the people". Although space does not yet permit everybody eligible to do their military service "this problem will be studied."

However, underneath this surface air of confidence and orderly Military planning, the government feels itself under pressure to produce concrete results. Consequently, they are moving ahead with a number of large prestige projects, the economic viability of which is still very much open for debate.

For the third time in seven years now, a Voltaique government mininster has announced the imminent start of work on the railway link which will open up the manganese mine at Tambao. Both times in the past, the project was quietly dropped, and there is little doubt that its economic viability has not improved.

After a series of meetings at the Voltaique Embassy in Paris, sufficient bilateral aid now seems to have been secured for the hydro-electric dam at Kompiemga to be built, near the border with Togo. The dam has been described as "economically marginal", and it seems that finance has yet to be secured to route the electricity the three hundred or so kilometres back to the capital city.

The goldmine at Pourra is to be reopened shortly with much publicity, while world gold prices near their lowest point for some time. It has been clearly shown in the past that the mine is only viable when world gold prices are high.

The first nationally published criticism of the Military Committee appeared recently in the Voltaique daily newspaper L'Observateur. In a series of articles on the "redressement", the ex-Voltaique Ambassador to the United Nations, Frédéric Guirma, wrote of the voices coming from the international community: "Saye Zerbo et son CMPRN se "Sangoulisent dans la Lamizanaise" . . . On ne voit rien venir . . . Le Redressement? C'est foutu!" He concluded that nothing was seen to be happening so far because the commissions of enquiry set up after the coup had not yet finished their work. Comparing the President to a célestial Buddha in his inscrutability, Guirma claimed that the Military did not want to punish anybody until convinced of their guilt. Meantime the old rulers of the country remain imprisoned without trial.

In West Africa of May 18, 1981, we wrote that the series of restrictive measures taken by the Military Committee needed to be counterbalanced with a positive programme aimed at improving the country's dire economic situation. However, this series of questionable decisions seems instead to reflect the need the Military feel to act fast and to be seen with several concrete achievements tucked under their belt. It may also relate back to the growing problems in several of the Ministries, apparently caused by the inexperienced but hopefully politically pure staff appointed by the Military Committee.

FRENCH AID--Kinshasa, 18 Aug (AZAP)--The French ambassador to Zaire, Albert Thabault, on Tuesday morning delivered a "very long and very important" message from President Mitterrand to President Mobutu Sese Seko. At the end of the breakfast which he had with the president on this occasion, in the company of citizen Bomboliko Lokumba, vice first state commissioner and state commissioner for foreign affairs and international cooperation, the French diplomat told the press that relations between France and Zaire are developing normally and are expected to further strengthen within the framework of active cooperation established between the two countries. Agriculture, scientific research and transportation form the major axis of this cooperation. In the agricultural sector, France participates notably in the project to develop stockbreeding in the Buta District and the projects aimed at increasing sugar production. It also participates in the program for developing the Kinshasa Green Belt. Studies on expanding cooperation in the agricultural field are being carried out in Shaba. France also participates in the implementation of two other major projects: One is on the establishment of an institute of biomedical research in Kinshasa (in the construction stage) and the other is in the form of technical assistance to the Department of Transport for the rational management of the country's major airports. The French ambassador added that since Zaire is one of the most important African countries with which France has cultural relations, it will get an important part of the increase in aid to the Third World announced by the French president in his program of action. MINISTER DESCRIBES YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT AS TIME BOMB

[Excerpt]

UNEMPLOYMENT among the youth has reached a staggering one million, Youth and Sport Minister, General Kingsley Chinkuli announced in Parliament yesterday.

The minister said the Government was fully aware of the "explosive" situation and was looking for remedies with the assistance of international agencies.

Gen. Chinkuli was answering Rev. Ben Zulu (Kapoche), who had wanted to know what plans the government had in implementing youth development programmes and how many youths had secured employment after completing the 20 months compulsory National Service.

In a supplementary question, Mr Sebastian Kapalu (Livingstone) asked whether the minister had told the Government that youth unemployment could become explosive and what steps had been taken to contain the situation.

Gen. Chinkuli said the Government knew how serious the problem was, adding: "There are one million youths out of employment at the moment. Its a time bomb, we know that. We are trying to contact the Eureopean Economic Community (EEC) and other international agencies to implement youth development programmes."

ZCTU SENDS OFFICIALS FOR TALKS WITH DETAINED LEADERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) is reported to have sent some officials for consultations with detained labour leaders to work out a strategy aimed at securing their release.

The detained leaders are ZCTU chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba, general secretary Mr Newstead Zimba, Mr Chitalu Sampa, assistant general secretary and Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) deputy chairman Mr Timothy Walamba.

They were detained by President Kaunda last month for allegedly inciting workers to disrupt industrial peace and eventually overthrow the Government. Also detained is Ndola businessman Mr Chama Chakomboka.

Mr Chiluba is being held in Livingstone, Mr Walamba in Katete, Mr Zimba and Mr Sampa in Solwezi and Zambezi respectively.

Sources in Lusaka said one of the officials involved in the shuttle was ZCTU deputy chairman Mr Herbert Bweupe.

The sources said Mr Bweupe saw Mr Chiluba in Livingstone last week and yesterday he went to the Eastern Province where Mr Walamba is being held.

It was not established however whether Mr Bweupe or any other ZCTU official had already seen Mr Zimba and Mr Sampa in the North-Western Province.

When the emergency general council of the ZCTU met in Ndola after the detention of the unionists, it demanded their immediate and unconditional release.

The ZCTU meeting also called for an international commission of inquiry to investigate the causes of strikes and the continued misunderstanding between the labour movement and the Party and its Government.

Mr Bweupe said then that the independent commission of inquiry should include the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) and representatives from other United Nations agencies.

Terms of reference for the commission should include establishing the cause of the continued rift between the unions and the Party and its Government, the causes of strikes and the alleged involvement of labour leaders with forces of destabilisation in the nation.

The meeting called for the release of the detained labour leaders before the commission began sitting.

ZCTU SAID TO HAVE MADE NO OFFICIAL REQUEST FOR LEADERS' RELEASE

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 13 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE GOVERNMENT will not act on the call by the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) to release detained labour leaders because there has been no official representation from the ZCTU.

Labour and Social Services Minister, Mr Basil Kabwe said in an interview yesterday that as far as he was concerned, there has been no official representation from the ZCTU except what has been published in the press.

"And I do not act on press statements. The ZCTU officials know where my offices are and if they wanted to meet me and discuss the matter or hand their resolutions to me they could have done so," Mr Kabwe said.

The general council of the ZCTU appealed to President Kaunda early this month to release detained labour leaders, Mr Frederick Chiluba, Mr Newstead Zimba, Mr Chitalu Sampa and Mr Timothy Walamba or show cause why they should remain in detention.

The council which met in Ndola to review the detentions, also warned that if the labour movement was not satisfied with the grounds of detention, it would call for an emergency meeting to consider the possibility of declaring a nation-wide strike.

The labour leaders were detained by President Kaunda last month for allegedly inciting workers to disrupt industrial peace and eventually overthrow the Government. Also detained is Ndola businessman, Mr Chama Chakomboka.

Mr Kabwe said yesterday that there was nothing he could do since he has not met the ZCTU officials.

"They can do and say whatever they like, they know where to find me if they want to talk," he said.

During the mergency general council the ZCTU also called for an international commission of inquiry to investigate the causes of strikes and the continued misunderstanding between the labour movement and the Party and its Government.

ZCTU deputy chairman, Mr Herbert Bweupe said then that the independent commission of inquiry should include the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) and representatives from other United Nations agencies.

Mr Chiluba is being held in Livingstone, Mr Walamba in Katete, Mr Zimba and Mr Sampa in Solwezi and Zambezi respectively.

UNIP, LONRHO STILL NEGOTIATING TAKEOVER OF TIMES PAPERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

THE Party and Lonrho are still negotiating the takeover of Times Newspapers, Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula told Parliament yesterday.

He said this in reply to a question from Kapoche MP Rev Ben Zulu who wanted to know when the Times of Zambia would be taken over by the Party.

In his question, the MP asked Prime Minister Mundia the total cost of the movable and immovable assets to be involved in the Times takeover.

Mr Chuula said the takeover had not yet been effected because negotiations between the Party and Lonrho, who own the paper, were still continuing.

But Mr Chuula said Lonrho had agreed in principle on the deal.

When negotiations were finalised, the House would be informed accordingly.

In October last year, then member of the Central Committee in charge of the Economic and Finance Sub-Committee, Mr Wesley Nyirenda, said the Zambia National Holdings and Lonrho had completed negotiations for the takeover of the paper.

He said then that the two parties had been instructed to complete their discussions by September 30 last year and submit a report to him at least by October 1.

"The report has been given to me and I am now in a position to present it to the Central Committee at its next meeting," Mr Nyirenda had said.

ZAIRE, MALAWI CALLED ON TO WITHDRAW TERRITORIAL CLAIMS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 13 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE declaration of a dispute between Malawi and Zambia over some area in the Eastern Province is a sad affair which should not have been allowed to happen.

It is sad because Malawi and Zambia have enjoyed good relations since the colonial days. After all, the two countries were once under the same roof in the defunct Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Why should Malawi sour the good relations with Zambia by claiming the piece of land where the Mwami Customs and Immigration Post is situated?

Although the Minister of State for Decentralisation Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula informed Parliament yesterday that discussions on the dispute are still continuing, we appeal to the Malawian government to withdraw the claim because it does not serve any purpose.

We have pointed out in this column before that since Africa's boundaries were drawn by colonial powers in 1884, they cannot be changed now or in future.

The Organisation of African Unity [OAU] has already declared that the boundaries drawn up by the colonial powers should be respected. This is why progressive African countries have called on Morocco to withdraw from Western Sahara which she occupied on the pretext that it had been part of Morocco before the Spaniards colonised it.

After five years of futile fighting with the Polisario Front over the disputed territory, King Hassan of Morocco agreed at the recent OAU conference in Nairobi to call for a referendum so that the Western Saharan people can decide on their future.

The OAU has taken similar stands over border disputes between Kenya and Somalia and the one between Somalia and Ethiopia.

Zambia has another dispute with Zaire over an area in Kaputa district in the Northern Province. And Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia announced in June that the Government was considering taking the dispute to the OAU mediation committee if Zaire does not respond to Zambia's initiatives to resolve the dispute.

The Government might take a similar stand if the Malawian government does not withdraw their claim to parts of Zambian territory. We do not expect the OAU mediation committee to rule in favour of both Zaire and Malawi because that would be against the provisions of the organisation's charter.

So what do the two countries hope to achieve by claiming parts of our territory whose boundaries were not under any dispute during colonial rule?

Both countries should withdraw their claims and let the OAU solve Africa's serious problems. The OAU should not be occupied in discussing problems whose solutions are obvious when Namibia and South Africa are still being ruled by a racist regime.

ILLEGAL STRIKES DURING FIRST SEMESTER CAUSE LOSSES

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 12 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

A TOTAL OF 4,412 man days and over K2,750,000 has been lost in Chilflabombwe through illegal strikes between January and July, district labour officer, Mr George Mwale disclosed on Monday.

Mr Mwale who was briefing the director of the Department of Industrial Participatory Democracy, Mr Alexander Kwibisa said the strikes involved 7,871 workers from various employing agencies in the district.

Mr Mwale told the director that those greatly affected are N.C.C.M. Konkola Division whose employees have gone on strike twice this year, banks, the district council, ministry of education and culture and contractors whose employees have also downed tools separately.

Mr Mwale regretted that most of the strike on the mines started from Chililabombwe and wondered why this was so.

Mr Mwale also called for the creation of job opportunities for residents.

He told Mr Kwibisa and his delegation that there was great unemployment in the district due to lack of industries and his labour exchange was always dry of job opportunities except for house servants "vacancies."

And in reply, Mr Kwibisa said his delegation was in the district to learn from management and workers what their problems were and try and find solutions to them.

Mr Kwibisa said the Party and its Government were concerned about the situation in the province and were determined to ensure that industrial peace prevailed in all working places. — ZANA

RADIO, TELEVISION TRANSMITTERS TO BE INSTALLED

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 12 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Minister for Information and Broadcasting, Mr Mark Tambatamba has said the regional radio and television transmitters installed in Chipata will be commissioned before the end of the year.

Mr Tambatamba said engineers were now making finishing touches to the installation of the transmitters which have already started operating thereby taking television to the Eastern Province for the first time.

Speaking before departure for Lusaka yesterday after a day's visit to Chipata, Mr Tambatamba said he was impressed with the good radio reception and the quality of pictures on television.

He however, said there was still room for improvement and appealed to engineers to work hard to ensure that the job was completed on time to offer the people the services they have waited for a long time.

Mr Tambatamba attributed the good radio and television reception in the area to the standard micro-wave equipment installed by the Posts and Telecommunications Corporation (PTC), which is better than those found in stations along the line of rail.

On Monday Mr Tambatamba urged members of the government mass media to reflect Party and Government policy in their activities.

Mr Tambatamba said for this to be achieved members of the government controlled media should be fully conversant with policies of the Party and its Government.

Mr Tambatamba said this when he met officers in departments falling under his ministry at a meeting held at the office of the Central Committee member in the area.

RWUZ APPEALS TO MEMBERS TO REMAIN CALM DURING WAGE TALKS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 11 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] The Railway Workers Union of Zambia (RWUZ) in Ndola has appealed to its members to remain calm while negotiations with the management over demands for salary increases are still going on.

RWUZ Ndola branch secretary, Mr Bobby Mambwe, warned yesterday that any action by the workers which would affect the prevailing industrial peace in Zambia Railways could seriously affect the outcome of the discussions between the union and the management.

Mr Mambwe said this when he commented on threats by some workers that they would down tools unless they were given salary increments as soon as possible.

The branch secretary explained that although the talks between the union and the management have been going on for the past three weeks no tangible results, there was hope that they would come to an end before the end of this week.

"There is every hope that the talks should come to an end before the end of the week and even if they drag on, it would be very unwise for workers to resort to any action because negotiating is a long process which requires time and calmness," Mr Mambwe said.

Mr Mambwe said the tempers among the employees were quite high despite assurances by local union officials that the talks being held in Kabwe had reached an advanced stage and that the workers would soon be informed about the outcome.

Early this year, action was supported by workers in Kabwe and Ndola who warned the railways management that unless they were given salary increases soon, they would go on strike.

SEVEN PROPOSED STATE FARMS LACK JOINT DEVELOPERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Aug 81 pp 1, 5

[Excerpt]

THE Government has not yet found partners to develop seven of the proposed State farms, acting Minister of the National Commission for Development Planning Mr Unia Mwila told Parliament yesterday.

More than a year since President Kaunda launched the K400 million operation food production programme, the only meaningful progress so far was the siting of the State farms.

In a ministerial statement, he said the commission was still seeking foreign technical assistance for the 33,500 hectare Katikulula State farm in the Central Province but Tate and Lyle of Britain has carried out a technical study on the 25,000 hectare Mswebe State farm.

No specific country or agency had shown interest or commitment in the 30,000 hectare Kambilombilo farm on the Copperbelt but a French company had submitted proposals to carry out a feasibility study to be financed under the International Development Agency (IDA) credit if the World Bank would authorise.

In the same province, the 60,000 hectare Munkumpu farm was still without commitment from any country or agency.

Only a contract has been signed with Yugoslavia for the Mtirizi farm and an interest has been expressed by a big tobacco producing company of Malawi in Ntambo farm in the Eastern Province which measure 21,065 and 20,175 hectares respectively.

According to Mr Mwila, no foreign donor agency has been secured for the 22,000 hectare Nchelenje farm in the Luapula Province, although Dunlop Irrigation Services of the United Kingdom has expressed interest.

The commission was seeking foreign technical assistance for Samfya (Musaba) farm (20,000 hectares) in the same province and indications were encouraging, the minister said.

An agreement has been reached between the Zambian and East German governments on Kanakantapa farm in Lusaka which is 20,000 hectares while a contract has been signed with Bulgaria for Lusaka West State farm which is 21,277 hectares.

Terms of reference for feasibility studies on the 20,000 hectare Luwingu State farm in the Northern Province have been prepared and discussions are progressing for Mpika State farm.

The commission is yet to secure foreign assistance for the 23,000-hectare Shivuma State farm in the North-Western Province while a feasibility study by the Japanese has been carried out on the 18,000-hectare Solwezi State farm.

A pre-feasibility study is yet to be done on the Gwembe farm while a contract has been signed with the Soviet and Czechoslovak governments for the Masasabi farm in Southern Province.

The Romanians have shown interest in Kalumwange State farm in the Western Province and no pre-feasibility study has been made on Luazamba farm in the same area.

Norwegian experts to carry out an ambitious soil research programme in high rainfall areas in a bid to accelerate food production in the country have all arrived, the Norwegian Agency for International Development (NORAD) resident representative in Zambia Mr Kristian Petersen announced yesterday.

DPRK IRRIGATION EXPERTS TO ARRIVE SHORTLY

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 11 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

EXPERTS from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), who are to establish an irrigation system to cover 1,000 hectares in Mumbwa will arrive in the country shortly.

A spokesman for the DPRK Embassy said this in Lusaka yesterday when he commented on progress being made on the scheme.

The spokesman said that experts from his country had already carried out designs of the scheme last year in Mumbwa.

The scheme, which will be manned by Zambia National Service personnel, will be undertaken under a free assistance programme.

The spokesman said that after the completion of the irrigation programme, DPRK would also help Zambia in the development oif a 10,000 hectare state farm.

The agreement for the establishment of a 1,000 hectare irrigation system in Mumbwa was signed last year. Minister of Agriculture and Water Development, Mr Unia Mwila, signed on behalf of the Zambian government while Mr Han Tae Yol, Korean Deputy Minister for Economic Affairs, signed for his country.

The Korean minister said that his country would do the best to help Zambia in the agricultural field.

Yesterday, the spokesman said that his country was experienced in the field of agriculture.

He said that agriculture in that country was now on a very high level and along with grain production, the output of vegetables, tobacco and other industrial crops had grown rapidly.

Recently, the DPRK gave Zambia 15 tractors which have since been deployed in the Northern Province for agricultural use.

FARMERS SAID TO NEED NEW ENERGY SOURCES

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 12 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

FARMERS will be watching with interest the United Nations conference on alternative sources of energy that started this week in Nairobi.

Farmers throughout the World have been badly hit by the very rapid inflation in petrol and diesel prices in recent years.

In Zambia, this effect is made more serious by the increased costs of transporting fuels from distant ports.

While farmers who depend on oxen for power have been less affected they have left an indirect effect through greatly increased fertilizer and transport costs.

The one source of energy that we have plenty of in Zambia is electricity.

According to a recent report, we are currently producing or can produce 1633 MW per annum and using only about 800, or less than half.

Some of the surplus is of course being exported to Zaire and Zimbabwe and earning valuable foreign exchange.

However, it would be more economic to use more within Zambia to replace some of the energy we import in oil based products.

Newadays, very few farmers think of installing irrigation equipment which is powered by diesel engines if there is any chance at all of using electricity.

However, to replace diesel powered tractors is not so easy.

Zimbabwe is making excellent progress with ethanol production from sugar cane and production of ethanol powered tractors has now begun.

However, a better alternative for us would obviously be a tractor powered by electricity.

Small battery powered tractors have been available for sometime and are quite adequate for transportation over short distances on reasonably level land.

However, there are a lot of problems attached to the production of an electricaity powered tractor that can do heavy ploughing work all day without being re-charged.

For the simple transportation work, a better alternative in Zambia would be animal draught.

It is interesting that some of our largest farming companies such as Galaun Holdings and Kalangwa Estates are regularly using oxen nowadays.

On the whole, however, animal draught has been sadly neglected in Zambia.

A major alternative energy source is of course solar power and this will be receiving a lot of attention from the Nairobi Conference.

Solar energy for pumping water is a particularly attractive possibility because most of the drier areas of Africa that desperately need to pump water from underground are very well endowed with sunshine.

This applies in large parts of Zambia where electricity is not available and is unlikely to become available in the foreseeable future.

The potential for using solar panels to pump water was well demonstrated earlier in the year in Cairo Road, Lusaka by the company Power Equipment Limited.

A similar installation in the San region of Mali met the needs of 3,000 cattle and their owners.

Power was provided by 15 square metres of photovoltaic cells.

The main problem at present is the high initial cost of such installations and lack of experience of how they will stand up to usage in remote areas with virtually no back-up maintenance.

MENTAL ILLNESS STATISTICS--Four out of every 100 people in Zambia are insane, Minister of State for Health Mr John Mwondela said in Parliament yesterday. Mr Mwondela said this ratio had been constant since 1973 and there were no indications the ratio would rise or drop. Mr Mwondela said this in reply to MP for Kanyama Mr Fleefort Chirwa who wanted to know whether mental illness was on the increase or on the decline. The minister said 90,622 people were treated as out-patients in mental hospitals between 1973 and 1979. During the same period, 427 people were admitted to mental hospitals. The minister indentified alcoholism, dagga smoking and mental worry because of unemployment as the main causes of mental illness. [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Aug 81 p 1]

SEED MAIZE, FERTILIZER WASTE--Seed maize and fertiliser worth more than K500,000 have gone to waste for unspecified reasons at the former Namboard depot in Choma, Southern Province permanent secretary Mr Ian Sikazwe learnt yesterday. There was no immediate explanation from the Southern Province Cooperative Marketing Union (SPCMU) which has taken over the depot. Mr Sikazwe, who is touring the area, was told that 32,791 bags of fertiliser and 444 pockets of seed maize had been destroyed. An SPCMU spokesman said a team of Namboard officials were expected to arrive from Lusaka yesterday to determine the cost of the wastage after the union suggested the commodities be sold at a cheaper price to recover some of the money. Mr Sikazwe declined to comment on the matter in the absence of Namboard representatives. He said he would demand an explanation at a later meeting. The collection of maize from farmers on the Copperbelt is going on well, Copperbelt Cooperative Marketing Union general manager Mr Dominic Mutale said in Luanshya yesterday. MUKANDO'S PRAISE OF CHINESE--The Party and its Government appreciates work being done by the Chinese in the growing of rice and other crops at Kafushi rice scheme in Kabwe Rural. Central Province political secretary Mr Samson Mukando said this in Kabwe yesterday when the Chinese agricultural experts involved in the growing of rice called on him at his office. Mr Mukando said he was happy to note that the Chinese were aware of Zambia's economic problems as a developing country. Mr Mukando called on Zambians and the Chinese to strengthen the bonds of friendship which exist between the two countries by embarking on joint development projects. China, like Zambia was struggling against poverty and it was for this reason that the two countries should assist each other. Mr Mukando reminded the Chinese that most roads in Zambia were in poor condition. In reply, team leader Mr Xiao Chung said the achievements made by the Chinese were as a result of cooperation by Zambian workers. Mr Xiao said they were determined to grow rice, maize and citrus fruits. Mr Zulu urged other Party leaders at section, branch and ward levels to take up farming seriously. DEVELOPING MOZAMBIQUE-MALAWI RELATIONS ANALYZED

[Text]

MAPUTO.

THE Mozambique and Malawi railways are forging links that may pave the way for greater co-operation between the two countries in other areas. This way it is hoped to overcome some of the political tensions that built up between Frelimo and the Malawi Congress Party after Malawi's Life President, Dr Kamuzu Banda, visited Portuguese-ruled Mozambique in 1972, an act which brought him dangerously close to the colonialist camp, reports the official Mozambique news agency AIM.

On August 15, Mozambique's Minister of Ports and Surface Transport, Mr Alcantara Santos, accompanied by his wife and a delegation of six began a five-day official visit at the invitation of the Malawi Government. In visits to the northern, central and southern regions of the country, Mr Santos and his delegation were treated with the utmost courtesy and friendship which, a Malawian source said, were instructed by President Banda himself.

When Mr Santos sat down for talks with Malawi's Minister of Transport and Communications, Mr Chizuso Harawa, as well as with top officials, there was very little to remind one of the bitterness of the past, it was said.

The agenda for the talks showed ample evidence of a mutual desire to forge stronger bilateral relations as well as relations within the framework of Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. The Malawians proposed discussion about control of road traffic, the maximum utilisation of Malawi Railways for Zambian traffic, transport of explosives and the turn-around time for wagons.

These talks came at a time when unconfirmed reports said that Malawi wishes to import in 1982 60 000 tons of coal from Mozambique's Moatize mines in neighbouring Tete Province.

Trains run daily in and out of Malawi, coming from or destined to, the ports of Beira and Nacala. In 1980, Malawi exported and imported some 400 000 tons of goods through Nacala and 500 000 tons through Beira.

It had been a successful visit, with Malawian ministers praising Mozambican President Machel at a public gathering of hundreds of the northern lake town of Chilumba.

As the visit drew to a close it looked like Mozambique and Malawi—socially, politically and ideologically so different — were likely to come to a gentleman's agreement based on non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

For that to mature there is need to overcome one last obstacle: the movement of anti-Frelimo rebels to and from Malawi. Though nothing has been officially stated on this matter, it is believed this was one of the points discussed by Presidents Machel and Banda when they met recently in Salisbury for an SADCC summit in July.

The two countries started diplomatic relations at the ambassadorial level on July 1 this year.

For Malawi, the red-carpet treatment which Mr Santos got is part of an exercise to get into touch with a region which, in varying degrees, has gone beyond the deep conservatism of Malawi's social and political life. In Mozambique to the east, Zimbabwe to the south and Angola to the west, Malawi has long-term SADCC partners whose leftwing ideological stance is the result of protracted guerilla wars for independence.

Moreover, Mr Botha's apartheid regime in South Africa is facing an increasing dual struggle by politically motivated black workers and by a fresh and revitalised ANC which has surprised friend and foe with its well co-ordinated urban attacks. It is therefore practical and wise for Dr Banda to secure regional transportation alternatives capable of serving Malawi's inlet and outlet needs in case South Africa's barrel of social dynamite ignites. — Ziana.

FAILURE OF SOCIALIST COMPETITION CAMPAIGN NOTED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 4

[Article by Manuel Correia]

[Text] The 1981 generalized plan of socialist competition which opened last February ended its first semester.

At that time, a total of 527 firms and work centers had announced they were participating in the plan. The semester ended with the participation of 480, and the failure of 47 which presented internal deficiencies.

According to the first semester report, prepared by the UNTA [Union of Angolan Workers] department of socialist competition, these 480 firms and work centers number approximately 89,525 workers, or 20 percent of the country's organized workers; it should be noted that workers in the coffee and education field are not participating in the socialist competition campaign. However, it is estimated that a higher number of workers are participating in this process, while the lack of control mechanisms in the various firms does not permit precise calculations.

During this first semester, a number of factors were detected which prevented the socialist competition campaign from being an instrument for increased productivity, improved production and enthusiasm for productive tasks.

Limited stocks of raw materials considerably affected production, as did constant power failures and water shortages, especially in the more industrialized areas. Technical breakdowns and the lack of spare parts, together with the poor organization of some firms were other negative factors.

These conditions seriously affect both the individual and the collective competition, as obligations are not assumed when there is a risk of not carrying them out. These factors foster discouragement among the workers; as a result, it is only through an awareness campaign to be carried out by UNTA provincial secretariats and provincial trade unions that it will be possible to maintain alive the competitive spirit.

The exclusion of the coffee-producing areas from the socialist competition campaign--which was due to organizational deficiencies and to the workers' difficult social conditions--was compensated for through a series of provincial seminars.

Production is undoubtedly the principal indicator of socialist competition, but the serious problems deriving from the lack of raw materials, equipment breakdowns, power failures and water shortages contributed greatly toward reduced production and the non-achievement of obligations assumed.

Average production in the firms participating in this socialist competition plan was 78.05 percent, compared to 83.38 percent during the first semester of the 1980 campaign, a 5.33 percent difference.

The highest level was registered in coffee reprocessing plants, which reached 92.7 percent. The lowest average was in the field of agriculture and livestock (60.8 percent), largely due to poor rainfall.

Out of the 480 firms, only 43 succeeded in carrying out their obligations for the first semester.

The degree of general absenteeism during the first semester was 4.34 percent, a slight 0.1 percent increase in relation to the same period in 1980.

The highest rate of absenteeism was in the coffee field in Luanda, with 7.27 percent, followed by the agricultural and livestock sector, with 5.4 percent.

It should be noted that the main causes for absenteeism reside in the difficulties encountered by the workers in purchasing food items, in the poor organization and supply of cafeterias, the absence of consumers' cooperatives and the lack of raw materials. These factors cause the paralyzation of the industry and foster indiscipline.

FLIGHT OF WAR-, FAMINE-'DISPLACED' PERSONS DESCRIBED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 10

[Article by Alistair Matheson]

[Text]

IN Angola 860 000 people are, to all intents and purposes, refugees. They have fled their homes in peril of their lives to seek shelter, sustenance, and often medical help.

But the niceties of definition demand that they are not classified as refugees, because they have not crossed an international frontier.

Instead, they are designated "displaced" and are not entitled to the same attention as a person who has sought asylum in a neighbouring country. But the predicament of these people is no less tragic or severe.

In a continent suffering from civil wars, invasions from hostile neighbours and natural calamity such as drought, the line to be drawn between those who are "refugees" and those who are "displaced" is often artificial.

The numbers of those displaced in Angola are among the highest on the continent. The process of their displacement began several years ago, in 1975. The civil war and continuing hostilities uprooted many from their homes.

They were among the million or more people who went into hiding in the thick bush country to escape the fighting which broke out in November 1975 between the armed forces of the Luanda-based MPLA Government of Angola and the opposing guerrillas of the UNITA movement, headed by Dr Jonas Savimbi.

Meanwhile, in southern Angola, many people were forced to flee when South Africa began to launch frequent raids across the border by air and on land. But with the whole country in turmoil, there were no competent authorities to look after these homeless wanderers.

The advent of protracted drought dramatically worsened the situation.

The time soon came when the food gave out completely. In their thousands civilians emerged from their forest hideouts, emaciated, exhausted and nearly all severely malnourished.

More recently, widespread drought and famine hit much of central Angola, turning once fertile and well-watered highlands into a barren land, devoid of crops, although this area previously provided maize for the rest of the country.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has come to the rescue of those affected, taking responsibility for their immediate care and protection.

Many of the victims belong to the Ovimbundu, one of the largest tribal groups in Angola, whose homeland is on the central highland plateau in the provinces of Huambo and Bie.

RESETTLED

Eventually they will be resettled by the Angolan Government, but until long-term arrangements can be made to give them a secure future, most of these displaced people are housed in temporary shelters, eating meagre rations.

Because the country's agricultural infrastructure collapsed during the civil war, food is extremely scarce.

The government has been unable to forge ahead with the urgent tasks of nation-building and restoring the shattered economy because of constant harassment by anti-government guerilla bands.

More serious have been devastating attacks by the South African ground and air forces on key communication targets in southern Angola aimed, says the government, at destroying the infrastructure so as to cripple the military wing of the South West Africa People's Organisation.

SWAPO operates against the South African-backed forces from bases in southern Angola in their fight to gain independence for Namibia.

According to UNICEF's representative for Angola, Alameri Bezzera de Mello, raids by the South African forces have regularly penetrated 200 kilometres across the border into Angola, with one recently reaching as far as Lubango, 500 kilometres inside.

Mr de Mello is now helping provide emergency help for some of the Angolan victims of the recent bombing and ground raids, as well as the much bigger problem of arranging short-term aid for the 800 000 people in the central highlands whom the Government cannot feed at present.

He explained in Luanda that UNICEF is working closely with the government and the United Nations High Commission for Refugees.

Angolans are coming back, mostly from Zaire and Zambia, at the rate of 50 000 a year and are helped back to a normal life again.

At the same time thousands of refugees are arriving in Angola from Namibia.

Some volunteer as guerilla fighters with SWAPO's military wing, PLAN (The Peoples Liberation Army of Namibia).

Others are simply escaping the recent call-up instituted by the South African administration illegally occupying Namibia, in an attempt to conscript all black males over 16 to serve in the army opposing the SWAPO guerillas along the border with Angola.

The latest count for Namibia refugees in Angola is 50 000, with more 15-year-olds arriving daily, fleeing from the draft.

In addition Angola still has 18 000 Zairean refugees in camps in the north-east.

These are families of the former Katangese gendarmerie who fought against President Mobutu of Zaire, in two abortive invasions of Shaba (Katanga) province.

REFUGEES

The third group of refugees sheltering in Angola is the smallest.

These are some 5 000 refugees from South Africa itself, mostly political exiles from the apartheid regime, living in the capital of Luanda or in Benguela.

As for the far larger group of 800 000 now being looked after under the UNICEF-assisted programme, the Angolan government is doing what it can for the return of some of the displaced to their home areas.

It is hoped that the local people can help them to become reabsorbed.

This, however, is not possible for the bulk of the displaced, because the area many of them come from is still seething with unrest.

The security situation is such that normal peasant farming is impossible.

Probably UNICEF will have to shoulder this burden for some time to come, unless alternative land can be found on which some could be resettled.

THREE DAYS OF REFLECTION ON TRADE HELD

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 598, 27 Jun 81 pp 5, 8

[Article by Andre Missamou]

[Text] As a preliminary to the drafting of a commercial code enabling the state to consolidate and strengthen its authority and control over trade activities in our country and the approaching Brazzaville seminar on trade regulation, the Ministry of Trade organized three days of consideration of the subject "Trade in the People's Republic of the Congo and the Role of the Congolese Merchant" several days ago in Pointe-Noire.

Three speakers took the floor at the opening session. First of all, Comrade Ngouonimba Nczary thanked the Ministry of Trade for the choice of the city of Pointe Noire, where the major and very profitable trade activities are controlled by foreigners, while the businesses of the underprivileged masses (retail trade) leave much to be desired.

The second speaker, Comrade Tsika Norbert, president of the Kouilou-Niari Chamber of Commerce, for his part, stressed the unanimous support of domestic economic operators for this undertaking, which offers better prospects and a new era in relations between the mass of tradesmen and the political leadership, i.e., the party, the government and the state.

The last speaker, the minister of trade, before declaring the days of contemplation under way, first explained the event and its subject. This is the first time that representatives of the administration, the banks, the state enterprises and domestic private trade operators have met in our country to discuss the future of trade and the relations which should exist among them. This event is important, he said, because it bears witness to the desire often stated by Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso to establish real, true democratic life in our country. This was why, he concluded, the Third Special PCT [Congolese Labor Party] Congress committed government activities to a new path, that of democracy, that Comrade Marien Ngouabi, president and founder of the PCT, always wanted.

The widely varying subjects considered were the following:

1. The policy of the party and the state in the realm of trade in the People's Republic of the Congo (by Comrade Minister Elenga-Ngaporo);

2. State services and the merchant (Comrade Ambroise Gambouele, secretary general of trade); and

3. The merchant's vocation (Comrade Christian Diallo-Dramey, president of the Brazzaville Chamber of Commerce, agriculture and industry).

It emerged from the final synthesis of the work that all the participants were satisfied with the general atmosphere which characterized these discussions. Their clarity and direct nature favored the drafting of specific proposals to be submitted during the coming seminar in Brazzaville, involving five points:

The Monopoly Issue

If the principle and functioning of monopoly were criticized, the explanations of the need for a state monopoly made it possible to reach common views on the necessary improvement in its functioning. The monopoly principle is based on the irreversible nature of the socialist option and on the complexity and scope of the international market, which makes access to import activity difficult for the domestic private sector.

On these matters as a whole, it was noted on the one hand that the OFNACOM [National Marketing Office] has made certain progress in the exercise of the monopoly, and on the other, that once free of import concerns, the domestic private operators could devote themselves to distribution.

The discussions are to continue between state and domestic private operators on the specific questions to be resolved, so that the national private sector can guarantee distribution and the OFNACOM can devote itself to imports. Again on the subject of monopoly, the problem of the SOTEXCO portfolio was raised, and it was established that this comes under the jurisdiction of the UDEAC [Customs and Economic Union of Central Africa].

Protection of the National Private Sector Against Foreign Private Interests

Agreement was reached on the need for the state to take steps to protect the development of the national private sector. The view was expressed that this development could not come about without state protection.

On this point, the domestic operators and the administration share the same views (proposals were drafted).

The Credit Issue

Unanimity was also reached on the unsuitability of the banks and their present method of functioning. The rules of bank operation established in the name of the principle of the risk run, legitimizing the extremely selective allocation of credit to domestic tradesmen, does not correspond to the real situation. In view of the inadequacy of the structures and the administration of the banking system, a certain number of proposals were drafted, all conditioned by the political willingness to implement them.

Organization, Technical Support and Training

The weak level of trade on the level of the domestic private sector can be explained by the historical conditions under which it developed. However, a class of dynamic businessmen, characterized by certain strengths but some weaknesses as well, is now emerging.

The fatalistic image of the traditionally incompetent Congolese merchant was rejected by the participants. The strengthening of the credibility of the Congolese merchant in the eyes of the banks, the state and consumers presumes aid, technical support and training (proposals were also made in this connection). The scattering of our national merchants and their traditional individualism in trade activity are unfavorable to the organization of the merchants in the national private sector.

Such organization is necessary, however, for the strengthening of the national private sector, in order to serve the legitimate desire of our national tradesmen to take the place today occupied by the foreign private sector in the realm of distribution.

The forms of organization necessary in order for the merchants to win existing and future markets and take their place in the development in progress were proposed.

Price Control

It was established that work remains to be done on this level in the direction of the foreign private sector, which not only functions on the basis of foreign price establishment mechanism, but is still engaged in establishing substantial profit margins on products which are no longer luxuries.

The speakers stressed the new direction in this control, which pertains in particular to the companies operating on concessions, which are mainly responsible for the increases in prices.

The recent progress seen in this sector is due to the popular control, which must be systematized and organized.

Domestic Distribution

The administration stressed the inadequacies in this sector. For example, West Africans occupy sectors in which Congolese merchants are reluctant to establish themselves. Also, transport agents dictate prices. Nighttime sales constitute a sector reserved for the West Africans, generally the only merchants willing to keep sales outlets open until a late hour in the evening. The sharing of the risks in trade activity is not guaranteed because of the shortage of domestic merchants available.

The state is prepared to provide aid in all forms to national private operators establishing businesses in the interior of the country. The facilities to be provided national private merchants will include, among others, extensive credit for supplies, exemption from domestic taxes and facilities for the purchase of equipment for the operators who undertake distribution in the interior.

In any case, the role of the import enterprises will be increasingly to facilitate distribution throughout the whole of the country by national state or private operators.

WATER SYSTEM, ROADS, SANITATION FOCUS OF NEW TOWN PLAN

Brazzaville MWETI in French No 432, 11 Jun 81 pp 1, 2

[Article by E. Mangandza: "Brazzaville--Urban Development Prospects"]

[Text] The political bureau adopted a master plan for the urban development of Brazzaville last 9 October. The exceptional population increase in Brazzaville is currently 7 percent per year. This is without a doubt a result of the linear family pressure which characterizes our social organization. This figure suggests the difficulties the public authorities will encounter in the total urban development of the city and in accommodating the migrants and the citizens who are still poorly housed.

The information resulting from the first urban development studies on Brazzaville was devastating. The situation was deteriorating steadily. A number of evils underlie this situation, among others the rapid increase in the urban population due to the rural exodus, the anarchic and uncontrolled distribution of building land, the isolation of the popular and peripheral neighborhoods, erosion and the lack of sanitation--in a word, the underequipment of many neighborhoods despite the very high level of school enrollment and other social needs, such inadequate supplies of drinking water and electricity, the inadequacy of transportation and communications facilities, etc.

Thus, with a view to the drafting of the five-year plan, it is necessary to establish a schedule for the implementation of the master plan for Brazzaville through the year 1986, which should be focused on the short-term resolution of the following problems: a water distribution system, the building of social, cultural and sports equipment, the road infrastructure and networks, the creation of activity zones, the rebuilding and renovation of the city center, and finally, sanitation and site protection. However, according to the guidelines in the master plan, a certain realism can be seen in the plans for the settlement of the currently underoccupied sectors in the peripheral zones and even the center city through collective housing operations, the reorganization and settlement of empty zones. The extension of the port of Brazzaville to the north of the Tsiene and the establishment of an industrial zone in the Kinsoundi and M'Filou sector are also involved. In the road infrastructure sector, we should note that the Boulevard des Armees was linked up with the Avenue des 3 Martyrs in 1981. Currently, looking toward 1985, efforts are being made to complete the thoroughfare through the Glaciere Ravine toward Bacongo. During this same period, the broadening of national route 1 will be contemplated. We might also mention the improvement of the north outlet from Brazzaville, the St Anne church, and the UDEAC [Customs and Economic Union of Central Africa] fair on national route 2.

The master plan thus calls for widespread action in the peripheral neighborhoods, with the building of schools and development of markets. Moreover, the rational use of the land in the center of the city is required, military camps will be relocated in order to put an end to the current internal division and the use of land better suited to such important operations as the building of a fully equipped housing complex.

In this connection, the importance of this undertaking must be recalled in terms of the fact that the present center of the city, conceived on the scale of a federal capital, is underpopulated today and is characterized by poor distribution of public equipment and international bodies. Old Brazzaville is to a considerable extent characterized by military camps and off-limits zones which are hindering its development and improvement.

Within the framework of this master plan, the building of a bridge over the Congo to link Kinshasa and Brazzaville is contemplated, working jointly with Zaire. As is necessary in the short-term undertakings, it will be necessary to plan on using the railroad for transportation along the joint Ganga-Lingolo-Talangai line. However, this is a new option for our transportation system. The question of redefining territorial jurisdictions in order to guarantee the implementation of the master plan was raised. For example, Gamaba, which should be removed from its current headquarters, will surrender the administration of M'Filou, Poto-Poto-Djoue and Mikalou to the Brazzaville jurisdiction.

These options in the master plan represent, as can be seen, the cornerstone of a policy for urban development in the Congo. This it is a question of putting an end to a real estate confusion characteristic of the consequences of the primitive urban development which the state tolerated without reacting drastically.

Thus the five-year plan will mean a real urban development effort for Brazzaville.

IMPORTANCE OF IHOSY-SAKARAHA ROUTE STRESSED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 5 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] There is no doubt that the Ihosy-Sakaraha segment, which is very uneven and very mired up, is in the most abominable condition. Even in the dry season, but also in the rainy season, the little Andiolava-Ranohira section, which can easily be negotiated in no more than 15 or 20 minutes, entangles the typical passenger for at least 4 or 5 long hours. In reality, the entire southern route between Ankaramena and Sakaraha is no more than a great cart-path.

This RN-7, however, is a real umbilical cord for the supply of victuals to the southern region, notwithstanding the substantial amount supplied by the maritime service. So it is easy to understand the enthusiasm of the people of Sakaraha on Thursday 23 July, when a cohort of local authorities and representatives from the central government officially launched the project to improve the Ihosy-Sakaraha segment. Getting the Ihosy-Sakaraha segment asphalted--and Touzet promises it within 20 months--will undoubtedly remove a long-standing irritation to the people of the south. With the help of foreign friends, the Germans in this instance, to whom the people who will benefit can only be grateful.

Nevertheless, what is attracting the attention of observers in the Ihosy-Sakaraha contract is the fact that our own National Public Works Company, SINTP, is not among the contractors. Now SINTP had been given official notification by letter dated 20 November 1980 that it would have to "take all measures necessary to provide for the execution of the project..." For SINTP, it was a question of "carrying out the work of improvements on an approximately 20-km segment section E between PK 140.2 and 192.5 (Bekapity-Sakaraha).

No doubt evil tongues will wag. But setting aside irresponsible remarks and unfounded rumors, the special urgency of these projects, as well as their complexity, objectively required substantial material and also financial means that are dramatically lacking in our state companies.

One conclusion must therefore be emphasized: along this line of the need for urgent execution of our big economic projects, at these levels of solicitation of material, financial and technological resources to be used in completing our great infrastructure projects, there will be many more.... kilometers of tar-sprayed road to be traversed by our revolutionary bush-taxi in this RND [expansion unknown] phase, before we have real need for our SINTP.

Along the same lines, the increasing mistrust with which our own state institutions are regarded would seem to rest on a string of convenient alibis. In this instance, they risk locking SINTP irremediably in a vicious circle which could ultimately result in its deterioration: the fewer opportunities it has to work on projects because (it seems) of a reputation for being under-equipped, the less effectiveness it can demonstrate, and doubtless it will never succeed in building up a basic supply of capital which it is lacking. In order to be optimally equipped, and to prove its worth to itself.

ALAOTRA OPERATION EXPECTED TO INCREASE RICE OUTPUT

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 23 Jul 81 p 2

[Article by Albert Randriamampianina]

[Text] The "paddy" season is now beginning in the Lake Alaotra region. Despite the drought which seriously ravaged and jeopardized the rice crop, the rice beds are already built in the rice fields, and levelling began several days ago.

Diminished Production

The year 1980/1981 has not been completely favorable to agriculture in general in the Lake Alaotra region, especially with respect to rice. Several hectares worth of rice fields were not cultivated for lack of water; especially rice fields in the higher zones, which depend so heavily on rainfall. Nevertheless, despite the inadequate rain which obviously handicapped the crop, a goodly number of growers, armed with courage and the will to conquer the difficulties posed by nature, have benefited in the last few months—in other words, tardily—from the occasional rainfalls. Also, in order to struggle against a very significant decline in production and on the enlightened advice of technicians, growers have brought in fertilizer to their crops, in order to get a better yield. In accordance with the information we have received from officials, we are publishing below a comparative and estimative chart of the area under cultivation and expected production for the 1979/1980 and 1980/1981 seasons:

FIVONDRONANA	Area of Rice Cultivation 1979/1980	Area of Rice Cultivation 1980/1981	Production in 1979-80 season	Expected production 1980-81
ANDILAMENA	9.275 ha 99	5.500 ha	16.906 T. 840	10.532 T. 500
AMPARAFARAVOLA	11.539 ha 61	11.207 ha 20	26.606 T. 930	20.633 T. 888
AMBATONDRAZAKA	21.947 ha 25	12.650 ha 41	50.653 T. 740	24.093 T. 309
MORAMANGA	22.972 ha 80	12.524 ha 00	37.432 T. 040	23.983 T. 460
ANOSIBE AN'ALA	11.338 ha 00	9.205 ha 00	9.390 T. 100	9.811 T. 550
S.D.R.	77.073 ha 65	51.086 ha 61	140.989 T. 650	89.054 T. 707

ha = hectares

	SUPERFICIES 1979/80	PRODUCTIONS 1979/80
SOMALAC
AMBATONDRAZAKA	2.800 ha 93	9.333 T. 291
HORS MAILLE	590 ha 60	1.858 T. 659
AMPARAFARAVOLA	27.250 ha 11	71.791 T. 319
HORS MAILLE	5.750 ha 00	8.164 T. 91

SOMALAC = Lake Alaotra Development Company

The areas encompassed or exploited by SOMALAC are not included in the above table. We are missing the figures and estimates referring to the 1980-81 season; we will make do by giving as follows the data for the last 1979-80 season:

- ANDILAMENA	1.038 T. 043
- AMPARAFARAVOLA . .	1.156 T. 636
- AMBATONDRAZAKA .	2.236 T. 448
- MORAMANGA	1.795 T. 400
- ANOSIBE AN'ALA	257 T. 936
Total : (S.D.R.)	6.483 T. 463
- SOMALAC + HORS MAILLE ... +	5.458 T. 650
Total général	11.942 T. 113

According to projects of observers, a decline of 30 to 40 percent may occur in the 1980/1981 season, undoubtedly because of the drought.

While the charts above are, to say the least, striking, it should still be noted that the following tonnages must absolutely be allocated for seeding for 1981/1982, namely:

If the total tonnage expected by the SDR [special drawing rights?] is 89,054 tons 707 [sic] the tonnage to be marketed will be less, since in addition to the seed to be kept, we must also take into account the producer's consumption needs.

In short, paddy production in the Lake Alaotra area for 1980/1981 has been seriously impaired by the drought, and this is why the producers have focused their efforts on dry crops: manioc, kidney beans, onions, potatoes. Some 75 tons of kidney bean seed has been distributed in the three fivondronanas: 5 tons for Andilamena, 37 tons for Ambatondrazaka, and 33 tons for Amparafaravola.

If such is the predicted outcome for the rice crop in Lake Alaotra, it is still indispensable to relate in a few lines the major problems which plague the producers, more precisely the masses of Alaotra, with respect to basic necessities.

There is more and more suffering, enough to make the mute cry out, so to speak, with shortages of ground-nut oil, soap (both household and toilet), and sugar. One wonders why these basic necessities are sold so sparingly and seldom, whereas it is widely known that products have arrived but open sales are held up by certain people on the pretext of allocations to be carried out.

Illicit Commerce

The allocations made, for example one carton of soap per merchant, require the latter not to sell the quantity he has on hand, but rather to keep it for personal or family use. Because of this, the small and token quantity of the product being allocated suffices only to incite those of evil intentions to practice illicit sales, the consequences of which are borne by the consumers. It is the same with soap.

Wheat Flour

We have learned that because of this so-called allocation, a substantial number of tons of flour are being weeviled while in storage, since they are not sold at the proper time, even though it is clear the people need them. Certainly, the state companies which are holding stocks of flour will suffer more than a little damage which will have repercussions on the treasury.

More Vigilance

In certain cases, one wonders if people in Ambatondrazaka, or Lake Alaotra in general are trying to encourage the black market or to further accentuate the present economic inflation. Vigilance in tandem with justice and equity must be the rule, and competence in those who are responsible for management must also be determined by the function(s) which they carry out in order not to hurt the masses. A word to the wise is sufficient.

MEASURES ADVOCATED AGAINST MARKET SPECULATORS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Aug 81 p 10

[Article by Antonio Souto: "Aren't They Going Too Far?"]

[Excerpts] The decrease in prices of certain kinds of fresh produce was boycotted by a huge number of traders. especially those concentrated in markets or connected to these as middlemen. As we stressed yesterday, this attitude clearly reveals the characteristic behavior of a parasitic class, of the "small market bourgeoisie."

It is really not the first time this happens. The behavior of these traders was somehow expected. However, the present situation denotes both a qualitiative and a quantitative increase of this class, this parasitic group.

If a number of examples have appeared, in our revolution, of the fact that the class struggle does not disappear in the construction of socialism and that new class contradictions emerge, these traders' behavior is typical of this.

The power of the worker-peasant alliance through its state apparatus brought about a price drop of some goods that are essential to the population. Because the reason for abundant supplies of these consumer goods was approaching, a drop in price was necessary to achieve the objectives of their production.

It was imperative that the population benefit from the existence of these products. For the majority--the workers--to consume larger quantities of them, prices had to become more affordable.

If a price drop had not been ordered, only a small segment of the population would have benefited from the seasonal abundance. Otherwise, a large part of these products would have probably deteriorated, in the fields or in warehouses.

However, speculators do not see things this way. The only aim of this "market bourgeoisie" is to achieve the greatest possible margin of profit.

The new prices restricted their speculative activities. This is the reason why they resorted to various forms of boycott and created other circuits for marketing.

We have already mentioned that this was, somehow, not unexpected. It was not difficult to predict that "our" bourgeoisie would react this way. One glance at the realities of our society suffices.

A large area of our economy is still functioning under the capitalist system, and capitalist laws are still predominant.

Its class instinct, social practice and everyday realities let this bourgeoisie know that the amount of available products, the total value of consumer goods n the market is, at present, inferior to the total value of the money in circulation. In other words, our purchasing power exceeds the availability of goods.

Under these circumstances, in a country where power does not belong to the workers, the alternative would be to let prices rise to the point where a "natural" balance is struck between the total value of goods available on the market and the corresponding amount of money in the hands of the population. This is what economists call the balance between supply and demand.

This balance, achieved at the cost of a price rise, would mean that a large part of the population would have no access to a vast variety of products. These would exist on the market, but only a few would be able to afford them.

In a people's state such as ours, prices are controlled so that everyone should always be able to have the minimum. In the case of an area of free trade such as fresh produce, this is contradictory, because capitalist economic laws function independently of our will, which is expressed in the price measures adopted.

These principles on Mozambique's economic and social realities, when applied to the intricate and narrow laws of markets, mean that "our" bourgeoisie is finding an alternative to the price drop.

These bourgeois know that there is always money in the hands of a few who are able to pay speculative prices. They know that it is not advantageous to sell products at the new prices on the market, when they can do it on the "black market." And this is what they did, this is what they are doing.

But they are also doing this in an increasingly flagrant, troubling manner.

What they are doing constitutes, among other things, an aggravation of the lack of balance between the value of goods and the salary basis, between supply and demand. As for themselves, as a parasitic class, they are accumulating more and more profits. They do not produce anthing, but the less they work, the more they earn. The more they earn, the more they can buy, the more powerful they become.

An important point is that never so far have we witnessed the presence of so many traders in our cities. Thus, sellers are increasing and producers are decreasing, but all of them are consumers. Therefore production is never enough to cover consumption, opening the way to speculation, and parasitic classes double in number and in power. The interests of those who work and produce clash with the increasing power of those who continue to consume without producing....

Measures must be taken. We do not live in a police state. We reject violence as a solution for certain contradictions.

However, we do live in a country that reject underdevelopment. To practice trade as is now happening with fresh produce is to accept underdevelopment. It is to accept that underdevelopment should succeed in putting down stronger and stronger roots. It is to accept that parasitism should continue and bar the way to the construction of socialism.

There are aspects of underdevelopment that cannot be changed for at least a decade. However, we do not believe that this is the case here, and acceptance of it would mean passivity, it would mean that we are ignoring the directives of the organizational and political offensive.

A variety of measures are available. Sources close to the sector assure us, for instance, that correct distribution of the products to the population could be accomplished much better by reducing the number of sellers to one-third of present figures. They assure us that better hygiene and better manners would help. Above all, the people would have a chance of exerting better control.

Toward this end, it would be sufficient to award licenses only to those who indeed know how to work.

These sources assure us that there will be more trade and less speculation. We believe this is self-evident. There are also other measures. However, something should be done soon. What is at stake here is to ensure victory over underdevelopment and the triumph of the revolution!

EXISTING PORT FACILITIES ARE NOT FULLY USED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 6

[Article by Rodney Pinder]

[Excerpts] Maputo--Economically-straitened Mozambique has made progress towards establishing itself as a modern gateway to a new African Economic Community, but says it needs more help from its friends.

It is looking particularly towards comparatively rich Zimbabwe, for more business and a bigger gesture of confidence. But the landlocked Zimbabweans, currently sending 75 percent of their trade through South Africa, have been slower to respond than expected here.

The commercial director of Mozambique Ports and Railways (CFM), Dr Joao Vieira, went to Salisbury this month and urged Zimbabwean businessmen to make more use of Mozambique's outlets to the sea.

The ports of Maputo, Beira and Nacala could handle four times as much goods for Zimbabwe as they were getting, he said.

In his office on Maputo's waterfront, Ports and Surface Transport Minister Mr Alcantara Santos said that over the past six years the ministry had bought 77 new locomotives, 200 forklift trucks for cargo handling, pilot boats, mobile cranes and 120 railway wagons.

A further 650 wagons were on order, he said.

Mozambique received a powerful boost with the creation a year ago of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC).

A new container terminal is planned for Nacala at an estimated cost of US $27 000 000, to make it a central container port for East Africa. A US $66 000 000 coal terminal is due for Maputo.

Trade with Malawi will be helped by rehabilitation of a 615 km railway from Nacala, a line which the Mozambicans say is in extremely poor condition for all but 77 km.

The British Government is giving Mozambique US $23 000 000 towards rehabilitating and upgrading the line from Zimbabwe to Beira, which was poorly built in the 1920s.

New terminals are being built at Beira for tankers and Roll-On-Roll-Off (Ro-Ro) container ships. Once the Beira-Zimbabwe oil pipeline is back in use--planned for the end of this year--Mozambique hopes to be handling 58 tankers a year, discharging 5 000 tonnes a day.

The Mozambique News Agency (AIM) reports that when the new Ro-Ro terminal is completed Beira will be able to handle 5 000 000 tonnes of cargo a year. It trans-shipped 1,6 million tonnes in 1980.

Mozambique's Ports and Transport Ministry is also struggling with inadequate human resources. Mr Santos said skilled labour was lacking at all levels, from management to the labour force. Expatriates, mainly from India, were being employed until Mozambicans could be trained.

Western sources say they believe it will take Mozambique until the end of the decade to fully establish itself as a major regional alternative to South Africa for trade routes to the sea.

At the moment, they said, the Mozambican gateway is reasonably open--but much potential custom appeared to be looking the other way.

They said Maputo was working at 60 percent of its current potential and Beira at 50 percent and that the railway line from Zimbabwe to Beira was empty for three-quarters of the time.

Dr Santos said he did not expect Zimbabwe to transform its trading patterns overnight. He recognised that Zimbabwe was suffering a shortage of locomotives.

But some sources close to Mozambique's ruling Frelimo party question whether Zimbabwe's mainly white business community is making sufficient effort to cut the apron strings binding it to South Africa, despite constant urgings from their government which is deeply committed to the idea of regional independence.

"We simply cannot understand why a major turn-around has not happened," one source commented.

Transport sources in Salisbury say some shippers fear attacks on the railways by Mozambican rebels, said by diplomats to be sponsored by South Africa.

But the Mozambicans argue--and Western intelligence sources confirm--that the rebels have so far paid scant attention to the Zimbabwe-Mozambique lines. "These so-called attacks--they are myths," one European diplomat declared.--Reuter

MORE DUTY-FREE SHOPS PLANNED DESPITE PROTESTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 31

[Text]

IN MOZAMBIQUE, like several other socialist countries, duty-free shops are not confined just to airports but can be found in most major cities helping to mobilize the scattered foreign exchange in the country.

International travellers are familiar with duty-free shops. Here they can stock-up on cigarettes, alcohol, perfumes and other imported luxury items free of heavy government taxation.

Notwithstanding the big advantages these shops give to international consumers, they are particularly important in capturing valuable foreign exchange since goods must be bought in the traditional hard currencies — deutschmarks, dollars, francs and yen — a major advantage for hard-pressed economies like Mozambique's.

Nine duty-free shops, called "lojas francas", assist the Mozambican economy by separating expatriates from their foreign currency. Four are in the capital, Maputo, two in Beira, and one each in Nampula, Quelimane and Tete.

Mozambique's lojas francas are stocked with imported foodstuffs, watches, electronic appliances and instruments, clothes, medicines and sometimes cars. But in many cases, these goods can be two and three times their normal price. Nonetheless, the lojas do good business because goods found there are often unavailable elsewhere in the country.

The lojas francas are successors to the "diplomatic supermarkets" that were set up soon after independence. The lojas francas came into existence in 1978, after the Ministry of Commerce and Industry abolished the "supermarkets".

One of the main reasons that prompted the creation of the lojas was the government's increasing difficulty in importing consumer goods. By the late 1977, the situation had become critical, forcing wine shops and restaurants to close their doors.

At the same time, the expatriate population has been increasing and sending out large amounts of foreign exchange: they have been allowed to send up to 45 percent of their earnings overseas through open accounts held with the Central Bank of Mozambique.

CRITICISM

Since their establishment, the lojas francas have been helping to stem the hard currency flow, by inducing expatriates to spend their money in the country. However, critics complain that these shops benefit only the expatriate community since they are the only ones with foreign currency. In addition, they note that expatriates are often able to buy basic goods at the lojas which are in short supply to the general population like sugar and rice, avoiding long and frustrating waits on shop queues.

Sensitive to these sentiments, the Government plans to establish three special supermarkets in Maputo to make available rare commodities albeit at higher prices than at regular shops. Expatriates will not be able to shop in these supermarkets.

The first special supermarket was opened on December 29 last year to allow the people to buy alcohol for the New Year celebrations. People were said to have formed queues as early as 3 p.m. although shops were not to open until 9 a.m. Worse still, prices were said to have been so high that many who waited went away frustrated. Observers are optimistic that the new shops will not repeat that experience.

Indeed, one source sympathetic to the Government argued that all developing countries are forced into making frustrating compromises for the sake of maintaining a technically vital expatriate population. In even the most advanced developing countries, expatriates who are usually from highly educated and high-income backgrounds, get advantages which cannot be provided yet on a broad scale to the general population.

Moreover, valuable foreign exchange "captured" through the lojas helps the government with its national development efforts.

Meanwhile, Mozambique's lojas francas continue their work of redistributing internationally-derived incomes. And the Government plans to add more such shops soon. — APS.

DIFFICULT AFTERMATH OF POOR RICE HARVEST

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 2

[Excerpt]

MOZAMBICANS were warned this weekend that a failure by the state-owned Limpopo agro-industrial complex in Gaza province to meet a production target of 44 000 tonnes of rice would mean people would have to tighten their belts, AIM, the official news agency, reported here yesterday.

The complex, CAIL, which is the country's largest state-owned farm, comprising 17 000 ha of which 90 percent is devoted to rice, produced 25 000 tonnes of rice this harvest, only 55 percent of its target.

Speaking at the complex at the weekend, Frelimo party secretary, Mr Marcelino Dos Santos, said that "this crisis is going to force the Mozambican people to tighten their belts.

"We have a choice. We either eat 19 000 tonnes less of rice and tighten our belts, or we spend a lot of foreign exchange in importing rice, instead of importing the other things we need."

He blamed "South African sabotage" as a contributing factor, plus spare parts not arriving in time and poor production. But he admitted that the main reasons were internal.

"We are the guilty ones," Mr Dos Santos was quoted as saying. "Among us there are people who don't understand their responsibility for the work being carried out."

He said the internal organisation of CAIL was largely to blame, and ordered that the management's report be referred back for redrafting.

MEDICAL SERVICES ARE REPORTEDLY ON BRINK OF CRISIS

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 27 Jul 81 p 5

[Article by Brian Jones: "Medical Services In A Crisis"]

[Text] Health services in South-West are undergoing a crisis and prominent physicians in Windhoek ascribed this to the ethnic-based provision of services.

There is a serious shortage of doctors and nurses, a high occurrence of certain diseases and a markedly high death rate for black infants in particular.

Doctors confirmed that patients are denied treatment because there are insufficient medical personnel. Furthermore medical standards in the country have gone down disturbingly.

According to Dr Kenneth Abrahams, SWA has 152 practicing physicians resulting in a doctor-patient ratio of 1.8 to 10,000. Compared with countries such as Israel and Sweden where the ratio is 1 doctor per 700 patients, the precarious situation stands out clearly.

In all of SWA there are only 16 dentists and 10 of those are in Windhoek practicing. Dr W.E. Birkenstock, president of the South-West branch of the SA medical association said that were it not for the army doctors here the picture would be even bleaker.

One of the most critical shortages is of specialists. SWA has to depend on visiting specialists.

Conflict

Dr Birkenstock alluded to the conflict between doctors, officials and politicians in charge of SWA's health services.

"Over the years we've had problems with administrative matters and this has steadily and surely worsened to the point that we are now faced with a general crisis," Dr Birkenstock told the annual meeting of the medical association.

The gap between the medical standards maintained in SWA and those of other institutions world-wide is constantly widening. "Visiting physicians are stunned by the conditions, standards and accommodations we have here."

Shortage

The White administration now has a shortage of 170 nurses in SWA. In Windhoek's public hospitals alone there is a shortage of 92 nurses while only half of the 220 beds can be used. Some rooms had to be closed.

Despite the severe shortage, the administration opened a R22.6 million wing with 600 beds. In Keetmanshoop a new hospital was recently constructed at a cost of R22 million to replace the existing hopsital with its 32 beds. Meanwhile they are short 5 nurses. The new hospital has 160 beds.

At the same time any negative reports on the situation are being labeled as unrealistic by Eben van Zijl, MEC for health services.

He said patients still have not been turned away because of a shortage of beds. In 1980 only 69.89 percent of hospital beds were occupied. Van Zijl countered the charge that there were not enough nurses to handle 126 of the 220 beds, claiming it was not unrealistic.

Complications

"The administration realizes that the move to the new wing will entail more complications than normal although all personnel in the old hospital will be transferred to the new section," stated van Zijl.

Meanwhile it was reported that recently 17 black and brown nurses were hired at the public hospital to lighten the work load of its personnel.

A coordinating committee has now been set up to study the question of decentralizing medical services. Before long a commission is also to be appointed by the AG to launch a study of problems in the country's health services.

Bushmen

Dr Abrahams released further statistics to clarify the crisis situation. He stated that official figures indicate that 6 of every 1000 blacks are afflicted with tuberculosis, but a more realistic figure is between 18 and 24 out of every 1000.

Sampling in Kavango and among the Bushmen reveal that 25 percent of them are afflicted with TB. Conversely, among whites the number is practically nil.

Approximately 10 percent of the population of Kavango suffer from venereal diseases. In Swakopmund about 4 percent and in Windhoek about 5 percent of the black population has VD.

Deaths among black and colored infants are an absolute scandal, said Dr Abrahams. No fewer than 145 of every 1000 colored infants die before the age of one. Among blacks the figure is 163 of every 1000. On the other hand only 21.6 white infants out of every 1000 die before they reach the age of one.

The situation is further explained by the allocation of functions between the central administration and the second tier government.

Each ethnic group in the country has to see to its own medical services. But only the whites, Damaras, Wambos, Kavangos and Caprivians have an infrastructure that can accommodate such services.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is supposed to provide the same services to coloreds, Namas, Hereros, Bushmen and Basters. But it is in no position to do so and so the services are performed on an agency basis by the white administration.

Disunity

The system leads to unnecessary duplication of effort and a much better job can be done through a single organization. Ms Annchen Parkhouse, former matron of Windhoek's public hospitals said that health services were "hopelessly fragmented."

The minister for health, Dr Ben Africa, said the ethnic governments should leave health to the central government. And the medical profession should not become snared in race-issues, he said.

Money

"The allocation of services naturally means an allocation of money and the services of experts. If one of the ethnic governments plans to provide sophisticated service that service has to be multiplied so as to be available also to the other governments," Dr Birkenstock declared.

Physicians believe the situation cannot drag on much longer like this. Most problems occur between the central government and the second tier government and no one is prepared to assume the responsibility.

The result is that nothing is achieved.

Disarray

In conjunction with the ethnic allocation of duties, Dr Abrahams alluded to Rehoboth where the Baster government provides services to all races. But each ethnic group has to pay the Rehoboth government a certain amount. This leads to disarray and bureaucratic inefficiency, said Dr Abrahams.

The ethnic basis molding health services has also meant that the Katutura hospital is coming apart at the seams while white public hospitals are only half-filled.

NEW FIGURES SHOW CONSUMERS STAYING AHEAD OF INFLATION

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 27 Jul 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Elretha Streicher: "The Rich Are Now Living Better"]

[Summary] Figures obtained from the Department of Finance indicate that consumers in SWA have more disposable income this year "than last year and this has been the trend over the past five years in SWA." Wages and salaries "in 1980" increased "16 percent. In the same period the consumer price index (CPI) climbed 12.5 percent" meaning that "wage and salary earners were better off by 3.5 percent." Over the five-year period 1976-1980 "the average person was better off by 10 percent." These figures notwithstanding, consumers tend to feel that the cost of living has soared and everything has grown more expensive. But "this comes from larger outlays, especially for luxury items." Consumers are living higher off the hog than previously "so there hasn't been money for savings." People on retirement and the poor, however, are not sharing in the general prosperity. Nor are unskilled workers whose "salaries have gone up, but in many instances not fast enough to keep up with higher prices." "Over the past half-year the CPI rose by 7.5 percent. This includes higher prices for dairy products, cement, building stones, and the increased rail-freight charges that took effect in April." "It is possible that at year-end the index will climb nearly 14 percent." But it is hardly likely that "the labor compensation factor will be less than last year's 16 percent, leaving the average consumer with about 2 percent more disposable income at year-end than he had at the start of the year."

PRESIDENT INSPECTS WELLS ON MARADI TOUR

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 26 Jun 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Ibrahim M. Tantan]

[Excerpt] The president of the Supreme Military Council and chief of state, Col Seyni Kountche, left Niamey yesterday for Maradi, where he spent the night.

He was welcomed at the airport by the prefect of the department of Maradi, Commander Adamou Harouna, who was accompanied by the mayor, the heads of departmental services and numerous officials of socioprofessional associations. A substantial crowd was present.

After the welcome, the chief of state and his entourage paid a visit to the site of one of the two wells recently drilled (that located not far from the airport) to resolve the chronic problem of water supply from which the town of Maradi has suffered. The visitors then inspected the site where the Samaria [group of village young people] of Maradi have drilled five wells (three of which are operational) equipped with pumps, again within the framework of resolving the water supply problem for the locality of Maradi.

Following the visit to these hydraulic infrastructure projects, technicians informed the chief of state that Maradi no longer has a water supply problem. Moreover, they told him, the town even has a surplus in this connection, to the point that the 271 cubic meters per hour (the daily output of the two wells) and the three wells commissioned sometimes cause the water tower in the town to overflow, thus causing an interruption in the pumping at certain times during the day.

Following the visit to the town's hydraulic infrastructure projects, the chief of state presided at the solemn inauguration of the bridge built over the Goulbi by the people of Maradi on the Madarounfa road. This bridge, built entirely thanks to human effort, at an estimated cost of 90.8 million CFA francs, required 4 months' effort on the part of the Samaria, tradesmen, officials and school pupils in the town to complete it. Built without a prior study, the bridge has made it possible, as the departmental prefect who gave the only address at the inauguration ceremony said, to eliminate the isolation of Madarounfa. For some time, it was necessary to travel via Nigeria in order to get from Maradi to that locality.

"This bridge is the factual evidence of the political maturity and the willingness of the people of Maradi to show that in the field of development, one must rely on himself," Commander Adamou Harouna said.

The prefect of Maradi then invited President Kountche to commission the bridge.

The chief of state and those accompanying him also visited other wells in some localities in the district of Madarounfa during the morning of that same day, including the wells at Hassou, Tongo, Tokeraoua and Yallwa. The wells which the chief of state and his entourage visited are among the 255 to be drilled by the department within the context of the 1,000 wells planned for the base regions of our country.

These are then wells in every way similar to those already tried in Liptako-Gourma. Within the framework of this drilling program, 55 wells have already been drilled by the FORACO Company in the department of Maradi. Of the 55 wells, 39 have been successfully completed and 29 of these are already equipped.

We should note that the success rate for drilling in the department of Maradi is about 70 percent. In the course of his tour of the district of Madarounfa, the chief of state also visited the dispensary under construction in Gabi and that commissioned in Inyelwa in August of 1979. The latter has not been equipped to date with furnishings or adequate technical equipment, for according to the departmental health director, this equipment was taken over by other health services. Therefore the departmental health director expressed the desire to order this equipment from FAEMETAL and the ONPPC [National Office of Pharmaceutical and Chemical Products].

REGIONAL AMBASSADORS CONFERENCE ENDS IN JIDDA

AB251205 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 24 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The closing session of the regional conference of Senegalese ambassadors in the Maghreb, the Middle East and the Arab Gulf was presided over today in Jidda by the minister of state for foreign affairs, Mr Moustapha Niasse. In his closing address, Mr Niasse paid tribute to the ambassadors in the region for their efforts to further consolidate the ties of cooperation with Senegal. He particularly mentioned Ambassador Moustapha Cisse for the remarkable manner in which the conference was organized and the hospitality accorded to the participants.

In their reports on bilateral cooperation between Senegal and their respective countries of accreditation, the ambassadors unanimously emphasized that our country is enjoying particular goodwill and great consideration in the region.

Thus, after observing that cooperation between Senegal and Algeria has been stagnant during the last few years owing to certain political contingencies, Ambassador Matar Ndiaye expressed happiness about the resumption of particularly cordial relations between Senegal and that brotherly country. Clear instructions have been issued by both parties with regard to this resumption of relations which must result in intensive exchanges, particularly in the economic and cultural fields.

Ambassador Boubakarsy particularly stressed the cultural cooperation between Senegal and Egypt where 550 Senegalese students are underoing their studies.

For his part, Ambassador Salih Ambaki underlined the constant goodwill of President Saddam Husayn and the Iraqi people toward Senegal. In this connection, the ambassador recalled the 7 August 1981 agreement by which Iraq gave Senegal a loan of $10 million, half of which is meant for the Senegalese peasants affected by drought.

Ambassador (Sati Ngoye) affirmed the determination of the Kuwaiti authorities to strengthen economic cooperation with Senegal. A number of Senegalese projects concerning livestock breeding and road and port infrastructures are being financed by Kuwait.

Ambassador Moustapha Cisse emphasized the fact that cooperation between Saudi Arabia and Senegal is going on very well in all fields. During this year alone, Saudi Arabia spent billions of CFA francs to finance Senegalese projects in many sectors.

DIOUF COMMENTS ON GAMBIA INTERVENTION

PM260911 Paris LE MATIN in French 18 Aug 81 p 9

[Interview with Senegalese President Abdou Diouf by Yves de Chazournes: "Paris Was not Keen on an Intervention on our Part"--date and place of interview not specified]

[Text] "No, I did not hesitate for one moment"--'Abdou Diouf, the young president of Senegal, sent his army into Gambia to thwart the putsch which had errupted in that small country stuck in the middle of his own without asking anyone's opinion. And yet it was the most difficult decision which he has had to make during his short career and it was also the most important event in Senegal since that country achieved independence more than 20 years ago. True, his soldiers have intervened in Lebanon and Zaire, for instance, but always in response to a request by some international organization and under the orders of a foreign commander. By launching this first operation outside its own borders, Senegal has become independent for a second time. And the population, which connects this military exploit with the long military tradition of the Senegalese sharpshooters [tiraill-eurs], had, furthermore, the opportunity to discover a new aspect of the president of the republic.

For the Marxist putsch in Gambia not only caused concern to the Senegalese for a few days but was also a trial and a test for their head of state--"You know, I spent some sleepless nights! It is difficult when you are all alone in control to send men into battle. It was only after I made the decision, that I informed some friendly countries, including France, about it." Those who suggest that Paris, which maintains a 1,300-strong contingent in Senegal, gave the green light for Senegalese intervention infuriate him. You can rather detect in his eyes a hint of regret that France has not supported his decision more vigorously--"I cannot say that they told me: 'Bravo, go ahead,' but I know that the French and the Senegalese will always stand together in any difficult situation."

In his white palace which overlooks the ocean, the tallest president of the world (2.02 m) looked like a small boy when he admitted with some reluctance that he had also telephoned former President Leopold Senghor who has been resting in Normandy. "But only after I made my decision," he insisted. Abdou Diouf, now 47, was Senghor's prime minister for 10 years.

But what was the reason for such anxiety and those sleepless nights and why did he appear so tense when addressing his people on television the other night? "Because I felt that I was getting entrapped and I knew that I would have to see this through. And also because I genuinely feared that some other countries might intervene and that the conflict might become an international one. When the rebels appealed to the Soviet Union, Guinea-Bissau and Guinea-Conakry for aid, I felt sure that those three countries would not respond. But there were others. The giant itself--Moscow--could have acted through its satellites."

And if the putschists had not disclosed their allegiance immediately, had not proclaimed from the housetops that they were Marxists and had merely overthrown their president as happens every day in Africa? "In that case I might have hesitated a little longer, but the legal prerequisites for intervention were there." (A reference to the term of the assistant treaty between the two countries).

As for whether the putsch was organized from abroad: "Yes, I feel sure that the putschists were helped and armed by a foreign country. But I have not yet been able to identify with any degree of certainty who was behind this operation."

At no time was Abdou Diouf inclined to mention Libya. "We have broken off relations with al-Qadhdhafi because he trained Senegalese nationals in his camps with a view to forming what he called his Islamic Legion."

[Question] And what about Gambia? You will not intervene there every year?

[Answer] You mean every 6 months? No, the situation must change. Senegal and Gambia must go further than integrating their security services. Much stronger organic links must be created.

[Question] In 10 or 15 years' time there may be a single country called Senegambia?

"This is in the realm of possibility," Abdou Diouf replied, smiling broadly.

PRESIDENTIAL COUNCIL DIVIDED ON MATTERS OF LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 22 Jul 81 p 6

[Text] There are mainly two trends of thinking which have come to the forefront with respect to a new system of local administration and a great deal of attention is now being paid to this. A fruitful debate on this matter is now being conducted in a positive spirit among the members of the Presidential Council.

One group of the council's members are of the opinion that recommendations on this matter must form a part of a comprehensive report on a new constitutional system, while another group is of the opinion that a report on local administration must be drafted no later than this year. The first group is saying that a new system for local administration must link up with a new constitutional order of things. Proposals with regard to this are not to be expected before the second half of next year.

Scheme of Things

Other members of the council are of the opinion that proposals about local administration must be put forward sooner and that there is no need to wait for the bigger report on the new constitutional order. They point out that the government is eager to obtain proposals about this matter, because it is at the local level that peoples' everyday life is being affected the most.

There are mainly two trends of thought on how the new scheme of things must be like at the local level.

One group is of the opinion that separate municipalities must be created for the coloreds and the Indians and that their representatives, along with those of white municipalities, must obtain seats in an all-encompassing district body for a certain geographical area. This body is to consider such things as common matters like the supply of water, power and roads.

Separate

Another group is of the opinion that few separate colored and Indian municipalities will be economically viable. The jealousy with which city councils watch over their autonomy also renders district administration difficult. In such an administration the power of the city councils will be curtailed in such a manner that the individual councils would have a say only on small domestic matters of a very local nature.

This group is of the opinion that large colored and Indian regions must form separate municipalities if they can and wish to do so and if these can be viable with certainty. In municipal areas inhabited by more than one population group consideration will have to be given in the direction of direct representation for coloreds and Indians in the existing white city councils. Coloreds and Indians who fulfill certain qualifications must be able to elect representatives to a white city council on the basis of new municipal voters rolls.

Problem

Separate residential areas will continue to exist as they do now. These neighborhoods will be divided into districts. The number of districts in each residential area will be determined by the number of enfranchised voters in the neighborhood. This would mean that coloreds and Indians who, for example, have properties amounting to a certain value could vote for representatives to the city council.

Supporters of this trend of thinking are saying that economic viability for such joint administrations will not present any great problems, because all those enfranchised will be taxed on the same basis. This will also encourage coloreds and Indians to obtain their own homes and effectively prevent the hooligan element from taking part in the local government.

Members of this group say that administrative committees have repeatedly rejected thoughts of separate municipalities. Even the colored administrative committee of Bellville-South in Capetown, one of the few which would be viable (if it could receive the taxes of the industries situated nearby), is not willing to become a separate local administration. The members have been told that Bellville-South would rather be willing to have one representative in the white city council.

Attestation

Members who advocate the idea of direct representation on a local administrative level are saying that the system of qualified enfranchisement could also be extended to provincial elections.

AMERICAN CONGRESSMEN'S PURPOSE FOR VISITING MANDELA QUESTIONED

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 23 Jul 81 p 10

[Editorial: "Nelson Mandela"]

[Text] A group of American congressmen want to visit Nelson Mandela at Robben Island and their request is now being considered by the authorities. Whether they will be much the wiser as a result of such a meeting or whether it is going to be of any significance at all is not what matters right now. The thing which must be questioned is the impudence on the part of foreign authorities to address requests of this nature to South Africa.

It is probable that Mandela's extollment, which is being so commonly practiced among radical circles, is also being passed on abroad and, of course this is due to the lack of any new fresh leadership material in radical places. Now, with regard to this, do the above mentioned congressmen want to come here to see whether Mandela could perhaps be crowned as the Mugabe of South Africa? Do they perhaps have the presumption that setting Mandela free can be a condition in the coming negotiations?

It could matter little to us whether the request to talk to Mandela will indeed be granted, but this would not change any of the realities.

The fact is that Mandela has been sentenced in accordance with accepted legal practices for the criminal deeds he perpetrated against South Africa.

Today he is at Robben Island not as a result of his political beliefs, but as a result of the deeds that his political beliefs led him to perpetrate. As such he is now paying his debt to society.

The fact that in the given circumstances foreign authorities can expect that special audiences with Mandela be arranged for them appears to us to be especially audacious.

CONFEDERATION BETTER ANTIDOTE FOR COMMUNISM THAN MAJORITY GOVERNMENT

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 22 Jul 81 p 8

[Editorial: "Honest Acknowledgement Necessary"]

[Text] In his Africa-Perspective, which appeared in DIE TRANSVALER yesterday, Mr Richard Cornwell of the Africa Institute pointed to South Africa's and to the United States' different approach to the Marxist-Soveit threat.

The Americans are inclined to regard the liberal-democratic government arrangement (with the application of the principle of majority government in the case of South Africa) as the best antidote for the spreading Russian-Communistic imperialism. On the other hand we South Africans consider that combating communism as such is enough and in this we expect the almost automatic support of the United States.

As Mr Corwell correctly noted both we and the Americans are letting ourselves in by such commitments and the result can be the collapse of Washington's present policy of "constructive involvement" with South Africa.

It is very important for us to give attention to this difference in approach, especially because the coming of the Reagan Administration in the United States offers a great opportunity for South Africa to set its international position straight.

We must be honest in acknowledging to ourselves that positive changes within South Africa are necessary in order to improve our situation in the family of nations...to our advantage. When a friendly government, such as that of the United States is at the present time, holds out the prospect of a majority government in South Africa to us, we must sketch out very clearly our counterplan for a confederation and demonstrate that this entails a more transcendent order of things for South Africa.

The best way of showing this is naturally to put into action our confederation arrangement.

OFFICIALS' FORCED RETIREMENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Nyerere has retired in the public interest three high ranking officials in Shinyanga Region and another two from the Prime Minister's Office.

Shihata reported yesterday that those retired in the public interest are: former Regional Police Commander ACP. I Omari, former Regional CID Officer SSP. M. A.N. Minja and former Regional Security Officer C. Mwashambwa.

A statement issued in Dar es Salaam said: "These leaders have been retired in the public interest in connection with problems that had recently surfaced in Shinyanga Region, leading to the appointment of a probe commission to look into the matter. The commission's findings proved that the three were involved".

The statement did not elaborate.

The two sacked from the Prime Minister's Office are: Economist Juma A.M. Wambura and District Planning Officer for Liwale, Lindi Region, K.B.J. Mpalaghasha.

The statement said Ndugu Wambura has been sacked for absconding from work and Ndugu Mpalaghasha has been removed because of excessive drinking, carelessness, given to fighting, and lack of self-respect and respect for work.

RESULTS OF BULGARIAN-TANZANIAN COOPERATION COMMISSION MEETING

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Anaclet Rwegayura]

[Text]

TANZANIA and Bulgaria have signed a new 112m/- (14 million dollar) barter protocol which will be on equal footing between the two countries for one year effective January 1982.

The protocol, signed here yesterday follows a four-day annual session of the two countries' Joint Commission for Economic, Scientific and Technical Cooperation which was held at Mount Meru Hotel since Monday.

Under the protocol, signed by the Minister for Industries, Ndugu Basil Mramba and the leader of the People's Republic of Bulgaria delegation, who is a member of the Politburo of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, the State Council and Chairman of the Bulgarian Fatherland Front, Ndugu Pencho Koubadinsky, the two countries have agreed to continue with the existing payment arrangements under their barter agreement of July 1980.

The new protocol marks a 40 percent increase in volume of trade between the two countries in comparison to the previous trade agreement ending December 31, this year.

Tanzania is to export to Bulgaria cotton, sisal, coffee, tanned leather, mica, beeswax and spices while the latter will exchange the commodities with pharmaceuticals, electrical motors and fittings, machine tools, sanitary were, castings and forgings. This, however, is not a rigid list of exchange, commission sources said.

The two sides duscussed possible solutions to problems of implementing existing bilateral projects in industrial, agricultural and mining fields. They emphasized the need to ensure expeditious implementation of a machine tools project at Moshi and the Kisarawe brick factory.

Other projects envisaged under another agreement signed at the close of the session are the establishment of a new wine processing plant in Dodoma and construction of a farm and irrigation implements factory at Mwanza.

The agreement also envisages construction of a training college for technical cadres in metal engineering industries. Details on the project are yet to be worked out.

According to Ndugu Koubadinsky, Bulgaria also intends to assist Tanzania in setting up a clay tiles factory near Arusha town and a similar one for bricks and tiles in Mbeya.

Bulgaria and Tanzania have further agreed to look into the possibility of co-operating in small scale industries, initially, with a view to setting up a ten-unit industrial estate at Bukoba in Kagera Region, Ndugu Mramba said.

Though the minister withheld further details on the proposed estate, it is understood that the estate would be the first of its kind in the country and its goods would also be exported to neighbouring countries of Uganda, Rwanda, Burundi and Zaire.

The Bukoba industrial estate units are intended to manufacture wire nails, wooden packing material, building hardware and aluminium utensils among other products.

In view of the current world economic situation, a brief statement issued at the end of the talks said, "the session emphasised the need for intensified co-operation between the two countries".

The leader of the Bulgaria delegation yesterday called on the Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, at Moshi and later flew to Dar es Salaam. The delegation is scheduled to visit the leather tannery at Morogoro today.

NBC SMALL INDUSTRY LOANS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Text]

THE National Bank of Commerce (NBC) has pledged to give loans for financing projects undertaken by small scale industries.

According to a statement issued by the NBC headquarters in Dar es Salaam yesterday, a department was recently created to serve the small industries sector of the economy.

The bank would finance up to "85 per cent of the financial needs of a project" of an industry. A small industry was defined as one whose capital does not exceed 2,000,000/-.

Quick consideration would be given to projects employing "as many persons as possible," those producing products for export, those producing export substitution or those producing raw materials for other industries.

The project, for which the loan is sought, would have to be approved by the Small Industries Development Organisation (SIDO).

A circular defining a small industry "in this context has been sent to all branches of the bank." Industries in regional seats would pay eight per cent interest, those in small towns or villages would pay 7.5 per cent.

ANTI-POACHING FUND'S ESTABLISHMENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Excerpt]

TANZANIA has launched an anti-poaching fund for rewarding groups of people acts institutions or a person who acts in the interest of wildlife conservation, it was learnt in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

The fund comes in the wake of more measures taken by the government to curb poaching. The new measures range from law amendment to the provision of modern weapons to anti-poaching squads.

Statutory regulations on the fund (the Wildlife Protection Fund Regulations, 1981) made under the Wildlife Conservation Act, 1974, were already effective according to an official of the Ministry of Natural Resources and Tourism.

The fund, he said, would facilitate effective operation of the anti-poaching squads by providing money for emergencies.

The Director of the Game Division was appointed the fund chief executive officer. The law empowers him to authorise money to purchase relevant materials and equipment for use by wildlife protection unit in anti-poaching operations.

Individuals, groups and institutions would be rewarded by the nation through the fund because now the law provides that fund money can be used to facilitate payment of rewards to:-

- Individuals who give information leading to conviction in trophy cases.
- Persons who give information leading to the recovery of government trophies, vehicles or crafts used in poaching operations.
- To facilitate payment in connection with "emergency matters" of investigation of trophy cases or any other relevant matters resulting in the recovery of trophies, vehicles or crafts used in poaching activities.

The official said a board would be appointed to oversee the utilisation of the fund.

Individuals, groups or institutions who will contribute to the elimination of isolated killings as wall as organised massacres will benefit from the fund.

NYERERE WARNS DAIRIES TO RAISE MILK OUTPUT OR FACE TAKEOVER

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Text]

PRESIDENT Nyerere yesterday warned that the government would take over dairy farms given to development corporations in Kilimanjaro Region unless the corporations raised milk production.

Mwalimu, who arrived here on Wednesday for a four-day tour, gave the warning at Gararagua dairy farm in West Kilimanjaro, run by the Kilimanjaro Uremi Corporation (KUC).

He was reacting to reports that the farm, with 496 head of cattle, produced an average of 5.8 litres per cow daily during the rainy season, falling to 3.5 litres daily during the dry season.

He said the average daily production of less than six litres per cow was too low.

"We are going to take over the farms if you don't raise the production", Mwalimu told the KUC Chairman, Ndugu J.J. Tesha, whose corporation owns four dairy farms at West Kilimanjaro nationalised in 1973.

The President was told at another farm run by the Kilimanjaro District Corporation (KIDECO) that milk production remained at 5.3 litres per cow daily on average due to draught and lack of capital investments. KIDECO runs two dairy farms.

Mwalimu said the Gararagua farm could be improved to yield more milk per cow and that the carrying capacity should be raised to one acre per cow.

"If coffee can thrive on this soil, there is no earthly reason why it (soil) should not make good pastures for dairy farming", he pointed out.

He observed that the cattle at the farm looked healthy, adding that the aim should be to feed them for more milk production rather than just for maintaining the body weight.

"A healthy cow is like a well-maintained factory. It must be fed with raw materials to make it produce", he explained.

The raw materials for milk production, he said, included good pastures additional proteinous feeds, water and veterinary care.

He said the farm management should plan production and ensure that capacity were attained. "The objective should be 15 litres per cow per day and one acre to an animal", he advised.

Mwalimu said the Gararagua farm had 150 cattle of New Zealand breed famed for high milk production. "There is no reason why you should not achieve the 15-litre target", he added.

He urged the corporation to take firm measures to improve production.

The KUC chairman blamed low milk production on the previous leadership, adding that new livestock experts had now been appointed to improve the situation.

PHASE TWO OF EEC FUNDED PROGRAM TO EXPAND COFFEE CULTIVATION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

ABOUT 29,200 hectares will be put under coffee cultivation in eight regions of Tanzania during the next five years, as part of phase two of the coffee improvement programme funded by the European Economic Community (EEC).

The Dar es Salaam office of the EEC announced yesterday that phase two, for which the community had been requested by Tanzania to provide 223.8m/-, would cost 425m/-.

The balance according to an EEC spokesman would be financed by coffee growers through the coffee levy. The arrangement was also used under phase one in which the EEC provided half the cost of 250m/-.

The spokesman said the financing proposal for the second phase was still being processed by the commission. The start-up for the phase was earlier scheduled for October this year.

The second phase will include expansion through opening new coffee farms and improvement of existing hectarage. The coffee farms to be improved are those in areas located outside the area covered under phase one, the spokesman explained.

Phase one has covered Kagera and Kilimanjaro regions and areas in Southern Tanzania highlands.

The improvement component under phase two will cover 4,900 hectares and the expansion will cover the 29,200 hectares.

A large part of the area covered under the improvement component will be in Morogoro Region. The expansion component will cover eight regions — Kagera, Mara, Kigoma, Mbeya, Ruvuma, Iringa, Tanga and Morogoro itself.

The programme aims at increasing the small-holder coffee growers from the present 270,000 to 337,000.

The total coffee production in the five years of the programme is expected to increase from the 68,000 tons of clean coffee in 1980/81 to 99,000 tons by 1990.

The major increase in the five years is expected to come from Kagera, Morogoro and Ruvuma. Very large percentage improvements from smaller base production levels are anticipated from Kigoma, Iringa and Mara regions.

ZUNA TO APPEAL TO KAUNDA TO RELEASE POLITICAL PRISONERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Zambia United Nations Association (ZUNA) is to appeal to President Kaunda to release political prisoners including the recently detained labour leaders, it was learnt in Lusaka yesterday.

ZUNA secretary-general Mr Sundie Mutambo said in a Press statement yesterday that this would be done in conformity with the articles covered in the international covenants on human rights and as optional protocol.

He added that ZUNA was to study the recent Press reports in which some detainees were quoted to have complained of torture and hunger.

Those in detention include 13 alleged coup plotters and four labour leaders.

The alleged coup plotters include prominent Lusaka lawyer Mr Edward Shamwana, former Bank of Zambia governor Mr Valentine Musakanya, former major-general Godfrey Miyanda, lawyer Mundia Sikatana, businessman Goodwin Yoram Mumba, Zambia Air Force major MacPherson Mbulo, Zambia Army colonel Patrick Mkandawire and police officer Matinanga Liswaniso.

Others are politician Deogratious Syimba, Albert Chilambe Chimbalile, driver Thomas Mulewa Mupunga and businessman Rodger Kanyembu Kambwita.

The men have since appeared in a magistrate's court charged with treason.

The detained labour leaders are Zambia Congress of Trade Unions chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba, his general secretary Mr Newstead Zimba, assistant general-secretary Mr Chitalu Sampa and Mineworkers Union of Zambia deputy chairman Mr Timothy Walamba.

Announcing the labour leaders' detention, President Kaunda accused them of instigating workers to go on strikes.

The men, who were detained together with Ndola businessman Mr Chama Chakomboka, sought to use workers to achieve their political objectives, according to the President.

The ZCTU emergency council has since demanded the immediate and unconditional release of the four men which has not been heeded by the Party and its Government.

In his statement yesterday, Mr Mutambo said ZUNA wanted those detained to be released or brought before the courts of law or an independent tribunal without further delay.

MINISTER SAYS REPORT OF MUMPANSHYA COMMISSION FALSE

"Record Must Be Set Straight," Chuula

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE report of the Mumpanshya commission of inquiry into Zambia Railways is false, a Government minister has said.

Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula said in Lusaka yesterday that all senior lawyers in the Government had agreed it was a mistake to publish the report because it made allegations which could not be supported by facts.

"But there were some forces demanding the publication of the report even when they knew there was no substance in it. That is why the Government is in difficulties."

Asked in what capacity he was speaking, he said as an individual and a minister of Government. He was fighting against his conscience to allow publication of falsehoods about some people and let it go on unchecked.

"Somebody had to put the record straight," he said.

Mr Chuula was reacting to the insistence by Member of the Central Committee for the Central Province Mr Pius Kasutu that authorities should clear Mr Basil Monze from his implications in the Mumpanshya report or nullify his appointment as Zambia Railways general manager.

"But as far as I am concerned, the Government cannot exonerate or clear anybody on false allegations. There is nothing to clear them about. The report contains false scandalous allegations on any individual the commissioners cared to mention.

"The allegations are not even worth the paper they were printed on."

He said considering the continued publicity about those implicated, he was forced to say that one must be fair to the community by actually stating what the problem was rather than making superficial statements which were not supported by facts.

The reason why these allegations were made could only be explained by the people who made them.

"But the victims of those allegations continue to suffer indignity."

He recalled that in reply to a question in Parliament sometime back, it was made clear that Mr Bartholomew Mwale had been sent back to Zambia Railways as police commandant to investigate every allegation "full time" with the help of Zambia Police.

"But now he is the commandant at Lusaka division, proving that there is nothing to be investigated."

Asked if what he was saying was the point of view of the Government, Mr Chuula said a fact was a fact and could not be the subject of a point of view.

What the commissioners had done was like taking a piece of mud, throw it on a clear wall and leave it there without any explanation.

"The record must be put straight and I have done so because there does not seem to be anybody prepared to do so."

He was fed up of reading things which had no substance but were injuring others.

"I am saying this because I feel I have a duty to clear the air, after all I am a minister of Government."

In June last year, Mr Chuula said punishing people for unproven allegations contained in inquiry reports would be tantamount to "jungle law".

The best way to curb corruption in the nation was by strengthening existing legislation against the practice, he said.

Mr Chuula said this when he reacted to a suggestion by Legal Affairs Minister of State and Solicitor-General Mr Ludwig Sondashi who was then legal affairs parliamentary secretary that President Kaunda should be given more powers to deal with corrupt leaders.

Mr Sondashi said then that the President had powers to appoint commissions of inquiry into allegations of corruption but he had failed to act over the reports because his powers were limited when it came to disciplinary measures.

Mr Sondashi cited the inquiry reports on emeralds mining and Zambia Railways where the President would not act despite serious charges against culprits.

But Mr Chuula said: "The only thing any nation can survive on is respect for truth." Suggestions that people mentioned in inquiry reports should be punished whether the allegations were true or not could never be accepted by the people of Zambia, he said.

"Politics is a struggle for power. Anybody can go anywhere and say anything about a rival."

The commission of inquiry was set up by President Kaunda in August 1977 to probe the affairs of Zambia Railways following allegations of tribalism, corruption, nepotism, thefts and the dismissal of railways police commandant Mr Bartholomew Mwale.

Receiving the report on April 5, 1978 President Kaunda said he would make known the findings after studying the report.

Commission chairman Mr Joshua Mumpanshya who was minister of State for Power, Transport and Communications now Eastern Province Central Committee Member, said his team had done everything possible to get the truth from the public and officials of Zambia Railways and that no stone was left unturned during the inquiry.

In a TV interview on October 26, 1979, President Kaunda said culprits in the Mumpanshya report would be fired, others prosecuted while non-Zambians would be deported.

When contacted for a comment yesterday evening Mr Mumpanshya told the Times from his home in Chipata: "Please don't disturb me I am sick and I am resting in bed."

Matter Must Not Be Left to Rest

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE report of the Mumpanshya commission of inquiry into Zambia Railways which was belatedly released in 1979 is not only "dud" but also false!

So says none other than Minister of State for Decentralisation in the Prime Minister's Office Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula, an eminent lawyer who was at one time minister of Legal Affairs and attorney-general.

If what he says is the Government's official view now, we do not see how Zambia's private law practitioners should not dance in the streets in celebration for the bonanzas likely to come from the Government. Many people may sue for damages.

The Mumpanshya report which was released in October 1979 by Mr Basil Monze, who was then permanent secretary in the Ministry of Power, Transport and Communications and chairman of the Zambia

Railways board of directors and now Zambia Railways general manager, had been considered a factual and in-depth document.

Now it is not. Things become not only curiouser but also more suspicious.

The commission was first appointed by Mr Paul Lusaka as minister on August 23, 1977 and a week later President Kaunda formalised it under the Inquiries Act.

Besides Mr Mumpanshya, who is Member of the Central Committee in the Eastern Province, the other commissioners are both prominent citizens — Mr Charles Manyema and Mr B.L. Mkandah.

Today a minister in the Government says what they did "is not worth the paper it is written on".

The hearings of the inquiry were held publicly and people who were mentioned or aggrieved had the right to deny the allegations against them.

In fact the first version of the report was withdrawn because it cited people by name and was replaced by one where haphazard letters were used.

Even over the second version some people, in the railway system itself and others outside who felt they had been defamed, started legal action against the State.

It will be interesting to read the list of law firms which nearly jumped on the bandwagon then and compare it with those which will be interested now that the Government has disowned its own work.

Why has it taken the Government four years since Mr Mumpanshya was asked to carry out such a costly inquiry to realise its mistake?

Do the people who advise the Government have the nation at heart? We doubt. Because if they had they would not let such things go through.

We have had commissions of inquiry before and after Mumpanshya. There was the one-man Whelan report in 1966, the one-party state Chona report, the Mwanakatwe report and the Muchangwe report to mention a few.

These were accompanied by White Papers in which the Government accepted or rejected parts of the reports.

Why was this not done in the case of the Mumpanshya findings? The inference is that the Government had accepted it in toto and therefore there was no need for a White Paper.

Or else it will need a lot of explaining and we hope Parliament, which has gone into indefinite recess after only two weeks of sitting, will not leave the matter to rest.

Chilula Reportedly "Mixed-Up"

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Dan Mwale and Richard Theo]

[Excerpt] MINISTER of State for Decentralisation Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula's views on the controversial Mumpanshya report do not represent Government opinion, according to the TIMES investigations yesterday.

Mr Chuula's views are in sharp conflict with the Government's accepted principle of collective responsibility — which says once a decision is adopted by the Cabinet no Government minister should recant.

The Mumpanshya report, which has highlighted irregularities in Zambia Railways, was accepted in a White Paper published in February, 1980 and released by the secretary to the Cabinet Mr Evans Willima the same month.

Official Government sources said yesterday that Mr Chuula's surprise remarks were off-side. Mr Chuula has described the report as false.

He said all senior lawyers in the Government had agreed that it was a mistake to publish the commission findings because the allegations could not be supported by facts.

"It is unbelievable that the entire commission can make false allegations," said our sources who are at ministerial level within the Government.

The commission's findings were supported by the Cabinet, according to records at the High Court which show that those implicated in the scandal could not sue since the document is a privileged one.

The High Court affidavit burying any possible suit against the Government was signed by Mr Willima, confirming that the report was endorsed by the entire Cabinet — this making it an official document.

Gone ahead

The document was accepted by State House. Subsequent investigations into Zambia Railways by the Parastatal Parliamentary Committee confirmed that irregularities contained in the report were true.

The sources said the Director of Public Prosecutions Mr Joshua Simuziya had not gone ahead with court proceedings against the culprits mentioned in the report because of lack of corroborated evidence in some of the cases.

"But this does not mean that what was brought out in the report cannot be subject to administrative action. The report showed that there had been glaring abuses of power and corruption within the system."

They accused Mr Chuula of being "mixed-up" over the real issues at stake — whether or not it was possible to bring successful legal prosecutions against the culprits or whether administrative action could not be taken against them.

"I say and insist that there is a basis for administrative action to be taken against all those implicated in the report," one source said.

DVV TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO ZAEA LITERACY PROGRAMS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 18 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

THE Germany Adult Education Association (DVV) will provide about K32,000 to the Zambia Adult Education Association (ZAEA) for literacy programmes and homecraft centres.

ZAEA secretary Mr Cornwell Lwara said in Lusaka yesterday that the assistance from DVV would be provided to his association in form of money and equipment for homecraft centres over a three year period, between this year and 1983.

Mr Lwara said apart from running literacy programmes, the association decided to establish carpentry, woodwork and sewing workshops to assist school leavers in need of employment.

"In 1978, we approached the DVV asking for K39,650 to be used for buying sewing machines, administration, carpentry and woodwork tools.

"After long discussions and consultations, the organisation agreed but suggested to us that the aid should be spread covering three years, he said.

Mr Lwara said his association had to ask for assistance because of its desire to grow fast through the part time evening classes and the need to develop skills training centres.

So far, DVV had provided K3,000 to the association and the rest of the equipment and machinery to set up workshops would be coming in the country soon, he explained.

Mr Lwara however complained that while the association had been in existence since 1968, the response to assist it from the public and the government had been poor.

"Even now, the allocation from the government to the Department of continuing Education is peanuts," Mr Lwara said.

To publicise the work of the association and make it popular, the ZAEA is to launch a newsletter in conjunction with the University of Zambia (UNZA) Centre for Continuing Education.

Mr Lwara also said following the election of Mr Emmanuel Chalabesa, who was also ZAEA chairman, to the chairmanship of Africa Adult Education Association in Swaziland last year, the association has been battling to get observer status at the Organisation of African Unity Conferences.

Mr Lwara appealed to the public interested in promoting literacy programmes and assisting school leavers to come forward and join the association.

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 18 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] The Press must continue exposing the shortcomings of the Party and its Government so that authorities can take the necessary remedial measures.

"It is through such ways that the media can serve as an important and vital instrument of economic and social progress," Permanent Secretary for Information and Broadcasting Services, Mr Edward Lubinda said yesterda.

He was speaking at the Natural Resources, Development College (NRDC) in Lusaka when he opened a one-month basic journalism course jointly organised by the Zambian Government and the German Democratic Republic (GDR).

In a speech read on his behalf by Assistant Secretary in the Ministry, Mr Otto Vibetti, the Permanent Secretary said the Government attached great importance to journalism training in order to improve the efficiency of the mass media.

An effective system of news dissemination was vital because people in all parts of the country must be enlightened on the various aspects of the Government's social and economic programmes.

In this way, people could participate and contribute meaningfully towards the development of the economy.

"Similarly, effective system of news media is like to act as an objective reflecting mirror of any aspects in the economic policy of a country that might have a tendency to either lower or enhance the basic living standards of the people," he said.

Once alerted, authorities could then prescribe the correct remedies to rectify the mistakes, Mr Lubinda said.

He added that as far as Zambia's economic development was concerned, the country appreciated the role journalists have played in its advancement.

He told the participants drawn from the Zambia News Agency [ZANA], Zambian Information Service (ZIS) and Zambia Broadcasting Services (ZBS) that farmers had been motivated to work harder because the mass media had publicised the Lima and operation food programmes and other agricultural ventures.

"Journalists have publicised the importance of these two programmes for the development of our economy by relaying to the Zambian populace guidelines which emanate from the Party and Government leadership.

"In addition, detailed and educative articles in both the print and broadcast media have gone further to enlighten the masses on the great need to increase our agricultural output."

Farmers were now better educated about the importance of the agricultural industry and its contribution to the development of the country's economy.

They were now equipped with better farming methods and techniques which they diligently applied to their work to boost production.

Mr Lubinda also noted that the Press effectively propagated the decentralised system of local government thereby educating the people on its importance.

This reflected the high calibre of journalists, he said, and added that the Government would always strive to provide better training facilities locally and abroad to ensure high standards were maintained.

He paid tribute to the GDR for making available its lecturers and said Zambia looked forward to further cooperation and strengthening of the bonds of friendship.

And the GDR ambassador to Zambia, Mr Eric Horst Koehler, said the course was a further sign of the growing bilateral relations.

In a speech read on his behalf by the embassy press attache Mr Lutz Poppe, the ambassador said relations had blossomed because both countries stood for peace and social progress.

POLITICAL SECRETARY SIKOTA RAPS SENIOR OFFICIALS AT IPD

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

PROVINCIAL political secretary at the Department of Industrial Participatory Democracy (IPD) Mr Aggrey Sikota has accused senior civil servants there of having "hijacked" the department and making it their personal property.

Mr Sikota charged yesterday that the department had lost sight of its aims and objectives and needed direction.

Since he was transferred there nine months ago, his job had not been clearly defined and whatever programmes he had undertaken were out of his own initiative.

He said instead of informing top officials about what was going on, some top officers executed programmes on their own when in fact he was supposed to check the programmes before they were taken to the Member of the Central Committee in charge of the department Mr Shadreck Soko.

He said these civil servants made speeches without authority from the top and these were the speeches which now put the department into ridicule.

"I am not told when these civil servants go to meetings and I only read about the statements they make in the Press."

He regretted that the department had lost its direction and was creating conflict between workers, the management and unions instead of bringing them together.

"We are not there to quarrel with the labour movement, the workers, the managements or the Ministry of Labour and Social Services. We are there to supplement their work," he said.

The IPD was supposed to be a silent and subtle instrument of the Ministry of Labour and Social Services.

It was wrong for the department to denounce managements because it would find itself in a difficult position to discuss issues with the same managements.

PRAISE OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE Department of Technical Education and Vocational Training has commended the Canadian government for its contribution to Zambia's human and national development.

Director of the department Mr Richard Lubasi said Canada had supplied staff for his organisation and drawn up original plans for the technical training programme.

"Canada has over the years supplied close to 70 lecturers and administrators, provided architectural services for the building of new colleges, notably the Zambia Institute of Technology".

Mr Lubasi said Canada had also provided equipment for about 100 Zambians to study abroad.

He said this yesterday when he bid farewell to seven students who left for study in Canada.

Although the staff at the department's seven trades training institutes was now about 90 per cent Zambianised, its colleges still lagged behind in this field.

"Hence the Canadian International Development Agency assistance has been recently focussed on the Zambia Institute of Technology staff development programme.

"About 40 Zambians have been recruited and sent to Canada for further training since 1977. This will give that college a large nucleus of well-trained Zambian staff within two or three years", he said.

PUBLIC EXPECTS UNZA ALLOCATIONS TO BE PROPERLY CONTROLLED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Aug 81 p 4

[Text]

THIRD World countries have had the disadvantage of suffering from the dearth of experts in key fields of economic development.

In the end expatriates have become experts; but that is not the point of focus.

One of the most crucial areas of staffing has been accounting and financial control. Up to now the majority of financial controllers and chief accountants are aliens.

The reality to be faced is that this is a result of a reality which, in simple parlance is that we do not have enough qualified accountants and auditors around.

In fact, as we focus, we realise that even the Government has had a lot of problems producing annual departmental reports in time to be tabled before the national assembly as required by law.

Not until last November was the office of the Auditor General upgraded, given more staff and adequate funds for the exacting functions allocated to it.

However, unfortunate it may be, the fact remains that in Third World countries development is supposed to be generated by availability of funds. Of course, people like Julius Nyerere are on record as declaring that there must be money before development; but that is another story.

Controllers

If then money is taken to be crucial to the successful execution of development programmes it follows that the nation should have adequate auditors and financial controllers to ensure that allocated funds are properly utilised.

During the last two weeks national focus has been on the financial records of the University of Zambia.

For all practical purposes let it be established that the university was built after every villager was made to pay a tickey for each child in school.

The University of Zambia was, therefore, built out of the contributions of the wretched of the earth. Wretched just because they are poor, and must pay even in blood for those who will eventually live more blissfully.

Since then the national institution has been getting a generous allocation from the national till towards meeting its vital obligations to this country.

This year the tax payer has been made to contribute K18.2 million for the Lusaka campus, K1 million for Ndola as compared to K12 million authorised to UNZA by the National Assembly last year.

In addition K2 million has been provided for capital projects in Lusaka, K1 million in Ndola and K10,000 for the veterinary school.

The university must pay K6 million in staff salaries for the teachers of our future technocrats of the country. More than anything else that underlines the importance the Government attaches to the leading institution of learning.

It is only logical for the general public to expect that these monies given to UNZA are properly controlled.

In any case if such an institution which should not be below absolute intellectual honesty and accountability falters: then what more should we expect from "lesser institutions?"

As we focus we learn that the University of Zambia was summoned before the Parliamentary Public Accounts Committee in 1977 to explain why their books could not be reconciled.

A report by external auditors prepared on April 29 this year — more than three years later — says the accounts are still not properly maintained. Something must be wrong.

The relevant part of the report of the auditors, for the ultimate benefit of the readers says:

The university's accounting records have been continuously in arrears and, in our opinion, have not been properly maintained.

The university has not maintained adequate records in respect of fixed assets and a physical inventory of these assets has not been carried out for several years.

As a result we have been unable to:

(a) Verify the existence of fixed assets amounting to K8,434,838 and;

(b) Relate the title deeds held by the university to the cost of leasehold land and buildings shown in the accounts at K30,354,568.

We have been unable to determine whether:

(a) The total for debtors and prepayments shown in the balance sheet at K2,741,583 is complete and that amounts included therein at K1,036,142 are recoverable and;

(b) The total creditors and accruals shown in the balance sheet at K2,285,458 is complete and that amounts included there in at K1,466,264 are accurate.

Opinion

Subject to the matters referred to in paragraphs 2 to 4 above in our opinion the accounts give a true and fair view of the state of affairs of the university at 31st December, 1978 and of its income and expenditure and source and disposition of funds for the year then ended?

Can't something be done about such a state of affairs involving money from poor people which eventually pay for those to be the privileged few of society?

At this point we decide to go out of focus.

CHAFWA TO RECOMMEND JOB CATEGORIES EXCLUDING EXPATRIATES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Aug 81 p 5

[Text] CHAIRMAN of the Zambianisation committee Mr John Chafwa is to recommend to the Government some job categories for which expatriates would not be considered.

He told a labour officers' meeting at the President's Citizenship College near Kabwe to send a list of such jobs to him from their respective stations.

Mr Chafwa who is Minister of State for Labour and Social Services, said this when he addressed the labour officers on the role of his committee on Tuesday.

The "guiding principle" in excluding expatriates from some jobs would be the availability of suitably qualified and competent local personnel.

"I am currently thinking of phasing out certain jobs for which expatriate applicants are presently considered. I hope you will identify such jobs at this conference so that on your return, you could submit your recommendations to me."

Indicate

In their recommendations, the labour officers should first know the citizenship of all employees of any company they wished to examine. This information should be counter-checked with works councils, union officials, Party leaders and by examining details on national registration cards.

"In fact, various organisational charts should indicate the citizenship status of an incumbent employee.

"You should demand proof of qualifications from expatriates to help you decide which posts should be Zambianised now or later," he said.

After deciding what jobs should be Zambianised, labour officers should then inform the Immigration Department immediately.

"The biggest weapon you have is an employment permit which cannot be issued or renewed. All cases you cannot handle should be referred to me," he said.

Mr Chafwa called on the conference which ends today to explore the possibility of introducing Zambianisation laws, saying there was need to make a follow-up to these laws which were made between 1969 and 1970.

Problem

Mr Chafwa catalogued operational problems facing his committee, the most serious of which was lack of powers on employment permits.

The issue of permits was the responsibility of the Immigration Department in the Ministry of Home Affairs.

"We have been fighting for many years now to transfer this function to our ministry but without success. Despite this, we will keep fighting because this function rightly belongs to us," he said.

Another problem was that of established residents who held on to their jobs and could not be Zambianised even when a suitable Zambian was available.

Under the Immigration and Deportation Act, they were free to stay in the country and to keep their jobs for as long as they liked.

"We have many such people from neighbouring countries whose positions can easily be Zambianised but Government policy on these people is not clear. There is nothing we can do about it.

"My committee has made proposals to the Government that these people should be given the choice of either applying for Zambian citizen — ship or be given work permits," he said.

MINISTER SAYS SADCC NEEDS REGIONAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA has called for the establishment of a regional financial institution before the Southern African Development Cordinating Conference (SADCC) secretariat becomes operational on July 1, 1982.

Finance Minister Mr Kebby Musokotwane warned that unless this was done SADCC would flop.

Mr Musokotwane said this at Lusaka's Mulungushi Hall when he opened a meeting of government delegations from SADCC member countries who are meeting in Lusaka to study the proposed development fund.

The talks are being held at the request of the SADCC council of ministers which last September asked Zambia to convene a meeting of officials from ministries of finance and banks.

Mr Musokotwane said the meeting could not be held earlier because of the extensive research required in preparing the document to be considered.

When considering the document the delegates should bear in mind that an effective SADCC was crucial to the substantive unity of member states in the subcontinent.

"For this reason, member states should seriously consider the creation of some institutions whose manning and commencement of operations should be carefully synchronised with proven and justified workload," Mr Musokotwane said.

It was for this reason that Zambia attached great importance to the creation of a financial institution which should underpin co-operation within the Southern African region.

"There is no similar institution in existence in this part of Africa to serve us," Mr Musokotwane said.

The creation of such an institution would not serve to detract from the value of the long-established similar institutions like the World Bank and the African Development Bank.

"On the contrary, our financial institution would supplement both the role and resources of traditional sources of finance," Mr Musokotwane said.

There was no doubt of winning international support in SADCC's efforts of reducing economic dependence on South Africa because "goodwill already existed among the member countries".

On the Southern Africa transport and communications commission, he said the burden of mobilisation and management of financial resources could be eased if left under the care and competence of a separate financial institution.

"What economists refer to as 'specialisation of labour' would present us with very bright prospects in implementing our regional investment programmes," Mr Musokotwane said.

FACTORS SLOWING DEVELOPMENT IN SOUTHERN PROVINCE NOTED

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 18 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpt]

INADEQUATE funds and lack of transport are slowing the pace of development in the Southern Province, permanent secretary, Mr Ian Sikazwe said yesterday.

Speaking in Livingstone after a seven-day inspection tour of projects in Choma and Gwembe districts, Mr Sikazwe said some projects had been abandoned because of failure to pay contractors.

He said the construction of immigration and police houses at Chirundu was at a standstill because the contractor was still waiting for payment while projects in other areas could not continue due to shortage of building materials.

"The shortage of funds is causing us great concern because several projects in the rural areas have either been abandoned or waiting for funds to be released," the permanent secretary said.

Mr Sikazwe said field officers were failing to inspect projects because of transport problems, and client ministries had been informed of the problem.

He also expressed concern about vandalism in schools which had left many buildings in bad shape. Some schools were extremely damaged and authorities were failing to repair them because of lack of funds.

However, Mr Sikazwe paid tribute to members of the Parent-Teachers Associations for their efforts to raise funds to repair damaged buildings. "Their efforts are commendable in view of the present economic situation," he added.

CANADIAN CONSORTIUM TO START OIL EXPLORATION NEXT YEAR

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

A CONSORTIUM of Canadian companies will spend K30 million in a four-year oil prospecting venture which starts in the Western Province next year.

An agreement witnessed by Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia was signed in Lusaka yesterday by Zambia and Luena Hydro-Carbon Company which will undertake the work.

Minister of Mines Mr Mufaya Mumbuna who signed on behalf of Zambia, described the agreement as a landmark and turning point in the country's mining industry.

With Zambia spending about 20 per cent of her earnings on oil, "a breakthrough in the venture would greatly help the country to achieve a fuller development.

The agreement is a result of direct appeal by President Kaunda to a Canadian government delegation at a luncheon he hosted in October last year.

President Kaunda asked the group to solicit assistance on behalf of Zambia among Canadian oil exploration industry in a comprehensive programme of exploration for oil in the country.

The delegation included Mr Michael Webb president of Luena Hydro-Carbon and Mr Horst Schmid, a Minister of Trade for the Alberta Province in Canada.

Mr Mumbuna disclosed that initially the prospecting will start in the Western basins of the country, mostly in the Western Province, and later in other parts of Zambia.

He said the estimated cost of the four-year programme which will include detailed geological research and seismic work is estimated to be between K20 million and K30 million.

But he stressed that as Zambia spent just over 20 per cent of its earnings on oil imports, it would not be justifiable to embark on a risky venture costing over K20 million, in foreign exchange.

"It is therefore pleasing to note that all such risk capital would come from outside investors. In this case from the consortium formed by Luena Hydro-carbon Company," Mr Mumbuna said.

The minister said, however, that in the event of a successful commercial find, Zambia would have a major share and assured the nation that sufficient safeguards had been provided to ensure that the country becomes an equal partner.

He added that this would be in addition to the income that Zambia would receive through royalty, tax and rent.

The Minister said while there was no positive evidence of the presence of hydro-carbon, necessary geological conditions of the mineral were prevelant in major sedimentary basins of the Western Province and Luangwa Valley.

"A number of preliminary studies revealed that further investigation was warranted and to this end the Geological Survey Department was directed to put all information together so as to attract foreign oil companies,"Mr Mumbuna said.

"Luena Hydro-Carbon is interested in investing in Zambia because of our oil potential and of course we provide one of the stablest political environment in the Third World," he stated.

Mr Mumbuna said the agreement was part of the country's programme to diversify the country's mining industry in which three pacts have been concluded in the past three years.

These have led to the coming in of four international companies each spending about K2 million annually in uranium exploration in four provinces in the country.

Mr Webb said his company was proud to sign the agreement which had been negotiated for many months adding that he was satisfied it would induce Canadian companies to expend large sums of money.

He said although the oil exploring would be in an unproven part of the world, the interests of the people of Zambia would be protected.

MP CLAIMS MISUSE OF FUNDS AT ZAMBIA RAILWAYS

[Excerpt]

TWELVE Zambia Railways wagons were sold in a "verbal transaction" to a local company without the knowledge of the railways management and Board of Directors, a Member of Parliament charged yesterday.

MP for Bwacha, Mr Richard Banda claimed that the company confirmed that they had the 12 wagons, but apparently Zambia Railways does not have a record of their sale and thus the wagons still appear in the list of its fixed assets.

Speaking from Kabwe yesterday, Mr Banda also said the problems of the company were a result of the failure by the Government and Board of Directors to administer it in accordance with the Zambia Railways Act and the company's own employees' disciplinary code.

He said there was now total sabotage, missing of property and misuse of funds and the Ministry of Power, Transport and Communications must take steps to urgently correct the situation.

Mr Banda said if necessary the Ministry should overhaul the Board of Directors in order to remove the present cause of inefficiency in Zambia Railways.

He said it was unbelievable that 12 wagons allegedly sold in 1975 could still show in the list of fixed assets "and yet they were sold through the back door without knowledge of the management of Zambia Railways and without them detecting where these wagons went."

The MP claimed that he had all documents to support his allegations.

"I am therefore, requesting the Minister of Power, Transport and Communications, as provided for in the Act to demand an explanation from the Board of Directors and management on why the wagons went without their knowledge and thus making Zambia Railways lose large sums of money.

"The company confirmed as per their letter of May 8, 1980 coded ADMH/112/80 that the 12 wagons were driven to the company and that transactions of sale was a verbal one. And as a result there are no records to indicate that Zambia Railways had received the payment and that the company had paid. But they confirm the wagons are in their possession," Mr Banda added.

He claimed that by now "some of those who participated in the transaction have left the country."

BUILDING MATERIALS SHORTAGE--A critical shortage of building materials, particularly timber and delays in paying builders by the Government, is crippling the building industry. This was said in Lusaka yesterday by the chairman of the Building and Civil Engineering Contractors Association Mr Harvey Golson in an interview. Mr Golson said the industry has had a reasonable amount of work since the beginning of the year but late payments by the Government had affected its performance. "Materials too, have been in very short supply. We cannot get windows, door frames and timber," said Mr Golson. Earlier this year Mr Golson said the industry was experiencing a serious shortage of building materials because of lack of letters of credit for imports. He said at the time that Government delays in payment for work completed were causing concern. [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Aug 81 p 2]

RAILWAYS START MAIZE HAULING--Zambia Railways has started hauling maize with immediate effect. Announcing this in Kabwe yesterday, Zambia Railways public relations officer, Mr Joe Chaonsa said 800 wagons had been set to freight 96,000 tonnes of maize a month. Mr Chaonsa said Zambia Railways would send 78 wagons every day in depots with surplus maize stocks and later haul the maize to the Copperbelt. He said the maize would later be hauled to maize deficit areas such as North-Western, Northern and Luapula Provinces. COPPER PRICE INCREASE'S EFFECTS--Despite the Sterling increase in the price of copper between January 1 and July 31 this year, the benefit to Zambia only amounted to a six percent increase due to fluctuations in the exchange rate. Barclays Bank of Zambia Limited managing director, Mr Mark Tress, said this on Monday when he addressed the bank's managers attending the annual conference in Lusaka. Mr Tress made the comment when he spoke on the current state of the Zambian economy. He pointed out that success in the country was dependent on what happens outside. "Thus despite the Sterling increase in the price of copper between January 1, 1981 and July 31, 1981, the benefit to Zambia only amounted to a six percent increase due to fluctuations in the exchange rate," he said. MUGABE CONDEMNS TRIBALISM, URGES PARTY REORGANIZATION

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday condemned leaders who practised tribalism and used their positions to amass wealth.

Addressing rallies at Buhera and Marange, he said jobs should be given to people according to merit and not on any tribal or regional basis.

The Prime Minister called on the people to expose and report leaders who practised tribalism, saying that no tribe owned Zimbabwe, but the country belonged to all the people.

He said people who practised tribalism and regionalism should be condemned.

People could settle in any region of the country they wanted because the country was free. The Prime Minister said Government officials, including ministers, will not be allowed to buy farms until the people have enough land to cultivate in the rural areas.

Idle farms will be given to people without land. "I have such leaders who rushed to buy farms and I have told them to stop the practice.

"How can one man own 1 000 ha of land when other people have nothing?"

He condemned selfish leaders who used their positions to enrich themselves. Leaders should live an exemplary life.

The Prime Minister told a large gathering, which gave him a resounding welcome, that the Government was buying more vehicles to transport their maize to the storage depots.

He told them not to worry because all the maize would be bought by the Government.

He thanked the people for producing a bumper maize harvest this year and urged them to increase their productivity this season.

The Prime Minister said the bumper harvest was the pride of the whole of Africa and the international community, bearing in mind that Zimbabwe had been independent for only a year.

The surplus maize was being exported to neighbouring states such as Mozambique, Zambia and Kenya.

The Government would increase the number of schools, hospitals and clinics to improve the lives of the people, the Prime Minister said. He appealed to the people to allow all school-age children to attend school.

He said parents who refused to allow their children to attend school but to look after cattle would not be tolerated.

PM Urges Big Party Shake-up

BUHERA.

MR MUGABE has called for a massive reorganisation of ZANU (PF) so that minority parties will find it hard to exist.

He made the call yesterday while addressing rallies at Buhera and Marange during a four-day tour of Manicaland Province.

He said that if ZANU (PF) grew to become a mammoth party it would be easy to identify enemies.

"South Africa has a lot of agents in the country who would like to destabilise the country."

Some people were still holding "dark corner" meetings, but with the reorganisation of the party such people would be exposed.

He stressed the need for unity, saying it was the most important weapon against the enemy.

Mr Mugabe, who is the president of ZANU (PF) said the Government looked after the people's interests and wanted to know of their complaints through an efficient party machinery.

The party should be strengthened at branch, district and provincial levels so that it could advise the Government on the needs of the people.

The Prime Minister told the people to elect efficient leaders irrespective of tribe or region — hard-working and efficient leaders who could work for the people.

He appealed to party members to pay their subscriptions so that the party could build offices and buy cars for branches, districts and provinces. All money paid should go to the party's bank account.

The party was devising a new way of saving money. Party money should come from the party and not the Government, he stressed.

The Prime Minister was accompanied to Buhera by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, and was joined at Marange by the Deputy Minister of Information, Immigration and Tourism, Mrs Victoria Chitepo; the Deputy Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa; and the Deputy Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Mr Moton Malianga.

Today the Prime Minister may tour irrigation schemes in the Mutema area in Chipinga and will address a rally at Gaza Secondary School before returning to Umtali.

COURT TOLD OF SOUTH AFRICAN RECRUITMENT OF SABOTEURS

CID Officer Implicated

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

A SALISBURY car-breaker facing three charges of theft involving more than $16 000 told a ZANU (PF) official that a CID officer was involved in recruiting saboteurs in Zimbabwe to train in South Africa and return to attack the Government, Salisbury regional court heard yesterday.

Corin Nikiforos (31), who was in remand prison at the time, telephoned an employee and told him to contact Joint High Command because he had information about the police to divulge, alleged prosecutor Mr George Makings, of the Attorney-General's office.

After being tipped off by the employee, the CID sent two plain-clothes policemen and a ZANU (PF) member to the prison.

With a concealed tape-recorder they recorded an allegation by Mr Nikiforos that the officer investigating the theft charges, Detective Inspector David Anderton, had several times offered him $100 for every person he could persuade to go to South Africa for training, the court heard.

Giving evidence at the trial of Mr Nikiforos on the theft charges and a count of defaming him, Mr Anderton denied the allegations and said his only dealings with him had been during investigations of his alleged criminal activities.

A witness, Mr Edward Stevens, told the court that he had been in the holding cell at Salisbury Magistrates' Court with Mr Nikiforos awaiting remand.

Mr Nikiforos, he said, paid his bail of $30 on condition that he call the ZANU (PF) offices and report that Inspector Anderton was recruiting soldiers for training in South Africa.

After his release, said Mr Stevens, he had told the officer investigating his case of the deal and this had been passed on to Inspector Anderton.

Mr Nikiforos had pleaded not guilty to the four charges.

His legal representative, Mr Ian Donovan, told the court that Mr Nikiforos would admit making the allegations against the police officer when he was at the prison on March 18.

It would be a defence of "justification — telling the truth in the public interest".

Earlier in the day three Salisbury men told the court of foreign currency exchange deals they had with Mr Nikiforos which had failed.

An immigrant from Zambia, Mr Paul Mangresah, said he was advised when he reached Zimbabwe to contact Mr Nikiforos to change £1 000 he had brought with him.

In January last year Mr Nikiforos agreed to do the deal and arranged that Mr Mangresah see an employee.

The employee, Mr Amos Gessler, took a bag containing the money into a building and disappeared, said Mr Mangresah.

He said he repeatedly tried to recover the money from Mr Nikiforos without success.

Mr Trevor Kerwin said he lost $9 000 to Mr Nikiforos in January after giving him the money to exchange for rands.

Mr Kerwin was selling his car-breaking business to Mr Nikiforos before emigrating to South Africa and "jokingly" suggested that $9 000 of the price of $12 000 could be changed to rands. Mr Nikiforos agreed, he parted with the money and he had not seen it since.

A sum of $6 000 was appropriated by Mr Nikiforos in a foreign currency deal on May 22 last year, Salisbury real estate salesman, Mr Michael Parker, claimed.

Approached by Mr Nikiforos, he had arranged to exchange that amount for rands on behalf of a woman who needed it for an operation in South Africa.

Mr Parker said he felt very guilty about the loss of the money, but it eventually became obvious to him that Mr Nikiforos "had run off" with it.

He could not report its loss to police because he realised he could be charged under the Exchange Control Regulations.

Mr Donovan said Mr Nikiforos would deny stealing the money or any involvement in foreign currency deals.

The trial before Mr Stan Stainer and assessor Mr Henry Duncan continues this morning.

Mr Donovan is instructed by Coghlan, Welsh and Guest.

Claim Denied

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

A CID officer who allegedly offered a Salisbury man $100 for each saboteur he recruited for training in South Africa made derogatory comments about the Government on several occasions, it was claimed in the Salisbury regional court yesterday.

Salisbury car-breaker Costa Nikiforos (31) said Detective Inspector David Anderton pulled up next to his truck on which he was carrying jubilant ZANU(PF) supporters on independence day last year.

The policeman put his hand out of his window in the shape of a pistol and shouted: "Costa, bang bang, I will kill you. You and Mugabe," the court heard.

"I shouted back at him: 'Pamberi ne ZANU(PF)' and drove on."

On Monday Mr Anderton said he had seen the accused that day but had merely waved and greeted him.

Mr Anderton is the investigating officer in three allegations of theft involving $16 150 from three Salisbury men which Mr Nikiforos has denied.

Mr Nikiforos also pleaded not guilty to defaming the officer on March 10 when he told a ZANU(PF) official and two plain-clothes policemen at the remand prison that Mr Anderton was recruiting saboteurs.

He said yesterday the policeman had approached him on at least three occasions and offered him $100 for every person he could persuade to train in South Africa to conduct anti-Zimbabwe Government activities.

A man facing criminal charges described a conversation in a car when he was being driven by Mr Anderton with Mr Nikiforos from the CID offices to Salisbury Magistrates' Courts for remand hearings.

He told the court that the policeman had made derogatory remarks about the Government.

But he felt these were designed to rile Mr Nikiforos, a ZANU (PF) party member, because it was obvious the two "had no love for each other".

"There did not appear to be any malice in what Mr Anderton was saying."

In defence to a charge that he stole $1 150 in pounds sterling from a Zambian immigrant, Mr Paul Mangirosah, in February 1980, Mr Nikiforos told the court that the money was taken by an employee of his, Mr Amos Gesler.

Mr Nikiforos said he had been present when Mr Gesler showed Mr Mangirosah an old receipt for a fine of $250 he had paid as proof that he had surrendered the pounds to police.

The court heard from Mr Nikiforos that in May last year he met Mr Michael Parker of Salisbury outside Meikles Hotel. While the accused was in the hotel, Mr Parker made an arrangement with Mr Gesler to steal $6 000 that he had been given to exchange for rands, said Mr Nikiforos.

The accused claimed that $9 000 he is alleged to have stolen on January 27 this year from Mr Trevor Kerwin in the course of an illegal foreign currency deal, was a loan.

The hearing will resume on Friday.

NKOMO REJECTS NEED FOR FIFTH BRIGADE

Law Force Sufficient

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE Minister without Portfolio, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday criticised the creation of a fifth brigade that will deal with internal troubles, saying Zimbabwe had adequate and efficient forces of law, including the civil police, that could handle any internal problems.

Speaking in an interview in Bulawayo Dr Nkomo said he was surprised by recent Press reports that the brigade had been created to deal solely with outbreaks of troubles inside the country.

"As Minister without Portfolio working in the Prime Minister's Office, I was supposed to be consulted on the formation of this brigade which, to me, is for the possible imposition of a one-party state in our country," he charged.

"It cannot be for anything else because we have an established army with instructors accepted publicly by all our Government organs. The so-called fifth brigade is obviously a separate army," he said.

Dr Nkomo also said he had been told that 500 recruits would be taken into the police force, and that of these 75 percent would be former ZANLA and 25 percent from former ZIPRA men.

"I have spoken to the Prime Minister about this issue and others I cannot disclose to the public. I have also had discussion with the Home Affairs Minister about the same matter, but I have not seen any indication that my observations and objections are being heeded."

Nkomo's Fears

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 12

[Editorial: "The 5th Brigade"]

[Text]

IT IS a long time since the leader of the Patriotic Front, Dr Nkomo, openly criticised a major Government decision. In fact, for a while, it appeared as if he had settled down to working within the system, difficult as this may have seemed initially.

Now, he has come out in open criticism of the decision to set up a fifth brigade within the Zimbabwe National Army. Dr Nkomo suspects that this brigade will be used to force the country into a one-party state.

Mr Mugabe has talked of a referendum; if a majority of people of Zimbabwe express, through the ballot box, their for the country to be run as a one-party state, there can rely be nothing underhand about that.

Dr Nkomo is also miffed at the formation of the fifth brigade. As Minister without Portfolio in the Prime Minister's Office, he feels that he should have been consulted.

The Prime Minister, in transferring Dr Nkomo from the Home Affairs portfolio to his present duties last January, said: "As Minister without Portfolio, I will assign to Comrade Joshua Nkomo specific tasks from time to time, which in my judgment require special handling in the national interest."

Mr Mugabe also said that Dr Nkomo would assist him as Minister of Defence "with the integration process of our forces, by ensuring that our ZIPRA comrades participate alongside ZANLA in the speedy creation of one united Zimbabwe National Army . . .".

That task Dr Nkomo appears to have performed with distinction.

TIMING OF U.S. MANEUVERS NEAR LIBYA RAISES QUESTIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 4

[Editorial: "US and Gaddafi"]

[Text]

COLONEL GADDAFI may be the enfant terrible of the Arab world as far as the United States is concerned. But he is still the leader of a sovereign state who deserves the respect of all nations, including the United States.

The clash of Libyan and American war planes in the Mediterranean last Wednesday seems to have been the culmination of a war of words between the two countries.

Admittedly, there is no love lost between President Reagan and Colonel Gaddafi; yet questions must be asked about the timing of the US military manoeuvres so close to Libya.

Was this not open provocation? Setting aside the legal niceties of how far Libyan sovereignty extends into the sea, is it reasonable to assume that the Americans were prepared for trouble when they launched their manoeuvres?

The American magazine, Newsweek, had reported that the Americans were deliberately practising their "war games" so near to Libya "to test Gaddafi". This smacks of typical gun-boat diplomacy.

What is Mr Reagan really up to? First — as far as Africa is concerned — he launches a foreign policy that is so pro-racist South Africa even some Americans are furious with their country's about-face.

Then he decides on the manufacture of the neutron bomb, which his immediate predecessor, Mr Carter, had wisely abandoned in the interests of world peace and nuclear disarmament.

Now, Mr Reagan appears to be bent on showing weak nations which refuse to follow the US line that they'd better change their policies — or else.

This is no way to conduct foreign policy. On the other hand, some people have wondered if Mr Reagan has a foreign policy at all.

FIFTH BRIGADE TO GET N. KOREAN TANKS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWE will be receiving tanks in addition to other military equipment and instructors from Korea, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's office, told the House of Assembly yesterday.

The minister also said that the Koreans — who are here to train a new fifth brigade of the Zimbabwe National Army formed specially to deal with outbreaks of trouble in the country — would be here for eight to 12 months.

He was answering Brigadier John Probert (RF, Borrowdale) during private members question time in the lower House, who had asked for details on the deployment of the Korean instructors, over 100 of whom arrived in the country about two weeks ago.

Brigadier Probert's question included a request for details on "the purpose of setting up an armoured brigade in that area (the Eastern Districts) equipped with North Korean tanks and other weapons of offensive warfare".

Answering this point, Mr Munangagwa quoted a previous statement of his to the House, saying that any report speculating that the new brigade was to be used for purposes other than defensive ones were "entirely false and without foundation whatever".

The brigadier asked in a supplementary question for details on how the tanks and other equipment were to be maintained, and the minister replied: "We already have tanks in this country, some of which came from Libya which were diverted from Uganda. They are here and they are being maintained.

"We have tanks and armoured cars and other related military vehicles from other countries.

"We have personnel in defence who are qualified to maintain tanks of any description, whether coming from capitalist countries or from communist countries.

"We have no problem in that regard," he said.

Brigadier Probert also asked if, like the rest of the military aid, ammunition, maintenance for the tanks and other equipment were to be supplied free of charge, and the minister replied that they were included in the grant.

The presence here of the North Koreans arose out of the acceptance of a grant of "arms and equipment from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the great leader, Kim Il Sung".

"In terms of this agreement a complete establishment of instructors has been made available to assist in the formation and training of a brigade with the equipment that is being supplied, and we estimate that the task will last for about eight to 12 months."

Mr James Thrush (RF, Highlands) asked whether there had been any consultations "with other foreign nationals or their governments already training Zimbabwean troops".

Mr Munangagwa replied: "The Government of the people of Zimbabwe is sovereign. It is us who asks any other foreign government to come to this country when we want them to come to this country. We asked the British to come here and they are here."

Brigadier Probert asked if this "disturbing exercise" meant that the formation of the country's projected merchant navy would be sponsored by the Russian navy, but was told by the Speaker, Mr Didymus Mutasa, his question did not apply.

In reply to a question by Mr Geoffrey York (RF, Mazoe/Mtoko) Mr Munangagwa said recruitment to the new brigade would be made from within the ranks of the Zimbabwe National Army "after the elimination of the former army, ZANLA and ZIPRA" in the military integration exercise. — Ziana.

PARTIES TOLD TO OBEY LAW OR RISK BANNING

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Elton Mutasa]

[Text]

THE Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, yesterday warned opposition parties in Zimbabwe to operate within the laws of the country or risk being banned.

He also warned people who did not hand in their firearms by August 31 that they would be jailed for at least five years if caught.

In an interview, Mr Hove said that in recent weeks there had been an increase in the number of political meetings by opposition parties around Salisbury and in most cases "the meetings have resulted in violence".

He was aware the leaders of the political parties were "busing" people to the meetings.

"I do not want to hear of people being taken from one place to another against their will. After the meetings we have had violence occurring," he said.

"We will no longer put up with this kind of nonsense. We will certainly take action against those involved. There are no two ways about it."

He had warned all opposition parties, including the Republican Front, that the Government would take stern action against violence and subversion by political parties.

"I have warned all minority parties in the country to take the laws of the country very seriously. They must not push the Government to the wall. If any party does that we will not hesitate to take action and ban it."

He also made it clear that he would not hesitate to take strong action against ZANU (PF) and PF supporters involved in violence.

He criticised people who sympathised with armed elements, saying they should think again about their actions.

"They must choose whether to live in peace or not. If they choose to live in peace they must co-operate with the police in rounding up these bandits."

The minister denied the police had not done enough to round up bandits. It was because the public was not co-operating with police that they still existed.

He appealed to all holders of firearms to hand in their guns before the August 31 amnesty deadline. He agreed the amnesty had had a slow start, but it was now gaining momentum.

Although the exercise was going on well some people, particularly in the rural areas, threw the arms anywhere instead of taking them to the police.

As a result some children had lost their lives when playing with things like grenades.

He added: "We want people to have more faith in the police force and help it maintain law and order in the country. We want to change the thinking in this country and make people have more confidence in the police force for the maintenance of security.

"The public must co-operate with the police and vice versa."

RESOURCES MINISTER PRAISED BY PARLIAMENT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE Minister of Natural Resources and Water Development, Senator Joseph Msika, was showered with accolades by several MPs in the House of Assembly yesterday for his efforts to conserve the country's natural resources, particularly wildlife.

When the minister tabled four Bills through their second reading, Mr Henry Elsworth (RF, Midlands) said with the plans the Ministry of Natural Resources and Water Development had, the Zambezi valley was poised in 15 years' time to become one of the world's largest and richest wildlife sanctuaries.

"It will bring enormous wealth to the people," he said. "This wealth far exceeds anything that can be gained from agriculture."

The Trapping Animals (Control) Amendment Bill, Senator Msika said, would enable him to appoint district councils as the appropriate authority for each area in respect of all wildlife matters.

He warned, however, that this designation would only be given after he was satisfied that the councils had the proper administrative machinery and were properly motivated to administer the wildlife resources in each area to the best advantage.

A clause in the Bill would enable the minister to declare any area of communal land to be a specially restricted trapping area after consultation with the appropriate authority.

Mr Msika told the House that he was not pleased with the powers previously enjoyed by police officers and inspectors when searching premises for animal traps or when dealing with suspects and, therefore, had amended the Act to provide for the preservation of privacy and human dignity.

"I was disturbed to find that this Act provides for such penalties as whipping, solitary confinement and reduced diet and I propose to repeal these inhuman forms of punishment," he said.

In reply to a question from Mr Landau (RF, Avondale) the minister said if there was a need for a search, a high-ranking police officer would have to authorise it.

The Bill passed through its second reading and goes for committee stage next Tuesday.

Senator Msika said he foresaw a tremendous upsurge in revenue accruing directly to the district councils as the development of the wildlife industry in the communal lands progressed.

"This revenue will come from the sale of safaris, wildlife products — that is, meat and trophies and the establishment of secondary industries such as the tanning of skins, manufacture of curios and other articles from skins, horns and tusks."

He added that in communal areas devoid of wildlife, the Department of National Parks would introduce surplus game from the parks and wildlife estate.

But the operation of safaris in communal lands would only be carried out by licensed hunters or guides.

Senator Msika said amendments would be introduced to enable stricter controls over the sale of fishing nets.

"That is an aspect of our anti-poaching unit which is receiving valuable help from other arms of Government. We have also successfully modernised our crime detection techniques."

Also to be scrapped from the Act, the minister said, is the control over trophy dealers' licences which in future would be made by regulation in order to allow for greater flexibility and help to combat illegal trade.

The Bill passed through its second reading and will be considered in committee next Tuesday.

MINISTER HOVE QUESTIONED BY PARLIAMENT, WINS PRAISE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

TWENTY-NINE people have been deported from Zimbabwe since the beginning of this year, the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, told the House of Assembly yesterday.

Answering questions during debate on the committee of supply estimates of expenditure Mr Hove said these had been mainly for criminal reasons and not political ones.

After independence many people from "the underworld" had come to Zimbabwe, thinking that the new country would lack expertise in catching them.

But they had been quickly discovered, said the minister. They had then been sent back to where they came from.

Mr Hove said his ministry wanted to assure every citizen of the country of their safety and of the safety of their property.

In reply to a number of questions from members, Mr Hove said the use of old armoured cars by police was not good as a public relations exercise, because they were associated with the pre-independence poli-

The ministry was seeking funds for new vehicles.

The Government was "extremely concerned and worried" with the high rate of accidents on the roads. The cabinet had directed that a committee look into the issue.

The figures for accidents had dropped over the recent public holidays due to a police blitz on the roads, he said.

Mr Hove said he was keen to give assurance that "history would not be destroyed" at the National Archives. There might be a difference in interpretation but there was no reason to destroy records.

He described rumours that records handed over to the Archives might be destroyed, "as completely unfounded".

Mr Hove said his ministry was aware that Matabeleland had experienced more armed robberies than other areas. But, in the last four to five weeks the rate of arrests in the area had increased, he said.

The cost of salaries in his ministry had dropped because various departments had been transferred to other ministries. For example, the Attorney-General's office had gone to the Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs. Certain security departments had gone to the Prime Minister's office.

Turning to immigration, the minister said that the headquarters in Salisbury were having problems with queues because the Ministry of Works had not made alterations.

The reception area was small and not suited to the type of work being done there. His ministry was conscious that this could have an adverse effect on the impressions given to tourists and others.

The Government was only too keen to see changes in discriminatory practices, including in the police force. There were now four senior assistant commissioners who were black, four assistant commissioners, 160 to 180 African inspectors and approximately 100 taking charge of police stations.

There had been directives to the effect that people who were promoted had to take the responsibilities of the positions. If anyone was in default of this it would be investigated and dealt with, he said.

Steps were being taken to improve camp accommodation for policemen, and the ministry was looking for funds to provide full uniforms for all policemen.

Policemen's salaries should be reasonable as it was important to avoid corruption, he said.

Mr Hove said it was hoped to open new police stations in areas where these were needed.

In Manicaland there was a problem on the Mozambique border where rebels were violating the border and harassing Zimbabweans living there.

Armed dissidents would come and demand food, he said. There had also been security problems at places like Sandawana where an enormous number of emeralds were being illegally traded in.

Police posts were being established, with personnel roughing it in tents until proper police camps could be set up.

DIVIDE

In answer to a question from Dr Callistus Ndhlovu (PF, Matabeleland South) Mr Hove told the House that the recently appointed delimitation commission's task was to divide the country into 80 constituencies to enable voters to register on a common roll.

He said the commission would have regard to the number of people who, in its opinion after consulting the Director of Census and Statistics, were ordinarily resident in the area concerned and were eligible to be registered on the common roll.

"It is not intended to be a final delimitation for the purposes of the next election and it will not be used in its present form for any other purpose other than the registration of voters," he said.

The minister said the commission would use the existing administrative boundaries. It would determine, as far as it could, the number of eligible voters in each district and would consider whether in any district that number warranted the division of the district into more than one constituency or whether one district should be joined with another.

The commission had consulted the Director of Census and Statistics and representatives of other institutions, such as city and district councils in its deliberations, he added.

Hove Is Praised for 'Admirable' Progress

MR Hove and the Zimbabwe Republic Police under his ministry were covered with praise from members on all sides of the Assembly.

During debate in the Committee of Supply consideration of the main estimates of expenditure, Members referred to the ministry's performance in the last 15 months as "incredible" and "admirable".

Mr Henry Elsworth (RF, Midlands) said the ministry's record was largely due to the minister's "sincerity, determination and honest approach" to problems.

The admiration and gratitude of the country went to the police force, he said.

Mr Sydney Malunga (PF, Matabeleland North) said the allocation of funds to the ministry should be greater.

Mr Alex Moseley (RF, Western) added his congratulations. "I believe a tremendous job has been done," he said.

ZANU (PF) Chief Whip Mr Alexio Muzingwa (Mashonaland West) paid special tribute to the support unit.

Mrs Ruth Chinamano said when she first saw how "humble" the minister was, she wondered whether he would be efficient enough to run the Ministry of Home Affairs. "But he has tried hard," she said. Mrs Chinamano added that she thought there were fewer criminals now.

HEROES' ACRE SITE TO BE 'TRULY MONUMENTAL'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

HEROES' Acre, outside Salisbury, is to be a fully-fledged and modern national monument by the time of the Heroes' Days celebrations in August next year.

This was announced in an interview with Ziana yesterday of the head of a 16-member Korean technical assistance delegation, Mr Li Nyong Zun, who is taking charge of the construction and development of the memorial area.

Mr Li said the Eternal Flame would be moved from the Salisbury Kopje to Heroes' Acre, where it would be mounted on a 40 m tower as "a symbol of the everlasting nature of the achievements of Zimbabwe's heroes".

"We were sent here at the personal instruction of Comrade Kim Il Sung to take part in the building of Zimbabwe's revolutionary history and the birth of a new life in this country," Mr Li said.

He said the decision by "the great leader" to provide assistance in building the national monument was "a personal gesture of solidarity between the people of Zimbabwe and Korea".

Mr Li said members of the delegation had visited historical sites such as the Great Zimbabwe ruins because the design of all sculpture at Heroes' Acre had to reflect Zimbabwe's past history.

"We will make every statue according to the wishes, taste and demand of the Zimbabwean people," he said.

He said statues to be erected at Heroes' Acre would not depict any particular revolutionary figures, but would symbolise all the heroic fighters who fell in the national liberation struggle.

Mr Li said the project was to be funded jointly by the Korean and Zimbabwean Governments, but was unable to say what the total cost would be.—Ziana.

MUGABE GIVES ULTIMATUM TO LAW-BREAKERS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text] Inyanga --

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, has warned dissidents, criminals and other bad elements in the country that they will be wiped out ruthlessly.

Addressing huge rallies yesterday in Chitepo area and Masaya School in Inyanga, he said that measures were being taken to crush all law-breakers in the country.

Mr Mugabe said there were too many criminals in towns and other areas. He told the rallies that the Government would like people to do their day-to-day jobs freely because the country was independent.

"Whose war do they want to fight?" he asked.

The Prime Minister called on all people with illegal firearms to hand them to the Government before August 31. He warned that if they did not do so they would be crushed.

He said the new brigade to be trained by 106 Korean instructors would consist of 5 000 men. It would have its headquarters at Inyanga.

He attacked people and the Umtali Post for spreading "malicious rumours" that the country was being given to the Koreans.

"There are only 106 Koreans to train our boys" he said.

Mr Mugabe said Zimbabwe needed a very strong army because of the South African threat. "We have to be ready to defend ourselves," he said.

The Prime Minister said the Koreans, the Chinese, Roumanians and the Yugoslavs had supported Zimbabwe with arms during the war.

"People who gave us arms are our friends," he said.

Telling the crowds about the services the Government would provide, he said children should be allowed into schools without age limit.

The age limit was being used by the colonial regimes to slow down the education process of Africans.

In future children would be allowed to enter nurseries at the age of four and start school at the age of five.

The Prime Minister, who returns to Salisbury today after addressing a rally at Makoni Guta, held closed meetings with district party officials of the Manicaland province.

The Chitepo branch presented the Prime Minister with two bags of maize as a donation to SWAPO.

EMIGRANTS' EXPORTATION OF HOUSEHOLD GOODS BANNED

To Save Foreign Exchange

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Government last night banned emigrants exporting certain household goods in a move to ease shortages and save foreign exchange.

The goods are: Refrigerators, deep-freezers, stoves, washing machines, high fidelity and stereophonic equipment and lounge and dining-room suites.

The Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, also limited the quantity of other household goods emigrants could take with them and said a list of these goods would have to be approved by exchange control authorities.

Certain exceptions were made for heirlooms and suites originally imported into Zimbabwe.

In a statement the minister said: "Emigrants will be permitted to export only reasonable quantities of furniture and effects other than those (banned) in accordance with a family's basic requirements.

"Certified inventories of furniture from packers or removal companies will have to accompany all future exchange control applications for emigrant status."

On exceptions the minister said: "Intending emigrants who possess dining-room suites which are regarded as family heirlooms and emigrants who possess lounge suites and dining-room suites which they had previously imported may, however, submit specific applications through their bankers for sympathetic exchange control consideration.

Such applications would have to be supported by acceptable documentary evidence.

Interviewed last night Senator Nkala said all the banned goods had some imported content even when assembled in Zimbabwe. All were being exported by emigrants in large quantities and all were in short supply in this country.

"If one buys these months later takes them things here and then six out of the country then more shortages are caused than would be normal. And we haven't got enough foreign currency to import all the components needed to replace these goods.

"People can still take essential furniture with them so long as it isn't too much."

The minister accused some people of buying large quantities or expensive furniture just before they emigrated, taking it with them and then selling it in South Africa. "This is just the same as taking more foreign currency than they are allowed.

"You have a lot of moving vans stuffed full of stuff going out of Zimbabwe; I have observed this. We just have no alternative but to ban certain goods."

The extent of the problem is indicated in the latest Government statistics.

Means Fewer Jobs

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

THE ban on the export by emigrants of certain household goods will lead to a drop in the trade and staffing levels of more than 30 percent of storage and removal firms, operators said yesterday.

Reacting to the export ban announced by the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, on Monday night, Salisbury-based operators said the move was "catastrophic".

"More than 80 percent of our removal business is moving people out of this country, but this ban will mean decreasing our running revenue by 60 percent," a spokesman for Stuttafords said.

A spokesman of one of the removal and shipping companies said he would probably have to reduce his staff by 50 percent. He thought the ban should have been restricted to one dining and lounge suite a family.

"The reaction I have been getting is that many people will say this is the last straw. But what is going through people's minds is what next?" he said.

A spokesman for one of the smaller removal and storage firms, which claims 90 to 95 percent of its business is exporting household goods, said it would have to reduce its workforce to a third.

Retailers who had placed orders with the firm were cancelling the deliveries on the instructions of their customers.

The president of the Democratic Party, Mr Andre Holland, said he had made a special plea to the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, on behalf of the elderly, retired and genuinely ill.

"I have asked the Minister to issue firm instructions to the Reserve Bank to show real compassion in these and other special cases."

First Part of Program

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Aug 81 p 8

[Editorial: "One People"]

[Text]

THE PRIME MINISTER last week completed what was obviously a most successful visit to the Eastern Districts. It was the first part of his Meet the People tour of all provinces.

Mr Mugabe found it necessary to repeat warnings that he and members of his Cabinet have given before—that lawbreakers will be caught and punished. We hope all will now heed his words.

Once again, he condemned tribalism and regionalism, saying that jobs must be awarded on merit and not on a tribal or regional basis.

In this connection he reminded people that the whole of Zimbabwe, and not merely parts of it, is theirs.

It would help considerably if the names of the provinces — Mashonaland, Matabeleland, and so on — were changed as quickly as possible, even before the other name changes planned come into force. Erasing the colonial method of dividing the country into divisions that emphasise tribalism must contribute to making Zimbabweans think of themselves as one people.

One of the main purposes of Mr Mugabe's trip was to revitalise ZANU (PF) at grassroots level, and his efforts in this direction will surely produce the necessary results.

Similar messages urging unity and co-operation among all the people, combined with the need for hard work in developing the country, have been given by other members of the Cabinet in recent days. These are messages that everyone should note and act upon.

Listens to People

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 7

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text]

THE four-day Manicaland Province tour by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, is considered to have been highly successful. He was able to see Government policy in operation, listen to people's problems and learn local views on how they should be solved.

The Prime Minister, who is also president of ZANU (PF), has assumed the responsibilities of the secretary-general of the party to revitalise the movement. Judging from the massive turnouts at rallies, the reorganisation of ZANU (PF) has got off to a good start.

The gifts and praise he received clearly showed confidence in and appreciation of his leadership. The multiracial crowds that listened to his speeches also illustrated the success of his pragmatism and spirit of reconciliation.

Mr Mugabe inspired people by his simplicity, patience and tolerance.

In all the districts he visited, ZANU (PF) was the majority party. He was told that some districts had become one-party areas because there were no other political groups.

The tour showed the Prime Minister that the impressive support that put him into power had in no way diminished. Rather it had increased.

From Buhera to Makoni, there were shouts of "forward with Mugabe and down with dissidents and laziness".

His assurances about the Government's commitment to doing what people want and promises to give them land should go a long way in boosting hard work and productivity.

The Prime Minister's timely attacks on tribalism and regionalism, laziness and crime were of far-reaching significance.

Another achievement was to dispel fears that a one-party state would be imposed on Zimbabweans. He told the large rallies that since there was a democratic government, one-party rule and ideology would only come into being if the people wanted it. "We are a people's government and we do what the people want", he said.

Mr Mugabe told people that the Government had not forgotten them but was working on programmes to improve their lives. He promised them that they would soon be given land so that they could produce more food.

He would soon continue his marathon tour of the country to explain Government policies and programmes as well as the reorganisation of ZANU (PF) to make it a giant by the end of the year.

MPS LASH OUT AT 'FEUDALISM' ON WHITE FARMS

Salisruby THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

[Text]

SECTIONS of Zimbabwe's predominantly white commercial farming community came under sharp attack in the House of Assembly yesterday, accused by two senior PF MPs of governing their workers by feudalism.

The attacks came when Mr Sydney Malunga, (PF, Matabeleland South) the party's chief whip, introduced the debate on a private member's motion calling for a review of the structures of the country's rural councils to remove "discriminatory and exploitative practices".

But the farmers were defended by speakers from all sides of the House who said the responsibility of housing, medical facilities and education was not the farmers'. They urged either the Government or the rural councils themselves to look after the farm workers.

Mr Malunga said farmers employed large labour forces and made "exorbitant" profits — to which Mr Henry Elsworth (RF, Midlands) interjected: "Come and look at my books."

He said it was "painful" that the country's farm labourers were "the least cared for".

He had recently travelled widely over farming communities and had seen that workers on most farms lived in "shameful hovels". He added, however, that there was "a sprinkling of kind-hearted farmers" who tried to provide their workers with proper accommodation.

In these "slums", many of which were without ablution blocks, people were exposed to "dangerous diseases". There were also no clinics in many farming areas. The hospitals were long distances away, and this prevented them from taking advantage of the Government's free health care system for people earning less than $150 a month.

There were also hundreds of farm workers' children who had no schooling available to them. The Government could not simply start building schools on what was privately owned land.

An angry note entered the debate when Mr Donald Goddard (RF, Lundi) interjected: "But you burned down all the schools." It evaporated in roars of laughter when Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, the Minister of health, boomed above the rising row of interjections: "Come off it, Donald Duck."

The Speaker, Mr Didymus Mutasa, asked Mr Malunga, how he related his speech to the motion on rural councils, but Mr Malunga assured him the topics were related.

The problem of squatting on commercial land was a direct result of the minimum wages legislation introduced last year, he claimed.

After the $30 a month wage had been introduced, many farmers had decided to lay off workers, especially the aged, he said. These took to settling on nearby farms.

Since the Government came to power, much discriminatory legislation had been repealed, and he asked the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, to change the structure of the Rural Councils Act to make it possible for all to enjoy the benefits of the country's indepdendence.

Dr Callistus Ndlovu (PF, Matabeleland South), the PF's spokesman on education, said that Dr Zvobgo had had the Rural Councils Act amended last year to give himself wider powers to effect changes, but the existing state of affairs appeared to contradict the principle of majority government.

He had recently toured the Fort Rixon and Beitbridge farming areas and had learned that "much needs to be done to make amendments that might actually benefit people living in commercial farming areas".

He claimed that people in the Beitbridge area who had lived in protected villages during the war were still living in them, "although they are no longer described as such".

He had had useful discussions with farmers in the Fort Rixon area who agreed with him that something should be done to provide, at least, for minimum needs in education and health for their workers.

Dr Ndlovu said he feared that farm workers were to remain "the invisible members of our independent community".

He did not believe there was "a deliberate conspiracy" by commercial farmers to deprive their workers, but urged the Government to send teams of investigators to look into farm workers' conditions.

He asked Dr Zvobgo to examine the structures of rural councils to see how they excluded people from participating in the affairs of the area.

He was not suggesting that farm workers be members of rural councils but that they at least were given some form of representation.

The Government had given lodgers the right to vote in elections in urban areas. "If these people are not lodgers, I don't know what they are," he said.

The structure of rural councils gave farm workers no chance of their voices being heard — they were unable to express themselves.

Mr Alex Moseley (RF, Western) said he could find nothing in the speeches of the two speakers that applied to rural councils and accused Mr Malunga of not understanding the rural council system.

He said the system was to the benefit not only of commercial farmers, but also to the Government and the country as a whole. If there were no rural councils, the Government would have to take over the responsibilities assumed by councils.

He believed there was discrimination, but against rural councils and in favour of district councils, whose residents paid no tax and had all their expenditure paid by the Government. In the case of rural councils, residents paid tax and all the Government paid to them was an 80 percent payment of unit tax, provided the unit tax did not exceed $40.

"The Government gets away with a lot of money from rural councils," he said. He was sure Dr Zvobgo would be the last one "to tear rural councils to bits". If MPs were aware of discriminatory practices by farmers, they should report offenders.

Mr Esmond Micklem (RF, Northern) said he did not think Mr Malunga appreciated the responsibilities of the rural councils, who provided roads, housing schemes, clinics and often schools.

Mr William Kona (PF, Midlands) said it was wrong to expect commercial farmers to provide educational and health facilities. Farmers were the same as factories in urban areas where provision for housing, health care and schooling was provided by the Government.

"The whole thing lies squarely with the Government," he said.

He suggested that parts of commercial farm land be set aside by the Government to provide centres for farm workers with housing, clinics and schools.

Mr Nelson Muroyiwa (ZANU-PF, Mashonaland Central) said that despite arguments by RF members, rural councils were lowering standards in their areas because of the deteriorating status of the farm worker.

Farmers, many of whom had actually tried to establish schools and clinics on their farms, were not to be blamed, as this was not their responsibility, but the rural councils.

"Where does the money from their taxes go?" he asked. In many rural council offices up to seven girls were employed, who sat around all day and "giggled".

He also accused rural councils of filling positions left by whites on the councils with black employees at lower ranks and poorer pay.

Mr Bill Irvine (RF, Marlborough), himself a former Minister of Local Government and Housing, said he sympathised with Mr Kona's ideas, but he did not believe the Government had the money to launch such schemes.

He also attacked Mr Muroyiwa for his remarks that rural councils did next to nothing, and said rural council employees were worthy of the highest praise.

Mr Arthur Tapson (RF, Mukoni) also attacked Mr Muroyiwa, and said that the rural council in his own area employed only black typists and the housing and community services manager was black.

He told Mr Ndlovu that he had only been able to drive around the Beitbridge area because the rural council had built the road there.

Mr Albert Taderera (ZANU-PF, Victoria) spoke against the present local government system of dividing rural areas into two sections, one governed by the rural councils, the other by district councils.

One RF MP interjected that the reason for the division was that district council residents did not pay tax. Mr Taderera replied: "You are able to pay tax because you have milked the people."

NATION GIVEN OBSERVER STATUS IN BERNE UNION

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Keith Atkinson]

[Text]

OBSERVER status, pending full membership of the International Union of Credit and Investment Insurers (Berne Union), has been granted to the Export Credit Insurance Corporation Ltd of Zimbabwe.

Zimbabwe is the first black African country to be granted this status, and there are only six developing countries in the world who are members of this international body.

General manager of ECIC, Mr Gordon Pulford, said that after two years it was usual for a company to be granted full membership.

Representatives attended the Berne Union's general meeting in Stockholm in June, and found the members very favourably disposed towards Zimbabwe despite the lack of experience in dealing with this country.

Mr Pulford said a number of benefits will accrue from association with the union. Zimbabwe will have access to information about countries concerning their payment delays for contracts, as well as short term, medium and long term business. Also any member has the backing of a world-wide organisation in dealing with defaulting countries.

The union's aims are to encourage standardised terms of contract which will create a certain degree of stability.

However, one drawback in the field of medium and long term contracts is being undercut by Eastern bloc countries who are not members of the organisation.

Discussing the background to credit insurance, Mr Pulford said the company was formed in 1966 by a consortium of leading banks and insurance firms.

The aim is to underwrite the risk of non-payment a businessman faces when exporting goods. In general the company indemnifies against bad debts arising from political and commercial risks.

Political risk insurance plays a major part in the company's dealings. Areas covered include interference by foreign countries preventing successful importation of goods into the buyer's country or preventing payment for goods.

The risk of war, boycotts and strikes are also covered, but not trade disputes or non-compliance by buyer or seller with prevailing import regulations.

The company also covers commercial risks such as the insolvency of the buyer, the failure or refusal of the buyer to accept delivery of goods and protracted default by a buyer to pay a debt.

Mr Pulford said: "Export credit insurance is a sophisticated facility that is not often found in a developing country."

Zimbabwe is a relative newcomer to the open market export trade and and has had the occasional pitfall, as in its dealings with Zaire which owes considerable sums on outstanding commitments.

RATINGS

A conservative policy is being adopted by the Reserve Bank due to this lack of experience, and a novel approach has been the introduction of ratings for developing countries. A "Z" designated country means all trade must be covered by irrevocable letters of credit, guaranteed by a first class bank, or cash in advance.

With the exceptions of Malawi, Botswana, Mozambique, and South Africa, all African countries trading with Zimbabwe must fulfil these conditions.

"It is understandable that a conservative policy is being adopted, but there is a need now for more flexibility and a progressive approach," commented Mr Pulford. He cited the example of opening up direct trade with the Zambian copper mines, which to an extent manage their own foreign exchange earnings.

Mr Pulford mentioned that there is an Export Credit Reinsurance Committee with representatives from the Ministry of Trade and Commerce, Treasury and the Reserve Bank.

The committee has the final say on whether political cover is to be extended to export deals, and ECIC attends in an advisory capacity. The government continues to reinsure wholly all political risk contracts.

With the ending of sanctions certain risks had diminished, but the point was made that goods could still be seized in transit, and delivery frustrated by civil disturbance or border closure.

Turning to new developments in export insurance, negotiations were in progress to increase the present 80-85 percent level of indemnity. Also cover for medium and long term contracts has been introduced, with the offer of cover repayment terms of up to 10 years' duration.

The company hopes to persuade Government to offer subsidised interest to local firms, which will be essential in assisting them to make competitive tenders for external long term projects.

Lines of credit between commercial banks in different countries was another area which would promote Zimbabwe's exports. Insurance could be offered to the banks to cover repayment.

There was a need for the field of export financing, which was new to Zimbabwe, to be investigated and refined if companies in this country were to win contracts.

Mr Pulford also said there was a need for a private sector foreign trade organisation. It would provide a reference centre on export markets and hold seminars on export trade and administration.

HUNGARIAN INTEREST IN BILATERAL TRADE INDICATED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

HUNGARY is not a donor country. It is in no position to compete with major world powers. However, it can extend a certain amount of credit and is able to participate in joint ventures.

Like many European countries Hungary is not well endowed with raw materials, but has plenty of good people, said Mr Odon Kallos, president of the Hungarian Chamber of Commerce, who with a 12-man trade team has been in Zimbabwe for the last week on a fact-finding and goodwill mission.

Commenting upon similarities between the two countries Mr Kallos said that his own had had 35 years to rebuild and develop its infrastructure and economy.

"Zimbabwe is only about 18 months independent, but she is well endowed with good natural resources and people, and we have much to learn from each other," he said.

Zimbabwe's industrial and commercial sectors had developed to an impressive degree, despite the years of sanctions, he continued, but warned that the concept of self-sufficiency should not be lost.

"Hungary had to completely rebuild its infrastructure after the Second World War without any Marshall Aid type of assistance. Today we are one of the most creditworthy countries in Europe and have no problems raising finance in London or New York.

"Hungary has a well developed and booming economy, particularly in the industrial and agricultural sectors. In all of eastern Europe we are the only net exporters of wheat, maize and meat.

"Zimbabwe too is a net exporter of maize. You can improve this, but I am a bit tired of hearing about the shortage of foreign exchange. You can generate this through increasing exports," said Mr Kallos.

"There is a big transport problem here and this is one area in which Hungary can help. We are the biggest producers of buses in Europe possibly in the world, producing 1 000 units a month. We also produce 10 to 25 tonne lorries.

"But I would like to dispel one idea. There is a notion in Zimbabwe that if buses and lorries are built in Eastern Europe they are not reliable. Whatever Hungary sells it provides a full back-up service and training."

Bearing in mind the government's import policy Mr Kallos said that buses and lorries could be sent in knocked down or kit form to comply with local content requirements.

The buses are either 100 seaters with a static chassis or 200 seaters with articulated chassis. The United States and West Germany have already bought some of the latter.

The trade team was also hopeful of attracting orders for hospital equipment, diesel electric engines, chemicals, agricultural expertise, pharmaceuticals and their production machinery.

Mr Kallos added that a team of experts is due to arrive in Zimbabwe next month to explore the possibilities of setting up a small factory to manufacture light bulbs and fluorescent tubes — a field in which they are world experts.

EDUCATION MINISTER CALLS FOR UZ OVERHAUL

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE University of Zimbabwe is not playing its role in the new society, the Minister of Education and Culture, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, has said.

Speaking this week on the ZTV programme Forum, Dr Mutumbuka, a former student of the university, charged that it was "really still the same structure, content, faculty and institution it was when it was first founded as the University of Rhodesia and Nyasaland."

Dr Mutumbuka said he had no knowledge that as presently constituted, the university was playing a role in Zimbabwe society and added that it had become clear that the institution was a foreign imposition on the new social order in this country.

He said there was a need for the university to develop more practical subjects, while continuing its role of education and research and development of high-level manpower.

"But the problem with the university is that it is like a foreign body. It would be a good university in Britain," he added.

"The university should be overhauled, have a new Act and try to solve the problems of manpower development in Zimbabwe," the Minister said.

The world, he said, had been very sympathetic and willing to help. But with independence other countries would not be prepared to still train manpower for Zimbabwe.

He said on his recent Korean trip he had seen how a university could promote high - level development and a science bias.

"Students who want to pursue studies that are development - orientated should be able to do so at the expense of the state, while those who want to study classics can do so at their own expense," the minister suggested.

He said he was not advocating the abolition of classics and theology, but that more emphasis should be given to subjects that reflected the new social order.

LACK OF AID IN ENERGY FIELD UNDERSCORES NEED FOR ALTERNATIVES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 10

[Editorial]

[Text]

EVEN with its ethanol advantage, Zimbabwe still had to pay a staggering $145,6 million on fuel imports last year, 20 percent more than in the previous year.

The bill is bound to be much higher by the end of this year, despite the increase in the price of petrol announced in the Budget.

In Geneva, the OPEC countries are meeting to decide whether or not to reduce the price of their oil. The Saudi Arabians hold the key, their product being the cheapest at US$32 a barrel in a market which is experiencing a serious glut.

It could be said, not unfairly, that the OPEC members are hoist with their own petard, with countries such as Nigeria asking for US$40 a barrel for their high-quality crude.

The speculation all this week was that a price of either $34 or $36 a barrel would be agreed as a compromise.

Unfortunately, this will not make life any easier for developing countries such as Zimbabwe who can ill-afford the present prices anyway.

The Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Makoni, recently attended a United Nations conference on new and renewable energy resources in Nairobi. In theory the developed countries promised to help the poor countries with funds for solar, wind and biomass energy.

Dr Makoni, however, sounded an appropriate word of caution; there was a danger of "two world energies emerging": one for the poor nations (which among other things, uses animal dung), and the other for the rich — oil.

Solar, wind and biomass energy require a lot of capital to develop and the poor countries would still be beholden to the rich nations to get things going.

At least one of the developed countries, the US, was not too keen on government-to-government aid, preferring instead to bring in private enterprise, which would probably mean the controversial transnationals.

Mr Reagan is evidently preoccupied with the neutron bomb.

Considering the as-yet-to-be-fulfilled ambitions of the Third World for a new international economic order (which the rich nations have yet to endorse), the chances of success at Nairobi are not encouraging.

Even with their limited local resources, self-reliance seems to be the only way out for the poor nations, which is why Zimbabwe's research into alternative energy resources ought to be speeded up.

MINERAL SALES WORRY MINISTER OF MINES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Government decided to set up a minerals marketing authority because it was worried about the sale of local minerals, the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, told the Assembly yesterday.

His ministry had also been unable to get accurate figures on these miners' sales, the minister said during the committee of supply consideration of the ministry of mines Budget vote.

He was replying to Mr Alexio Mudzingwa (ZANU-PF, Mashonaland West) who had asked what the ministry was doing about setting up the minerals marketing authority announced earlier this year.

Mr Mudzingwa alleged that Zimbabwe's minerals were being sold outside the country "like vegetables". Local companies were selling minerals to their subsidiary firms which in turn, sold them at "big profits".

Mr Nyagumbo said it seemed that Zimbabwe did not receive the true value of its minerals when these were sold outside its borders.

"This has been a thorn in the flesh as far as Government is concerned," he said.

Because of this, the Government had decided to set up a marketing authority, for which "we are in the process of preparing legislation".

The minister told Mr Paddy Shields (RF, Bulawayo Central) that the Government had fully investigated all aspects of proposed marketing authority. "We believe that it will be quite efficient."

The marketing authority would not buy minerals from producers, but would "act as a receiver".

He said that even with a marketing authority handling the sale of his products "the producer will still maximise his profits".

The minister told Mr George Mudukuti (ZANU-PF, Victoria), who asked how much control Government would have over the marketing authority, that it would be a statutory body run by a board of directors and appointed by the Minister of Mines.

Mr John Landau said he was "horrified" to hear the ministry could not get mineral sale figures which, he said, could easily be obtained.

Mr Nyagumbo asked: "What is to stop a producer giving us false figures?"

The minister cited one "multi-national company" which, he said, had not gone through his ministry for a permit — as required by law — but had simply exported its minerals.

The marketing authority would enable the Government to have accurate sale figures and also ensure that there was no "under-invoicing of mineral exports".

"For the first time we will be able to realise the value of our minerals," he said.

Since the announcement on a minerals marketing authority, he said, the Government had had approaches expressing sympathy and encouragement from various countries, including the United States, some of whom had been stopped from buying certain minerals by multinational companies in the past. — Ziana.

RECONSTRUCTION IN ZISHAVANE SUCCESSFUL

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

RECONSTRUCTION work is taking remarkable strides in the Zishavane district, near Shabani, with the completion of all the 1980-81 scheduled projects.

The Shabani-Belingwe assistant secretary for development in the Ministry of Local Government and Housing, Mr Ernest Hapelt, said all 27 dip tanks in the Zishavane district council area, some of them completely destroyed during the war, had been rebuilt at a cost of $78 000.

The district animal health inspector, Mr Ian Robertson, said the improved cattle dipping services and two vaccination campaigns by his field team had helped root out anthrax, foot-and-mouth and tick-borne diseases in the district.

CATTLE SALES

The anthrax and foot-and-mouth campaigns, as well as the completion of $2 500 cattle sale pens at Zirubi and Runde, have paved the way for the resumption of district cattle sales.

Sales have started throughout the district except in four areas where dipping has been disrupted by vandals who stole water pumps and piping.

Mr Robertson said the Veterinary Department had taken over the administration of all the dip tanks in the district, but local folk would be responsible for replacing any stolen parts.

In one area the locals have since returned the missing pump and dipping has resumed.

He said the Veterinary Department wanted to employ veterinary extension assistants who would live and work among the villagers to combat animal disease. But because of the shortage of manpower only one had so far been recruited for the whole of Shabani and Belingwe.

Clean drinking water has not always been readily available to villagers, particularly those living in the dry Masvihwa communal area. Hence repairing old boreholes and sinking new ones was given priority in the district's first year of reconstruction.

Nineteen boreholes are now a source of clean drinking water for more than 24 000 villagers in Punde and Masvihwa communal areas, with more to be built this financial year.

Projects planned for this financial year include the upgrading of the Siboma Pakame mission road, repairs to the district's eight dams and the construction of a $25 000 bridge over the Gwemombe river in the Masvihwa communal area.

The bridge will give access to the area north of the river for the proposed bus route from Vugwe via Gwemombe dip to Ingezi.

The District Development Fund is carrying out a study to find out if it has the capacity to undertake such a big project.

TILCOR GIVES UP LAND TO FARMERS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

ABOUT 3 000 peasant farmers in Bulalima-Mangwe District Council area may now graze their cattle on the newly-named Ngulube communal land — formerly Tilcor's Warmley Ranch.

Tilcor has relinquished its right to the farm and the district council has handed it to the people living in the five council wards which form its boundaries.

Council chairman, Mr P. Mapisa, district administrator, Mr Mtutuki Moyo, assistant secretary (development), Mr D. Curtis, and five district councillors officially handed over the land last week.

Mr Mapisa asked the people of the five wards to draw up a policy for the use of the farm. Although it would not solve the land shortage problem, he would like to see the farm properly used to be "productive for the benefit of all".

Mr Simon Nyoni, chief executive officer of the council said the people of Ngulube had between 9 000 and 10 000 cattle.

"Several hundred of the people were at the meeting. A grazing committee was formed with Mr Patrick Nyathi as its chairman. The committee will liaise with the council's conservation committee to ensure the farm is properly used.

"If we don't do this, the veld will be grazed bare and this will create erosion and dongas."

Initially the new grazing land would be used only from August to October.

"If this period proves too long, we will change it," he said. The land, about 11 500 ha, is 25 km south of Mphoengs on the border with Botswana.

INCREASED BEEF PRODUCTION ADVOCATED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

THE Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Dr Swithun Mombeshora, yesterday called on small-scale farmers to contribute to the national economy by producing high-quality beef.

Opening the Dowa Agricultural Show, Dr Mombeshora urged the farmers to embark on systematic breeding and livestock management to capitalise on the existing good market for beef.

"There is a shortage of cattle for slaughter at present and the Government wishes you to promote livestock production," he told the farmers. "We understand that you do not have enough livestock to utilise all the grazing you have."

Dr Mombeshora praised farmers for improving production in Dowa and hoped that their example would be emulated by neighbouring rural farmers in Dewedzo, Chiduku, Wedza and Kumakomo.

To succeed, close co-operation was needed between rural and small-scale farmers, he said.

The Government had decided to place extension services for both the commercial sector and communal farming areas under the Ministry of Agriculture to promote their co-operation.

The move would enable the ministry to deploy extension staff in areas where they were most needed.

"It remains for farmers to prove that the staff are used to promote production," said Dr Mombeshora, adding that the Government was keen to help farmers grow better crops, have better livestock and become successful and prosperous.

He called on people to form co-operatives, which would receive Government assistance in the form of auditing, constitutional and organisational services.

Co-operatives, Dr Mombeshora told the farmers, facilitated the obtaining of credit for fertilisers, input supplies, bulk buying, transporting crops and negotiations with the Government.

"I must stress that the co-operative movement is run by the people," said Dr Mombeshora. "My ministry only provides assistance."

MORE DIESEL FUEL REPORTED ON WAY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The Government has bought 4 and 1/2 months of diesel supplies, but most of this is still in South Africa, the acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, Senator Bernard Chidzero [word indistinct] the House of Assembly yesterday.

The fuel was either in South African harbours, between the harbours and the town of Sasolburg, or on its way to Zimbabwe, he said.

The minister was answering a question from Mr James Thrush (RF, Highlands) during private members' questions time on why the country's diesel supply situation was still deteriorating six weeks after the Government first announced it was rationing the supply.

Dr Chidzero said the Government had taken measures to ensure such a crisis did not occur again, but the problem lay in the movement of the fuel into Zimbabwe.

He also told the House that to complement the movement diesel by rail the Government had also begun to the much more expensive alternative of bringing it up here by truck.

"The turnaround time of rail tankers carrying the product from point of loading to our border has become very extended, partly because of congested movement of traffic on the external (South African) rail system."

The transport by road of diesel supplies would take "a few weeks or so" before the oil stocks could be brought up to a meaningful level.

"At best these road movements will improve our stock position by just over two days a week," he said.

Other steps were being taken to improve the supply situation, but it was not now opportune for him to give details.

"Suffice it to say that Government is leaving no stone unturned in its efforts to overcome the diesel crisis as quickly as possible."

Asked by the Herald [words indistinct] verify the diesel situation, Dr Chidzero said Zimbabwe still had sufficient to last six days, but more supplies were being brought in by rail and road and people should not panic.

The supplies were coming into the country "more slowly than normal" because of traffic congestion, but "we are hoping that as these supplies come in, we will build up our national stocks to between say eight and 10 days' supplies until we reach our normal supply of 30 days."

Asked if there was a possibility of supplies drying up, Dr Chidzero replied with a definite "no" and urged people not to panic.

Pipeline

Dr Chidzero told the Assembly that when the Beira-Feruka pipeline was operational and carrying both petrol and diesel, the situation should be "transformed."

But it would be irresponsible for him to give any guarantee that a shortage would never occur again, and he emphasised that Zimbabwe was a landlocked country.

Mr Thrush asked in a supplementary question how much it was costing to to bring diesel up by road, and Dr Chidzero replied: "I am not in a position to give details, but it is certainly more costly than bringing it up by rail."

He said the supply--now standing at five to six days, whereas the Government had hoped it would have improved to about 15 days by now--had increased only very slightly since the 80 percent quota system had been introduced.

The imported volume of diesel had exceeded the assessed amount of consumption, he said, but had not been possible to stick to the quota figure.

"Certain exceptions have had to be made in some priority areas, for example urban bus services, bakeries and certain critical projects, which has meant that consumption has been at a higher level than the assessed quota offtake.

"While the volumes of diesel imported have roughly equated to this higher consumption level, our ability to build up a meaningful diesel stock has been severely lessened.

"It is fully appreciated that this situation must be considerably improved upon over the next few weeks if the economy is not to suffer significant harm."--Ziana

REPORT ON NEW PLACE NAMES BEING COMPILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE cabinet committee on place names — charged with recommending new names for places with "offensive" or "controversial" connotations in their names, or those that were simply incorrectly spelt or corrupted, is compiling its report to the Cabinet, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, the Minister of Local Government and Housing said.

He was replying to questions on the progress of the committee of which he is the chairman, from Mr P. K. van der Byl (RF, Gatooma/Hartley) of the changes.

He said the Government proposed to send each local authority a copy of the recommended name changes, and the authorities would be instructed to effect the changes.

It was also expected that the Government would rename a few places in "the public interest".

There would be no need for Parliament to debate the changes since Parliament had not given the places their names previously and had no jurisdiction to do so now.

The names being examined by the committee included those of Government schools, roads, streets, avenues, government buildings, hospitals, army barracks, districts, cities, towns, mountains and rivers.

The criteria the committee had used was that the place name had to be controversial, misspelt or a corruption of any known language.

The committee had also taken into account the question whether "in the public interest, a place name ought to be changed".

During the exercise, the committee had had to address volumes of correspondence to local authorities throughout the country for information on the origin of place names and their significance. In many cases local authorities had no accurate records to give satisfactory answers.

Mr van der Byl said in a supplementary question that he believed that local authorities should not be able to effect the changes because it was traditionally not their responsibility and the exercise would be a massive and completely new one.

He believed Parliament had better authority to do this.

Dr Zvobgo replied the present names of places in the country had not come about as a result of Acts of Parliament.

"UDI was such a change," he said. "It was not the result of a proper constitutional conference or a parliament, but their (Mr van der Byl and his colleagues') private pockets . . ."

Brigadier John Probert (RF, Borrowdale) asked the minister for an assurance that the new names would be "as they were written down by the indigenous people" of the country before the arrival of the white settlers in the early 1890s.

Dr Zvobgo replied: "The member can be assured we know the Shona and Ndebele languages very well."

Mr van der Byl said he hoped the minister was equally convinced that he knew English as well as the other two languages, and Dr Zvobgo told him he could rest assured that his own name, P. K. was not a controversial one.

MINISTER OF MINES EXAMINES PROBLEMS, OUTLINES SOLUTIONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 13

[Text] The fall in production in mining this year could be attributed to lowered prices on world markets, transport problems, inflation and increased costs, the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo said in the House of Assembly yesterday.

Answering questions during the committee of supply debate on the estimates of expenditure outlined in the Budget, Mr Nyagumbo said that gold, nickel and copper prices had been bad during the first six months of the year.

However, the price of copper was starting to rise and it was hoped that other prices would improve.

There had been setbacks in the railway system which moved products from mines, to smelting works or refineries and then to the ports. Inflation had also taken its toll.

The cost of machinery was high and production costs were rising daily.

Mr Nyagumbo said that although there had been "a dramatic fall" last year in mining industry skilled manpower, vacancies were being filled. He had experienced a shortage of skilled manpower in the mining engineering and geology departments.

The engineering posts had been filled and some of the geology posts as well. The positions of director and deputy director of metallurgy had both been filled within a month of the resignations of the previous incumbents this year.

The asbestos roasting plant at Que Que was outdated and to install a new one would cost "a lot of millions." This was being considered, he said.

Mr Sydney Malunga (PF, Matabeleland North) asked what the ministry was doing to assist smallworkers, many of whom were being forced to close down, and Mr Nyagumbo told him that there were funds available to assist them in the form of loans. Plant and machinery was also loaned by the ministry.

The Government has been assisting smallworkers "all along" but it was now trying to persuade them to form cooperatives, and there were already some signs that this advice was being followed.

He said it was easier to help groups of individuals pooling their resources, rather than people on their own.

He also said that a 10 percent cut in the estimates, for grants and contributions to certain institutions in the mining industry was the result of action by the Minister of Finance. "We are sorry about it just as you are, but there is nothing my ministry can do about it," he said.

He told Mr Henry Elsworth (RF, Midlands), who had asked for subsidies for smallworkers mining gold, that assistance was available under the Gold Mining Assistance Act, and applications were judged on merit. He added that there were some "hopeless cases" which could not be helped.

Mr Elsworth also asked for some reconsideration to be given to miners over the Minimum Wages Act which, he said, had hit miners particularly, but Mr Nyagumbo indicated that many people who complained about the legislation were those who aimed only for maximisation of profit, and this was not in line with Government's policy on "growth with equity."

He rebuked Mr Elsworth for remarking that this sort of policy would result in no wealth being left to share, saying: There is enough wealth, it is just that some people are greedy, who would not want to share with anyone. These people would rather leave the country. They would find, however, there was nowhere else they could maximise profit, and they would return here.

Mr Des Butler noted the $10 000 for geological exploration--an item appearing for the first time in the estimates and Mr Nuagumbo said that this would be used first for explorations in the Mtoko communal areas.

Mr Geoffrey York (RF, Mazoe/Mtoko) pointed out a three-fold increase from $6 000 to $18 000 for cash-in-lieu of leave payments in the office of the chief Government mining engineer, and said this implied that there was going to be a substantial amount of retirements or resignations in the department in the coming year.

Mr Nyagumbo confirmed this, and to laughter said that most of our engineers are very old, some of them are over 60. They might not want to go underground any more he said, and an RF member interjected: "They're going underground for good."

Mr Nyagumbo said however, that those engineers would be replaced, and training was being undertaken now of both black and white engineers.

Asked by Mr Dzikamai Mavhaire (ZANU-PF, Victoria) why $6 200 was tabled for recruitment for the ministry and what was being done to train young Zimbabweans for careers in the mining industry, Mr Nyagumbo said the Government mining training centre was currently training 40 people. And the first graduates of the metallurgy course at the University of Zimbabwe were expected to emerge at the end of 1983.

Mr Nyagumbo said there had been no alternative but to call in the police to act on illegal gem dealing.

He had asked people last year not to do anything about prospecting until they had been issued with licences. This had been ignored. People had been sent to speak with offenders. They had continued to exploit and sell stones illegally. Then the police had been called in after consultations with the Minister of Home Affairs.

In answer to further questions, Mr Nyagumbo said the additional expenditure requested for the Mining Industry Loan Fund was due to an upsurge in prospecting and the attempt to find new mines.

Negotiations were in progress with a French company in connection with the installation of the new roasting plant but it would prejudice the discussions to talk of dates for completion in Parliament.

He said coal was being produced in sufficient quantities for customers but there had been difficulties with transport. The difficulties with the railways could be solved in "a month or so," he said. The Minister of Transport was doing everything in his power to sort out the problems.

'State Must Have a Stake in Minerals'

Most of the mineral exploration in Zimbabwe was carried out by foreign companies, the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, admitted.

But he said the Government also thought that participation in the mining of the strategic minerals of coal and uranium was "imperative."

Mr Nyagumbo was speaking during debate on the $4 072 million allocation for his ministry for this financial year, and was warned by Mr A.B. Midzi (ZANU-PF, Mashonaland East) that many of the mining companies in Zimbabwe came from the country's foreign enemies.

He said that the Government's policy was to encourage foreign investment in Zimbabwe as this could be a source of work for many Zimbabweans.

However, the Government fully intended to participate in the exploitation of coal and uranium as these were strategic minerals.

He also told Mr Midzi that the Government could only persuade and not force mining companies in their policies of employment to emulate the Presidential directive to advance blacks in the civil service.

However, he assured Mr Midzi, the desire among mining companies to promote blacks was there. The process of blacks moving to the top had begun during the war when companies had lost whites to the call-up system, and these were then replaced by blacks.

Among top black officials on the mines were underground managers, personnel managers and technicians.

In training, too, there had "been an upsurge" in favour of blacks, he said, and noted Empress Mine near Que Que and Bow Mine near Bulawayo among those that were training blacks in various spheres of technical skill.

Companies Defended

Short of nationalisation, there should be a clear-cut policy of how the mineral wealth of Zimbabwe could be controlled, Mr Stephen Nkomo (PF, Matabeleland South) told the Assembly.

Speaking during the Committee of Supply consideration of estimates of expenditure, Mr Nkomo said minerals were being exploited by "foreign capitalists" when they should be exploited by Zimbabwe.

The Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, said in answer that nationalisation for its own sake would not help the country or anyone.

He said it was much better that the mines were owned by private companies. They were efficient, had capital and expertise and employed a large sector of Zimbabwe's manpower.

BRIEFS

CHINAMANO RETURNS--Transport Minister Mr Josiah Chinamano returned home yesterday after a hectic week-long trip to Britain. He inspected airport fire-fighting equipment which Zimbabwe is considering buying. He also toured the factory building, the 80-seat A146 passenger aircraft which Britain believes will replace the Viscount. Mr Chinamano had talks with Lonrho chief Mr Tiny Rowland about the reopening of the Beira-Feruka oil pipeline. "I'm satisfied that they are working hard on the pipeline and it should be open again at the end of this year," he said in an interview with The Sunday Mail. He also had talks with British Rail officials on training techniques. Zimbabwe is short of train technicians and has launched a recruiting drive in Britain. The minister chatted with former Rhodesian Governor Lord Soames for an hour. "He describes himself as a 'friend of Zimbabwe' and is still keenly interested in the country," said Mr Chinamano. TOP PARTY LAWYER--Mr Vengai Guni (38), who became secretary of the ZANU (PF) legal department in January last year, was registered as a legal practitioner at the High Court, Salisbury, yesterday. Mr Guni was one of the party's legal advisers at the Geneva conference in 1976 and at the Lancaster House conference in 1979. A graduate of the University of Botswana and Swaziland, he studied law for three years in Britain and was called to the English Bar in 1973. He practised in Britain for seven years and returned to Zimbabwe in January last year. Mr Guni has set up businesses including a legal firm, in Salisbury. His wife, Kelello, is the first black woman magistrate in Zimbabwe. They have two daughters. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 9]

CHINESE ACK-ACK WEAPON--Salisbury police have recovered a relic of the war, a Chinese-made anti-aircraft gun, of 12,7 mm calibre. Two detectives of the Law and Order section of the CID, Detective Sergeant Douglas Makuku and Detective Constable Peter Tafirenyika, acting on a tip-off, went to the Wedza area and found the weapon where it had been buried. The gun was covered in rust and a police spokesman said it had probably been buried early last year. The detectives also found a tripod for another weapon which had been buried with the gun. It will be stored away in safekeeping with 1 177 weapons which have been handed into the police so far under the current arms amnesty. A police spokesman gave a reminder that the amnesty expires in a week and he urged all gun owners to hand unregistered firearms over to the police before August 31. He said that the public were still handing in weapons which were registered and repeated that this was not necessary. "It is only weapons that have no firearms certificates which have to be surrendered," he said. "All firearms certificates have remained valid because of a succession of extensions by the Government after the final expiry date on December 31 1977." U.K. STUDENTS' UNION--Zimbabweans studying in Britain have formed a union to promote their interests there. A statement released by the union said there were many Zimbabweans studying in Britain and they had been unrepresented in the past. The union would protect the welfare of Zimbabwean students, provide a channel for them to communicate with educational institutions, provide recreation for members and widen the scope of opportunities available to Zimbabweans, the statement said. Zimbabweans studying in Britain were an investment in the future, the statement said, and they would have a positive role to play when they returned home. Their organisation will be known as the Zimbabwe Students' Union. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 9]

DEVELOPMENT BODY PLANNED--The Mashonaland West Province is to elect a provincial planning executive committee to put together development plans for the area. Mr Elias Chikoto, the under-secretary for development in the Ministry of Local Government and Housing told a meeting of provincial representatives from different Government departments that this would eliminate the duplication of services, pull resources together, formulate a development policy for the area and look at possible projects needed by the people in the province. HOVE PRAISED BY UANC--The United African National Council has praised the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, for threatening to ban political parties which indulge in subversive activities. The organisation's secretary for publicity, Mr Chris Sakala, said yesterday he would appreciate the move if the measures would be applied without any discrimination. "In our view, and in conformity with the ministers statement, the axe must first fall on supporters of ZANU (PF) who interfere with us when we hold our rallies." He deplored the idea of a one-party state, saying it would curtail freedom. The Zimbabwe Progressive Party's publicity secretary, Mr Aaron Muchagonei, said the introduction of party politics into schools would bring chaos and confusion in the country's education system. He was commenting on an appeal made by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, to school children to join ZANU (PF). He said Mr Mugabe should concentrate on school leavers who were mature. Mr Muchagonei said his party welcomed the idea of a referendum before introducing a one-party state. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 9]

HOSPITAL REACTIVATED--Chikombedzi Hospital in Nuanetsi would one day become a major district health facility serving many smaller rural health centres in the area, the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze said yesterday. Dr Mazorodze was speaking in Nuanetsi at ceremonies to reopen the hospital which had been forced to close during the war. Part of the hospital's previous contribution to the area's health services had been its training of unofficial medical assistants who had played a valuable role in the region's hospitals and clinics, he said. "I had the experience of working with graduates from Chikombedzi Hospital and I found their performance very good indeed. The reopening of this hospital is therefore another milestone in the Government's drive to provide basic health care to the broad masses of our people in the rural areas," Dr Mazorodze said. The Government would assist in re-establishing the training school, which would soon begin taking on new students. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Aug 81 p 2/

MAIZE TARGET--Zimbabwe hopes to export up to a million tonnes of maize by the end of March next year, but unless problems on the railways are sorted out less than 350 000 tonnes will be shipped out, says the chairman of the Grain Producers' Association, Mr Bill Francis. Internal grain sales were a little below expectations, he told the Tsatsi Farmers' Association, and were likely to be no more than 650 000 tonnes before the end of March--about 50 000 tonnes less than expected. More than two-thirds of the grain crop had already been delivered to the board, he said. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 1/

ARMS AMNESTY--More than 1 175 weapons have been handed in to police with just nine days of the Government amnesty to go. The Government believes there are thousands of illegal arms in the country--and has promised to crack down on offenders after the August 31 deadline. The number of weapons handed in, region by region, is: Salisbury 329; Mashonaland, excluding Salisbury, 301; Matabeleland, including Bulawayo, 257; Midlands 119; Manicaland 69 and Victoria Province 102. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 1]

NEWSMEN TO VISIT LIBYA--The interim president of the Union of Zimbabwe Journalists, Mr Elton Mutasa, is to attend a conference on solidarity against imperialism in Libya at the end of this month. Mr Mutasa said he had been invited to attend the conference by the Libyan People's Bureau in Salisbury. It would be held from August 28-31, and would be attended by delegates from Third World and some European countries. Mr Mutasa said: "We are looking forward to this conference and I hope to learn a lot from what the other countries are doing to uplift the lives of their workers. As our union is a new-born baby, such a conference will help us a great deal." His deputy, Mr Gilbert Mawarire, has also been invited. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 3]

UDI SOUVENIRS BANNED--The sale of memorabilia of the UDI period will be prohibited from the beginning of next month, the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, announced yesterday. In a statement, the minister said he intended to issue an order in terms of the Emergency Powers Regulations which would set out what items could not be sold or displayed for sale, reports Ziana. "They will include flags introduced by previous Governments since 1965 and articles displaying such flags or the word Rhodesia or the insignia of now defunct units of the former defence forces," the statement said. The order would also prohibit the wearing in public of articles of clothing--particularly T-shirts--depicting offensive slogans or pictures about conditions or events in the UDI period. "Shopkeepers are advised to dispose of stocks of the goods mentioned before September 1 as their continued display for sale after this date will be illegal," Mr Hove said. "I do not intend to interfere with the use or possession [words blurred] the UDI period," he added. Mr Hove noted that the sale of memorabilia received wide publicity some months ago when it was raised by the Minister of Information and Tourism, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira. Despite warnings sounded at the time, Mr Hove said, it had been found that wall plaques and other such "offensive" articles were still being offered for sale. "This is the cause of annoyance and irritation to the great majority of the people and I believe it could lead to breaches of peace," Mr Hove said.--Ziana [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 1]

COOPERATION WITH KENYA--African countries must help one another, a visiting Kenyan MP, Mr Kenneth Matiba, said in Salisbury yesterday. The member of parliament for Mbiri province who is here to work out details of co-operation between Kenyan companies and their Zimbabwean counterparts said most African countries tended to look outside Africa for all their technical assistance. "The development know-how is already available in Africa and we should encourage its exchange among countries on the continent," Mr Matiba said. He has been here for a week and has been engaged in exchange programme for workers, with a local company, Delta Corporation. The programme envisages five-week exchange periods during which workers from companies in the two countries can learn production processes. The exchange programme was aimed at helping the Zimbabwean industrial sector overcome some of the difficulties that Kenya faced in its industrial development soon after its independence, but it would also enable industries in his country to purchase goods from this country, which he said were of a higher standard for a newly independent nation. "The industry here has a very keen sense of self-reliance, we can learn a lot from you as a developing nation," Mr Matiba said. Zimbabwe, he said, could learn how Kenya had progressed in its programme of Africanisation. Another area in which Mr Matiba hopes to establish exchange programmes is in the hotel and catering industry. Already a Kenyan has been attached to a local hotel group. He said it was essential to establish regional cooperation because Zimbabwe's tourist industry was not looking to the north to boost its trade. Mr Matiba said he had been impressed with the progress he saw here and added: "We would like to promote joint approaches within the Third World." SURVEYOR'S DEGREES--The present academic qualifications for land surveyors were tied to professional examinations of South African universities and this was inappropriate to the circumstances in Zimbabwe, the Deputy Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Moven Mahachi said yesterday. Speaking during the second reading of the Land and Survey Amendment Bill in the Assembly, Mr Mahachi said the Bill provided for the recognition of a degree in land surveying granted by the University of Zimbabwe and for the recognition of foreign qualifications or licences which were acceptable to the surveyor-general and survey profession and approved by the minister. It would still be necessary for practical survey work and a trial survey to be done to qualify, he said. It was logical to include in the Bill survey requirements presently provided for in the Regional Town and Country Planning Act dealing with the subdivision and consolidation of land and much of the documentation required when land was subdivided. The Bill would also bring the appointment of the surveyor-general into line with the constitution of Zimbabwe. As a public servant he would be appointed by the Public Service Commission and not by the President. Debate on the Bill was adjourned until today. CLOTHING UNION--Bulawayo--The National Union of the Clothing Industry has submitted a claims package to the industry's employers' association covering everything from wages to long service incentives. The general secretary of the union, Mr Charles Pasipanodya, said the claim was being submitted now in time for next year. The present agreement between the union and the clothing industry expires on December 31 this year. A statement issued by the union said: "There is no doubt that the continuing rise in the cost of living as a result of the rises in prices continues to place the lower paid workers below the poverty datum line. "It is therefore only logical to raise the wages of the lowest paid workers who are in the majority, and will help stabilise the economy." The claim has been sent in the form of a memorandum to the Matabelaland and Mashonaland Employers' Association of the Clothing Industry. For wages, the union is claiming a 60 percent rise for general grades, 55 percent for semi-skilled, and 50 percent for skilled and white collar workers. Mr Pasipanodya said the union would also be seeking the right to create a closed shop in any area or department where the union obtains 60 percent membership of workers there, an annual bonus of two weeks' pay and a reduction in the number of hours worked each week. RACIAL DISCRIMINATION--Barmen, supervisors and sales personnel employed at liquor outlets in the Gwelo area were told by Gwelo's deputy mayor, Councillor Mabasa Chipandambira, yesterday that there are still some hotel proprietors who cling religiously to the status quo and run their hotels on racial lines. The deputy mayor was opening a two-day seminar sponsored by National Breweries, Ltd. Elaborating on his claim, he said that in such hotels "quick service is meant for the whites, because only white people are conscious of time. Slow service is meant for blacks, because time has no meaning for them." He added: "They quote an imaginary black as saying there is no hurry in Africa and this is dangerous in the extreme, and should stop." It was a gross distortion of the truth regarding African time concepts. "It stinks in my nostrils and is most unacceptable in this changing world." He urged the students to bury and forget the status quo, to accept the challenge of change, and to serve customers regardless of tribe, race, colour or creed. Councillor Chipandambira told the students that they should never ill-treat their customers. "They are not beggars. They are masters and a force to reckon with because they wield the cash. "Do not quarrel with your bread, for any attempt to do so will be suicidal and lead you to lose either cash or your job by which you earn your bread." AVGAS SHORTAGE--Bulawayo--A shortage of avgas aviation fuel has hit most of the country's airports in the past few days. At one stage, two Bulawayo-based air charter companies feared a shortage of the special fuel would eventually ground their planes. A spokesman for the Department of Trade and Commerce said yesterday that supplies were now on route and that the country's reserves should be adequate to cope. Avgas is the only fuel which can be used in piston-engined aircraft. A spokesman for Matabele Air said the shortage began to bite on Friday last week. He said there was a definite shortage of the essential fuel at Salisbury and Bulawayo airports and that the company would be forced to ground their light planes if fresh supplies did not arrive within four or five days. A spokesman for RUAC Charter Company said the company's planes on international flights would be filling up with avgas outside the country while the shortage lasted. Fort Victoria airport was also said to be low on avgas reserves, which was confirmed by an airport official. The Government spokesman said the shortage was only temporary and caused mainly by transport problems. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 11]

BELGIAN AID--Belgium has pledged $6 million in grants and $2 million a year in soft loans for development in six ministries for the next three years, its charge d'affaires, Mr Dominique Struye de Swielande, said in Salisbury yesterday. Mr De Swielande said Belgium made a proposal to the Ministry of Economic Planning and Development during Zimcord to have the money split among the six ministries. The Ministry of Local Government and Housing would get the most--$1 million; the Ministry of Agriculture $260,000; the Ministry of Natural Resources and Water Development $460,000; the Ministry of Health $160,000; the Ministry of Mines $60,000; and the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs $60,000. He said road construction equipment would be given to a division of the district administration under the Ministry of Local Government and Housing. Tractors and water pumps would go to the Ministry of Agriculture. A Belgian expert would make a study of the country to decide where best to place the pumps, he added. Two doctors would be sent to help in district hospitals or to be used in whatever capacity the Ministry of Health wished. A mining engineer would be sent to make a study for the Ministry of Mines and cassava mills would be given to the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs. The charge d'affaires said the soft loan of $2 million was an annual loan that would most likely be given next year. All aid would be finalised by the second half of the year, he added.--Ziana [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 11]

COURTS SEEK AID--The Minister of Justice and Constitutional Affairs, Senator Simbi Mubako, has urged all recognised chiefs to act as assessors in the newly established primary courts in their areas. In a statement issued yesterday, Senator Mubako said: "Primary courts should derive maximum benefit from the knowledge and experience of the chiefs through their advice." He said chiefs would be paid for assessing because the function was optional and not included in the chiefs' other duties. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 11]

PIPELINE CONTRACT--Turnall AC (Pvt.) Ltd has won a $3.5 million contract to supply a 32 km pressure pipeline from Lake Cunningham to Ncema Dam, near Bulawayo. The contract was signed yesterday by the Mayor of Bulawayo, Councillor N. K. Ndlovu, on behalf of the city council, and Mr G.K. Fuller, Turnall's marketing director. In one of the largest single pipe contracts in the company's history, Turnall is to supply more than 8 000 asbestos-cement pipes and joints up to 900 mm in diameter. Only five months ago the company officially opened its new and enlarged plant in Bulawayo at a cost of over $2,5 million. The increased manufacturing capacity of the plant, said a Turnall spokesman, will ensure that supplies are available to meet the tight schedule of the pipe laying programme drawn up by the city engineer. BRITISH TRADE TEAM--A trade mission from Nottingham, England, yesterday mounted an exhibition in Salisbury in an attempt to introduce some of the city industrial products to the local market. Mr Robert White, who leads the delegation, said he understood Zimbabwe's desire for self-sufficiency, but added that his city produced many goods which could serve this country. Joining the trade mission is the Nottingham Playhouse, which is presenting the play Stevie at Salisbury's Reps Theatre. Mr White said the mission would meet the theatre company soon. SOLAR POWER COOLING--Solar-powered air-conditioners will be installed in staff houses in remote national parks and border posts before the end of the year if suitable equipment is available. The chief mechanical engineer in the Ministry of Works, Mr Tony Hyde, said yesterday the project had been put out to tender and suppliers had until September 3 to offer suitable equipment. Most of the air-conditioners were intended for staff housing in very hot, low-lying game reserves such as Mana Pools and Gonarezhou, but customs officers in Kazungula and Malvernia would also benefit. None of these areas was connected to mains electricity. Solar power was considered ideal because when the sun was not shining it was unlikely to be all that hot. The conditioners should reduce the temperature in houses enough to allow staff to have a good night's sleep. Mr Hyde said two types of solar-powered conditioners had been specified--solar cells and solar absorption. Solar cells converted radiation into electric current which could then be used to drive suitable equipment. Absorption worked by allowing the sun to heat water which then became the energy source for a refrigeration unit. The only other alternative to solar power would be diesel generators for which running costs would be high. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 12]

CHIEFS REASSURED--Bulawayo--The advent of primary courts and district councils will not spell doom for tribal chiefs, but the old status and powers of such chiefs will never return, the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvogbo, said yesterday. He was addressing a private meeting of Matabeleland chiefs at Ntabazinduna which was closed to the Press and public. Dr Zvobgo said afterwards: "I have assured them that their status as chiefs is secure. They worry about the fact that the powers of land allocation and court justice have been taken out of their hands. "But it is futile for chiefs to continue coming to me asking for their old status and power to be returned to them. That cannot happen. Things have changed and are changing. "The Government recognises the importance of chiefs and their continued need to keep peace and tranquility in their own areas. The Government will continue to consult with them over all matters because of the value of their accumulated wisdom." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Aug 81 p 1]

MUGABE CONDEMNS SHOOTING--The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday condemned the shooting of a farmer, Mr Loui Souchon, and his wife, Jane. The Prime Minister said it was the duty of everyone to see that there was peace in the country. "Troublemakers and their perpetrators should be wiped out," he said. Speaking during his tour of the irrigation scheme in the Chipinga area, he warned armed people who went about killing people that they would be tracked down and punished. "We don't want such people," he said. He said if these people had complaints they should take them to the appropriate authorities. He appealed to all the people to help the police in their investigations. Less than one thousand illegally owned weapons have so far been handed in to Zimbabwe police with just 10 days left in the national arms amnesty. A Salisbury police spokesman said yesterday that 944 weapons had been handed in around the country, the breakdown being: Salisbury (Central) 265; Mashonaland 220; Matabeleland-Bulawayo 238; Midlands 69; Manicaland 56 and Victoria Province 96. The amnesty ends on August 31 after which people in illegal possession of arms have been promised tougher penalties. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 1]

SOLAR ENERGY DELEGATION--Seven members of the Solar Energy Society of Zimbabwe will attend the International Solar Energy Society Conference in Brighton, England, next week. The members were travelling at their own expense, said the society chairman, Mr Roy Maurer, and would report back in September to a special meeting in Salisbury. The conference would concentrate on how to present solar energy to governments as a real option in certain areas. Governments had to cease regarding it as a crackpot idea since it was a useful part of a mixture of energy resources. Two of the Zimbabweans, Dr Peter Fish, of the University of Zimbabwe, and Mr John Johnston, of the Ministry of Industry and Energy Development, would read a paper on a solar-powered tobacco curer they have developed with Mr Mike Barnard, who lives in Malawi. Mr Maurer has prepared a leaflet for distribution at the conference offering information to anyone interested in Zimbabwe's solar energy research and help to anyone wanting to visit the country. "For such a small country and society I think we are doing very well sending seven people to the conference. Unfortunately we couldn't sponsor anyone ourselves but members were keen enough to go under their own steam," he said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 p 6]

STUDENTS UNION--The newly-formed National Union of Zimbabwe Students will be officially launched at a meeting at Gwelo Teachers' College next month, Mr Lutho Tapela, a spokesman for the students, said yesterday. Students from all over the country would be represented by two delegates from each college, he said. At a news conference yesterday, Mr Tapela also said the Students' Representative Council of the University of Zimbabwe had been invited to attend an education seminar to be held at the university from August 27 to September 7. The seminar will be held under the auspices of the Ministry of Education and Culture and the Dag Hammarskjoeld Foundation. The SRC has also been invited to send two delegates to a meeting of the East, Central and Southern Africa Students Organisations at Dar es Salaam University from September 20 to 25. Two representatives from the university will also attend the first all-Africa students' OAU summit at Ahmadu-Bello University in Nigeria in December. The SRC public relations officer, Mr Sipho Ndhlovu, appealed at the news conference to organisations, companies as well as government departments to make use of university students during their long vacations by offering them employment. He said some students had worked before joining the university and therefore had experience in different jobs while others would like to gain experience. ZANU (PF) HOUSES--Bulawayo--The acting publicity secretary for ZANU (PF), Dr Eddison Zvobgo, confirmed yesterday the party was selling off a large number of its houses. Dr Zvobgo said: "In January last year we didn't have any accomodation and it was necessary to acquire homes. We needed to house people, not only to do with the electioneering, but for party people who had been with us for 15 or 16 years. "But now that so many people have had time to settle down properly and get themselves sorted out, we no longer need so many houses, and that is why we are selling a number of properties." Dr Zvobgo, speaking here, did not comment on what would happen to anyone still living in houses up for sale or about the cost of their maintenance. MEMBERSHIP IN IACO--Zimbabwe will become the 23rd member of the Inter-African Coffee Organisation (IACO) in November, a spokesman for the Ministry of Trade and Commerce announced in Salisbury yesterday. Application for membership was made by the deputy secretary of the ministry, Mr S.T. Muzanenhamo, who has just returned from an IACO board meeting in Abidjan. EDIBLE OILS SHORTAGE--Edible oil will be in short supply in Zimbabwe by the end of November and next year there will be a deficit of more than 20 000 tonnes unless farmers are offered incentives, the chairman of the Commercial Oil Seed Producers' Association, Mr Warwick Hale, said yesterday. Speaking to the Tsatsi Farmers' Association near Concession, he said the problem was caused by a drop in production, an increase in demand and inadequate prices. Soya bean production was down 37 percent this year on last year's crop while demand for edible oil had risen 46 percent. A further increase of 20 percent was expected in demand next year for edible oils, used for cooking and margarine. At present the producer price for soya was $170 a tonne, just 1,4 times the maize price, while experience throughout the world suggested the price should be 2,5 times the maize price, $300 in Zimbabwe, he said. The other major source of edible oil, cotton seed, was also underproduced because of the low price for that crop, he added. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Aug 81 p 1]

SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS--There is no grave shortage of medical doctors in the country, the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze, told the Assembly. The minister was replying to Mr Vote Moyo (PF, Matabeleland North), who had asked what steps the ministry was taking to encourage doctors employed in alternative occupations to resume their careers in the medical profession. Acknowledging that there was some shortage, Dr Mazorodze said this was not only peculiar to Zimbabwe. His ministry was embarking on an ambitious programme in the communal lands which required experienced doctors being prepared to work in rural areas. Offers of aid, he said, had been received from many countries but the ministry would first establish that the doctors were suitable for integration into the country's health services and were capable and willing to work in a rural environment. "With these offers of aid and our plans for recruiting," he said, "I am confident that Zimbabwe will be better served with doctors than most countries." In answer to Mr Moyo's question, Dr Mazorodze said there was no point in trying to persuade anyone to do something he did not really want, adding: "You can take a horse to water, but you cannot make it drink." FREEDOM MEDALS--President Banana yesterday created new medals to be awarded for service in creating the Republic of Zimbabwe. They will be known as the Liberation Awards. They are the Liberation Decoration, and a silver or bronze Liberation Medal. The decoration is five-sided, bearing a gold five-pointed start on a black background. In the centre of the star is a laurel wreath carrying a Zimbabwe bird on a red background. The reverse is plain silver. It is suspended from a watered silk ribbon in green, gold, red and black stripes. The medals are also five-sided and bear a five-pointed star with a Zimbabwe bird in the centre. On the reverse is represented two freedom fighters looking to mountains from which the word Zimbabwe rises. They are suspended from a similar ribbon to the decoration. No person may receive both the silver and bronze medal, but a medal and decoration can be awarded for pre-eminent leadership and great bravery. President Banana also issued warrants creating a long service medal for the public service, and a shooting proficiency medal for the armed forces, police and prison services. The long service medal will be awarded to employees who have served for more than 20 years after independence. A $100 gratuity will go with the medal. The shooting award will be made to marksmen who are judged to be the champion shot of their particular service by their commanders. The year of the award will be embossed on the medal. TRAIN SERVICE RESUMES--Normal train services past Inkomo Barracks will resume today with each train being preceded by an armoured motor trolley between Nyabira and Wellesey sidings, a spokesman for the National Railways of Zimbabwe said yesterday. The spokesman said the operation would continue until the controlled detonation took place by military personnel, probably early next week, and after any repairs and further clearance by bomb disposal squads had been completed.--Ziana [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Aug 81 p 1]

BRITISH PAPER SCORED ON UNITA REPORTAGE

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 5 Aug 81 p 12

[Article by Jose Mena Abrantes: "Fill Up the Balloon Again..."]

[Excerpts] The British newspaper THE SUNDAY TIMES (1,300,000 copies) last Sunday opened its "serious" pages to the clumsy games of imperialist propaganda.

This irresponsible act comes in the wake of the French television network's vile publicity, in a clear demonstration that the Western press is, once again, attacking Angola and its people, in a campaign obviously instigated by the aggressive policy of the new U.S. administration.

In THE SUNDAY TIMES, reporter Fred Bridgeland affirms that he rode over 150 miles of Angolan territory for over 3 weeks, at the invitation of the puppet bands in the pay of racist South Africa.

Impressed with what he saw in what he pompously calls "a rebel state in the bush in the southern part of Angola," Bridgeland embarks on a dithyramb of praise for the servile Angolan traitor, asking for the West's support and understanding.

Bridgeland's position is understandable. Assistant editor of THE SCOTSMAN, he has been known for a long time as a loyal and persistent supporter of the Angolan puppets, having even written a biography of their leader.

As proof of this, following the publication of a reportage on Angola by THE GUARDIAN in March 1981, Bridgeland demanded that this paper print his protest against the articles praising the progress accomplished by the Angolan Government, insinuating that writer Jonathan Steele had allegedly visited Angola at the invitation and expense of the Angolan Government.

(It is less understandable that THE SUNDAY TIMES forgot to provide readers with this information on Bridgeland's past and his beliefs...)

In his hasty and irresponsible research for the puppet leader's biography, Fred Bridgeland should meditate on the meaning of his subject's affirmation, according to which the puppets accepted South African assistance only "because one cannot fight two enemies at once."

The simple attitude of consorting with the most backward system of exploitation of man in the world already reveals the lowly political origins of the Angolan leader of Pretoria's principal fighting arm. As if this were not enough, Bridgeland also attributed to the puppet's leader the statement that they would support Namibian independence, despite the fact that, in his own words, "many people would not believe this."

Many have already compared the Angolan puppets to a balloon which is deflated or inflated in accordance with South Africa's or the Western bloc's orders. This recent recrudescence of an anti-Angolan campaign in the Western press proves that, once again, the balloon is being blown up, if not with healthy oxygen, then with weapons and renewed financial and moral support.

WESTERN PRESS ACCUSED OF DUPLICITY

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Aggression and Response"]

[Text] As was to be expected, the racist South African regime hastened to deny that it had invaded the sovereign territory of the People's Republic of Angola, alleging that our country was deliberately accusing South Africa of a situation for which the Angolan puppets in Pretoria's pay were exclusively responsible.

If for no other reason, the equipment and the human factor alone in this aggression (motorized infantry battalions, infantry, planes and helicopters, long-range artillery) would be sufficient to expose such ridiculous allegations.

Meanwhile, as was also to be expected, it was Pretoria's denial that was given better publicity in the Western press; therefore, a few observations on the mechanisms of the wide disinformation campaign mounted, once again, against Angola and its people, are in order.

The fact that most of the Western press organs only published the Angolan Ministry of Defense communique when they already were in possession of the racists' "denial"--to which, naturally, they gave larger coverage--reveals the existence of a general plan previously elaborated and set in motion.

The previous phases of this plan, which prepared world public opinion to accept the present racist aggression as a "logical" and "inevitable" action, are already well known.

First, there was the campaign conducted by French television on the Angolan puppets, allegedly filmed on Angolan territory. This was followed by additional reportage and minor articles in various Western press organs, which attempted to forcibly "remind" public opinion that the puppets are actually alive and kicking.

More recently, the more reliable British press clearly embarked on a game of imperialist propaganda, referring to a so-called "rebel state" deep in the bush, while, at the same time, affording large coverage to communiques issued by the puppets, according to which Cuban troops in southern Angola were preparing for an "imminent offensive."

All this "information," taken together with actual military operations, has now culminated in the simultaneous publication of Angolan denunciations and Pretoria's denials, in an attempt to divest the Angolan Government's accusations of any element of seriousness and truth.

This sequence of attack/publicity techniques of obvious Israeli inspiration leads us to conclude that we are confronted by a form of military-ideological war transcending military operations that demands a diplomatic offensive at the international level by all those forces and countries which are conscious of the fact that it is the future of African freedom that is at stake in Angola.

This is demanded because diffamatory techniques--which have at present exceeded the limits of shameless escalation--are aimed at challenging the degree of organization and the international support that the People's Republic of Angola can mobilize.

On the day when one more anniversary of the glorious FAPLA is celebrated, Angola is ready--as it has always been in the past--to neutralize and dismantle this tragic adventure by the racist South Africans.

On the international level, this is one more moment of truth, that can provide useful indications on the character of the Angolan people's true friends, who support the revolution and are ready to build with them the social and economic progress of all of humanity.

BRITISH IMMIGRATION FILLS S. AFRICAN MANPOWER NEEDS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 8 Aug 81 p 12

[Text] More than 20,000 British citizens will have entered South Africa by the end of the year, in an attempt to satisfy the racists' needs for qualified and... white manpower.

In a Johannesburg dispatch by Patrick Lawrence, the British daily THE GUARDIAN informs that employees of the South African embassy in London and Glasgow are trying their best to process a veritable flood of applications by British citizens for emigration to the country of apartheid.

The director general of the South African department of the interior, Van Der Merwe, confirmed that there has been a clear increase in applications for immigration, and that 20,000 British citizens will have entered South Africa by the end of the year, compared with the 8,700 who came in last year. He also stated that he expects the number of applications to rise to 120,000 by the end of the year.

This increase in immigration will permit the South Africans to remedy the acute lack of qualified white technical manpower. This lack reveals the contradictions inherent in the economic situation imposed by apartheid: it co-exists with widespread unemployment among poorly qualified workers in the numerically superior black community.

Statistics recently published by the South African national commission on manpower show that whites constitute less than 20 percent of the total population, but make up 30 percent of the labor force and more than 70 percent of highly skilled manpower. They also reveal that whites will number only 14 percent of the total population by the end of the century.

Because of the increasing need for manpower, which cannot be satisfied through immigration alone--the racists have had to resort to training hand-picked elements of the black population. However, even this measure does not compensate for the unjustifiable delays in development imposed by the theory of "separate development."

The racists' fear of any consequences deriving from the competition presented by qualified members of the country's majority is revealed by the number of applications made last year for the training of blacks as technical apprentices: only 82 percent in the entire country...

This explains Pretoria's initiative toward the West, helped by unemployment and inflation in Great Britain. Meanwhile, political observers of the explosive situation in Southern Africa believe that these new immigrants will not be welcomed, by the black population as well as by the racists, although for different reasons.

The black population resents them because it sees in them still another attempt at white domination and an obstacle to the increasing and inevitable need to train and promote blacks, no matter in how limited a manner. Research by the South African council for human sciences research reveals that white resentment is based on the belief that "immigrants will not fight for South Africa" if, as seems likely, the need would present itself.

In order to attenuate this resentment, an amendment to the citizenship law was introduced in 1978, granting South African citizenship after only a 2-year period of residence. The amendment also stipulates that any white immigrant under 25 automatically becomes a South African citizen. To avoid being registered as a naturalized South African citizen and thus be subject to compulsory military service, the immigrant must declare that he does not wish to become naturalized. However, such a statement entails a punishment: termination of the immigrant's residence permit and his classification as a foreign resident who may be deported.

These desperate measures aimed at maintaining economic and technical power in the hands of a white majority--be it of recent origin--do not hide the real problem: the days of apartheid are counted, and these last-minute injections will only prolong its agony.

IN PRAISE OF A SMALL PRIVATE ENTREPRENEUR

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 8 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Manuel Sampaio: "The Delicacies of 'Capela'"]

[Excerpts] Antonio Tavares Pereira, better known as "Capela," 49, jovial face with a British moustache: for the past 6 years—albeit intermittently—he has worked out of a small rolling restaurant on Avenida Marginal. He serves light breakfasts to early morning workers on their way to the bus. He built his small cart piece by piece all by himself and offers tasty delicacies sprinkled with powdered sugar and cinnamon, a hot drink and "Capela's" contagious good humor. His delicacies are indeed "finger-licking" good!

Antonio Pereira Tavares is not a public benefactor. On the contrary, here is a man who chose this simple activity to earn a living, but one should emphasize his dedication and the excellent quality of service he offers daily on 4 de Fevereiro Avenue, while in the majority of the city's restaurants, consumers are poisoned by dirty food while paying exorbitant prices for it.

I am writing this to say that (readers should forgive me for still tasting "Capela's" wonderful sugar-cinnamon delicacies) small intiatives of this kind should be encouraged. Antonio Tavares Pereira sells his product at a reasonable price and guarantees quality. This does not happen every day.

However, his small business is going through a difficult period: the lack of oil, flour and sugar to prepare his little pastries. "Capela" is tired of requesting these products from the department of domestic trade: he only receives rice and other stuff he does not need. Our man has the will to work, and is even thinking of setting up more of these carts, at the beaches, municipal markets, soccer fields, etc. "I could do that," he says, "but I get discouraged by the irregularity and uncertainty of supplies. I cannot work this way."

BRIEFS

CELEBRATION AT FOURTH MILITARY REGION--Huambo--The ceremonies commemorating the 1 August proclamation of the glorious FAPLA culminated in Huambo with a political meeting held at the military regiment of the fourth region command. The act was presided over by Lt Col Andre Pitra (Petroff), member of the MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee and Huambo provincial commissioner. Before Andre Petroff's speech, a number of messages from the OPA [Angolan Pioneers' Organization], the OMA [Angolan Women's Organization] and from Cuban and Soviet internationalists were read. Prizes were also awarded to fighters from sub-units who distinguished themselves during their political-military training within the framework of socialist competition. [Excerpt] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 5 Aug 81 p 2]

CONSTRUCTION MINISTER TO YUGOSLAVIA--A meeting on economic cooperation was held last Thursday between Manuel Mangueira, Angolan minister of construction and Vuko Dragasevic, Yugoslav minister without portfolio. The two ministers expressed their satisfaction about the large number of cooperative projects in the fields of health, economy and scientific and technical cooperation. Both ministers stressed the need to accelerate the implementation of some projects, especially those in the fields of construction, energy, industry and agriculture, and discussed the establishment of mixed companies. The Yugoslav side expressed an interest in the research and exploration of Angolan mineral resources--phosphate, copper, uranium, gold and gas and oil deposits. The signing of long-term commercial agreements and the diversification and intensification of exchanges should reduce the deficit of the Angolan balance of trade. [Excerpt] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 8 Aug 81 p 2]

OFFENSIVE EXTENDED TO PROVINCES--Col Dino Matross, MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee secretary for political and ideological work within the armed forces, stated to ANGOP [ANGOLAN NEWS AGENCY] that the generalized offensive against liberalism and disorganization decreed by the party's political bureau will be extended forthwith to the provinces of Benguela, Huambo and Bie. This official added that the offensive's general staff has termed these areas "pilot provinces" for the political campaign aimed at reestablishing party and government authority, at strengthening discipline at all levels and at controlling the activities of every organism in its field of action. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 9 Aug 81 p 1]

NEWSMAN SACKED--President Jose Eduardo dos Santos personally ordered the dismissal of an ANGOP (ANGOLAN NEWS AGENCY) reporter guilty of broadcasting a false Franco-Angolan joint communique scoring U.S. policy in Southern Africa. This agency cites the Angolan president's statements, according to which the communique--which also implicated certain Western countries--is a shameless lie. PRESIDENT'S FRENCH VISIT EXPECTED TO GIVE IMPETUS TO COOPERATION

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French 31 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] At the end of a hard-working and fruitful visit to the French capital, the president of the central committee of the PCT [Congolese Labor Party], who is also president of the republic, chief of state, and president of the council of ministers, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, returned to Brazzaville Wednesday, to find the capital already decked out for the big celebrations scheduled for tht 13th anniversary of the 31 July Movement.

As many notable guests including several chiefs of state of fraternal and neighboring countries are expected to attend this event, the head of the Congolese revolution only had 48 hours to devote to his work in France, where he arrived on Sunday 26 July.

The value of a Franco-Congolese summit meeting is self-evident, given the many historic ties between the two countries.

This was President Sassou-Nguesso's second visit to France since his accession to the position of supreme magistrate, the first having been in November 1979. But the importance of this second visit lay in the major political changes that have taken place since 10 May in the French political arena with the arrival of the French Left to power; changes which our country hailed as being a harbinger of dynamic new relations between the Congo and France.

The latter is still in fact our main trading partner and the latest figures on volume of trade and aid for the Congo speak for themselves. For example, in 1980 French aid to the Congo amounted to close to F CFA 21 billion, or 50 percent of all French foreign aid. This visit, to further underline its importance, came on the eve of a great national event: the adoption of the 5-Year Plan for development for 1982-1986, in the execution of which our country intends to work with all our partners in strict respect for mutual interests.

It is thus readily understandable that the schedule of contacts, meetings, and audiences for President Sassou-Nguesso during his stay in Paris was so packed that he gave himself no respite. Political and industrial leaders, businessmen, filed into his presidential suite at the Hotel Crillon where Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso and his entourage were installed upon their arrival Sunday. The presidential entourage included, among others: Comrades Justin Lekoundzou, member of the political bureau, minister of finance; Pierre Nze, member of the political bureau, minister of foreign affairs; Camille Bongou, member of the central committee of the PCT, secretary general for the presidency of the central committee, political advisor to the chief of state; Ange Poungui, member of the PCT central committee, financial adviser and general manager of the BCC [Congolese Commercial Bank], Ministers Combo-Matsiona (labor and social planning), Rodolphe Adada (mines and energy), Jean Itadi (industry and fisheries), Aime Emmanuel Yoka (cooperation), Pierre Moussa (Planning), Boniface Matingou (tourism and environment), as well as numerous experts. In the airplane which took him back to Brazzaville, the head of the Congolese revolution gave a brief interview to representatives of the national press. He described the results of his contacts and talks as satisfactory. In this way he confirmed the optimism observed at the end of his long visit at the Elysee with President Francois Mitterrand. The two statesmen had never before met, but everything worked to promote from the start an ideal working atmosphere. The People's Republic of the Congo, which is committed to the path of building a socialist society, has long enjoyed esteem and appreciation in French leftist circles, primarily because of respect for its leadership.

The long-term prospects opened up by the Mitterrand-Sassou-Nguesso meeting will make it possible for our bilateral cooperation, which has now been forever stamped with a new spirit, to be given real substance at the next joint Franco-Congolese joint commission meeting. The new French leaders, moreover, have already repeatedly asserted their determination to bring a new spirit to that cooperation, a new substance. This was the goal of the talks between the chief of state and Mr Dreyfus, minister of industry, Jean-Pierre Cot, the minister of cooperation and development, Claude Cheysson, minister of foreign affairs, all of which were intended to add momentum to this cooperation.

Also, Col Denis Sassou-Nguesso met with the secretary general of the French Communist Party [PCF], Comrade Georges Marchais, with whom he reviewed relations between the two parties.

The Mitterrand-Sassou-Nguesso one-on-one meeting was the core of the visit. The two statesmen reviewed the record of Franco-Congolese cooperation, while looking for ways and means to advance it further, as well as surveying the sharp problems faced at the international level.

France and the Congo have now established the framework needed to give their cooperation a new impetus.

Also, the president of the central committee criticized at length certain misguided Congolese elements in the French capital who are trying to distract our people; for example, during the reception organized Tuesday night in the drawing-rooms of the Congolese Embassy in Paris for the Congolese expatriate community.

GDR-AIDED TRAINING SEMINAR FOR PARTY PROPAGANDISTS DESCRIBED

Brazzaville BULLETIN QUOTIDIEN DE L'ACI in French 17 Jul 81 pp 1-3

[Text] The third training and reorientation seminar for party journalists and propagandists, organized this year with the assistance of the GDR, opened yesterday morning in the auditorium of the Rectorate of Marien Ngouabi University under the chairmanship of Comrade Florent Ntsiba, a member of the Political Bureau, chief of the Press, Propaganda and Information Department and minister of information, posts and telecommunications, in the presence of the GDR ambassador to the People's Republic of the Congo.

Speaking on this occasion, Comrade Florent Ntsiba first defined the nature of the present seminar which, he said, was part of a process to raise the awareness and improve the professional capabilities of news services agents. He said that this is a constant process, since our knowledge and experience of people and events are not permanent and unalterable. That is why, he said, "they must continually be reinforced, examined in more detail and readjusted in accordance with the new concepts of science and technology." This is what makes training and seminars necessary, indeed essential. And from that standpoint, the present seminar, as Comrade Florent Ntsiba noted, has no purpose other than to provide our agents with the knowledge for which they have an immediate need in order to do an effective job of high quality, inasmuch as the field in which news agents work is constantly changing.

Addressing the seminar participants directly, Comrade Florent Ntsiba said in particular:

"Comrade journalists, you are the ones who, following inquiries and investigations and after receiving and interpreting information, provide the general public with news from here and elsewhere. You are also the ones who, acting as broadcasters, present the thoughts of the vast basic majority before the public. You are the ones who, invested with the noble mission of passing on the watchwords and directives of the party, translate them into colorful, picturesque language that is accessible to the majority of the people. In that way," the minister of information stated, "you are agents who are objectively committed to the Congolese people's struggle, under the leadership of the Congolese Labor Party [PCT].

"But the committed journalist, the propagandist, must convince. To convince, he must provide arguments. Therefore, science and knowledge must be his constant quest."

The minister then expressed his thanks for the contributions of friendly countries, in particular the GDR and its Socialist Unity Party [SED], in training Congolese journalists and for having already organized several training courses.

Citing as an example the SED's determination to thwart bourgeois propaganda, the chief of the Press and Propaganda Department said that the GDR's environment was comparable to our own, pointing out in particular:

"The environment of the People's Republic of the Congo is also hostile. Our country is subject to imperialistic designs and intrigue. Bourgeois propaganda, refined and injected by the so-called popular press, is present and active, supported by its transmitters, relay transmitters, links and local gossips commonly known as the street radio. We therefore require a propaganda that is constantly on the offensive, vigilant and prompt to provide a response, in accordance with the directives of the Third Special PCT Congress. Such propaganda is possible only with journalists who are committed to the revolution."

The minister then acknowledged that a journalist's working conditions are financially difficult. But that, he said, in no way excuses turncoat journalists who have departed for other horizons for the sole purpose of making money.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMITTEE MEETING--The National Monetary Committee met on Monday, 13 July, in the offices of the Bank of Central African States at Pointe-Noire under the chairmanship of Comrade Lekoundzou Itihi Ossetoumba, minister of finance. During that meeting, the committee examined the main reports on the economic situation of the People's Republic of the Congo, which is characterized by: a drop in coffee and cacao production; a decline in local sales and exportation of timber; a substantial increase in petroleum production. An examination of the bank's financial position as of the end of April 1981 showed: an appreciable increase in foreign holdings; a considerable decline in the National Treasury's requests for advances from the Issuing Institute; an increase in the amount of paper money in circulation. With regard to the Congo's monetary situation as of the end of March, the committee noted a sharp increase in the total amount of money in circulation, in foreign holdings and in development credits. Conversely, financial claims against the government showed a considerable decrease. Finally, the committee examined the various rediscount requests which had been submitted by other banks. FRENCH OFFICERS DECORATED FOR SERVICES

[Excerpts] Before their departure from our country, 11 French military personnel were decorated late Saturday morning by Jean Konan Banny, minister of defense and civic service, in his office.

On this occasion, the minister of defense and civic service recalled that France and the Ivory Coast were particularly committed to the work of cooperation.

Addressing the award recipients, Jean Konan Banny noted that some of them, and Col Martin Rene in particular, had attempted to help us resolve the problems posed by the training of a young army.

With respect to Lt Col Jego Louis, Jean Konan Banny brought out the fact that for 3 years the former had devoted his efforts to the in-depth organization of the Military Firemen's Group [GSPM] and had given them the functional structures which would permit them from then on to perform their duties with unanimously recognized effectiveness.

The following persons were decorated: Col Martin Rene (Military Adviser at the French Embassy): Commander of the National Order.

Col Andre Marc (Technical Adviser at the Ministry of Defense and Military Aid office chief): Commander of the National Order.

Lt Col Jego Louis (commander of the Military Firemen's Group for 4 years then Technical Adviser to Colonel Guei): Officer of the National Order.

Lt Col Richet Maurice (chief of staff of the Civic Service): Chevalier of the National Order.

Doctor/Captain Dalger Jean-Marie (Military Firemen's Group): Officer of Ivorian Merit.

Lt Marc Marcel (Adjutant): Officer of Ivorian Merit.

Chief Warrant Officers Prades Maurice; Romo Jean Claude, (coauthor of an audio-visual course in first aid) he took part in a thousand GSPM actions during a 2-year period); Hivet Claude; Gravel Claude; and Warrant Officer Duerr Auguste received decorations of Chevalier of the Ivorian Order of Merit.

PROVISIONS OF NEW PENAL CODE SUMMARIZED

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 11 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Laman Bakayoko]

[Text] A new Penal Code has just been issued. It was adopted on 29 July 1981 by the National Assembly. The principal innovations of this Code deal with infractions and the penalties applicable thereto and certain general provisions.

As for the infractions, the Code has added the following principal new infractions:

—Infractions against personal rights (Articles 137 to 140). The present Code makes no provision for such infractions, although crimes falling in this category of infractions are subject to general reprobation.

—Racial discrimination. (Articles 199 to 201). There were no penalties under previous codes.

—Insults and violence toward authorities. (Articles 247 and 248, 255 to 257). These articles impose more severe penalties when the insults or violence are against the president of the National Assembly, the president of the Economic and Social Council or the president of the Supreme Court and, to a lesser degree, when they are directed against members of the assemblies over which they preside.

—Escape from prison (Article 265). Current Article 245 which is based on the fact that freedom is a sacred right does not provide for a penalty for escape from prison unless it is accompanied by violence. The new Penal Code imposes a penalty for the mere fact of escape, whether or not there is violence.

—Violation of administrative secrets (Article 270). These new provisions impose penalties for making copies without authorization or right of an administrative document considered secret or confidential.

—Carelessness of civil servants (Article 271). Carelessness on the part of civil servants is a fault which can result in disciplinary punishment. However, when such carelessness causes a serious disruption in service, it appears that disciplinary punishment is inadequate.

—Breaking of work contract resulting in damage to property (Article 273). New provisions are designed to end work stoppages or suspensions without prior notice in services necessary to the security and health of the populace. A prolonged stoppage in the supplying of water and electricity; strikes at hospitals, without the public authorities having time to take steps to ease the inconveniences of such situations, are serious acts which are worthy of penalty.

--Disloyal competition (Articles 320,321). In the current legislation, disloyal competition is not an infraction but obviously can give rise to monetary reparations. It seemed worthwhile, if we are to protect our nascent industry, to penalize such acts by imposing a simple fine, in consideration of their essentially profit-making rationale.

—Antidoping campaign (Articles 329, 330, 331). The new provisions are designed to prevent the use of stimulants for the purpose of winning sports competitions. Such practices can only be a disservice to the sports sector and at the same time are harmful to the health of young persons.

—Crimes and offenses against persons unable to protect themselves (Article 362). The present Code makes no provision for sexual violence or attacks against minors. The article covers minors and persons unable to protect themselves because of their physical or mental condition.

--Sexual offenses against minors (Article 355 and ff). The new provisions raise the age of the victim from 13 to 15 years thus strengthening efforts to eliminate this category of infractions. At present, it is not unusual to see young girls over the age of 13 attending primary school. Experience has shown that they are very vulnerable because they find themselves dependent on their teachers and establish a more familiar relationship with them in the primary education stage. Repression very often runs up against the fact that if the minor is over 13 years of age there is no infraction, at least if the attack is committed without violence, which is most often the case.

The new regulation will permit more effective action in the great majority of cases.

--Forced labor (Article 378). No penal regulation had been provided up to now to prohibit and penalize these practices, should the occasion arise.

—Opening of correspondence (Article 385). This article reintroduces the provisions of former Article 187 making it unlawful to open the correspondence of a third party; however, the article also provides for an exemption from prosecution for parents with respect to correspondence addressed to their children who are minors, living at home. It seems that the parents' recognized right of surveillance involves their right to check the correspondence of their children, should the occasion arise.

--Offenses against the civil status of a child (Article 386). This involves acts which are of a nature to compromise the civil status of a child (former Article 345). Following the example of the Belgian Code, the article provides for a maximum age of 7 years for the child for an infraction to take place. It seems that after the age of 7, the child is in a position to know his identity; and the offense at this point is more difficult to carry out.

--Abandonment of family (Article 387). Paragraph 1 modifies the provisions of former Article 337 concerning desertion of the conjugal domicile which had been declared null and void by the Supreme Court as being incompatible with the new laws to the extent that they were based on custom. However, the offense of abandonment of the conjugal domicile is now punishable, whether the infractor be the husband or the wife, if for a period of 2 months either party fails to meet the obligations incurred as the result of the marriage.

--Adultery (Article 391). Former Article 339 gave a very privileged status to the husband who had extramarital relations. For him to be convicted of adultery it was necessary for him to have maintained his mistress in the conjugal domicile. For the wife, on the other hand, adultery was committed when relations with a third party were observed. Should this discrimination be maintained at a time when the new laws have proclaimed and placed in operation the equality of husband and wife? Without going as far as complete equality, the code reduces the inequalities. Now, the husband will be convicted of adultery: 1. If he has sexual relations in the conjugal domicile with a woman other than his wife. Only one occurrence is sufficient. There is no longer a requirement for maintenance "of the mistress in the conjugal domicile, which at least implied habitualness." 2. If, outside the conjugal domicile, he has habitual relations with a woman other than his wife.

The wife will be punishable under the same conditions as previously.

--Fraud (Article 398). This article combines the various swindling offenses already in existence and adds fuel fraud, an offense committed through the abusive use of a motor vehicle or boat. Today we are helpless to prosecute such acts. The courts are undertaking legal proceedings for theft of gasoline, which is without merit if the user has taken the care to fill the tank before returning the vehicle. Many legislative bodies have made this act a particular offense. That is what the code does.

--Hijacking (Article 415). This code makes in-flight hijacking illegal, in accordance with international legislation adopted in this sector.

--Dishonest debtor (Article 421). Commercial relations are manifestly troubled by the impossibility of a creditor's seizing any property of his debtor; the latter, as soon as he knows that the creditor is after him, liquidates all his property; and the creditor has nothing more than the moral satisfaction of having obtained a judgment against him. The consequences of this situation are many:

--Merchants hesitate to file lawsuits;

--On the other hand, they take into account the risk factor in the calculation of their prices, which constitutes an abusive price raising practice.

--Impunity favors bad faith debtors.

It seems that following the example of many foreign legislative bodies it is proper to penalize a debtor who systematically organizes his insolvency.

Next week we will talk about "changes" and modifications in the levels of fines and about the general provisions. It is to be noted that upon completion of this presentation, we will examine all the infractions and penalties more explicitly.

PROGRESS OF HEVEA-GROWING PROJECT REVIEWED

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 14-16 Aug 81 p 10

[Text] The hevea-growing development project of the SAPH [African Rubber Plantation Company] in Bettie, which is being carried out 11 kilometers from the office of the subprefecture, consists of two operations. One operation involves the industrial sector with an area of 2,000 hectares; the other operation involves village plantations which are divided into two segments, one of which is 500 hectares and the other 1,000 hectares.

It was principally to obtain a status report on the Bettie village plantations program that the coordinating committee of the Bettie Hevea Development Project met recently under the chairmanship of Prefect Jean-Claude Yopbouet and in the presence of the SAPH director general and permanent secretary of the committee and the statutory members including principally the subprefect of Bettie, elected officials, cadres, the regional delegate of the Ministry of Agriculture, the higher chief of the Agnis of Indenie and the customary authorities of this locality.

The visit was organized shortly before this meeting on the industrial sector particularly in the village plantations, as well as on the construction site of the first stage of the three villages for the SAPH personnel. It aptly translates SAPH's firm determination to replace part of the natural forest of the Bettie region with a useful forest and to permit the people of the Bettie region to have material well-being as wished by the government and the party.

With respect to the village plantations, Guy de Roquemaurel, who is in charge of this Bettie project, told the members of the committee that the villagers, perhaps out of caution, had worked small areas in 1980. The 1981 program, he emphasized, is 200 hectares with a contingent of 163 growers, including 78 former candidates signed up since 1980 and 85 new candidates for 1981. During this period, the 78 growers would like to work 108 hectares. However, the 85 new growers will work 92 hectares; i.e., an average of 1 hectare per grower.

What is more, he emphasized that 90 plantations are in different stages of preparation.

Speaking in turn along the same lines, the SAPH director general, Jean-Baptiste Amethier, said in substance: "For the moment, the program whose financing is assured covers 500 hectares. We do not want to have 500 growers for a 500-hectare area. However, we would like to see 125 growers for the 500 hectares, for example. That is, we want every grower in time to have at least 4 hectares so that he can live off his hevea plantation. That area is available to all growers."

Reports by the director general and his assistant, Guy de Roquemaurel, covered the planting schedule until 1984, the socioeconomic infrastructures and the advances made by the BNDA [National Agricultural Development Bank].

The village plantations which were started in 1980 cover 113 hectares. The planting schedule provides for 200 hectares in 1980 and 187 hectares in 1982. In a related connection, the industrial sector started with 150 hectares in 1979; then 530 hectares in 1980; and, finally, 700 hectares in 1981. In 1982, the sector will have an additional 620 hectares.

The development of a second segment of 1,000 hectares; i.e., 500 hectares in 1983 and 500 hectares in 1984 is also scheduled.

During this meeting, the question of social infrastructures was raised. Let us say that the SAPH has decided to give the Bettie hevea development sector villages three kinds of architecture which were planned jointly with the ONPR [expansion unknown] and which are better suited to the housing needs of personnel at all levels. However, the focus of this program favors the establishment of families.

In 1984 a factory will be constructed near the Comoe in Bettie to process the production of the industrial sector and the village plantations.

There are also plans for construction of a SAPH center earmarked for the housing of this company's cadres. The subprefect has set aside a block from the Bettie plot. It should be noted that this installation requires a third village for the housing of the factory's workers.

The education of children is also a concern of the directorate general of the SAPH. In this regard, members of the committee were informed of the construction in the near future of two nursery schools in the complex of the SAPH villages.

The school infrastructures of the city of Bettie will be expanded by the SAPH.

From the resupply standpoint, an operating supply store has been set up in the city of Bettie by the SAPH. The management of the store is being handled by a native of that region.

Infirmaries are built in each village and weekly visits are made by a SAPH doctor.

In the miscellaneous category, "medium-size landowners" have promised to associate themselves with the peasants in this operation. Suddenly more than 15 new persons have signed up for at least 500 hectares. However, Amethier emphasized that the Bettie operation gives priority attention to the mobilization of "small landowners." On the subject of the advances in kind by the BNDA, the officials promised to find a solution so that such advances would reach the peasants on a timely basis. Let us recall that the planting program for 1981 began in June and action was taken by the SAPH to ensure better execution.

TWINNING OF DPRK CITY OF NAMPHO WITH TOAMASINA REPORTED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 7 Jul 81 p 2

[Article by Paul Manjakavelo]

[Excerpts] Toamasina--For the second time, the city of Toamasina has been twinned with another chosen city: Nampho, in the DPRK.

Such twinning is not a novelty for the city of Toamasina.

Several years ago, prior to the events of May 1972, Toamasina was previously twinned with the city of Holon, in Israel.

Many young Malagasy boys and girls and our special correspondent in Toamasina have souvenir photos of their visits to the sister city.

As part of the celebration of the 21st anniversary of Madagascar's independence, the city of Toamasina was twinned with Nampho, one of the very prosperous cities in the DPRK.

Toamasina is not only the queen city of valuable goods; it is also the king of ports.

According to the speech of the mayor of the city of Toamasina, Nampho is also a great port as well as a very industrially advanced city.

That is why, Mr Stephan Jacques said, that Toamasina-1 has chosen Nampho, for we look forward to cultural, social and technical exchanges.

Manguiers Station Square was the site where all of Tamatave attended this great twinning ceremony on Thursday morning, 25 June.

In addition to local figures and officials, also in attendance were Jean Baptiste Ramanantsalama of the CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council], Albert Zakariasy, vice chairman of the ANP [National Popular Assembly], Andre Allemand and Diore de Perigny, the consuls of France and Norway, and the elected officials of the decentralized community, Mr and Mrs Ratsiraka.

After the national anthems of both countries were sung, Mr Stephan Jacques and Mr Sen Djin Yong signed the pledge twinning the two cities.

The first speaker, Mr Stephan Jacques, mayor of the city of Toamasina-1, emphasized the solid ties of friendship and brotherhood between the two chiefs of state, President Didier Ratsiraka of the RDM [Democratic Republic of Madagascar] and President Kim Il Sung of the DPRK.

Speaking about the twinning, Mr Jacques said that it was part of the implementation of the RDM's "comprehensive" policy and that the cities of Toamasina and Nampho were united, for Korea and Madagascar hold the same views concerning the struggle and fight against imperialism and colonialism, to eliminate man's domination, injustice and exploitation of man so that peace can be established in the world for the benefit of progressive peoples. He also said that the agreement was made in order to develop the exchange of knowledge and experience in cultural, artistic, economic and social areas between the twinned cities.

He concluded his speech by calling for the peaceful reunification of an independent Korea as soon as possible, stating that Korean-Malagasy friendship and solidarity are eternal and indestructible and wishing long life to the two chiefs of state, President Didier Ratsiraka of the RDM and President Kim Il Sung of the DPRK, for them to lead both countries to a socialist paradise and long life to the Nampho-Toamasina friendship, to the DPRK and to the RDM.

The second speaker, Mr Samuel Lahady, administrator of the province of Toamasina, after extending a welcome to the ambassador and his delegation, spoke about the twinning of the cities of Toamasina and Nampho, which would make possible the exchange of young people, sports figures and technicians.

The third and last speaker, his excellency Sen Djin Yong, ambassador of the DPRK and representing Prime Minister Ri Jong Ok, pointed out that the twinning of the cities of Nampho and Toamasina is a striking illustration of the warm friendship which exists between the Korean and Malagasy peoples and the firm solidarity of peoples of nonaligned nations.

Speaking in turn about the twinning of Toamasina and Nampho, he said that the ties of brotherly friendship thus established will always be part of the history of friendship and solidarity between the Korean and Malagasy peoples.

In response to this speech, Jean Baptiste Ramanantsalama of the CSR noted that this day of the twinning ceremony included two festivities: the celebration of the anniversary of the independence of Madagascar and the ceremony twinning Toamasina with Nampho.

"We are well aware of the friendship which exists between the two presidents, Kim Il Sung and Didier Ratsiraka, and we hope, Mr Prime Minister, that you will convey to President Kim Il Sung our gratitude for the assistance which he has granted to our country and our gratitude to him."

BRITAIN CHARGED WITH INDIFFERENCE IN IRA DEATHS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Aug 81 p 8

[Article by Machado Graca: "Nine Drops of Blood on the Bride's Veil"]

[Text] In years past (fortunately), the English kings reigned over a vast empire.

The imperial crown was made out of gold, pearls and precious stones brought from America, India, Africa, Malaysia.

The winds of history and people's anger kept gnawing at the frontiers of this empire.

Today, Her Majesty the Queen and her government do not need to look far away to see the limits of their territory. They are right there, at their feet!

But in the solemn ceremonies of the monarchy, the crown and the ceremonial are still the same, because, in many respects, ideas do not change.

Large or small, close or far away, the empire remains the empire! One must defend it, even at the cost of rivers of blood, especially if the blood is not English.

Having fallen into the routine of one or the other official visit, either abroad or to the Ascot races, the monarchy was slowly receding into oblivion.

Prince Charles' wedding came to remind us that the monarchy is still in existence, with its horse-drawn carriages, its uniforms laden with gold and its imperial crowns.

The newlyweds then left for their honeymoon, going through Gibraltar, one of the last British colonies on Spanish territory.

By so doing, the royal pair irritated the Spaniards, whose king declined to attend the wedding and left behind the other colony still remaining in old Europe, Northern Ireland. It also left behind the serious repercussions of social conflict in British cities and the deafening noise of the silent deaths of the Irish guerrillas in the Maze prison.

While the royal yacht "Britannia" is cruising the Mediterranean, the IRA patriots are dying, one by one, for the right to have an independent homeland, for the right to have their struggle recognized as political.

Just as the FRELIMO, the MPLA and the PAIGC were considered "groups of bandits" by Portuguese colonialist fascism, so are the freedom fighters in Ireland considered common criminals by the British occupation forces in Northern Ireland.

Strange bandits, these people who condemn themselves to agonies that last more than two months to achieve political recognition. Strange bandits indeed, those who can muster thousands of people to attend their funeral and to whom their comrades pay military honors.

Indifferent to everything, the Prime Minister pretends not to see, and monarchy once again gilds its coat of arms.

But in the meantime, the white veil of Charles' bride is already spotted with nine enormous drops of generous Irish blood.

IRREGULARITIES IN POLICE FORCES NOTED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 13 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] Deputy Minister of Interior Carlos Raposo Pereira yesterday told residents of the Chamanculo district of the capital that they must watch out for criminals, but that they should also keep an eye on the very members of the Mozambican People's Police (PPM) force to prevent any irregularities that might occur.

"We are here to work together to improve the quality of service of the PPM." This was the statement made by the deputy minister during the course of a meeting he was orienting in that locality, the first of a series to take place in all the districts of the province of Maputo.

This series of meetings is being carried out after the guidelines established by the FRELIMO Party on what our people's police should be.

The meeting was characterized by the participants' critical spirit. Various issues were presented, which contribute to the social instability in this residential area. The Chamanculo district was one of the most affected by a crime wave; the situation has improved somewhat, but a number of difficulties persist.

For instance, issues such as dissension among elements belonging to the vigilance groups were discussed during the course of the meeting. A number of participants brought up certain irregularities in the activities of the PPM; in reply, the deputy minister provided some orientations: "Watch out for the criminals. But watch our police forces as well. This is the only way we shall be able to progress."

One of the main difficulties in this district is the presence of thousands of individuals from various provinces of the country who crowd the Argus Agency, awaiting contracts to work in the South African mines. Such nonproductive individuals are dangerous, because they resort to crime in order to survive. It was decided that the Mozambican People's Police will take the necessary measures so that these people await their contracts for the mines in their hometowns.

[Article by Fernando Couto: "My Cousin Who Is Late"]

[Excerpts] Last Sunday I went to the movies with my cousin Filimone. I had lunch at his home and, as usual, we ate and drank very well. Once again, I was surprised by the abundance and variety of foods and drinks. I tried to find out how he manages to get all this.

Filimone laughed, rolled his eyes and said only: "Buddy, it's all a question of arrangement!"

I interpreted this sibylline reply as something mysterious I could not grasp and deferred to my cousin when he told me, with a paternalistic expression on his face, that I seem to be somewhat out of it.

After lunch, we had a nap. Filimone says that "this is a habit I don't want to lose, buddy. Even at work, I always take a little nap whenever I can." That must be why I can never find him in his office in the beginning of the afternoon. Whenever I call, they always tell me that he is at a meeting or that he has gone out on office matters.

After four o'clock, we had a snack. Filimone was hungry again and accompanied his tea with a delicious cake. I had not eaten anything so good in a long time. Again, I asked him where he had bought it. Filimone, affecting that amused air he assumes at my naivete, only said: "This is another arrangement, buddy..."

We then decided to go to the movies. Unexpectedly, we agreed on what to see: "Moscow Does Not Believe in Tears." I was surprised that Filimone wanted to see a Soviet movie, because I have often heard him say: "Hey, buddy, socialist films are not for me! They are no good. Only some war movies are O.K." But this time, my cousin agreed, explaining: "This film won an Oscar. If the Americans gave it a prize, then the movie is good. O.K., buddy, let's go see it."

I had thought it was already late to get the tickets, but my cousin did not seem concerned. We rode to the movie theater in his car. Once there, shamelessly and without bothering to lower his voice or hide his money, he asked an acquaintance who was already standing in line to buy us our tickets. This is another arrangement, he explained.

He then waited outside for the movie to begin. I impatiently asked him to go in, but he protested, saying: "Hey, buddy, you must see and be seen! This is how you are noticed in society. How will you be respected if you are not in the public eye?"

That was his habit of coming later, expressing a need to show off. He used to say: "Buddy, you must show that you are important. If you arrive on time or before, no one notices you. If you come a little late, people will think you are very busy, you have many responsibilities and so you are respected, buddy, you are even admired!"

In the movie house, children were making a lot of noise with their chewing gum. One had the impression of being close to a swamp where the waters were boiling up and flowing in all directions at the same time. When I protested, my cousin said: "Hey, what's wrong? Can't the children have a good time? If the film is boring, what can they do? There is no political orientation that forbids this!..."

I became furious and sad at the same time. I was getting the impression that attendants, the controller, the police or the fireman on duty were all in agreement with Filimone!

'APS,' 'YONHAP' COOPERATION AGREEMENT

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 28 Jul 81 p 3

[Article by Senegalese Press Agency]

[Text] Mr Amadou Dieng, head of the Senegalse PressaAgency [APS], signed yesterday a cooperation agreement with the general manager of the YONHAP press agency of the Republic of Korea, Mr Kim Song-chin. Also present was Mr No Yong-chan, the South Korean Ambassador to Senegal.

This accord, the APS manager said, takes its place as a part of the bilateral cooperation between our two countries, but also as part of the effort by developing countries to achieve integration in fields such as information.

Amadou Dieng next underlined the importance which YONHAP officials give our country despite the distance that separates them. In fact, this agreement is the first that the agency has signed with a Francophone black African country.

All this led the APS manager to say that /"we will not fail to make the efforts necessary to strengthen this cooperation and contribute to better understanding between our two peoples."/

In his response, the YONHAP general manager, Mr Kim Song-chin, who came from Seoul expressly to sign this accord, expressed the hope that this act today would /"contribute to the dissemination of accurate and impartial news on the basis of the principle of equality and mutual respect."/

According to the YONHAP general manager, the accord should help strengthen the friendly relations and mutual cooperation between the Senegalese and South Korean people.

THREE FRENCH LOANS--The Central Fund for Economic Cooperation [CCCE] is going to provide Senegal three loans totalling F CFA 830 million. The first loan is destined to provide the Railroad Administration with three new locomotives and amounts to 330 million. As for the other two, totalling F CFA 500 million, they are going to the Thies Phosphates Company of Senegal and should provide partial financing for an investment program aimed at increasing the production capacity in lime phosphate, allumine phosphate, and attapulgite phosphate. The first loan is for 17 years, including a 6 year grace period, while the others are for 10 years with a grace period of 3 years. [Text] [Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 29 Jul 81 p 1] 9516

BOTHA TO HOLD NEW SUMMIT MEETING WITH BUSINESSMEN

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text] Cape Town.--A second Carlton-type summit is to be held on November 12 in Cape Town, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, announced in the House of Assembly yesterday.

Mr Botha, speaking during the debate on his vote, said the summit was necessary to further inform the private sector on the Government's envisaged Constellation of States idea and especially on the decentralisation of economic development.

He envisaged that the private sector would play a major role in the undertakings.

Similar to the Carlton Conference the Cape Town summit would be attended by members of the Government and its economic advisory council, as well as prominent businessmen and industrialists from the private sector, Mr Botha said.

Replying to a number of questions put to him by the Leader of the official Opposition, Dr Van Zyl Slabbert, Mr Botha said the Government did not consider the Coloureds to be a homogeneous group--or a nation in an embryo stage.

This had always been the view of the National Party, he stressed.

He said the Coloureds existed as different communities which had physical characteristics in common. They had the same religious beliefs as Whites and many of them also had a high standard of living.

Mr Botha confirmed that the Government was considering legislation with regard to a referendum which would be tabled either during this session or early in the next session of Parliament.

He said he was not prepared to commit the President's Council to the policy of the National Party, adding: "but I will not allow anyone to prescribe to me what the policy of the National Party should be."

Regarding the total onslaught on South Africa, Mr Botha said the Soviets were preparing to force Southern Africa to submit to its domination, He indicated that the South African Defence Force was preparing to meet any onslaught that could come.

BOTHA STATEMENTS DURING BUDGET DEBATE

Consolidation Plans

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] THE public should have a clear picture of the consolidation plans of the Government within the next 12 months, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, promised yesterday.

Speaking on his vote in the budget committee stage, he said he expected to be able to release a series of finalised proposals approved by the Cabinet within the next 12 months.

The Ciskei's consolidation proposals should be ready for parliamentary approval before the state became independent, Mr Botha said.

"The committee for co-operation and development should finalise their work before June 31, 1981.

Mr Botha referred to a statement issued by the Minister of Co-operation and Development last year, saying it spelt out clearly how the Government approached the question of consolidation.

Before a Cabinet committee reported, the Van der Walt committee would consult all land owners and negotiate with the Black national states before reporting finally to the Cabinet. Continued negotiation with the Black states would be conducted on an individual basis.

"Only then will the Cabinet's final decision be presented for approval by Parliament," Mr Botha said.

"As a result of these guidelines the Van der Walt commission has been able to review its report and clarify certain principles with the Cabinet," he said.

This made it possible to speed up negotiations with the Ciskei Government and the proposals would be ready for Parliamentary approval before Ciskei independence.

The foundation had now been paid for speedy finalisation of the consolidation proposals and the committee would complete its work by the end of June next year.

It was important that clarity and finality be reached on the issue.

White Dislodgement Issue

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Aug 81 p 4

[Excerpts] The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha yesterday described members of the Progressive Federal Party "manipulators of the campaign of defamation against South Africa".

Speaking during committee on his Budget vote Mr Botha said defamatory reports that found their way overseas were created in South Africa.

His government had helped to improve the good relationship between the State and the private sector as never before.

He had stated in which areas the Government had set out to bring about reform and Government was busy with that.

"I will not carry out Prog policy as you want me to."

Improvement

Other areas where the Government had brought about improvement were:

- Facets of society where there were areas of conflict had been referred to a commission.
- The question of Press relations was referred to a commission.
- In the field of education there had been serious problems which were subjected to an investigation.
- The Government had held continuous consultations not only with national states, but also with other neighbouring countries and these were continuing.
- The first phase of the constellation plan had been completed.
- The Government maintained a healthy economy for the Republic in difficult world circumstances and,
- The Government looked at the security situation, both on military and internal levels on a daily basis.

"This country and the Government are a watchtower of strength."

Psychosis

Referring to the presence of other race groups in White areas Mr Botha said there had been complaints of "dislodgement" of the Whites.

"This is a psychosis which certain members of the Opposition are trying to create. They always refer to figures."

There was a scandalous, mean, low campaign being waged against the Minister of Co-operation and Development (Dr Piet Koornhof) while that Minister was a model of humanity in his actions.

The presence of Black and Brown people in White areas did not necessarily mean dislodgement of the White.

More than 700 000 Black and more than 90 000 Coloured domestic workers did not mean dislodgement. They were performing a very necessary task which offered them job opportunities.

"If there is anyone who wants to do without domestic servants they are welcome to do so"

Own interests

The Opposition forever spoke about the urban Blacks but what about the more than four million Black farm workers? This was not dislodgement of the White because these people performed a vital task in the joint economy.

Neither did the presence of people of colour in the four main metropolitan areas mean dislodgement of the Whites. These people were also necessary and worked in these areas in their own interests.

And provision also had to be made for the Coloureds in the Western Cape.

The presence of decent people of colour was not dislodgement and the Government admitted that by the way in which it handeled the Nico Malan Theatre issue.

In the event of dislodgement causing friction and the occupation of amenities, which the Whites regarded as their own, it was unacceptable.

"The White regards certain things as being his "own" like schools, certain beaches and residential areas."

The country had to guard against the influx of members getting out of control and encroaching on peoples' ability to get together in their own area.

Aspirations

"If we want our own facilities we must try to create facilities for others to allow them to satisfy their own aspirations."

There was also a great need for the creation of facilities at the workplace.

The burden on local authorities was heavy. Consequently the Government had decided to ease it. But members of Parliament had a duty to lead in the creation of peaceful conditions in these area.

"It is priority to create facilities for workers and employers themselves will have to help create them.

"It was a mistake that we did not pay enough attention to this aspect in the past.

"But one must learn through one's mistakes and the Government is at present promoting the practice of consultation," Mr Botha said.

Coloreds Not a Nation

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha said yesterday he had never made a secret of the fact that he did not see the Coloured people as a homogeneous group, as a nation, or as an emerging nation.

Speaking during his vote in committee, Mr Botha said the Coloured people consisted of a variety of communities which had a number of common characteristics such as physical features, western style of life, Christian norms and language.

Under a National Party Government these people had, during the last 30 years, made tremendous strides in the socio-economic field and today 30 to 40 percent of them lived at a level which earned the greatest respect.

That greater progress had not been made in other fields was the result of stumbling blocks which had been placed in the way of the Government in respect of everything it had tried to do to enhance their development.

The Coloured people, he said, certainly had a right to decide their own community life.

It was interesting to note that the Progressive Federal Party-dominated Cape Town City Council was witholding a "very important report" on local government submitted by three council experts following an investigation overseas.

Correct Approach to Blacks

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] THE correct attitude towards consultation with the Black people was to keep one's self-respect and not "crawl" before them, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, said yesterday.

Speaking in committee on his vote, he said the Black man despised anyone who "crawled."

"If we adopt this attitude when we engage in talks with other population groups, we will have success."

There was a wrong approach among certain Whites when it came to consultation and negotiation with Blacks.

"It must not be a master-servant relationship."

There were also Whites who created the impression that the White man was always wrong and that the Black man was always right.

"The correct attitude would be always to be yourself — retain your self respect and to not crawl before the Black man. He will despise you for that and he will do to you what Chief Gatsha Buthelezi has done to the Progressive Federal Party."

Referring to the Immorality Act, Mr Botha said he was at present having discussions with church leaders on the matter and it would therefore be utterly irresponsible of him to say anything further about it.

He had made clear his standpoint to church leaders. The matter had serious theological and sociological aspects which had to be considered.

BOTHA: COUNCIL MAY MAKE SOME RECOMMENDATIONS BY YEAR-END

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] THE Government hoped to introduce legislation, possibly during the next session of Parliament or the one after that, dealing with the question of a referendum on "drastic recommendations" if any, made by members of the President's Council.

Speaking in committee on his vote, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha said the Leader of the Opposition, Dr Frederik van Zyl Slabbert, who had raised the matter in the debate, would then have a proper opportunity to express himself on the issue.

Referring to certain newspaper reports that there were differences of opinion between himself and the Vice-State President, Mr Alwyn Schlebusch, Mr Botha said:

"There are no differences of opinion between myself and the Vice-State President.

Apart from the fact that we are intimate friends, we have, on official level, always acted correctly towards each other.

"We talk about our problems. He has his specific problems and I have my specific problems. No scavenger politics will drive us apart and then feed on it."

The President's Council needed time to reach its decisions but it was hoped that it would be able to make certain recommendations by the end of this year.

It should be remembered, however, that members had been appointed for five years. The Government reserved the right to call on the Council to submit interim reports.

The Government would fulfil its duty to these members, even if they reached finality on the majority of their recommendations before their term of office expired.

'THE CAPE TIMES' PRAISES SUZMAN'S ROLE IN PROTEST MARCH

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Aug 81 p 6

[Reprint of "THE CAPE TIMES" editorial: "Mrs Suzman's Courage"]

[Text] The procession of protest from St George's Cathedral to the Houses of Parliament last week was an ill-advised undertaking, given the fact that public gatherings in the open are banned in Cape Town at present and that political protest is prohibited around Parliament at all times. It was largely due to the intervention of the MP for Houghton, Mrs Suzman, and the calm good sense of the police officer in charge that no one was hurt and the crowd dispersed in peace and good order. Mrs Suzman, who came out of Parliament to talk to the leaders of the march, was able to persuade the marchers to disperse and hand their memorandum to the Minister of Police, Mr Le Grange, outside the grounds of Parliament. It is a terrible reflection on the quality of political life in South Africa that such processions are banned at all and that peaceful protest is seen as a potential threat to the peace. But this is the position and the police have a duty to uphold the law. They could not allow the march to proceed on its way.

Mrs Suzman, who displayed the cool courage and good sense that people have come to expect of her, might have expected a better reception when she returned to the Assembly--and was greeted with sneers and taunts from Nationalist members. But the Nationalist government is out of touch with public feeling in the squatter controversy. It should take note that a serious situation has been reached when law-abiding citizens and sober, level-headed ministers of religion seem prepared to defy the law and engage in an illegal march, so strongly do they feel about the government's merciless hounding of squatters amid the rigours of a Cape winter. Parliament and the country should be proud of Mrs Suzman and South Africans in public life would do well to emulate her example of courage, moderation and good sense.

FRENCH AMBASSADOR REVEALS NEGATIVE ATTITUDE IN SQUATTER ISSUE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — The role of the French Ambassador to South Africa, Mr Bernard Dorin, in the abortive attempt to stage a demarche on the diplomatic front over the squatter situation in the Cape Peninsula as well as his role in the Western Five initiative on South West Africa, have now come strongly in to the limelight.

His attempt to stage a demarche was strongly questioned in political circles yesterday while foreign diplomats totally rejected his attempt to by-pass normal diplomatic channels with a view to interfere in South Africa's domestic affairs.

Long-standing

Mr Dorin, according to South African foreign observers and foreign diplomats, has a long-standing reputation of ill-feeling towards the South African Government.

With the advent of a communist French Government it was expected that he would play a negative role in South Africa and his abortive attempt last week to by-pass normal channels of communication by trying to stage a public demarche is now being considered as proof of what to expect from him as representative of his government.

The French Mitterand Government has already adopted an inaccessable attitude towards South Africa and there are strong indications that France might soon opt out of the Western Five contact group on SWA as well.

Meeting

Western diplomatic sources in South Africa confirmed yesterday that Mr Dorin, in his capacity as acting doyen of the Diplomatic Corps, called them together recently to consider a public demarche on the Nyanga squatting situation.

Most of those present then contacted their governments. The American Government rejected the step outright, a move which led to the failure of the envisaged demarche.

Some of the other representatives told me that they shared Mr Dorin's personal views about the squatter camps. They were not very happy about the situation, but their governments were also of the opinion that a demarche would not have served much purpose.

Dropped

One source said the use of existing non-public channels would have had better results, but that everything was bedevilled by Mr Dorin's action.

When a spokesman of the French Embassy in Cape Town was asked to comment on the whole issue and on the question of whether Mr Dorin was personally responsible or whether he acted on instructions from the French Government, he said the Embassy stuck to the statement of his Foreign Department in Paris, namely that "the demarche was dropped".

The new French Government has recently been sending missions all over Africa and from reports it has become clear that they have been supporting the Nigerian standpoint on South Africa wherever they can.

The basic French attitude towards Africa now is that it considers the continent as its future target for exports and as the major supplier of raw materials.

Secondly, it considers its own role towards Africa as one of representing the oppressed.

WIEHAHN RECOMMENDATIONS INCLUDE CURB ON SOME UNION ACTIVITIES

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] THE WIEHAHN Commission's fifth report on its inquiry into labour legislation includes recommendations which would curb the activities on unregistered trade unions — including political activities.

The commission recommends that employers and employees be encouraged to make maximum use of the statutory system of industrial relations for the regulation of relations between them.

Also it recommends that legislative adjustments to and the administration of labour laws be done in such a way as to provide maximal incentives for employer and employee organizations to avail themselves of the statutory system, as well as discouragement for by-passing the statutory system.

In an accompanying white paper tabled in Parliament, the Government makes it clear that unregistered trade unions cannot enter into agreements with employers, for example to deduct monies for political or subversive purposes, without the permission of the Minister of Manpower Utilisation.

This would make it difficult for a trade union to use its employer's organisation and administration for negative activities that could harm both the employer and the Government.

Some trade unions, especially in the Eastern Province, have already promoted a form of Black consciousness on the work floors — a step which can totally destroy harmonious race relations.

The commission further recommends that such trade unions be forced to supply the department on request of details of its financial position and its membership, as well as with any other information the authorities may need.

Another important recommendation is that strikers will no longer be allowed to picket in front of the premises of employers with a view to canvass the support of other workers or members of the public to support a strike.

RESERVE BANK HAS NO INTENTION TO STIMULATE ECONOMY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Aug 81 p 23

[Article by Daan de Kock]

[Text] THE South African Reserve Bank has no intention of stimulating the economy at this stage to prevent the growth rate from dropping further, the governor of the bank, Dr Gerhard de Kock, said in Pretoria yesterday.

Addressing the annual general meeting of the bank, Dr De Kock pointed out that the economy was still in a very strong, prosperous and expanding phase.

The bank had already taken strong anti-cyclical expansionary action, such as permitting the rand to depreciate against the US dollar by 22 percent since the beginning of the year, as well as various other methods.

"This is as far as the bank is prepared to go in the expansionary direction at this stage," Dr De Kock said.

The Reserve Bank had chosen the conservative and restrictive approach, thereby fully associating itself with the approach of "consolidation and adjustment" announced by the Minister of Finance, Mr Horwood, in his Budget speech two weeks ago.

Curbing inflation remained a high priority and, equally important in South Africa's long-term interests, the balance of payments adjustment process had to be permitted and encouraged to work, even if this had a certain pro-cyclical restraining effect on the domestic economy in the short term.

The lower gold price and other adverse external developments were facts of life which could not be ignored or neutralised by money creation or fiscal manipulation. One could argue about the appropriate methods of adjustment, weighing up their different costs and benefits, but the inevitability of adjustment had to be accepted Dr De Kock said.

The bank will therefore persist as long as necessary with its current restrictive monetary policy, aimed at reducing the rate of increase of the money supply and maintaining tight conditions in the various financial markets.

"In this process, it is essential to achieve and maintain realistic market-related interest rates, particularly in view of the need to finance both the prevailing current payments deficit and the budgetary 'deficit-before-borrowing' in a sound manner."

Commenting on interest rates, he said the present level of South African interest rates was not high in relation to either the domestic rate of inflation or real interest rates abroad.

Although the present bank rate of 12,5 percent was a record for South Africa in nominal terms, it had on various past occasions been much higher in real terms. In 1968, for example, it was about 4 percent in real terms, compared with the present minus 2 percent.

Dr De Kock said the importance for South Africa in the period immediately ahead of maintaining realistic market-related interest rates could not be stressed enough. The deficit on balance of payments current account and the "deficit-before-borrowing" in the Budget should not be difficult to finance — provided interest rates remain at market-related levels.

Expanding

Dr De Kock summarised the state of the economy at the end of August this year as follows:

- The economy is strong, prosperous and expanding, but still experiences some excess monetary demand and an unacceptably high rate of inflation.
- The slow-down in the growth rate is mainly due to a critical shortage of skilled labour and to other physical constraints. It is, however, still a fully stretched economy.
- The economy has already begun to, or is about to, enter into a downward phase.
- The decline in the gold price in recent months and the recessionary conditions in many industrial countries have an adverse effect on the economy as a whole, the balance of payments and the exchequer account.

- The balance of payments moved into a deficit, net foreign investments have declined and the rand has since the beginning of 1981 depreciated substantially against the rapidly rising US dollar.
- The "deficit-before-borrowing" in the Budget increased from an exceptionally low figure in 1980/81 to a higher, but not abnormal level in the present fiscal year.
- The money supply has now been brought under better control, financial markets have tightened and interest rates have risen to more realistic levels.

Comment

Commenting on the address, the chief executive of Assocom, Mr Raymond Parsons, said:

"The analysis of the present state of the South African economy by the new Governor of the Reserve Bank, in his first annual address, is realistic and reinforces the basic message of the Budget speech on August 12.

"It is clear that a combination of internal and external factors will inevitably result in a much lower rate of economic growth next year, and that business and employee expectations must be adjusted accordingly.

"Assocom supports the pursuance of a market-related interest rate policy, and welcomes the latest evidence of better control over the growth in the money supply. This is part and parcel of the current phase of consolidation and adjustment which the economy is entering.

"However, the problem of inflation remains too big to be tackled by monetary instruments only, and in this regard the role of administered prices in the inflationary process should not be under-estimated."

HIGH INTEREST RATES CAUSE DECLINE IN FOREIGN ASSETS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Aug 81 p 26

[Article by Jack Verblow]

[Text] JUST one more victim of high interest rates are Government holdings of overseas bills, the one very important foreign currency pool of the Reserve Bank.

While these have fallen by a massive 68 percent in the space of only five months to R32 672-million, an even bigger slump in this country's foreign "other assets", which include foreign notes, from March's R5 381 548-million to July's R4 782 912-million, shows that the loss has not been transferred into other areas of the lead bank's asset account.

Facility

Investment by the Reserve Bank in foreign bills, which is a trade facility offered to foreign creditors, is normally conducted through the purchase of dollar or sterling bills in New York and London at ruling interest rates.

With the Reserve Bank offering loans through a foreign country's money market, or through its central bank as is usually the case with investments into Switzerland, very competitive interest returns in other sectors quite often cause a movement away from trade credit finance, and a plunge in foreign bill holdings.

But with trade bills usually running for no more than three months and offering only 17,45 percent on the American market, Eurodollar rates offer an attractive 18,5 percent, which is an effective lure for funds that would otherwise be used in bill finance.

Although high-interest rates on normal deposits are high, there is little indication from the Reserve Bank's asset and liability statement to show that any of the R35 000-million made available to the lead bank from maturing bills over the last five months, has been invested elsewhere.

Swallowed

With South Africa's current account in a R3 000-million deficit, and the frank admission by the Reserve Bank governor, Dr Gerhard de Kock, that South Africa had made extensive use of its own foreign credit facilities, indications are that the money has been more than swallowed in trying to correct the balance of payments situation.

Raising of forward discounts is one measure to improve the lead bank's dwindling foreign reserves, but even they depend on the ability of the local exporter to penetrate overseas markets before they find any use for the discount benefit.

Trade remains the keynote, and with as many factors beginning to play a part as there are, the future remains a little foggy.

AUTO INDUSTRY PROSPECTS--Twenty percent more vehicles could have been sold in South Africa during the past 18 months if manufacturers had not had to contend with capacity limitations and a shortage of skilled labour, Mr Loot Muller, managing director of Datsun-Nissan, said in Johannesburg yesterday. Addressing the National Association of Automotive Component and Allied Manufacturers, Mr Muller said the next 10 years would show a dramatic re-alignment of the South African economy. The closing of the wage gap and the development of a strong Black middle-class would contribute substantially to the size and stability of the vehicle market. "The motor car industry in South Africa is indeed alive and well--but more important, we see the industry staying that way for at least the next decade," Mr Muller said. "We forecast a slight down-turn next year, but we see that as a much-needed breather to give the total industry some time for consolidation and preparation for the next upswing."--Sapa. FOREIGN MEDICAL RESEARCH COOPERATION--Cape Town.--Medical research in South Africa over the past few years had greatly benefited from international co-operation initiated by the Medical Research Council, the MRC president, Professor A J Brink, said in the MRC's annual report. Prof Brink said co-operative agreements with overseas agencies had enabled the MRC to provide sophisticated services for medical research which would otherwise have been impossible because of the high cost. One example was a computerised bio-medical information service which, at the press of a button, provided access to millions of medical publications. South Africa was the only country in Africa to have this service and the MRC had received a number of requests from other African countries for information. At present there were three terminals in the country, with Durban and Pretoria getting one soon, Prof Brink said. Prof Brink said an agreement between the MRC and the Israeli National Council for Research and Development was working well. The fourth scientific meeting between researchers of the two countries would be held in Cape Town next year. The theme would be the medical care of children with emphasis on the newborn--a mutual area of concern. A joint research programme in the field of coronary heart disease would be of great advantage, Prof Brink added. The MRC also encouraged individual contact between local and overseas researchers and last year it spent R190 000 on scholarships. "South Africa is recognised throughout the world for its medical expertise and is in a position to make excellent contributions to our understanding of disease," Prof Brink said.—Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Aug 81 p 10]

LECTURE ON INTELLIGENCE, STRATEGY—A former Director General of Military Intelligence, Lieutenant-General H de V du Toit, last night called for a rationalisation of South Africa's intelligence services. Gen Du Toit, who was recently appointed a professor in the faculty of National Strategy at the Rand Afrikaans University was delivering his inaugural lecture and said South Africa should keep abreast with basic patterns elsewhere to obtain the most effective use of the limited manpower available. Prof Du Toit's theme was "Necessity of a National Strategy" and he stressed that the term strategy had expanded far beyond its original military meaning. "As society and warfare have steadily grown more complex and the line between war and peace has becomed blurred, military factors had become more and more inseparable from the non-military in the conduct of war and measures to secure peace," he said. He added that as a result the term National Strategy had mostly replaced the older and narrower concept in war and state-craft. Prof Du Toit said the growing interest in strategic studies at universities in this country could result in a valuable contribution to South Africa's national strategy if academics developed the necessary expertise to produce studies tuned to the factual situation and did not depend on uninformed rhetoric divorced from reality. MABANDLA URGES FARMERS TO GROW MORE MAIZE

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla says it is contrary to the basic norms of economics to try to place artificial barriers in the way of international trade unless such measures can be justified economically.

Speaking at Nhlangano during the official opening of the Shiselweni district show on Friday, the Prime Minister acknowledged that local farmers found no adequate financial incentive from maize production because of the relatively low prices of maize compared to cotton, sugar and other cash crops.

"Some people have even gone to the extent of urging government to restrict the amount of maize products coming into this country in order to force a rise in maize prices on the domestic market," said the Prime Minister.

However, Prince Mabandla stated that in spite of such import restrictions and the existence of a guaranteed local market, the present level of domestic maize production still falls far short of domestic requirements.

"It is clear therefore that the restriction of maize imports has served no useful purpose as far as this nation is concerned," said the Prime Minister, who feels it would therefore be unfair to the Swazi public to continue with such measures which merely deny the Swazi people access to cheaper sources of maize supply without bringing about any improvements in domestic maize production.

The Prime Minister also acknowledged that the present high oil prices and rising inflation have hit the consumer public harder than any other section of the population.

For instance, he said the price of an 80 kg bag of second grade maize meal has gone up by over 130 percent since 1975--it now stands at almost E20 per bag.

He regretted that the rise in farming costs has been so phenomenal since the start of the current energy crisis that many small farmers just cannot cope with the present situation.

The cost of producing one tonne of maize, he said was today put at over E53, "which is too high for a small farmer."

The only glimmer of hope for the future of farmers and indeed the nation, the Prime Minister said, lies in grouping together into farmers' cooperative organisations who offer some prospects of spreading the crushing load of farming costs.

He expressed his satisfaction that farmers in the Shiselweni district already have the services of such a society. He hoped the society was equipped for the task of organising small farmers into appropriate cooperatives with a view to reducing the high costs of producing essential farm inputs.

"I am aware that many small Swazi farmers are not particularly keen about joining cooperative movements because of the unpleasant past history of financial mismanagement by some organisations of this nature," he told his listeners.

PM WARNS PARTIES OVER SUBVERSION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by Tim Chigodo/

/Text/

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday attacked people who are expressing fears and spreading malicious rumours about the creation of the Fifth Brigade of the national army.

Addressing thousands of people at Chinamhora and Uzumba, he said only people who planned to be dissidents and indulge in subversive activities should be afraid of the new brigade.

"Some people have even said they should have been consulted. Who are you to be consulted?" he asked. The Prime Minister, who is also Minister of Defence, said he had discussed the idea with the ZANU (PF) central committee and the army commanders.

Innocent people had nothing to fear because the brigade, which would have four battalions, would defend the country and deal with dissidents and other subversive elements.

"But if you plan to be a dissident, watch out. This unity will be called Gukurahundi (crack unit)," he told cheering crowds.

The leader of the Patriotic Front and Minister without Portfolio, Dr Joshua Nkomo, complained at the weekend that he had not been consulted about the formation of the new brigade.

Mr Mugabe warned the leader of the Republican Front, Mr Ian Smith, the UANC leader, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, and the ZANU leader, the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole that if they did not stop their "subversive" activities, they would be punished.

"I am giving them enough rope to hang themselves. It will only be one day," he said. The Prime Minister said Mr Smith, Bishop Muzorewa and Mr Sithole were being watched and their activities were known.

He said the three leaders had been forgiven and should operate in conformity within the spirit of reconciliation. "Muzorewa and Sithole have continued to associate themselves with the enemy," Mr Mugabe said.

The Government would not allow them to take the law into their own hands. A strong army had been formed to deal with subversive elements.

Mr Mugabe also disclosed that the Government would go into business such as mining, transport and factories to raise money to develop the country. The lives of the people would be changed for the better.

On the shortage of diesel in the country, the Prime Minister said it was a deliberate attempt by South Africa to delay supplies to Zimbabwe because it wanted to destabilise the country.

He appealed to the people to form groups so that it would be easier for the Government to provide the necessary social services they required.

The Prime Minister, who is on a four-day tour of Mashonaland East to explain Government policy and programmes as well as revitalising ZANU (PF), held closed meetings with provincial, district and branch party officials.

He was accompanied by the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, the Deputy Minister of Justice and Constitutional Affairs, Mr Godfrey Chidyausiku, the Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo, and the Deputy Minister of Works, Mr Rwizi Ziyenge. Today the Prime Minister will address rallies at Suswe in Mtoko and Mrewa.

GOVERNMENT TO BAN DUAL CITIZENSHIP

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Government can and will act to abolish dual citizenship and force people to choose their allegiance, the Minister of Justice and Constitutional Affairs, Senator Simbi Mubako, said in Salisbury yesterday.

Speaking to the National Unifying Force on the problems of the Lancaster House Constitution, he emphasised that any alteration would be done by entirely legal processes.

"The provisions relating to dual citizenship are not entrenched in the Constitution to the extent that it is for all practical purposes impossible to alter them.

"The Government can act, and the Government will act, to correct this unnecessary permissiveness."

Senator Mubako said the retention of dual citizenship had caused the Government many headaches.

"For example, there are senior civil servants who have Zimbabwean and South African citizenship.

"Quite apart from the security risk these people may pose . . . it seems to me inconceivable that a person can hold allegiance to two countries which have such conflicting ideals, aims and politics."

Large numbers of whites, especially those in the public service, had emigrated and the Government had to know how long each person presently in the public service would take to make up his mind.

Promotion and training was difficult to organise. People were being trained for particular posts, then leaving and forcing the public service to quickly train replacements.

Manpower planning throughout the country was affected and the present survey project hampered because information was continually becoming outdated.

Vacancies at the university and colleges and for apprentices were limited and the country could not afford to train people and then see them immediately leave.

"It is difficult to understand how a resident of Zimbabwe can even expect this, yet complaints are raised whenever priority is given to those who hold Zimbabwean citizenship only.

"If a person is desirous of retaining foreign citizenship . . . then let him serve his apprenticeship or obtain his degree or qualifications in the foreign country and not use Zimbabwe's limited resources to train people to work in other countries."

The 20 entrenched white seats, an anathema to ZANU (PF) and the majority of black Zimbabweans, also represented a danger more sinister than most people realised, said the minister.

Because of the overwhelming majority of ZANU (PF) and ZAPU in the Assembly the one major problem that could arise under the constitution, an alliance of white MPs and minority parties, did not.

'Repugnant'

But it would have been quite possible for ZANU (PF) to win 49 seats, winning at least 55 percent of the vote, but still be kept out of power by a minority-alliance and kept out constitutionally.

"The provision for entrenched white seats is repugnant. It is racist and potentially destabilising. It is subversive of democracy. It is subversive of peace."

But, warned Senator Mubako, the abolition of the seats needed the vote of every member of the Assembly and it was ludicrous to expect every white member to vote to abolish his post.

In reply to questions he said it might be possible to alter the way the white members were chosen or nominated and he promised to ask black MPs to sympathetically listen to whites in their district who needed help. The initiative would probably have to come from whites asking black MPs to take an interest in their problems.

Both ZANU (PF) and the PF wanted a presidential system of Government rather than the prime ministerial system and when the time was ripe the change would be made.

Similarly ZANU (PF) would consider a one-party system.

"At the same time we must not close our eyes to the dangers of one-party systems which we have experienced elsewhere in the world," said the minister.

The dangers ranged from complacency to dictatorship.

"The people of Zimbabwe have the assurance of the Government that a one party state will not be imposed but will only come through the ballot box."

ZVOBGO OUTLINES POWERS OF COUNCILS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 6

/Text/

THE Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, detailed the sweeping powers over the newly-established district councils encompassed by the District Councils Amendment Bill.

In his second reading speech on the Bill in the Assembly Dr Zvobgo noted that it was designed to enable the minister to appoint a chief executive officer to be known as a district administrator — who will be a civil servant —to a district council.

The district administrator's task was to ensure that the council operated efficiently within the terms of reference, and that all money accrued to and spent by the councils were "properly accounted for".

"As the district councils are new bodies which will have more powers and functions than the former councils, it is considered essential that each district council has a chief executive in the interests of good administration," he said.

He also noted that in terms of the Bill, while a council could appoint any suitably qualified officers to the council's own administration, such appointments were subject to the minister's approval.

This was to ensure "that suitably qualified staff are employed by the councils", he said.

"This will be particularly important in the first few years of a council's life as the salaries of these officers will be met by Government grants."

In a case where a council was either "unable or unwilling to carry out its powers", another section of the Bill provided that the minister could appoint a public servant, or a committee of public servants, to run the council.

He also intended to introduce another amendment — in the committee stage tomorrow — which would make it mandatory for every district council to establish a natural resources committee.

He told Mr Joseph Kaparadza (ZANU-PF, Mashonaland Central) that it would not be necessary for a district administrator to be able to act jointly for two district councils as it was intended that a district administrator would be appointed to each of the 55 councils in the country.

He also told Mr Kaparadza that the ministry would be monitoring district councils "very closely" for any maladministration, and that "the monitoring process is already under way".

TEKERE SCOFFS AT TALK OF FORMING PARTY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 7

/Text/

THE former Zimbabwe Minister of Manpower Planning and Development and until recently ZANU (PF) secretary-general, Mr Edgar Tekere, has rejected rumours that he is planning to launch a new party.

In an interview yesterday, Mr Tekere accused "certain people with over-enthusiastic imaginations" of spreading "these malicious rumours".

"I am still just content to go through a little period of reflection about the possibilities of the survival of the revolution and the interests of the people," Mr Tekere said.

He also denied having been approached or having received any suggestion on the formation of a new party and added: "Even if they do they will find it difficult to get me to listen. Although ears cannot help hearing, the mind can always refuse to digest."

Describing suggestions that he had been relieved of his duties as minister so he could take a rest, as "utter rubbish" Mr Tekere said: "When I need a rest, I shall ask for one. I do not want it offered to me.

"It is up to the Prime Minister either to take me or leave me and this is because I owe my political career to myself and to nobody else," he continued.

Mr Tekere said his relegation from the Government and the party ought not to surprise anybody because the incident was "one of the many stages along the path of the revolution".

Mr Tekere said he was strongly opposed to the introduction of a one-party state by legislation.

He said he was a strong advocate of a multi-party system. "If anyone seriously advocated the formation of a one-party state in Zimbabwe today by way of legislation, I should certainly be counted as a vigorous opponent of that move," he said.

Mr Tekere said the parties that had no place and no role to play "should be allowed to go into natural demise through their lack of support from the people".

The former minister called for open criticism, which he described as "an essential ingredient in the process of the revolution" because it allowed the masters of that revolution — the people — to tell their servants — the leadership — how they wanted their affairs to be conducted.

He said he would remain the people's task man in the revolution which he said was "decaying" because of the occurrence of nepotism, regionalism, tribalism and corruption.

Mr Tekere, who is ZANU(PF) MP for Mashonaland Central, scoffed at a recent Press report that the party would reimburse all personal funds he had spent on behalf of the party.

He described his debt as "very heavy" and ruled out any possible reimbursement because the party itself had no money and was in debt, he claimed.

STERN MEASURES 'TO SILENCE DISSIDENTS' PROMISED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Government will take stern measures "to silence dissidents" who refused to hand over their weapons, the Minister of Information and Tourism, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira, said yesterday.

Addressing a party rally at Mamina township in the Ngezi area, he said with the attainment of independence there was no need for anybody to continue possessing illegal arms of war.

The minister told more than 6 000 people that anybody still in possession of such weapons, should hand them over to the Government.

He also urged the people to develop a sense of unity and co-operation among themselves.

The Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo told the rally that people living in the communal areas should engage themselves in self-reliance projects to help develop their regions.

CENTRES

She told the gathering that her ministry had plans to open nutrition and child care centres for women throughout the country, and called on men to take part in community development and participate in agricultural shows.

The minister appealed to women to form committees from village to provincial levels under their women's league, which was to be formed shortly.

The Deputy Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Enos Chikowore, who officially opened the Ngezi communal council, told councillors to work hand in hand with the people and the Government.

Speaking at another rally at Mubaira township the Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Robeon Manyika, announced that the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, would soon tour the Mashonaland West province to meet the people.

He assured farmers that the Government was aware of their problems, caused mainly by the current diesel shortages.

Mr Manyika said: "It is not that we do not have the diesel but as you all know we import our oil through South Africa, which is controlling our oil imports."

He said such tactics were being used by the enemy to undermine the Government.

The deputy minister said he had consulted the Minister of Agriculture and officials of the Grain Marketing Board on the possibilities of setting up mobile depots.

Saying that people should be recruited into the party peacefully, Mr Manyika warned those who were still going about beating innocent people.

He called on the local population to be vigilant and help identify dissidents.

TWO PF VETERANS CHOSEN FOR HOUSE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

BULAWAYO.

THE Patriotic Front has chosen two prominent nationalists to fill the parliamentary seats made vacant by the deaths of the Minister of Roads Road Traffic, Posts and Telecommunications, Mr "TG" Silundika, and the Matabeleland South MP, Mr Boyson Nguni.

They are veteran freedom-fighter Mr Sikhwili K. Moyo and the founder and first commander of ZAPU's liberation forces, Mr Akim M. Ndlovu, who were chosen by the PF's central committee in Salisbury last weekend.

Mr Moyo, in his middle 50s was one of the first nationalist leaders in the country. He become a trade union national organiser in about 1948.

Born in the Gwanda area, Mr Moyo was educated at Mtshabezi mission and Gloag Ranch mission and later worked for several Bulawayo firms before becoming a full-time trade union organiser.

He was detained when the ANC was banned in 1959 and also following the prescription of the National Democratic Party in early 1960s. He later left the country and was based in Lusaka where he was jailed for smuggling arms from Zaire and Tanganyika during the days of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Mr Moyo is married and has several children, one of whom fought side by side with her father during the struggle. Mr Moyo received military training in the Soviet Union.

Mr Ndlovu, from the Belingwe area, is in his late forties. In the mid-sixties he was responsible for building ZAPU's armed forces in Zambia after he had returned from the Soviet Union where he had received military training. A forceful speaker, Mr Ndlovu is also a former ZAPU chief representative in East Africa. A former Dadaya student, Mr Ndlovu is married and has several children.

Their names have been submitted to parliamentary authorities for routine processing.

REFERENDUM ON ONE-PARTY RULE CONTEMPLATED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

A REFERENDUM could be held for the people to decide if they wanted a one-party state, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, told a rally at "Guta raMakoni" near Rusape yesterday.

Mr Mugabe also said if the money provided by the British for the acquisition of farmland ran out, and more was not forthcoming, the Government would not hesitate to acquire the land so that it could be redistributed among the land-hungry.

He said: "We made our commitment to redistribute land, and we are determined to keep our pledge."

Reiterating that a one-party state would not be imposed, the Prime Minister said: "We are going to ask you, some time in the future, whether you want a one-party state.

"When you, the people, give your consent that we should have it, then we shall have it, and nobody will be able to stand in the way."

Mr Mugabe was addressing a crowd of about 8 000 at the home of the late Mr Basil Nyabadza, the Rusape businessman believed to have been gunned down by Selous Scouts in 1977 for his association with freedom fighters.

The rally marked the final leg of his week-long tour of Manicaland on which he was accompanied by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, and the Minister of Industry Energy Development, Dr Simba Makoni.

Also present were the Deputy Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa, the Deputy Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Moven Mahachi, the Deputy Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Mr Moton Malianga, and the Speaker of the House of Assembly, Mr Didymus Mutasa.

In a speech in which the main theme was unity, the Prime Minister urged that the phrase "mwana wamai" (child of my mother) should make way for "mwana weZimbabwe" (child of Zimbabwe).

PRAISE

Although people chanted songs in praise of their leaders, it was important to remember that leaders were there because there were people to lead.

But even more important, he said, was that without the people's unity, there would be no effective leadership.

Mr Mugabe said: "Our ancestors, Chingaira Makoni, Kaguvi, Mukwati, Mombeshora, Chiwashira, Mbuya Nehanda and many others led the first chimuranga to remove the oppressors from their midst.

"They did not succeed, not only because fresh British troops were brought in, or because they did not have the right weapons, but mainly because they were not united."

'VICIOUS' ATTACK ON BLACK GOVERNMENT, THREAT TO COLUMNIST REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Sunday Mail columnist, Gono Goto, last week received threats to his life in a letter viciously attacking Zimbabwe's black Government, which it described as a mob of cannibals and savages.

The anonymous letter, on a half sheet of ordinary blue writing paper, is believed to be the work of members of a ring operating as agents of South Africa in Zimbabwe.

The full text of the letter reads:

"This is to remind you and the rest of the cannibals and savages that we are very soon going to flood the country, and indeed the whole of the world, with all the detailed newspaper reports, photographs, etc, of the filthy, obscene acts of rape, torture, murder, cannibalism that you and your mob inflicted on innocent men, women and children.

"We have carefully collected all of these reports during the war. We are now going to remind the world that a mob of savage cannibals are swiftly bringing this beautiful country down to the level of the gutter.

"Remember the Elim Mission murders and the obscene acts of torture and cannibalism that you inflicted on these small, helpless children? One of them was a two-week-old baby.

"Remember the shooting down of the Viscount's? And the savage bayonet attack on the survivors? We will neither forget nor forgive any of these barbarous cruelties. Don't think for one moment that you can rest on your laurels.

"We are quietly watching and waiting. We will have our revenge, don't worry, about 10 years from now. By that time this country will be in a far worse state of chaos, filth and bankruptcy than either Zambia or Uganda.

"We know where you live. We know your car. So boss up, kaffir boy.

"Even the carrion crows and the jackals who live at Heroes' Acre will turn their noses up at your filthy, smelly, sweaty black corpse." It was not signed.

Some sources believe the authors of the letter are part of what the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, was referring to during his tour of Manicaland when he said: "South Africa has a lot of agents in Zimbabwe who would like to destabilise the country."

But it could also be the perpetration of some sick people in Zimbabwe.

The letter has been handed to the Department of State Security.

The controversial columnist seemed unruffled when I interviewed him at his cottage. But he expressed surprise.

"Of course, I knew that not everybody enjoys what I write, which is natural, but it never dawned to me that somebody would decide to turn me into a corpse, just because he did not agree with what I write.

"I grant that there are many sick people in our country. The war and the mental stresses and strains that it caused could not fail to produce psychologically warped minds," said Gono Goto.

RABBI CLAIMS BLACKS ARE AUTHENTIC JEWS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 7

/Article by Davison Maruziva/

/Text/

BLACKS are authentic jews, says Rabbi Ambrose Makuwaza of the Jewish Church of God and Saints of Christ near Rusape.

Rabbi Makuwaza goes further in his claim and adds that the present-day Jews in Israel bear little resemblance to the early Israelites.

"It is for this reason that we dissociate ourselves from Jews in Israel. Their Judaism has become too politicised," he said.

The rabbi argues that many of the most important events to shape the nature and destiny of Judaism and the Jewish people began in Africa, and puts forward the following points to support his argument:

● There is evidence in the Bible and elsewhere that Abraham, the original Israelite, was of Cushite or black African descent.

● Abraham first travelled to Africa where he received permission to settle in the Middle East.

● Moses, the founder of Judaism, was born in Africa and therefore was an African.

● The first known Passover, which was a prelude to the exodus under the leadership of Moses, occurred in Africa.

● The scene of the all-important Mosaic revelation on Mount Sinai took place in the Sinai Peninsula, adjacent to the African continent.

● And there is evidence of African Hebrews through their Ashanti, Fulani, Yoruba, Ethiopian and Bantu offsprings.

Rabbi Makuwaza cites similarities between African customs and those of Jews in the Bible.

This black Jewish community, whose synagogue nestles between the hills overlooking Lake Rusape, was the subject of a study by Professor Terence Ranger when he visited Zimbabwe in March.

Asked why it had taken someone like him to prove the Hebrew heritage of Africans and what reaction he got from other churches, Rabbi Makuwaza said:

"Many people were kept from finding out the truth but even Jews in Israel now concede that blacks are the authentic Jews. Churches had shunned the idea but we now find they are responding to it."

It is difficult to say whether this religious group would be in existence were it not for fact that many people, including Pastor Stephen Makuwaza the late father of the rabbi, could not be baptised in the established churches.

That was in 1927 and after hearing of the black Jewish church in South Africa the people sent one of their members, Mr Archim Mucharangwa, to find out more about it. In 1944 it was established here.

Before the war, the rabbi claims, membership in this country was over 8 000 but now it stands at between 2 000 and 3 000.

Why was the church not established in Vengere urban area in Rusape where it would be much nearer to a larger following?

Rabbi Makuwaza said they did not have a large following in the town, but was quick to point out that some people were joining the church and moving from Vengere to the synagogue's vicinity.

There are no restrictions on members except that they are forbidden to smoke and to drink beer, wine or spirits.

On their relationship with Judaism in this country, Rabbi Makuwaza said they were exploring a basis for common ground. "This was not possible during the war years," he said.

RESTRICTIONS ON EMIGRANTS CRITICIZED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 12

/Editorial: "Unduly Harsh"/

/Text/

THE Government has just made it more difficult for people — which in this case means whites almost exclusively — to leave Zimbabwe.

For years there have been severe restrictions on the amount of capital an emigrant can take out — this was decreed by the RF Government. Then the present Government prevented emigrants taking out cars unless they were older models owned for at least two years.

Now comes the restriction on furniture and electrical appliances the lack of which is bound to make life very difficult for emigrants in their new homes.

The Government says it does not want to lose whites whose skills, at this stage at least, are valuable to the economy. But making it difficult for them to leave is not the same as encouraging them to stay.

Some whites may have reasons for leaving Zimbabwe that are not connected with Government policies or present or future living conditions; they are being p[illegible]lised. Others find the country not to their liking and want to leave regardless — to them we say good riddance.

The combination of all the restrictions now applied to emigrants could have the effect of retaining here a hard core of dissatisfied and perhaps disloyal people which the country could well do without. This is a factor the Government should consider. It should be weighed against the reasons given for the export ban.

HOVE: GOVERNMENT KEEN TO END STATE OF EMERGENCY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

THE Government is keen to end the State of Emergency, renewed for a further six months last month, the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, said yesterday.

Mr Hove said in an interview that the criteria for the scrapping of the emergency powers regulations — renewed for the third time since independence — should be a climate of peace and calm in the country.

Central to this, he added, should be a concerted effort from politicians, political parties and individuals to refrain from making alarmist statements designed to cause fear and despondency among the public.

"If nothing changes and the situation remains what it is now when people do not cause us anxiety by their alarmist statements," he said, "I would hope that it is the last time we have renewed the State of Emergency."

He added: "We are a government of the people and do not need Draconian kind of legislation to run this country and deprive anybody the freedom of speech. We believe in democracy. But then, there is no democracy without responsibility."

Mr Hove said that before the State of Emergency was extended, the Government hardly used any of the powers.

But the emergency powers have been useful in many ways, he said. "We amended them to deal with economic crimes, particularly with regard to illicit trafficking in Sandawana emeralds."

Saying that the Government had not used the powers to detain people, Mr Hove noted that there were some people who took advantage of this.

"We still get people who issue statements which cause alarm and despondency among the public, statements they know are untrue but give them all the same to make a political point."

The minister said in recent months progress had been made in improving law and order, particularly in Matabeleland where it had deteriorated earlier this year with armed robberies being reported there every week.

"We have been fortunate to have made good arrests which have enabled us to clear a number of cases of armed robberies. The percentage of arrests has definitely increased. I am hopeful and optimistic that given the co-operation of the public we will get over the problem."

He stressed the importance of co-operating with the police, saying he did not believe armed robbers were "mysterious people living in thin air", but that people were harbouring and feeding them.

"People in Matabeleland must be forthcoming and report these people to the police," he said.

An improvement had been brought about by splitting Matabeleland into two police provinces, each under a senior assistant commissioner.

STREAMLINING

"Bulawayo and Western Commonage now form one province under Senior Assistant Commissioner Madziwa. The rest of Matabeleland, which is largely rural, is another province under Senior Assistant Commissioner Day. This streamlining has contributed to the efficiency of the police force in the area.

Mr Hove also said the minimum three-year mandatory sentence for illicit trafficking in precious stones had the desired effect, reducing the number of contraventions of the law.

"We have forced a decline in illicit trafficking in emeralds," he said.

"It is also because we have opened a police post right at Sandawana. We asked the mine management to tighten security in addition to deploying more men than used to operate in Belingwe."

Mr Hove also urged the public to take advantage of the remaining seven days of the firearms amnesty which expires on August 31, by handing over illegal and unregistered weapons to the police.

"After that date, if you are found in possession of weapons, you can expect the full force of the law to take its course, which is a jail sentence of not less than five years."

NATION'S BANKING SYSTEM CONSIDERED 'MODEL'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

ZIMBABWE'S banking and financial infrastructure tempered by the need for self-reliance during the years of sanctions when the country was denied open access to international capital markets, came through the era well-equipped to lead the massive post-independence reconstruction and development drives

The system has long been the envy of other African states and it has, with justice, been described as the most sophisticated and developed in Africa north of the Limpopo.

This applies both to the degree of self-sufficiency built up over a number of years and in the services, specially adapted to meet the needs of a developing country, provided by a range of financial institutions.

The opening up of the economy and the expanding foreign interest in trade and investment in this country will lead to new demands being made on the system. But the institutions are already strengthening their back-up services and there is little fear that the sector will lag.

The resilience of the sector is well illustrated by the changed patterns in the 25 years of sanctions. In 1965 the net public sector borrowings in the domestic capital market amounted to only $13m.

At the end of the era, central government's domestic debt was $1 425 400 000 and foreign debt totalled only $414 800 000 — a remarkable performance in the mobilisation of local resources.

The major shock to the system so far this year was the increase in the bank rate from 4,5 percent — a figure set before UDI in 1965 — to 6,0 percent at the end of February.

The private sector's fears that this could soon be followed by another increase, and general uncertainty about the possibility of a new course being steered by the Reserve Bank, led to a period of caution within the market.

Investors tended to switch out of long term investments and into call or short term deposits in order to take advantage of any further increase in the interest rates

The Reserve Bank and Treasury acted quickly to provide re-assurance that the hike was not the forerunner of frequence rate changes, and more stability has returned to the market.

Of course concern in the immediate future is the rapid escalation of central Government debt — up 97,8 percent from $931,8 million in March 1978 to $1 843,3m. by December 1980, according to RAL's latest guide to the economy.

In January the Government announced that it was acquiring 61 percent of Rhobank Ltd., which has since changed its name to Zimbank. The Government paid $26,6m. for South African-based Nedbank's shareholding in the local bank, with payment in three tranches over two years.

This is in line with the Government's stated objective to participate in strategic industries within the country.

And in mid-July the Bank of Credit and Commerce Ltd. opened its doors in Salisbury as the first new commercial bank to be established in the country since 1963.

BCCZ is 53 percent owned by Bank of Commerce and Credit International, based in Luxembourg, and 47 percent owned by the Government.

Also this year, Barclays Bank in Zimbabwe became locally incorporated, a move which Minister of Finance Enos Nkala said in his Budget speech, he hoped many other companies would follow.

This year's budget is also significant for marking a distinct switch in Government policy away from deficit budgeting, with the local market supplying the borrowings to finance much of the recurrent expenditure as well as loans for capital projects.

It will take time to move away from deficits which first appeared as the war escalated, entirely, but Senator Nkala was widely praised for his apparent determination to move onto a healthier course.

Announcing a final deficit of $484.8m. (adjusted to comply with the International Monetary Fund formula), Senator Nkala said: "The final position is the beginning of real progress in redressing the deficit profile.

"This progress is cause for reassurance but it must be continued so that within a short period we can again say that borrowing is not to finance consumption but for investment in capital projects and for improving our productive base."

His philosophy is that borrowing for recurrent expenditure does not solve the problem, it merely postpones the day of reckoning.

And, if continued on a significant scale for any length of time, "rapidly compromises our creditworthiness and threatens the viability of financial management in future years".

At the heart of the sound management of Zimbabwe's banking system is the Reserve Bank, which acts as banker to the Government and certain statutory bodies as well as the country's banking and financial institutions.

It is also responsible for the issue of currency, administers the issue of Government loans and treasury bills and manages the loans sinking fund.

In addition, the Reserve Bank manages the clearing house for the commercial banks which keep accounts with it, controls the country's foreign reserves and acts as lender of last resort to the financial institutions. It administers the exchange control legislation and handles Zimbabwe's gold output.

Private sector participation is handled by two discount houses, four merchant banks, five commercial banks, a range of financial institutions and three building societies.

FRENCH BANK MAKES SALISBURY ITS REGIONAL CENTER

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

BANQUE International pour L'Afrique Occidentale has made Salisbury the centre for its regional operations in east and southern Africa.

The decision was taken in the wake of increasing trade between French companies and Anglophone countries, as opposed to the traditional area of business, namely the Francophone African states, said Mr Antoine d'Arjuzon, BIO's managing director.

"A number of our clients have interests in exporting goods to east and southern Africa and therefore we have been considering a position in this region," said Mr. d'Arjuzon.

"We were offered investment possibilities in Kenya, but when the Lancaster House agreement was signed we thought we would look at an alternative to Kenya and that was Zimbabwe.

"Last year our president, Mr Jean Dromer, headed a mission of French industrialists to Zimbabwe.

"As a result of that he thought that this country merited and deserved a closer look," said Mr d'Arjuzon.

Last month BIO opened a representative office in Salisbury.

"This representative office is a reconnaissance office and a regional office for Mozambique, Zambia, Botswana and Malawi," he said.

But BIO haven't been slow off the mark as far as financing new projects in Zimbabwe.

It has already participated in the eurodollar loans raised by Air Zimbabwe and the Wankie Colliery Company.

More than 200 French companies have sent representatives to Zimbabwe since independence last year in the hope of securing a new market for their products.

"Many of our large companies wish to do business here, and BIO wishes to cater for them in this part of the world, which up to last year was unknown to many people in France," said Mr d'Arjuzon.

BIO, he continued, had always studied an area in great detail before going in.

"To do banking in a country it takes time to know the people, their business habits and this knowledge cannot be acquired in a few months.

"We want to combine patience and a sense of opportunity and what our compatriots do will be of great importance to us.

EXPERIENCE

"We have an image of being the bank for Africa in Europe and the United States.

"No other institution in France has our experience in dealing with black Africa."

During last week's flying visit Mr d'Arjuzon met the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Senator Bernard Chidzero; the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala; and the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Mr Simba Makoni, with whom he discussed a number of projects.

He also met the heads of all the major banks and various leading businessmen.

"While I have not been here for as long as I would wish, I can say that all the signs for Zimbabwe's future are very hopeful. BIO are so impressed with what they have found here," said Mr d'Arjuzon.

BIO was originally established in 1860 as the Banque du Senegal and later became the central bank for West Africa. In 1960 it lost that privilege and became a commercial bank.

It now operates subsidiaries in 15 West African states from Mauritania to Zaire. It also has merchant banking operations in France, the United Kingdom and West Germany.

Since 1960 BIO has spread its wings to Nigeria where it owns 40 percent of the International Bank for West Africa. This investment now accounts for 30 percent of the assets shown in BIO's consolidated balance sheet.

BIO is 51 percent owned by Compagnie Financiere France Afrique which is in turn 52 percent controlled by Banque Nationale de Paris, Credit Commercial de France and the Drouot insurance group.

Other shareholders in CFFA include the Central Bank of West Africa, Union de Banque Suisse and Banco do Brasil.

NKALA TELLS OF SNAG WITH TIED ZIMCORD AID

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE assistance pledged at the Zimcord conference led to the problem of it being tied to purchases from the donor country, the Minister of Finance, Senator Nkala, said at the seventh annual meeting of the Whitsun Foundation here yesterday.

Speaking at the official opening, the minister said the purchases led to a "hotch-potch" of equipment entering the country with the need to establish new organisations to service the equipment. It also tied up scarce foreign exchange in new lines of spares, he added.

"Similar types of equipment, compatible with that already installed can often be purchased elsewhere at much better prices."

He appealed to donor countries to consider easing the burden to developing countries by permitting purchases of capital equipment that would be to the best advantage of the receiving states.

"I am aware that some donors have recognised this problem and have made appropriate adjustments, and they are to be commended.

He said the generally depressed situation in the world trade with deteriorating prices for the nation's export commodities led to a reduced ability to sustain growth in exports.

"This in turn effects our ability not only to service external debt but also to increase allocations for the import of essential raw materials needed to satisfy a growing internal market and to maintain growth in exports.

"Clearly there must be a link between the cost of debt servicing in any one year and the impact that cost will have on the amount of foreign exchange forecast to be earned in that year."

He said this ratio was used in determining country creditworthiness and assessing country risk.

The minister said the debt ratio of Zimbabwe should not go any higher than 12½ percent and 15 percent.

The minister said Zimbabwe was approaching the point where debts could no longer be contracted for repayment in 1984, 1985 or 1986. Debts payable after 1986 could only be safely contracted, he said. — Ziana.

NEW AFC BOARD TO BE FORMED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

BULAWAYO

THE Government is dissatisfied with the way in which the Agricultural Finance Corporation is run, and a new board will be announced before the end of the month, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture Dr S within Mombeshora said at the weekend.

"We are not very happy with the way the AFC is being run. There are, therefore, going to be new board members," he said in an interview.

The move in no way interfered with the AFC's independence in deciding which applicants received loans, he said.

"The AFC still has the right to decide on loan allocations to all its applicants."

Dr Mombeshora said the AFC was established as a credit organisation supplying loans to commercial farmers, but when the present Government attained power the AFC was directed to provide a special loan facility for small scale commercial farmers in the former Purchase Areas.

"We know some people have benefitted from these facilities while others have failed to get loans or have been turned down."

The Minister also announced that the AFC was opening new credit facilities for peasant farmers and loans would be granted to applicants before the next planting season.

He said this would be limited to goods such as fertiliser, seeds, implements and other agricultural necessities.

Dr Mombeshora said that the establishment of co-operatives by peasant farmers would ease administrative problems in granting loans.

Though the country had suffered a severe outbreak of animal diseases recently, the situation had greatly improved, he said.

However, he urged all farmers not to be complacent and said people must continue dipping their cattle and having beasts regularly checked by veterinary services.

Dr Mombeshora advised people to stop selling their cattle to private contractors as they paid less than the Cold Storage Commission.

Dr Mombeshora said he was holding discussions with the Minister of Transport so that his ministry could be allocated more vehicles to help remove all maize before the rains.

"People must not be discouraged from planting more maize in the new season. We will move all the crop before the rains and next year we will be in an even better position to cope with a higher production of maize and other crops as far as transport is concerned."

ANGLO-AMERICAN TRAINING SCHEME TO BOOST OUTPUT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 15

[Text]

THE Anglo American Corporation in Zimbabwe is spending $3 million this year on an expanding training programme which includes the building of four technical training schools and the widening of existing semi-skilled training.

The Group also more than doubled its 1981 apprentice intake to 116 youngsters, of which 72 percent were black. This brought to 370 the number of apprentices within the Group, more than 60 percent of which are black. And, of the national intake of mining industry apprentices, 32,5 percent were recruited by Anglo mining companies.

The technical training schools are being built at the Bindura Nickel Corporation, Hippo Valley Estates, Wankie Colliery and Rhodall Refinery. A minimum of $80 000 is being spent at each school on up-to-date tools and equipment, while specialist instructors have already been recruited.

Work has also started on the preparation of professional objective-orientated apprenticeship training programmes, and in recogniton of the valuable roles played by semi-skilled workers, programmes will be expanded later this year.

The Group Manpower Planning adviser, Mr Keith Thomas, said the aim of the substantial increase in apprentice training was to achieve self-sufficiency in skilled workers by the end of the decade, while augmenting national apprenticeship training at Zimbabwe's technical colleges.

The new training programmes are a vital part of the project. "Although it is important to have skilled instructors and well-equipped training facilities, one of our most pressing responsibilities is the creation of a clearly-structured apprenticeship training programme which meets the varying needs of Group companies while producing qualified and capable artisans," he said.

"The programmes will enable us to give our apprentices formal training in the different trades, with specific learning objectives and standards. Their progress will be monitored by instructors."

The schools will provide apprentices with only practical training. They will still be required to attend technical colleges for their theoretical training, and will have to write qualifying examinations.

Anglo's training effort covers areas ranging from technical and administrative skills to university sponsorship and courses in basic literacy and numeracy.

More than 27 000 of the Group's 29 000 employees have so far been tested in basic arithmetic and English in a massive campaign to determine educational standards of all employees, which is necessary if further training is to be carried out.

And about 14 000 employees have been tested in a continuing exercise to determine their suitability for further training.

The basic arithmetic and English test (BAL) is followed, if necessary, by a nine-month literacy and numeracy course, held at this stage for people in positions of authority to make them more efficient and productive in their jobs.

The course consists of six months spent learning English, including reading and writing, and three months on simple arithmetic. Teaching methods include the use of books, manuals and video films.

MARKETING BODY MINERAL MANAGEMENT POLICY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 16

/Article by Andrew Whaley/

/Text/

THE Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, has said that the setting up of an independent corporation to market all Zimbabwe's minerals would ensure that the Government knew where minerals were going, at what price and where they were being stockpiled.

Mr Nyagumbo outlined the need for a "logical minerals policy and rational mineral resources management" in parliament recently.

He said then that it was "Government's objective to provide greater security for mining investment through the proposed marketing corporation".

In an interview following his parliamentary speech, Mr Nyagumbo said that the corporation would not discriminate against any market. "We will sell to any market which has paid the price."

The corporation, which would be made up of "private people and people from Government" would visit the proposed markets to negotiate a fair price.

This system, he said, would prevent some of the Zimbabwean firms' sister companies from undercutting more lucrative markets elsewhere.

He said that a large company operating in Zimbabwe (Union Carbide) had previously sold its minerals to its sister company in the United States, regardless of price.

If such companies failed to pay the agreed price on general world markets, then than company would "forfeit the right" to exclusive buying, said the minister.

"The present system is not very satisfactory to the Government in that individuals and individual companies might produce and market their products individually and independently. Their records are given to the Chambers of Mines and in turn to the Ministry.

"In order for the Government to realise the value of its minerals, the corporation should be established," Mr Nyagumbo said.

The corporation would be a "monitor" of all the minerals in this country and market them in conjunction with the firms concerned and the Chambers of Mines.

"It would always negotiate for a better price," he said, "if necessary stockpiling until the prices are good".

Asked whether the corporation would not interfere with marketing procedures and perhaps be a costly exercise, the minister said that it would be no more costly than a firm's normal marketing policies.

"It will be very efficient and effective because we will definitely monitor the production and transportation of those minerals from the mines to the market-place."

"Of course," he added, "as we go by we wil continue to discover loopholes and be able to close those".

The reaction to the proposal had, however, been "very nasty," the minister said.

"They (the companies marketing minerals) believe it is an interference to their free enterprise system and the Government is accused of partly nationalising the industry and restricting their incentives of further production and expansion.

"We do not believe this, of course. We believe it is in the interests of the country that the Government should be able to realise the value of all the minerals produced in this country."

Mr Nyagumbo said that it would be a naive government that did not know the value of its minerals and where they were being sold, particularly as minerals were non-replenishable.

Asked if the Government might be keen on this corporation to prevent minerals from falling into "the wrong hands", the minister replied:

"The price must be the price that is on the market. There are no wrong hands if we are getting paid."

He suggested that the opposition to the proposed minerals, metals and gemstones corporation was understandable in the circumstances. "For any change people panic, but when it is applied, their fears are allayed because they all see no reason to be depressed about. They all continue to produce and continue to expand."

The new corporation would "clamp down on illegal export of precious stones which has been a thorn in the flesh for a long time".

It would also be "a relief" to the small miner who had previously been unable to dispose of his ores easily. "This time it will be easier for them to bring their ores to the marketing corporation and get cash which will enable them to continue with production."

The large mineral producers would, however, receive cash only when the products had been finally marketed.

Mr Nyagumbo said generally he was pleased with the way the multinationals in Zimbabwe had taken up the challenge to train local African labour for skilled jobs.

He said they were beginning to "realise the value of minerals before they are exported to any market". Previously the training of skills was confined to whites who tended to leave the country with their skills.

"The indigenous people do not want to go elsewhere and will contribute here," he said.

The Government was encouraging companies to improve their working, accommodation and recreational facilities for the work forces. He said that Rio Tinto, Anglo-American and Rhodall had all begun progressive training schemes to overcome a critical shortage of mining skills.

BRITISH SUGAR COMPANY TO COOPERATE IN BIG FARMING PACT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 15

/Text/

A LOCAL and a British company have reached an agreement to co-operate in future large-scale farming and energy development in Zimbabwe.

They are Monex Africa (Zimbabwe) Ltd and Tate and Lyle of Britain.

Monex Africa's managing director Mr Luxmore Chiweshe and Tate and Lyle technical services senior official Mr C. A. Johnson said at the Salisbury Show yesterday that the two companies, working in close co-operation, would be in a position to negotiate with developed countries for the aid to implement large-scale agricultural and rural development projects.

The two companies also pledged to work closely with the Government in reconstruction programmes.

Mr Chiweshe, who has just returned from an overseas business tour where he held a series of meetings with financial institutions, business houses, British Government officials and a number of large companies said all the parties concerned had shown a keen interest in the development of Zimbabwe.

He said the company would be promoting a number of projects which are still in the pipeline. If a major project was set up in Zimbabwe, the two firms would make it a priority to establish a training scheme to ensure that the management handed over the running of the company to skilled Zimbabweans.

Tate and Lyle has undertaken more than 1 000 assignments in more than 70 countries, involving the planning, implementation and management of agricultural and agro-industrial projects mainly in the Third World, Mr Johnson said.

SURVEYS

These include land and water resource surveys and planning studies for agricultural development in Afghanistan, Colombia, Ghana, Honduras, Indonesia, Kenya, Malaysia, Mexico, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Tanzania and Zambia.

It also provides regular advisory services under annual technical consultancy agreements, covering crop production, crop handling and factory processing. These agreements provide clients with an independent review of their current operating practices and procedures as well as advice on the latest technological developments.

The company has been involved in managing major agricultural and agro-industrial development schemes in Belize, Jamaica, Malaysia, Swaziland, Trinidad and Zambia.

PLASTIC INDUSTRY EQUIPMENT NEEDS MODERNIZATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 11

/Text/

PLASTICS manufacturers in Zimbabwe are facing huge problems with their plant and machinery, most of which is more than a decade old.

Not only has the existing equipment suffered from normal wear and tear, but much of it is now completely outdated in terms of modern technology.

The need for the latest high speed machinery is essential if Zimbabwe is to compete on the world export market.

Mr K. R. Berk, managing director of Prodorite, said most local companies were now faced with an accelerated need to complete this exercise as they had been unable progressively to update their machinery during the years of sanctions.

"To do this would cause a severe drain on capital resources and the country's foreign currency reserves," he said.

"It is nevertheless essential that the industry updates its capability in the shortest possible time in order to remain competitive with those countries which are not constrained by such considerations."

Mr Berk said in many cases ancillary equipment to the main plastics processing machines had been made locally or "in-house".

This had been acceptable during sanctions when there was no access available to international suppliers.

"But it is now further reducing our competitive ability in international markets," he pointed out.

"Many of these ancillary machines are now worn out, too slow and without spares back-up."

In many cases, the antiquated machinery still producing plastic articles in Zimbabwe were now so completely out of date that the original manufacturer no longer produced the required spares.

"Currency for replacement machinery will be needed by the plastics industry for many years to come."

ORGANIZATION OF METALWORKERS UNION REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 7

/Text/

A SICKNESS and accident fund will be established next month by the General Engineering and Metal Workers' Union, the general secretary of the union, Mr David Chimmoro, said yesterday.

The scheme would offer workers a 24-hour cover, whether they became ill on or off the job and as long as they could produce evidence of their being sick.

A workshop was held recently in Salisbury by trade union delegates from 10 African countries. It was organised by the union in conjunction with the International Metal Workers' Federation.

Mr Chimmoro said the delegates reviewed workers' situations in Africa, communications between African metal workers, the development of co-operative unions in Africa and the role of trade unions in the reconstruction of their various economies.

"We expressed deep concern at the violations of human and trade union rights in some countries in Africa. We pledged to do our utmost to raise the level of world consciousness on the plight of five million refugees on the continent," he said.

"We endorsed the African Women Workers' conference call for equal rights and better status for African women. We pledged that unions must play their part in nation building and governments must create the institutions or machinery through which workers can effectively participate in decision making at all levels."

The delegates urged all trade unions in the metal industry to push trade union education on collective bargaining.

LIBYA PROMISES TO PROVIDE OIL

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/ A Libyan delegation will visit Zimbabwe soon to discuss Zimbabwe's needs, including oil supplies, with a view to developing trade relations, the head of the department of culture and information at the People's Bureau in Salisbury, Mr Amer Burassi, said.

Speaking in an interview with Ziana, Mr Burassi said as soon as the Beira-Umtali pipeline was complete, Libya would begin immediately to supply refined petroleum products to Zimbabwe.

The 37-year-old diplomat said Zimbabwe had achieved a great deal since independence adding that the country had made "a wonderful start" in the long struggle for economic independence and social progress.

"As a member of the OAU, Libya is proud of Zimbabwe as a symbol of successful mass-oriented struggle on the African continent," he said.

Asked to comment on Libya's role in Zimbabwe, Mr Burassi said: "We are here to strengthen the relations forged between the people of Zimbabwe and Libya during the struggle against racist oppression in this country."

He said Libyan moral and material support given to Zimbabweans during the liberation war would now be transformed into "fraternal assistance and cooperation" in the economic field.

The Libyan envoy also said that all Libyan citizens were undergoing military training in preparation for any possible American attack against the Libyan people.

Mr Burassi called on all African states to join Libya in condemning the Reagan Administration's acts of aggression against a certain member state of the United Nations and the Organisation of African Unity.

In his reaction to the recent shooting down of two Libyan military aircraft off the Mediterranean coast, Mr Burassi questioned American intentions in undertaking military manoeuvres near the Libyan seashore.

"All these brutal acts are being carried out to force us to withdraw our support for liberation movements in Southern Africa and Palestine and for our condemnation of treacherous Camp David accords," he declared.

He said although the United States might not attack Libya itself, attempts were being made to "spark off" a regional war between the Libyan people and the pro-American states of Egypt, Sudan and Tunisia, which were receiving sophisticated military hardware from the United States.

"But we are assured of all the backing because the majority of the people in these countries, including the United States, support our stand and our policies."

He said moral, political and material support for SWAPO, the ANC and PAC would continue despite American imperialist tactics of intimidation against progressive and democratic forces in Africa, and abroad.

"In our endeavour," he said, "we are coordinating our efforts with our brothers of the frontline states."

Saying that Namibia and South Africa would soon be free and independent, Mr Burassi stressed that Libya was prepared to supply soldiers to fight alongside SWAPO guerillas and ANC and PAC fighters in their legitimate struggle.

HEALTH OF TRAVEL INDUSTRY REPORTED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

/Text/

THE initial reactions of doom and gloom for the travel industry when the cut in holidays allowance was announced in the Budget last month, have not proved correct.

A survey of the major agents last week showed there have been no cancellations of bookings and in fact a few agents reported outstanding business for 1981.

Managing director of Halmac Travel, Mr Aidan Lane, said: "The figures for 1981 are very healthy and we are optimistic, but it is difficult to predict further than three to four months ahead."

A spokesman for Musgrove and Watson said there had been an upswing in business, partly due to people expecting further cuts in the future.

Another agent felt the full effect of the cut would be clearer in December and he expected a 20 percent drop in travel outside Zimbabwe.

Turning to trends in travel, all the agents saw a decrease in holidays to South Africa, but this was due more to visa requirements than allowances.

Two agents reported major problems and bottlenecks with visa applications, particularly during the busy school holiday period.

Mr Lane said: "There has been a drop in the traditional holidays down south, but there has been a compensatory increase in travel to the Seychelles, Mauritius and Kenya."

Budget Tours and World Travel Bureau agreed that the trend is toward holidays on the Kenya coast and Mauritius and WTB is concentrating on marketing Kenya package tours.

One result of the cut in allowance is that people are planning and choosing their holidays far more carefully.

Agents have capitalised on this by promoting their professional skills in arranging holidays with particular regard for making full use of the allowance.

To counter any future reduction in the tourist industry, Miss Jane Narraway of Allen Wack and Shepherd said: "We must concentrate on promoting incoming tourism.

"Air Zimbabwe is beginning to bring in cheaper fares to Europe, and the industry can help itself by controlling rate changes."

Miss Narraway also mentioned that one of Zimbabwe's big advantages is that it is new on the tourist map and agents must push the novelty factor.

Conflicting accounts were given on the state of group travel and package tours. Some agents were emphasising the value of group travel due to discounts on fares and holiday allowance endorsements.

Other agents felt group tours could suffer in popularity, for instance supporters of sporting teams may not be keen to spend their allowances cheering for their favourite teams in obscure countries.

Travel for business purposes is a major part of most agents' business and would continue to be given careful attention.

The general feeling was that granting of applications by the Reserve Bank would become stricter, but as long as a sound case was put forward there would be no problem.

"Every business traveller is an ambassador of this country and should be in a position to present a good picture," said Mr Lane.

On the local scene agents believed there will be a definite upswing in residents taking holidays at home, in particular, making use of package tours.

A spokesman for Zimbabwe Sun Hotels said there was a significant increase in domestic bookings, but he did not feel the budget announcements were a major factor.

The Goodwood group of hotels also reported heavy booking and indications were that people were staying longer at Zimbabwean resorts.

Contributory factors were promotional projects, holiday allowance cuts, and adjusting to a peacetime environment.

National Parks and Wildlife Provincial Warden, Mr Arthur Wood, said they had been completely inundated.

"Everything has gone stark raving mad. We cannot cope with the backlog of bookings. I must apologise to the public for delays," he said.

RUBBER INDUSTRY DECREASES FOREIGN DEPENDENCY

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 12

/Text/

THE rubber industry in Zimbabwe has advanced to the stage where 80 percent of industrial rubber products which were imported a few years ago are now being made in the country.

A firm with a big hand in this achievement is Rubber and Allied Products (Pvt.) Ltd., Bulawayo, which recently completed extensions worth almost $500 000 to its rubber and plastic divisions.

General manager Mr Des Wright said the sales branches in Bulawayo and Salisbury were showing new records of turnover each month.

The firm started in 1964 making rubber pads for the national railways. These were fitted under the railway line between concrete sleepers and were a component of a fastener unit.

"After a while, we started looking at other products which the railways used and we progressed from there. Now we have 15 presses making more than 4 000 different rubber products for the railways, mining and industry," said Mr Wright.

"Because of the type of mixing we do here, which is open mill as against closed mill, we have certain pollution problems. This has forced us to stick to black rubber products.

"We have done some experiments with coloured car mats and grey pencil rubbers, but we have to be extremely careful and wash the products at various stages of manufacture.

"Our method is slower but efficient, and we do watch the quality all the time but we will have to progress soon to the closed type of mixing if we are to keep pace with the demand.

"We are actively looking into the possibility of buying a Banbury internal mixer because our production levels are getting so high and we need to get through a bigger tonnage of rubber," he said.

The firm is pressing forward with its development of the rubber to metal process, particularly for heavy industry, and is heavily involved in making tank linings, and rubberising the loading area of trucks.

A new project is its hose-building division which turns out various types of suction and delivery hose, including outsize hoses for the railways and mines. It is currently experimenting with hose for use by petrol companies when they deliver fuel to service stations.

The vee and fan belt division makes all the country's needs, while its injection moulding machine division makes all the plastic base plates for the railways. These baseplates have replaced the rubber ones previously made by the firm for the rail fasteners.

Mr Wright said the firm had started an export drive in Zambia, Malawi, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zaire, Kenya and Nigeria to show the authorities the advantages of the fastener, when considering railway development.

The firm is part of an international group — British Tyre and Rubber Co. Ltd. — and is one of only three subsidiaries making the rail fastener.

They are made and used in South Africa and Australia, and it was hoped to extend their use to Africa, Europe and the Far East.

"Being international, we have all the technical advice we need, and we hope soon to bring out specialised rubber technicians to Zimbabwe to help train the local people.

"Far too much reliance has been placed in the past on specialised European staff, and we are now actively getting Africans involved in the chemistry of rubber.

"We have Africans in our laboratory, and we have approached the University of Zimbabwe for an African, who we can train as a rubber technologist.

"General supervisors are being sent on courses on management and supervisory techniques, as well as production and stock control, to make them more efficient and productive," said Mr Wright.

DUNLOP EXECUTIVE ON PROGRESS OF RUBBER INDUSTRY

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

/Text/

ZIMBABWE is developing the potential to become self-sufficient in rubber, says a senior executive at Dunlop Zimbabwe Ltd.

Seven years ago, Dunlop planted a trial plot of rubber seedlings, called Hevea Braziliensis, in the Honde Valley.

Despite being neglected during the war, they are beginning to look healthy and are about ready for tapping.

Mr Ian Broughton, manager, Tyre Technical Development and Performance, said another 100 seedlings were planted recently, and these would be monitored regularly.

He said greater hopes were being placed on guayule, a small rubber-bearing shrub, which is being grown at Grasslands Research Station, and at five test sites in Matabeleland.

"The shrubs at two of the sites are looking very promising. Unfortunately, the yield is not high but the potential is there. If oil products continue to rise we will have this alternative."

He said guayule was a shrub that thrived where nothing else would grow.

It liked arid conditions and was most efficient under stress.

This made it an ideal venture as it would not take over land needed for food crops.

"Based on the average yield of the shrub, we would need about 13 500 ha under cultivation to meet our yearly requirements at Dunlop," said Mr Broughton.

The shrub grows to about knee-high in four to five years, and then it is cut down and macerated. Mr Broughton said normally the roots are dug out, but research in Zimbabwe had shown that the root stock could grow again.

Apart from supplying vital raw materials to the rubber industry in Zimbabwe, the Hevea Braziliensis tree also bears large quantities of resin, which could be used in the paint industry, and bagesse (pulp) for use in firing boilers.

Dunlop was established in Bulawayo in 1959, when it started making a range of basic type patterns of cross-ply construction. It now makes sophisticated and specialist patterns, including the radial car tyre, for most makes of vehicles, as well as tubes and other rubber products.

One of its basic products is rubber compound for the retreading industry.

COMPOUND

Mr Broughton said synthetic rubbers are used for car tyres because of their better wearing properties, although they have a high heat build-up because of their structure.

The bigger sizes used on trucks are made of natural rubber. While they have a low heat build-up, they lose a little on performance.

For the car radial tyre, nine different compounds are mixed in various ways, using synthetic and natural rubber, to obtain the special physical qualities required in the tyre.

The basic recipe for rubber is natural and synthetic sulphur, an accelerator to speed up the curing process.

Mr Broughton said rubber was attacked by oxygen, ozone, and light and water, and an anti-oxidant was added to protect it.

There was also a filler system, using abrasive carbon black for all types of tyres.

"All raw materials are tested before use, and we have limits laid down which are coveted by the parent body in the United Kingdom," said Mr Broughton.

"If they do not pass these limits they are rejected. Every batch of compound is checked for its physical condition, stiffness, plasticity and specific gravity."

An average batch is 185 kg, with a total of about 18 tonnes of rubber being processed each day.

A Banbury mixer, costing $750 000, will be on stream this month. This will boost production by about 80 percent and place the company in a position to meet the increased local and export demands.

The new mixer will take the strain off the existing one, which is working seven days a week.

Though having the same capacity — 185 kg — it has more refined features, more efficient cooling, higher mixing speed and faster discharge mechanism.

Mr Broughton said a lot of development was taking place as new cars were introduced.

The testing of all types of tyres went on all the time.

The company had a test fleet of cars which tested performance potentials, and there were machines to test tyres.

It also supplied tyres to fleet operators to test the new patterns and designs on the new trucks coming into the country.

He said there was an urgent need for new truck tyres, as the trucks being introduced were capable of doing up to 140 km/h.

This was a big increase in the performance of the old trucks which travelled at about half that speed.

Dunlop also make a big range of industrial rubber products, specially rubbers which are oil and flame resistant.

Among the industrial products it makes are radiator hose, domestic and mining hose, irrigation pipes and joints, rubber bearings for pumps, hose seals, windscreen wipers, car mats, and shoe soling.

It also has an adhesive division which makes bonding for sealing foam rubber, and PVC floor tiling.

EIGHT NURSING SCHOOLS PLANNED IN PROVINCES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 3

BULAWAYO.

DELEGATES to the annual conference of the Southern Region of the Railway Associated Workers' Union (RAWU) in Bulawayo this week have called for a $168 a month minimum wage for its members in grade 10 category of employment.

Union members in this category at present get about $90 a month, while the Government minimum is about $85.

The resolution came after a detailed explanation by the union's general secretary about the housing of railway employees and the fact that the railways paid rent for all employees who earned less than $200 per month.

Members felt that these people had no housing security and said members would like to be responsible for their house rentals.

Mr Anderson Mhungu said the union had been under pressure by some workers who wanted to accept a management offer of a $10 increase which would make them responsible for their own rent.

He said on average the railways paid about $30 for a family house owned by the Bulawayo City Council. If union members accepted the offer, they would have to find $20 themselves.

A trustee of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU), Mr B. Horallen, who opened the conference, said trade unions in Zimbabwe could not function effectively unless they had a solid financial backing.

The ZCTU had recommended to the Riddell Commission that every employee should contribute to union funds. It had also been found that generally subscriptions by members were too low.

Mr Horallen said the commission had found that 1 percent of a member's earnings should go to the union for it to be effective.

He said it was clear to all that the trade union could not perform the task effectively, and that members had to realise their obligations to their union.

Mr Horallen said even the most dedicated union leaders could not achieve much without money.

ZIMBABWE'S gross national product rose by 13,9 percent in 1980, more than three times the official estimate of 4 percent.

The Government's monthly digest of statistics shows that GNP at constant 1965 prices is back to the same levels recorded during the boom in 1974.

Between 1974 and 1979 GNP fell by 12,5 percent, reaching its lowest level in 1978.

The principal contributory factor behind last year's growth was a 35 percent leap in the retail trade index supported by a 30 percent increase in consumer spending.

Top of buyers' lists were clothing, footwear, household goods, up by over 50 percent. The motor trade was busy too, as were department stores.

But the boom could not have been sustained without a rapid and inflationary rise in money supply. Notes and coins in circulation leapt by 46 percent in 1980 and money supply is up 8,7 percent for the period January 1 to May 31 this year.

Earnings were also up by a quarter, from $1 501.6 million to $1 881 million. Employment crept back over the one million mark although there were falls in the number of farm labourers, public administration and domestic staff.

Investment as a whole rose by 25 percent from $337 million in 1979 to $421 million, back to peak levels experienced in 1974 and 1975. Understandably over half of this new money went on new machinery and equipment, and civil engineering works.

Net Government spending also increased by 25 percent and accounted for around 23 percent of GNP.

On a gloomy note balance of payments figures reveal a current account net deficit of $165,4 million compared to $76.5 million the year before — more than double.

The capital account surplus was $84.5 million against $176,3 million in 1979.

So the overall payments deficit amounts to $80.9 million, the first time the country has gone into the red since 1977.

ALL RENTS TO BE FIXED, SAYS ZVOBGO

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Government intends to control rents on all rented accommodation throughout Zimbabwe, the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, announced in the House of Assembly yesterday.

Speaking during the second reading debate on the Housing and Building Amendment Bill, Dr Zvobgo said fixed rents would be introduced "because there is a major outcry on the part of the public who are being exploited by landlords".

It was now time to take action against landlords who were charging "exorbitant" fees for rented accommodation.

In terms of a clause inserted into the present Act by the Bill, rents would be based on "the maximum percentage return on the current market value of immovable property".

The Bill also intends allowances to be made to the landlord for what he spends on electricity, water, fuel, sanitary, and other services, as well as on rates.

The landlord will also be allowed to take insurance premiums on the property and the cost of maintenance and cleaning of the property into account.

Earlier during the debate, the minister also told the House that the Housing and Building Amendment Bill would consolidate the present Housing and Guarantee Funds into one fund known as the Housing and Guarantee fund.

It would also consolidate the present two building funds into another fund which would be known as the National Building Fund.

The minister said that in terms of the Bill, the Consolidated Funds could be applied to any areas, subject to the provisions of the Act.

"In effect" he said, "the new funds would continue to provide all the former services and the division of the country geographically into two areas, would fall away."

During the debate, Mr Joseph Kaparadza (ZANU-PF, Mashonaland Central) told the House that the masses in the urban and rural areas were crying for a better distribution of these funds.

Mr Kaparadza said people had expressed dissatisfaction with the past non-equitable distribution under the present Guarantee and Building Funds. — Ziana.

GOVERNMENT PLAN TO BUILD TEN THOUSAND HOMES REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Government is to build a massive estate of 10 000 houses between Mufakose and Dzivaresekwa, the city council has been told.

It will be on Parkridge and Fontainbleu farms, just outside the city's western boundary, the Secretary for Local Government and Housing told the municipality in a letter.

As yet the new suburb was unnamed, he said, and the Government wanted the council to choose a suitable name because the area would ultimately be incorporated into the city.

The council authorised officials to make offers for the land at a meeting in January and the planning and development of the area for high-density housing was undertaken by the Government.

The council paid $630 000 for the two farms and in May it was agreed to incorporate them into the municipality.

The council's health, housing and community services committee considered a new name for the area but decided to wait until next week before making any recommendation.

The new estate will tie in with council development at Warren Park and Dzivaresekwa, both to the west of the city centre and north of most of the existing high density suburbs.

At the council's budget meeting last month the chairman of the finance and development committee, Mr Tobias Musariri, said no loan funds were available after Warren Park and Dzivaresekwa and it was hoped the Government would develop Parkridge and Fontainbleu.

The western estate is the second new suburb to be announced by the Government in the last 10 months — Hatcliffe, near Borrowdale, being the first. There, 500 ultra-low cost houses will house workers and their families in the north of the city.

Both schemes are planned by the housing development services branch of the ministry.

The new estate will help cut the city's housing backlog, but city officials concede there is an almost insatiable demand for married housing.

When Warren Park was announced at the beginning of the year more than 28 000 applications were received, despite complaints that the stands were too small.

Up to $43 million may be available to the Ministry of Local Government and Housing during the financial year for high-density housing in urban areas.

UPGRADING OF MPILO HOSPITAL DEMANDED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/ The medical superintendent of Mpilo Central Hospital, Dr J.C. Dlamini, is still outraged at the low priority given at the hospital by the Smith government.

"My task is to give people a fair deal — to give them a proper service, a good service," he said. "The challenge is: can we provide a proper service to the satisfaction of all?

"Ian Smith's colonial strategy on health institutions was to make Andrew Fleming a showpiece hospital. He put a lot of money and expensive equipment into it while we here at Mpilo benefited little."

Over the years, while Andrew Fleming benefited from the Smith government and Harare hospital benefited from the then University of Rhodesia, Mpilo remained a distant third.

The result was overcrowding, shortage of qualified staff and lack of proper training lecture halls and accommodation for doctors.

By contrast, hospitals in the eastern suburbs—Bulawayo Central, Richard Morris and Lady Rodwell — were roomy with a decent environment for the patients.

"But all that is going to change now," Dr Dlamini said.

"All funds and services will be spread out to benefit even the rural communities. We still have our problems but Mpilo must be prepared to take a cut in this exercise to spread services to the people in the rural areas.

"We have already begun spreading out some units to the Bulawayo Central hospital to ease congestion here," he said. Some cases from the maternity ward had been transferred to Lady Rodwell, some of the paediatric unit to Bulawayo Central and the ophthalmology unit to Richard Morris.

"What I want people to note is that Mpilo is a referral hospital and must be treated as such. This means patients can only be brought here from the clinics between 8 am and 4 pm during weekdays.

"After 4 pm we don't mind taking acutely ill patients. But I am not saying patients must wait until they are acutely ill before they can be admitted here," he said.

As a referral centre Mpilo serves a satellite system of hospitals and clinics in Matabeleland province. This brings in the problems of specialist staff shortage.

"Qualified specialists have moved out creating a sudden drain on Mpilo. Unfortunately we are not training specialists fast enough."

Dr Dlamini said the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, had "done miracles for Mpilo" in terms of supplying junior doctors. "We never had so many before. There are now over 30. Previously we had two, one and sometimes nil."

He praised Dr Ushewokunze's reform programme of health institutions, especially spreading them to rural communities.

Rural development meant giving communities health services and "central hospitals should understand that" when it came to distribution of services. However, he pointed out that people sent to the rural areas were trained in central hospitals, making it necessary to strengthen these institutions.

"A Western doctor will make a proper diagnosis. I don't say he will always be right. If you have a headache he will tell you the cause.

"A bone-thrower, on the other hand, will not give you a specific diagnosis. He has not the means. His knowledge of anatomy is not complete. He can tell it's in the chest but cannot tell where exactly it is.

"He may have some knowledge of a liver from having skinned a goat but lacks detailed knowledge."

Mpilo hospital's budget for 1980-81 was $1 682 500. In 1979 it admitted 30 404 patients. The figure increased in 1980 to 35 570.

The hospital has 85 doctors, 159 sisters and matrons, 160 student nurses, 166 medical assistants, 21 nurses aides and about 250 general workers.

The maternity unit has a capacity of about 92, but it has admitted at up to 135 cases at one time. As a result, the wards have had to take in more leading to the reintroduction of floor-bedding to create more room.

Dr Diamini said an extra unit would be needed to cope with the demand in maternity cases even though some of the cases had been referred to Lady Rodwell Hospital.

Apart from the shortage of specialists, the hospital had a more down to earth problem — shortage of general hands to work on the grounds outside.

"Because of the rising demand in the wards most of the general hands have been absorbed inside, leaving the ground unattended.

The hospital lacked adquate housing for its doctors. And there was need for more formal lecture theatres for training nurses, Dr Diamini said.

ADF PLAN TO TRAIN SKILLED WORKERS REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 9

/Text/

THE African Development Fund (ADF) hopes to train about 1 800 people in various trades during the next 3½ years.

The organisation's training manager, Mr Hamish Harvey, told the Zimbabwe Information Services this week that at present, the ADF had three training centres in operation. Work on the fourth centre had started at Tjolotjo. The centres operating are at Umtali, Tulimakwe and Domboshawa, but the fund hopes eventually to establish six centres around the country, he said.

"With all six centres operational, we hope to achieve our goal of training 1 800 people in 3½ years," he added.

The syllabus includes courses in building and mechanical engineering and students will receive certificates on completing their courses. There are no educational qualifications needed, except the trainee's motivation to pass.

"We have only one problem," he said, "and that is getting experienced training officers."

The organisation, soon to be called the District Development Fund (DDF) was set up in 1944 and was responsible for the development of roads, bridges, dip tanks and boreholes in the rural areas. It gets revenue from cattle sales, farm produce and grants from the Government, but today most of its revenue comes from donations from countries like United States, Britain, West Germany, Canada and Japan.

According to a circular published on June 30 this year, ADF had reconstructed 6 640 km of roads throughout the country, 3 505 boreholes, 118 causeways, 61 dams, 61 sale pens, 1 710 culverts / inverts, eight pipe schemes and 1 053 dips.

The newly elected district councils around the country had wanted to take over ADF in their areas but the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, who is the trustee of the fund, said this would only happen once the councils have shown that they are capable of administering their areas.

"Each district council will take over the functions of the ADF in its area," said Mr Leach. "Road - making equipment and everything available will go to the district council involved." He said that the ADF would gradually work itself out of job.

MUTUMBUKA ON SOCIALIZATION OF EDUCATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/ Education will be revamped to create a socialist mentality among the people, the Minister of Education and Culture, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, said yesterday.

He warned that it would be dangerous to marry weaknesses in the former education system with the Government's socialist development policy.

Speaking on the significance of the education seminar — Education for Self Reliance in Zimbabwe — starting at the University of Zimbabwe this morning, Dr Mutumbuka said education had to be routed in a new direction.

The seminar, to be opened by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, will focus on the system of education inherited by Zimbabwe and on future needs.

Dr Mutumbuka said: "We need more schools and expertise already gained outside the country so that the masses can derive maximum benefit from our new education policies.

"If education continues to serve only a few, it will remain unstable."

He called on Zimbabweans not to confuse educational excellence with privilege.

His ministry had expanded its budget by about $210 million since independence because European-orientated education had remained static for years.

The minister said former white-dominated schools were an exercise in futility which confused and deluded children.

"Today our aims can be summed up in a new slogan: 'One child, one school place.' Whether someone comes from Highlands, a mine or commercial farm the state will ensure his basic right to education," Dr Mutumbuka said.

The road ahead, he added, was long and difficult but a start had to be made.

Dr Mutumbuka assured that after the education seminar his ministry would direct its attention on the needs of a national strategy towards education along the socialist path outlined by the Government.

'THINK TANK' SPEARHEADS HEALTH PLANS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Aug 81 p 9

/Text/

THE Ministry of Health's "new-look" planning pool is making significant progress in giving advice on medical reform in the communal areas, says the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze.

In an interview in his office at the weekend, Dr Mazorodze said the revamped planning pool, called the "think-tank" started functioning early this year.

Dr Mazorodze, who is also the chairman of the planning pool, said he believed the current building and upgrading of hospitals in the communal areas would have been impossible if it were not for the good work done by the planning pool.

Apart from Dr Mazorodze, the planning pool is composed of the permanent secretary, Dr Office Chidede, all undersecretaries in the department and a number of experts seconded to the ministry by the World Health Organisation in Geneva.

Dr Mazorodze said that before independence the pool was merely concerned with hospital design "but now its role has changed and expanded. It will also use its authority to create an integrated administrative machinery to oversee the development of primary health care in Zimbabwe.

"The pool's strategy is to move from district to district, but this has not always been possible as some areas have more urgent problems to be attended to than others."

In the districts which had been visited, members of the pool have assessed as far as possible what facilities were available and had tried to find out whether the local people were happy about the services, he said.

'DEPLORABLE'

"Through such investigations it was discovered that conditions and facilities at some of the centres were not up to the required standard. Shava rural hospital was in a deplorable condition and members discovered that it was beset with problems of drug supply and that it was experiencing a near breakdown of general management. This, however, has been remedied."

The pool's development plans include the upgrading of the Umvukwes hospital and the building of new hospitals, one in Victoria Province and the other in Mrewa.

DOCTORS, NURSES TO BE REQUIRED TO WORK IN RURAL AREAS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

DOCTORS, nurses and medical students will soon be required to visit rural areas as part of their work and training, the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, announced yesterday.

In an interview Dr Ushewokunze said the new requirements would be part of the national health legislation his department was drafting.

Urban doctors, nurses and medical students will have to visit and work in rural areas for about a month at a time. Rural health assistants will visit urban clinics and hospitals.

"We are trying to build a spirit of togetherness," Dr Ushewokunze said. "We want all health workers to be familiar with the countryside where 80 percent of the population lives."

Addressing a meeting of the Mashonaland East Health Assistants' Association earlier yesterday, Dr Ushewokunze said there had been a "coarsening of attitude" in Zimbabwe's health services since the arrival of pioneer medics 80 years ago.

He said he had received many complaints of doctors and nurses speaking to patients harshly, treating them in an offhand manner, and displaying a "spurious feeling of superiority" over them. In addition, urban medics usually waited for patients to come to them.

No complaints of any of these faults had reached him about health assistants. He urged them to be an example of people who visited patients at their homes.

DR GWEBU NAMED TO HEAD HEALTH RESEARCH

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

DR EPHRAIM GWEBU (33) is the new director of health research services in Zimbabwe.

He was appointed to the post recently, becoming the first black Zimbabwean to be responsible for the co-ordination of all research conducted by the Ministry of Health.

The holder of a PhD in chemistry, Dr Gwebu was born of peasant parents at Essexvale where he did his primary schooling before moving to Nkai for his higher education.

He attended Fletcher High School but left before completing A-levels to take up a scholarship at Njala University, Sierra Leone.

"While I was doing my studies at Fletcher I got a scholarship from the International University Students' Exchange Fund in the Netherlands to study at Njala University College in Sierra Leone where I did my first degree in biochemistry.

"I taught in that country for a year before enrolling with Ohio State University and stayed there until I completed my PhD three years ago," he said yesterday.

Dr Gwebu taught in the United States before returning home recently to take up his appointment.

He said one of his immediate tasks would be to encourage the training of village health workers to serve the community in the rural areas. The programme has already been started by the ministry.

"We must embark on this scheme and it is my task as director-general to establish teaching methods for the village health workers."

He added that there were other projects which "we intend to establish to combat disease among our people in Zimbabwe".

One of the projects, he said, was to find out why there was so much malaria and bilharzia in Zimbabwe.

"We should conduct a national survey on the prevalence of these diseases and stress to the people the importance of immunisation — specially among children. It is important to have every child immunised and my role will be to give surveillance on the effectiveness of the vaccine."

BINGA REPORTED IN CRITICAL NEED OF FOOD AID

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

UNLESS more food aid is supplied the situation in Binga could deteriorate from worse to critical within the next three months, an official of the children's supplementary feeding programme warned here yesterday.

BULAWAYO

Mr J. B. Thabane, the provincial co-ordinator of the programme who recently visited Binga, said the situation was getting worse because people ploughed on small fields using traditional means of subsistence farming.

Mr Thabane said the food aid programme had not taught the people self-sufficiency through proper methods of ploughing.

"People have been given relief food for too long without being taught how to do things themselves. What is needed now is to teach the people better methods of farming," he said.

Mr Thabane said the supplementary children's feeding programme which was due to end in June this year had to be extended because there were still many problems, particularly in Binga.

Mr Thabane appealed for co-ordinated efforts between Devag and Government ministries to give emergency aid to the Binga people.

He said the current 650 food packs every month were not enough. At least 2 000 packs were needed, he added.

"While in other areas in Matabeleland Province the food aid programme will be run down by October, I can't see it stopping in Binga until the middle of next year," Mr Thabane said.

Originally the food programme was for children under the age of five. But in Binga this has been extended to cover those in higher age groups, he said.

Up to the end of June this year $16 944 had been spent on the food programme. Of the 19 000 food packs distributed in the province, Binga received about 3 000. A total of 10 000 people benefited from the programme but as many as 1 000 may have been left out.

Mr Thabane said many peasant farmers had not been able to catch fish in commercial quantities because of the licensing regulations. Hence the district councillors were appealing for help from the Government to help develop the fishing industry.

REGIONAL DIRECTOR DISCUSSES UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 5

/Text/

ZIMBABWE is realising increasingly that no matter what is done to increase the growth rate of commerce and industry it will be impossible to prepare all school-leavers for paid employment, says the Regional Director of Education and Culture for Matabeleland, Mr N. Tanyongana.

Mr Tanyongana was addressing 28 students and guests at the graduation ceremony for adult literacy teachers in the Brethren in Christ Church in Mpopoma on Sunday.

Mr Tanyongana said, it was now strongly advocated that all education, formal and informal, should be changed to ensure that learners were given some training in one or more practical skills.

"This is being thought of" said the director, "to facilitate the change from education for employment to education for self-reliance and survival".

Mr Tanyongana continued: "School-leavers ought to be prepared to be self-employed and to create employment for others. Only when this is accomplished can Zimbabwe be truly independent," he said.

Earlier, speaking on the importance of literacy in a developing country like Zimbabwe, Mr Tanyongana said it was clear that literacy was an important pre-requisite to national development.

Mr Tanyongana said his ministry estimated there were 1,8 million Zimbabweans either illiterate or semi-illiterate at present. There were a further 1,2 million people who would soon become relapsed illiterates, he said.

He said the causes of illiteracy included: Lack of schools, shortage of places which force many pupils to drop out of school prematurely and some parents' reluctance to send their children to school, especially girls.

These problems are now being countered through the ministry's free primary education policy — soon to become compulsory — the introduction of ZINTEC, the increased Form One intake, which had gone up 400 percent this year, and the increased per capita grants to authorities to enable them to cope with increased enrolments.

The ceremony was also attended by the mayor and mayoress of Bulawayo, Councillor and Mrs Nelson Ndlovu. The mayoress presented the certificates to the students, who included seven men and came from various parts of Matabeleland. — ZIANA.

BRITISH AGRICULTURAL MISSION SEEKS INCREASED TRADE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

A BRITISH Agricultural Engineers' Association trade mission due to arrive in Zimbabwe today hopes, according to an organiser, to make a similar impact as last year's visit when business and agency agreements were established.

This year's 10 company mission comprises mainly manufacturers of agricultural machinery, but also includes animal feed and poultry breeding companies and a firm specialising in veterinary implements and materials.

Mr D. G. O'Neill, deputy overseas secretary of the association, says: "This mission is really a follow-up to last year's which was organised jointly with the British Agricultural Export Council.

"Last year's visit was very encouraging indeed. We were extremely well received by the business community, both the commercial farmer and industry, and we achieved quite a lot to get trade going."

This time the delegation is looking for long-term business as, said Mr O'Neill, there is enormous potential in trade with Zimbabwe.

"Increasing agricultural trade interest between the two countries was reflected in the strong Zimbabwe presence at Britain's recent Royal Show.

"We feel this interest was partly a result of our visit to Zimbabwe last year and we are aiming to continue the momentum, our main input to date is in providing spares and accessories to complement the country's own manufacture," said Mr O'Neill.

CHINAMANO PROMISES INCREASED SUPPLY OF PETROL BY YEAR-END

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

REFINED petroleum products should be pumped to Zimbabwe through the Beira pipeline by the end of the year, the Minister of Transport, Mr Josiah Chinamano, said yesterday.

Speaking about his meeting with Mr Tiny Rowland, head of Lonrho, in London last week, the minister said he was happy with the progress being made to have the pipeline to Umtali rehabilitated by the end of the year.

"Our intention is to push for refined petroleum products to come to Zimbabwe via the pipeline."

Mr Chinamano was speaking in an interview after he toured the Willowvale Motor Industry factory in Salisbury.

He said that work on the pipeline, which was destroyed in several places during the war, was already in full swing.

"Lonrho has had to buy new parts to fix destructed parts and was also continuing to have talks with us and the Mozambicans."

Also on his trip to Britain, Mr Chinamano said, a bilateral agreement between the Zimbabwean and British governments on air transport had been signed.

He was also shown around a containerisation plant in Southampton and visited a civil and military aviation manufacturer in Hatfield, "looking for possible planes to buy to replace the old Viscounts, that have served us very faithfully," said Mr Chinamano.

On Zimbabwe's establishment of a merchant navy to be based in Beira, Mr Chinamano said the Government's interest was in the exploratory stage, adding that no projects had been submitted to Government for its approval.

FIGHT TRIBALISM, UNITE TO HELP BUILD NATION, SAYS NKOMO

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Minister without Portfolio, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday urged all Zimbabweans to unite and help the Government stamp out tribalism, racism and regionalism.

He said that people should stop thinking on tribal or racial lines and concentrate on nation-building.

"The people of Zimbabwe have many colours, different backgrounds, many languages — but they are one. If we are to build a nation, we should not think in terms of tribe or race. These are things of the past.

"We have to recognise that, although people have different names, they are the same. You cannot separate them," he said in an interview at a Salisbury motel after the Patriotic Front's meeting.

"Both tribalism, racism and regionalism are bad and evil," said Dr Nkomo.

"I have said before that tribalism should never be allowed to show its head in society. It is the most dangerous and unwanted thing."

Dr Nkomo said he was pleased to hear the Prime Minister condemning tribalism, regionalism and racism and added:

"I am aware that there are some people using tribalism for political gain in this country.

"Let me make it clear to such people that it is for the good of the country and its people that we must fight tribalism even more than we have fought colonialism."

He said what the Prime Minister had said against tribalism during his tour of Manicaland was right.

"Tribalism was evil. We are one."

On the question of a one-party state in Zimbabwe, Dr Nkomo said it depended on how the whole idea would be carried out.

"If we want to destabilise this country, then let's talk about one-party state.

"We want to stabilise this country and this idea is not quite helpful in this regard," he said.

He added: "As far as I am concerned there can be no one-party state in this country against the wishes of the people."

In a statement the central committee meeting strongly criticised the Civil Service and said appointments should not be made on the basis of nepotism, tribalism and regionalism. The statement reaffirmed the PF's principle of meritocracy.

'MERIT ONLY'

"The central committee urges the Government to ensure that in the Civil Service people are appointed on merit — particularly in the civil police force. We deplore tendencies to recruit members on party or tribal lines."

It also urged the Government to make any land resettlement fair and just and not repeat the mistakes of the past regimes.

"There should be a land reform programme which guarantees co-operative use of it."

GUN USED IN GQABI KILLING FOUND

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/ The curiosity of two children has led police to the discovery of the weapon used to assassinate the African National Congress representative in this country, Mr Joe Gqabi.

The Uzi sub-machine gun, which was fitted with a silencer, was found in a drain about 500 metres from the spot where Mr Gqabi was gunned down outside his house in Ashdown Park, Salisbury, on July 31.

The children, brothers Philip (13) and Frank Muteri (5), were playing with catapults near their home in Sandy Lane, Ashdown Park, when little Frank went into a ditch and spotted the nozzle of the weapon inside the drain.

He called to Philip who thought it was a bicycle pump. When he pulled it out he saw it was a gun and told his father who contacted the police.

A police spokesman said the children had earned themselves a reward.

Ballistics experts tested the firearm and found that it matched up with bullets and cartridges found at the scene of the shooting.

Detectives who investigated the assassination found a Beretta pistol in Mr Gqabi's car and the next day found a different Uzi sub-machine gun on the vlei about 200 metres away.

Neither weapon had been fired at the scene. It was only a week ago that the murder weapon was found by the brothers.

The spokesman said both sub-machine guns had been "missing." He would not say if anyone had reported them stolen.

RELOCATION OF UMTALI SEEN POSSIBLE

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Aug 81 p 2

[Text]

UMTALI

THE Umtali City, first established at Fort Hill, Penhalonga, in 1891, may have to move to a new site to cater for development plans. If this happens, it would not be the first time in its history.

In an interview with Moto, the director of community services in Umtali, Mr D. E. Ncube, said Sakubva Township needed to be pulled down completely and rebuilt.

He said other developments were being considered, the areas where an immediate "face-lift" was expected were the Sakubva sectic s of the NHB, the blocks and the avenues.

"The previous plan was not intended for a city, but for a small siding," he said.

Mr Ncube explained there were several technical problems involved in the construction of the city's sewerage which made the need for a suitable site vital.

"As soon as funds become available, there are some vacant lands the city council can buy where there will not be the same technical problems," he said.

Mr Ncube said Sakubva was over-populated. He said more people from nearby rural areas were now coming to Umtali to stay with their relatives while looking for employment since the night raids had been discouraged by the city council.

Commenting on possible improvement plans for Sakubva, Mr Ncube said communal toilets in several sections of the township would be demolished. The council, he said, hoped to construct a toilet for each family.

If the plan to move the city materialises, it will be the fourth time the city has been moved. The city's first site was at Fort Hill, Penhalonga, in 1891. — Ziana.

SOYA EXPERT PROMISES TO BE LUCRATIVE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Aug 81 p 9

/Text/

ZIMBABWE could produce almost 80 000 tonnes of high protein meal a year from soya beans, justifying a higher price for the crop and so encouraging farmers to grow more, a commercial farmer leader believes.

Speaking to the Tsatsi Farmers' Association north of Concession last Friday, the chairman of the Commercial Oil Seed Producers' Association, Mr Warwick Hale, said the meal would find ready export markets.

The required investment would not be great and would boost the value of the crop so that enough could be produced to satisfy Zimbabwe's edible oil needs. The meal would be produced from the seed residue.

DEMAND

The association wanted a price of $300 a tonne or 1.5 times the maize price. At present the price was $170 a tonne and the crop was not meeting the growing demand for edible oils.

Mr Hale said the association had been told the main problem was the residue after pressing which was worth very little. Besides a growing demand for protein cakes for pig and poultry production there was a large potential human market for vegetable protein.

"In the developed countries soya bean is used extensively to extend animal protein. In the United States the milk in their bread, their ice-cream, all that sort of thing is made from soya and America is not a protein-poor continent."

The demand in Africa, where there was a shortage of protein, should be great, he added.

External investors were interested in participating in meal manufacture but because of Government policy would not be allowed to have more than 50 percent of the shares.

PROTEIN

"The producers would be delighted to participate and I think we should have a say in the manufacture. The technology exists and we could produce a meal that was 60 to 80 percent protein and even go up to 90 percent if that was wanted."

Mr Hale said that at present prices Zimbabwe was likely to be short of more than 20 000 tonnes of soya seed next year, causing a great shortage of edible oils because other seed crops, cotton and groundnuts, were also underproduced.

OUTLOOK FOR MOUNT DARWIN'S RECOVERY BRIGHT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Aug 81 p 9

/Article by Rob Linden/

/Text/

THE small north-eastern town of Mount Darwin, centre of the most bitter and prolonged fighting of the liberation war, is slowly getting back to normal — and beginning to plan for the future.

The days when it was the prosperous focus of a rich commercial farming area may never return — only eight white farmers are left of the 21 who were there in September 1978 — but the outlook is bright.

Foundations of wrecked houses and buildings still scar the town in places, reminders of the fierce battles of the past, but now soldiers are bringing prosperity instead of destruction.

Mount Darwin houses two large military establishments — a new permanent base for the national army's 3:9 Battalion, and a temporary camp on the site of the old security forces airstrip where about 2 000 ex-combatants have been undergoing integration training since February.

The townspeople, at first nervous and hesitant, are now united in praise of the high discipline and good behaviour of the soldiers.

Mr Stavros Georgiou, a businessman and farmer and member of the local committee of the Bindura rural council, told the Herald: "They're very well behaved, and if any difficulties arise, there is a liaison group of senior officers and shopkeepers who sort it out immediately.

"We're very impressed with the standard of the troops, and of course, they bring a lot of money to the town."

Five of the vast former white - owned farms have been bought by Tobex for large-scale tobacco production, while another two are now owned by African farmers. Resettlement schemes are likely to claim the others, say extension officers.

But by far the most important element in planning the future of the town is that it is at the heart of one of the most productive African farming areas — both small-scale and communal — in the country.

Small-scale farmers in Nyakapupu, Chesa and Sowa have just produced the best crop in memory. Both of maize and cotton, and peasants in Madziva and Kapdzja have also done well.

Mount Darwin is the natural growth-point for this upsurge of farming activity, and headquarters of a rapidly expanding development and extension service.

Both Mr Wilson Bangurah, manager of the Grain Marketing Board depot, and Mr David Chipungu, supervisor of the Cotton Marketing Board centre, report bumper harvests, especially in Chesa.

"The diesel shortage is a problem, but not a crisis," Mr Bangurah said. "We are getting the crop in, slowly but surely, and it is very high-quality grain."

Small-scale farmer Mr Bess Madziva, who drove into the depot just then bringing one more load of his "best-ever" harvest, agreed.

FUEL

"We are getting the maize in," he said, "but if I use fuel for the truck,

I haven't got enough for ploughing and preparing the land with a tractor. A lot of mombes (cattle) in the area are sick from ticks and can't be used for ploughing."

But Mr Madzivo is not despondent and looks forward to an even better harvest next season "if we can get diesel and fertiliser quite soon".

At the cotton depot Mr Chipungu said the effect of the fuel shortage on African farmers so far was "bad, but not very bad".

Things were worse for those who had to hire transport from small contractors, many of whom were virtually immobilised by the lack of diesel.

"Today, for instance, we have 400 bales booked for delivery, but fewer than 100 have been brought in.

"But the depot will stay open as long as there's cotton to come in. We usually close in September, but this year we'll wait until the end of October or even longer, until the lands are cleared."

Generally, says Mr Giorgiou, the commercial farmers have managed well up to now. "They have brought in the big transport firms to move their crops, which include one of the best tobacco harvests I've seen."

Mr Giorgiou also owns the service station which is the only diesel supply point in the locality. But his quota seldom lasts more than two days, and queues of up to 100 trucks can be seen at the garage when supplies arrive.

"It will be a tragedy for the African farmers if the position doesn't improve in time for them to plough and plant," he says. "The spirit and enthusiasm is there, but they must have fuel soon."

Another effect of the shortage has been to cut bus services over a large area by half, and severely hamper mobile rural clinics. Other drawbacks to Mount Darwin's development lie in the isolation enforced by war, with many links not yet fully restored.

Fresh milk and bread are seldom available, and even newspaper supplies are irregular. Both farmers and townspeople are united in criticising the lack of a banking service. There are no banks in the town, and a mobile banking service that used to come up from Bindura twice a week was withdrawn during the war, and has not been renewed.

"Many farmers have big cheques for their produce, but can't get down to Bindura to cash or bank them," Mr Giorgiou said. "We do our best to help, but shops and stores can't really offer banking services."

But these, and other problems, seem only minor obstacles on Mount Darwin's path to a bustling and prosperous future as centre of one of our country's most fertile and productive regions.

FINANCE OFFICIAL REFUSES TO REVEAL DETAILS OF PM'S TRIP COSTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Aug 81 pp 1, 4

/Text/

THE Deputy Minister of Finance, Dr Oliver Munyaradzi, yesterday refused to give details to the House of Assembly on how much foreign cash the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, had spent on his trip earlier this year to the Far East.

Mr Donald Goddard, (Rh. Lundi) had asked for the total cost in foreign currency for the whole of the delegation of about 50 people who accompanied the Prime Minister, and for an individual breakdown of cash spent.

After noting that $57 785 had been spent, Dr Munyaradzi said: "I would like to point out that with the changed circumstances of the country and as a reminder to members opposite, that the practice of asking for details about certain members of Government is not acceptable."

The Prime Minister should be someone to be respected and of whom certain questions should not be asked, he said.

It was time that members take account of African custom and forget about customs of Parliamentary proprietary.

"I think our colleagues (the Republican Front) should think seriously about the question of reconciliation as stated by the Prime Minister", Dr Munyaradzi said.

For the Prime Minister's trip to the Far East, $41 000 was allocated to members of the delegation. $25 000 was spent and $16 000 was returned.

The security contingent travelling with the delegation were allocated and spent $11 000 of the total expenditure.

Each member of the delegation was given $100 per day for the trip, which lasted 16 days. Some members returned home early.

Referring to another question by Mr Goddard, also raised during private members' question time yesterday, to the Minister of Finance as to how much foreign currency had been issued to private individuals for holiday purposes during 1980, Dr Munyaradzi said the question implied that cabinet ministers, issued by Government with foreign cash, were going on holiday.

This was false, he said.

He said, as MPs barracked each other loudly, that the Government had never tried to find out "what all these visits to Lichtenstein" were about, nor why "a few suicides" had been concealed "for fear of discovery".

A total of $225 859 in foreign currency was issued to cabinet ministers and their deputies for official and personal use and for air travel in Zimbabwe's first year of independence, Dr Munyaradzi, said.

He also told the House that of this, $215 945 was used, and $9 914 had been returned.

Mr Goddard also asked for the amount of foreign money issued to private people for their holidays abroad last year, and was told this amounted to $78,7 million. The "total travel figure" for the year came to $98,8 million, Dr Muyaradzi added.

A statement accompanying the deputy minister's reply giving the breakdown for all the ministers excluded the Prime Minister's Office, that of Dr Joshua Nkomo, the Minister without Portfolio, and that of Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office.

Dr Joshua Nkomo was only appointed Minister without Portfolio in the last few months of the 1980/81 financial year, while the statement noted that information on Mr Munangagwa was "classified".

The largest amount expended during the year was by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, a total of $88 000. The minister, then Mr Simon Muzenda, returned $3 000.

Among expenditures for the year noted in the statement were: Minister of Finance $7 681 ($2 231,91 returned).

Ministers of Mines and Energy — $6 000 and $2 000 respectively (none returned).

Minister of Economic Planning and Development — $9 374 ($1 474 returned).

PM URGES SCHOOLCHILDREN TO JOIN ZANU (PF)

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Prime Minister has called on schoolchildren to join ZANU (PF) saying that as future leaders of the country they must have political education. Speaking at the weekend at the close of his four-day tour of Manicaland, Mr Mugabe said schoolchildren "should be given the necessary politicisation".

A spokesman for the Prime Minister's Office said yesterday that Mr Mugabe's call marked a break with the system under previous regimes, when political activity at schools was forbidden.

The Prime Minister as party leader made use of his tour, during which he addressed a series of big rallies, to explain Government policies and launch his massive reorganisation and recruitment campaign for ZANU (PF).

He emphasised that membership of the party was open to all, irrespective of colour, tribe or age.

Addressing a final rally at Makoni, he issued a stern warning that civil servants who were disrespectful of the Government and the people faced instant dismissal.

Mr Mugabe also said he had received reports about nurses, police and other civil servants neglecting the people. He reminded them they were trained from public funds and were servants of the people.

"How can you neglect and spit on the people who trained you?" he asked. Investigations were being carried out to track down the culprits, he said.

Mr Mugabe directed district councils to consult party officials in their areas on priority projects and about their location. Party officials were always in touch with the people and knew their needs, the Prime Minister explained.

He said his tour was aimed at getting first-hand information on problems facing the people and what could be done to alleviate them. He told those he addressed that Government programmes were designed to improve the lives of all the people in the country.

He paid tribute to Chief Makoni and his people for having no other party in the area besides ZANU (PF). "I am happy that you have a one-party state," Mr Mugabe said.

He urged people in the rural areas to work harder and produce more food and assured them that all that they produced would be bought by the Government. If there was a surplus it would be exported to earn foreign exchange.

Appeal

The Prime Minister appealed to all industrial workers to work hard, because the Government would soon review salaries so that they could earn more.

At the Makoni district rally, he was accompanied by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai; the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simbarashe Makoni; the Speaker of the House of Assembly, Mr Didymus Mutasa; the Deputy Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Mr Moton Malianga, and the Deputy Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa. The rally was also attended by Chief Makoni and several Members of Parliament.

MINING: HIGHER WAGES, LOWER PRODUCTIVITY ALLEGED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

BULAWAYO

HIGHER wages in the mines had led to a "distressing" fall in productivity in some workings, the president of the Chamber of Mines of Zimbabwe, Mr Roy Lander, said yesterday.

Mr Lander, opening the South-Western Districts show in Gwanda, said he hoped the situation would be only temporary.

The economic factors affecting the industry were only part of the reason for its stagnation this year, Mr Lander said. The chamber was concerned to get a clearer definition of the Government's policy on a number of issues, not least of which was metal marketing.

He had, he said, been "saddened" by the Minister of Mines' recent speech to Parliament in which he had once again criticised the industry for its marketing method and had suggested Zimbabwe was not getting the full value of earnings from metals repatriated.

VOLUNTEERED

The industry had in the past asked for examples of this and suggested to the Government that there were legal processes which could be followed in this event.

Mr Lander added that the industry had "volunteered" that the minister, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, should freely examine its accounts. "But regrettably all that happened was the same accusations about reneging on returns to the detriment of the economy."

Mr Lander said that this could upset the industry further at a time when it had intimated its willingness to help the Government with its marketing proposals if called upon to do so.

And, once again, Mr Lander said he must on behalf of the mining industry deny most strongly the minister's criticisms.

He said he thought very little would happen to the price of gold this year, but the fall in the value of the Zimbabwean dollar relative to the United States dollar should help miners a little.

GOLDEN LEAF TOBACCO EARNINGS REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Aug 81 p 3

/Article by Nigel Adlam/

/Text/

ZIMBABWE'S king crop — flue-cured tobacco — is expected to earn more than $125 million in precious foreign cash this year.

The past season's unusual weather yielded a top-class bumper harvest, after the Government's prompt action in underwriting bank loans to merchant buyers during the 1980 sales had enabled many farmers to stay in business.

Seventy percent of the estimated 68 million kg crop has been sold on the auction floors for an average price of $1,84.

The end-of-sales price is expected to be $1,82.

This is well above cost of production — and sends the tobacco men back to their farms happy.

"For the first time in years the tobacco farmers can face the next season financially sound," said Charles Symes, planning officer for the Zimbabwe Tobacco Association.

Last year, 122,4 million kg were sold at an average price of less than 80 cents a kg, which is 14 cents below the cost of production.

At one time the price was a mere 65 cents — but the Government stepped in to underwrite speculative buying and the price edged up to 80 cents.

There were two main reasons for the disaster — a glut on the world market and a poor-quality crop because of drought for the second year running.

The number of tobacco farmers dropped from 1 600 to 1 250.

Some literally went bust — others switched to other crops.

This year's good price is expected to lure back some of the lost producers.

The price is high this season because of a shortage of top-quality tobacco in the world. Zimbabwe produced good quality and China, the world's largest producer, suffered a devastating drought.

Because of last year's debacle, the Government restricted the tobacco crop to a maximum of 70 million kg.

But farmers now realise that they could have sold much more.

This year's quota is 100 million kg.

Mr Symes stressed that tobacco is the biggest agricultural earner of foreign exchange.

And it even outshines any individual mineral, although minerals as a whole bring in more.

Mr Symes said the biggest problem facing the tobacco industry was the inadequacy of the country's transport system. Diesel, fertiliser and the crop itself must be carried swiftly and efficiently.

But he added: "Despite these problems, the future is very rosy."

REFUGEE AID REQUESTED--Geneva, August 17--More than 450,000 refugees have been officially counted in Angola, according to an official Angolan note requesting assistance from to United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), an informed source at the U.N. said here today. Most of the refugees were said in the note to have fled the southern part of the country to escape attacks launched from South African soil. The note added that in addition to 452,000 refugees who have installed themselves in central Angola, there were nearly 265,000 persons living in precarious economic conditions following their move, the note said. UNHCR does not have a mandate to help persons displaced inside their own country. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2820, 18 Aug 81 p 19]

DEPUTY SECURITY CHIEF IS REINSTATED

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 7 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] The Head of State, Commander-In-Chief Samuel K. Doe, has ordered reinstated Lt Col. Felix O. Lawrence as Deputy Chief of the Joint Security Force at the Roberts International Airport.

Lt. Col. Lawrence who was dismissed from his post last February because of what RIA officials termed"administrative reasons," was inducted into office Monday by the Chairman of the Joint Security at RIA, Col. Daniel D. Doe.

According to an Executive Mansion note to the Minister of Commerce Col. Emmanuel Twegby informing him of the C-I-C's decision to have Lawrence reinstated, an investigation into charges against Mr. Lawrence proved to be baseless.

During the induction ceremony Monday at the Joint Security offices at RIA, Col. Doe told Mr. Lawrence "as you have been here before, there is no doubt on my mind that you are aware of the fact that the security task here is of such that requires men of integrity, honesty and who are diligent to duty."

Col. Doe went on "we are here as representatives of the PRC's Government; and as such, we must do away with anything that will tend to disunite us, thereby defeating our common purpose."

Responding,Lt.Col.Lawrence, praised the C-I-C for his farsightedness and wise judgement which enabled him to take time off his busy schedule to carefully examine the issue which led to his "unlawful dismissal". He commended the PRC Government for demonstrating justice and equality for all Liberians.

SEAMEN'S UNION SEEKS REVIEW OF MARITIME LAWS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 7 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] The National Seamen's, Ports and General Workers' Union of Liberia has appealed to government to set up a committee to review the nation's maritime laws and regulations which are against the interest of Liberian seamen.

The union said such a review is necessary to enable shipping managements and labour union to negotiate and bargain for wages here in Liberia.

The appeal was made Wednesday by three union's officials in an interview with the NEW LIBERIAN. The officials are G.T. Tarbah, president; John D. Barlone, assistant maritime director; and Nando Zeno, international consultant.

To be called the Liberian shipping lines industrial committee, the officials said the proposed body should comprise of government representatives, shipping managements and the seamen union.

They proposed that the committee, if established, should also study the possibility as to how government could generate revenues on seamen, training programme for seamen, recruitment of graduates from LAMCO nautical school, and insurance scheme for Liberian seamen.

The committee should also find a reputable bank in the country where Liberian seamen could reserve half of their monthly pay, coupled with allotments for their families.

On the question of monthly pay for seamen, the officials said the maritime law does not empower the Liberian Maritime Bureau to determine wages for the crew.

They said only labour organization representing seamen and shipping companies can bargain for seamen, which includes condition of service that would not be below Liberian maritime policies.

The union's officials also reacted to last month's statement made in a local newspaper by Maritime Commissioner Phillip T. Bowen that "one ship owner recently asked for 500 seamen, and if we had them there could be 500 jobs."

The officials described this statement as not in the best interest of the Liberian seamen because, according to them, statistics from 1972 - 80 showed that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued 3,000 passports to Liberian seamen, meaning that 3,000 seamen in different categories have been registered.

They also challenged the commissioner to publish the ruling of the case for which two Liberian seamen were charged with mutiny aboard a vessel owned by Gulf oil.

Regarding the statement made by Commissioner Bowen that the problem of discipline and respect for dignity of labour had prevented Liberian from having thousands of its citizens lucratively employed at sea, the union officials described it as "an insult to the Liberian workers."

They said the union has direct statistics on Liberian merchant mariners who are working on vessels flying Liberian flag live m/v Pluto, Evineke and Duto, where they have respected the dignity of labour.

They pointed out that Liberian seamen on these vessels as AB and oilers make more than $1,000 a month, including overtime.

They noted that even the Greek captain of m/v Pluto, Mr.Psingel Ioannis, had told the union officials that Liberian seamen are thus far the best in Africa.

The union officials then warned the Maritime Bureau to desist from what they called "such abuse to Liberian seamen and the entire nation." They also called on Commissioner Bowen to furnish them the address of the company which has requested for 500 seamen so that the seamen could be recruited immediately.

They frowned on keeping employment possibilities for Liberian seamen by the Maritime Bureau at this time when government is finding avenues to reduce unemployment rate in the country.

The officials said this is a threat to the economy of the country, because unemployment is government's first enemy.

They said the greatest aim of their union is to make the decade of the 80s "the age of navigation" to provide jobs for the unemployed. "This would be our genuine contribution to the Liberian Revolution," they said.

PROFESSIONAL CULTURAL TROUPE WILL BE CREATED

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 7 Aug 81 p 4

[Article by Napoleon A. Teage]

[Text] A professional National Cultural Troupe, aimed at generating funds to sustain its operation while at the same time promoting the Liberian cultural heritage, is to be organized shortly by the National Bureau of Culture and Tourism.

The troupe will replace the present National Cultural Troupe, according to a short range projection for the expansion of culture and tourism prepared by the Director General of the National Culture and Tourism Bureau.

According to the short range plan, since the creation of the Bureau of Folkways within the then Department of Interior, now Local Government, up to the present, the cultural programme has been relying heavily on government assistance (finance).

The plan attributed this reliance to the lack of initiatives on the part of the authorities at the time, coupled with foreign contracts, and the poor moral support given the bureau by erstwhile administrations.

It cited as example, that in other West African nations, specifically Guinea and Senegal, the cultural troupe is not only self-financed, but also a source of revenue to these countries.

"In the past, there existed no possibility of signing contracts because members of the various troupes, including the national troupe were amateurs, and students in the majority," the document said.

The new troupe, to be called "The Liberian Cultural Messengers" will embark on periodical stints abroad for periods lasting up to six months, in order to realize maximum profit from foreign travels, unlike in the past when the troupe's abroad were mainly non-financial.

Already, the document said, a travel contract to the United States of America

(Ohio and Michigan States) has been signed and the tour is to run from June to August, 1982.

The document explained that all funds generated from foreign tours shall be transferred to Liberia or deposited in foreign banks through the Liberian Embassy in the country involved.

In countries where local currencies cannot be transferred, according to the document, the funds will be used to purchase food stuffs, vehicles, agricultural equipment, and educational materials.

Apart from money making, the new troupe shall also endeavour to end the widely held concept that Liberia is in fact a colony of the U.S. It shall through dances and dramas portray the true Liberian cultural heritage, the document said.

To kick off the new troupe, the Bureau of Culture and Tourism shall stage a National Festival in April 1982 in which cultural troupes from the various counties and territories will vie for a national trophy.

However, the document said the new National Cultural Troupe, the Cultural Ambassadors and the Pan African Ballets shall be used exclusively for exhibition during the festival.

Additionally, Liberians' favorite games like checker, chess, ludo, traditional checker, among others, shall also form part of the national festival next April, the document said. Trophies will be awarded to winners.

Under the new short range plan, the national cultural center shall be refurnished, meaning the construction of additional huts at the center, and the securing of more ceremonial mask dancers to entertain guests weekly at the center.

The Besao cultural village shall also be refurnished under the programme with the construction of an amphi theatre and an auditorium, together with the construction of more traditional huts with necessary facilities (water, bath, toilets) to house guests visiting the village.

At the Providence Island, repair works will be carried out on the building allocated for the National Museum, together with the purchasing of more artifacts and pictures on Liberian History ... , the document said.

BRIEFS

APPOINTMENT OF NBCT OFFICIALS--Two appointments have been made at the newly created National Bureau of Culture and Tourism (NBCT) by the Head of State and Commander-In-Chief Samuel Kanyon Doe with the advice and consent of the PRC. Mr. Jallah K. Kamara was appointed Director General while Miss Scholastica Gbeh Doe was appointed Deputy Director General of Culture and Tourism respectively. CIC Doe urged the two officials to be motivated in all their endeavours to defend the interest of the Liberian people and the revolution, and justify the confidence reposed in them. The two appointments take immediate effect. [Text] [Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 4 Aug 81 p 8]

LABOR MINISTER WARNS WORKERS--Labour Minister Major G. Moses Duopu has warned workers of mining companies that government would not tolerate "union rivalries and mushroom unions which are designed to create industrial unrest and undermine progressive leadership." He said this act would not help to promote better working relationship between workers and management. Minister Duopu was speaking Monday in Bong Mines at a seminar for miners jointly sponsored by the National Miners Union of Liberia and Miners International Federation. He said government would not tolerate power struggles that impede progress at the expense of the working force. Major Duopu called on labour unions to cooperate with the Ministry of Labour to ensure that the objective of the workers' education programme is achieved. He said the programme was designed to educate all workers of their rights and privileges in the exercise of their responsibilities. [Text] [Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 7 Aug 81 p 11]

POSTS FOR SUPERINTENDENTS--Several new appointments have been announced, while five Superintendents have been affected in a major reshuffle by Head of State and Commander-In-Chief Samuel K. Doe with the advice and consent of the PRC. The Superintendent of Sinoe County, Captain J. Ebenezer Pettiquoi is now Superintendent of the Bopolu Statutory District; Nimba County Superintendent, Captain Robert G. Saye, is Director of Staff at Defense Ministry; while Lofa County Superintendent, Captain V. Francis Marvie becomes Assistant Minister of Labour for Administration. Bomi Territory Superintendent, Staff Sergeant Thomas Challah has been promoted to the tank of Captain and is to report to the Ministry of Defense for reassignment, while Maryland County Superintendent Captain Charles Cooper has been appointed Deputy Minister for Administration at the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications. The five Superintendents have been replaced by Captain Joseph Acquoi for Lofa County, General Joseph Fangal, Nimba County; and Captain David T. Norman, Sinoe County. The Assistant Superintendent of Maryland County is to act as

Superintendent, while the Special Assistant to the Superintendent of Bomi Territory will act as Superintendent for the territory. Also appointed Monday was Mr. Harold G. Tarr as Deputy Minister for Administration at the Ministry of Labour. Making the announcement at the Executive Mansion Monday, C-I-C Doe called on those affected to work harder for the revolution in their new positions. [Text] [Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 4 Aug 81 pp 1, 6]

NEW POST FOR MOORE--Mr. Bai T. Moore has been appointed Deputy Minister of Information for Research and Planning by Head of State Samuel K. Doe. Mr. Moore was Deputy Information Minister for Culture and Research until the creation of the Bureau of Culture and Tourism recently, which removed culture and Tourism wing from under the umbrella of the Information Ministry. Meanwhile, two new appointments have been made within the regional administration by the Head of State with the advice and consent of the People's Redemption Council. According to an Executive Mansion release, 1st. Lt. G. Wamleh Elliott is Superintendent of Maryland County, and Mr. S. Washington Broh as Assistant Superintendent for Development of Sinoe County. Informing the two officials of their appointments, C-I-C Doe hoped they would justify the confidence reposed in them by the PRC, and project the interest of the Liberian people. [Text] [Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 7 Aug 81 p 12]

AGRICULTURAL TASK FORCE--The Ministry of Agriculture has set up a special task force to monitor and coordinate the activities of its personnel at Agricultural porjects around the country. A release from the Agriculture Ministry issued Monday said the setting up of the five-man task force was aimed at improving the operational activities of the ministry, and make its administrative system more responsive and effective, as well as to eliminate bureaucratic practices. The release quoted the Minister of Agriculture, Major Alfred Suah as saying that after a careful observation since his appointment, he had notice some irrequlaties [as printed] hindering the smooth operation of his ministry. He, however appealed to the employees to remain dedicated as the exercise was not meant to "intimidate" them. The task force, headed by the Ministry of Agriculture's Director of planning, Mr. Arthur Gedeo, includes personnel from the department of economic planning and evaluation, as well as a USAID expert, Mr. Bill Bolton, who is serving as advisor. OUTJO SETTLEMENT FALLS PREY TO WAR, DROUGHT

[Article by David Pieters: "Outjo's Land Settlement Scheme: Good or Bad?"]

[Text] OUTJO, ON the northwestern front of SWA's White farming community and youngest of the country's farming districts to be settled on a large scale, has become the first victim of the war, the drought, and a reluctant patient in today's socio-economic experimentation on the road to independence.

Tucked away far in the north west where it borders the barren stretches of Damaraland in the west, Kaokoland in the north west and Etosha to the north, Outjo is the White farming district traditionally most exposed to the ravages of drought, and for the past four years has been suffering a drought with catastrophic proportions.

Also, because of its position bordering unsettled regions on three sides, Outjo has become the frontline area in the bushwar infiltration from Angola.

Intended as a solution to the depopulation of the farms in the "priority zone", the resettlement scheme introduced last year by the Central Government's Department of Agricultural Credit and Land, has made of Outjo a battleground where the country's espirant Black farmers are, with State aid, encroaching on a traditional stronghold of White nationalism in SWA.

The geographical birthmark of previous policies of segregated land settlement and apartheid's benevolence to a land-hungry Afrikaner community, Outjo is today bleeding under the scalpel of what is seen to be a national experiment in reverse discrimination.

The effects of the war, the drought, and of Black encroachment in the farmland resulted in a special meeting this week attended by all representative organisations in Outjo, and addressed by Mr Jannie de Wet, ex-Commissioner General for Owambo and presently MEC acting for Agriculture in the Administration for Whites.

Startling facts and a dark picture revealed themselves at that meeting and during the next 48 hours when the Windhoek Advertiser accompanied a contingent of representatives of the local press.

These serve to tell the tale of the demise of White settler agriculture in its traditional form.

Of Outjo's 531 farms, 183 stand empty and a further 24 are up for sale. 258 are still occupied by Whites, 32 have been resettled by White and 34 by Black farmers under the priority resettlement scheme, with reports of a further 46 being presently under option for sale to Black buyers.

In the town of Outjo, the White school population has halved, fewer subjects are being offered to scholars and teachers are becoming increasingly scarce.

20 Government houses and 40 private units stand vacant in Outjo while the decrease in registered farm workers from 2 000 in 1976 to 1 000 today has led to overcrowding coupled with unemployment in the Black township, where the municipality is doing its best to create housing with shrinking funds at its disposal.

Town Clerk Mr Gerrie Lemmer predicted that 30 to 40 percent of the Municipal staff "will one day have to be retrenched", and where the normal electrician contingent of five has shrunk to one, that one is being underutilised.

The Outjo Municipality no longer gives out tenders but does all work directly.

Even if it rains, 31 percent of Outjo's total land surface will remain virtually useless as a result of the advanced stage of bush encroachment.

Mr Lemmer pointed out that Outjo's approximately 1 500 Whites are entirely dependent on agriculture. There are no mines in the district, and if agriculture collapses, so does the town.

COLLAPSING

And agriculture is collapsing.

Some 31 percent of the total land surface (which represents a higher proportion of actual grazing) has become virtually useless as pasturage because of the advance stage of bush encroachment — the omen of desertification.

These bushes, feeding on the soil and consuming per unit the equivalent of 4 mm of rain through transpiration from the atmosphere's moisture content, will prevent grass from growing even if and when it does rain.

Through direct starvation and emergency selling Outjo's stock population has been cut to 25 percent of its total.

Today there are in the region 51 000 head of large stock and 29 000 small stock.

This represents a spread of one head of stock to 50 hectares, five times the normal allocation of one to ten.

Previous evaluations had revealed that one third of farmers each had applied poor, reasonable and sound grazing control on their land in the past.

But direct politics is also taking its toll on the district's agriculture.

There is one White farmer in the Outjo district who happens to be surrounded on all sides by six newly-arrived Black neighbours who have all moved in during the past eight months just as he did, under the priority settlement scheme. It also happens that he is an HNP supporter.

The friction presently being encountered between White farmers and newly-started Black farmers throughout the Outjo district is partly the effect of the proxy socio-economic civil battle being waged between the Central Government and the Administration for Whites — an ominous prelude to fiercer struggles to come for SWA's limited agricultural countryside.

ABUSE

The White Administration and the large majority of the White (Nationalist) farmers in Outjo allege that the priority scheme — in itself an excellent one — is being abused by certain applicants — for the most part Black. They maintain that the controls governing the implementation of the scheme in terms of the various prerequisites it demands of aspirant farmers are not being strictly adhered to, thereby causing the scheme to fail.

Judging by the evidence encountered and interpretation given thereto by this newspaper and the other newspapers accompanied on the tour, it would appear that the White farmers and their Administration are largely correct.

The scheme is a good one. For the sum of about R10 000 or 350 head of large stock or any mix or equivalent, a successful applicant acquires a farm through the intermediary of the Department of Agricultural Credit and Land Tenure (First-Tier). No interest is charged for the first three years and capital repayments commence only after the 10th year.

REQUIREMENTS

The requirements are that the applicant must have agricultural experience or at least to prove himself to be able to handle his new career with aptitude. The person must become a fulltime farmer and must physically occupy the farm he acquires on a fulltime basis. The person must join the local Commando or perform a suitable alternative contribution to the military security of the region.

An analysis of 63 cases where the State acted as an optional buyer in land deals involving farms in the Outjo district has revealed that speculation by Black Second-Tier authorities causing land prices to rocket far above the ruling market price and the Land Bank evaluation.

ONE-IN-TEN

Although these instances do not all involve the priority settlement scheme but also the so-called "One in Ten" Scheme (where in terms of a 1979 AG Proclamation, land settlement was also to be encouraged by permitting buyers to provide only a 10 percent deposit on the purchase price of the farm), they all form part of the same pattern of Black "encroachment" on traditional White farmland in the district, and the wave of reaction by White farmers.

Of the 63 deals analysed, 32 were shown to be established farmers who sold their farms or farm extensions.

Eight unoccupied farms were purchased by Whites, and 17 by Blacks.

An undisclosed (White Nationalist) source has stated that it is convinced that at least 12 of the aforementioned cases were sold not as a result of normal economic bargaining, but through outbidding the market price ruling at the time.

Cases have been mentioned where certain Black Second-tier authorities had actually raised the going market value of Outjo farmland of between R10 and R15 per hectare, to as much as R25 or even R50 per hectare!

Few White owners can refuse such an offer, and invariably do not.

Damara, Herero and Nama Second-Tier Authorities have been accused of these "unfair" market manipulations, buying White farms with funds voted for emergency grazing, thereby appropriating land in the name of the Second-Tier Authority and making those available to selected Black farmers.

Apparently a valuable water source for Xhorixas was secured in this manner, where a farm containing rich springs was purchased for an astronomical price by the Damara Authority, outbidding the Nama Authority who had originally offered the White farmer a unit price twice the value of the land.

Of the 17 farms sold to Black owners, nine were sold by White farmers who subsequently moved, four were farms belonging to White farmers but had not been the seller's only farm, and four were unoccupied farms purchased by Black farmers.

This pattern therefore indicates that White-owned farms are being sold rather than unoccupied farms.

Mr Jannie de Wet took the press along to six farms all sold under the priority settlement scheme to see what was happening on each farm after it had been bought with certain conditions written into the deed of transfer. Mr Adriaan "Maans" Steenkamp had purchased Lazy Spade belonging to Mr Dirk Mudge in March the year at R25 per hectare, 6 600 ha in extent and situated some 50 kms north east of Outjo town, Lazy Spade fetched R162 000. Mr Steenkamp deposited R22 000 which he used from the sale of his farm near Khorixas.

"For me the scheme has been a saviour," he said.

"If I had not used this opportunity I would have gone to work for the Roads Department."

Mr Steenkamp explained that he had left his farm in Damaraland because of the drought, and with 400 stud stock on his new farm he was sitting tight for the next two years if necessary until the drought passed. He had no Black neighbours and was a member of the Commando.

Mr Steenkamp has 25 years farming experience. He said that it took four months to find a suitable farm because of the strong demand for reasonable land. There was still a minimum of grazing on Lazy Spade.

Mr P A Munke and his wife are German immigrants who came to SWA in 1967. They started farming for the first time when they bought the farm Jannie which belonged to Mr De Wet himself. An electrician by trade, Mr Munke sold his business in Windhoek and purchased 200 head of cattle and the balance in cash on Jannie which he bought for R11 per hectare, a total of 8 000 ha.

He has 450 head on the farm today and has erected a temporary home for his wife and baby girl, since there was no house on the farm. It had been Mr De Wet's grazing extension.

The deal went through in July last year, and to date, Mr Munke has invested about R60 000 in the farm. He was expecting his first farming income next year.

On his new farm Mr Munke had five Black labourers and their families. He has not met any of his Black neighbours yet. He is a member of the Commando.

Mr Winfried van Hartelock, single, bought the farm McArthur in May last year from Mr Blok de Wet at R16 per hectare. For the 8 000 ha farm, Mr Van Hartelock had deposited R16 000 and 30 cattle. He has 350 head on the farm at present. He has four Black families working for him on the farm, having evicted another four because they "did not want to work".

Mr Van Hartelock, an East German, has trouble with one of his Black neighbours, mainly with straying cattle because gates were left open. According to Mr Van Hartelock he has had eight cattle stolen since May this year.

Mr Van Hartelock has also had the misfortunate arson of having his house burgled and totally wrecked by fire, which he alleges was arson. He suggested that it was done by the Black burglars involved.

Judging by appearance, Mr Van Hartelock is not making a resounding success of his farm. The cattle did not look as if they were being given lick and the condition of the property around the house, unlike the previous two visited, was in an untidy condition.

He is a Commando member but apparently is not popular with the rest of the farming community encountered in Outjo, for various reasons.

The farm Norma previously owned by Mr Piet Mudge, brother of Mr Dirk Mudge had been sold to a Black owner. We encountered eight families on the farm.

Four were squatters. The other four were tenants of the owner — a Mr Engelhard Karita who is a headmaster in Otjiwarongo.

He does not live on the farm, but visits it occasionally over weekends, according to the tenants, who hail from Omatjete Herero reserve. They brought 150 head of cattle from there in order to find emergency grazing for which they pay R2 per head monthly to Mr Karita.

They don't give their cattle any lick, and stated their intention of returning to Hereroland after the drought had passed. Although they had applied for drought relief funds from the Hereroland Authority in January they had not received any to date.

HOMESICK

"We don't like it here on the farm," their spokesman Mr Abraham Semba said, "We are homesick for our people in the Reserve."

According to the tenants, who are all brothers or sisters, they have had no problems with their White neighbours.

The owner of Norma is not a Commando member.

These four farms mentioned so far are adjacent to one another.

Mr Willie Thirion bought the farm Toevlug about 100 kms north of Outjo in February this year. The farm is 6 200 hectares and cost R85 000. Mr Thirion, who has farming experience although he is still young, deposited capital equal to 450 head of cattle. He bought the farm from a Mr Kobus van der Merwe.

Mr Thirion is the HNP supporter who is surrounded on all sides by Black neighbours.

"Had I known who my neighbours were going to be I would not have bought. But I won't move now," he added.

INEVITABLE

Mr Thirion believes that it is inevitable that White and Black farmers should become neighbours in the changing political dispensation, but feels that each population group should endeavour to stick as close together as possible, and should only border on one another where it was necessary.

"I now have to travel 50 kms if I want to visit someone," he said. "It is the total isolation from other Whites that I find unacceptable. I can tolerate Black neighbours on one or two sides, but not on all."

Mr Thirion went on to say that he did not foresee "trouble" if the Black farmers in the area kept their numbers on each farm to a minimum and did not bring all their relatives with them.

He was dissatisfied that his Black neighbours were not the owners, but relatives and tenants of the real owners. He said that he had only met one of his Black neighbours who was in fact the owner of a farm.

UNFURNISHED

In most of the cases, the farmhouses stood empty and unfurnished although they were bought some eight months ago or more.

Black owners were therefore not meeting the requirements of the priority resettlement scheme. They were absentee owners.

Mr Thirion is a farmer who knows his business however, He showed us two young bulls in excellent conditon and the condition of his farm, despite the virtual total absence of grazing, was shipshape.

He had piles of feed stacked near the barn, and had already done a little business.

"The scheme itself is good and the manner in which I have been assisted is satisfactory," he commented.

"I would never have been able to own land if it were not for this scheme. There are still many other young Whites like myself who will take the opportunity. But more controls are needed to ensure that new settlers stick to the requirements laid down in the scheme."

Mr Thirion read extracts from the deed of transfer he had signed, pointing out the conditions that the buyer must be a fulltime farmer, occupy the farm every day, and be a member of the Commando. He fulfilled all these, but found it unjust that his Black neighbours did not, and that no action was being taken against them.

He mentioned some of the farms surrounding his one by one — Elandsfontein where the owner — a Mr Javara — visits his farm once a month, the farm Mooiplaas where there were not 139 cattle as there was supposed to be in terms of that particular deed of sale, and two farms owned by the Katutura brothers, also absentee owners.

Mr Thirion said that many Bushmen had left the surrounding Herero- owned farms and came to him looking for work and food since they had become unemployed.

"The Hereros don't pay the Bushmen. I have now six families working for me instead of the two I need," he told newsmen.

The next farm we visited was Balalika, close to Mr Thirion's Toevlug.

This was the only Herero-owned farm that we had come across either physically or by hearsay, that had its owner living on the farm.

Mr Daniel Kandukuzumba, aged 52 (which is over-age by two years in terms of the stipulations of the priority scheme) showed us his deed of sale.

He had bought the 6 000 ha farm for R78 000 on December last year with a deposit of 90 cattle and 100 goats and the balance presumably in cash.

Mr Kandukuzumba, previously from Okakarara had bought the farm from a Mr D J van Rijn and brought with him 10 people from Okakarara. There were six adult men amongst these, and the rest were wives and children.

Mr Kandukuzumba came walking to the house from the kraal, dressed in overalls. He had been doing some repair work.

The house was in a poor condition but it seemed that he had bought it in that state.

Mr Kandukuzumba said he liked it on his new farm but complained about the house. Two Herero women were sitting around a fire outside.

He told us he was joining the Commando at Otjiwarongo in October for an initial training course.

There were also two Herero soldiers on the farm, visiting at the time.

On our way to Balalike, we had passed Mooiplaas also purchased by a Herero. As in the case of Norma, the house was empty and the farm deserted except for a Bushman family living in an outbuilding at the gate.

It would seem that the White Administration has a point when it protests as it has been for months, that Black owners are not coming up to standard, on average.

HISTORICAL REASONS

There are, of course, historical reasons for this. Black farmers have not had the benefit of agricultural training in scientific methods, and this gap would have to be filled if agriculture is to be developed effectively by new Black farmers entering the commercial sector.

White farmers are showing themselves to be tolerant of Black neighbours, and the various farming associations would even accommodate enrolment by people not of their own kind, even if by association rather than direct inclusion at this stage.

BY THE RULES

But the game has got be played by the rules, according to general opinion, and if rules are being bypassed for the sake of apparent political expediency, nothing positive can result.

Agricultural land in SWA is scarce under the given ecological factors, and in Outjo things are at their worst.

Under the present system of multiplicity of authorities representing different population groups, the Second-Tier authorities have to put their shoulder to the wheel and assist their farmers, no matter where they are settled, with the technical expertise required.

The priority resettlement scheme is, in any case, a temporary measure within the war situation, and will inevitably make way for a permanent land settlement policy on a national scale.

In the meantime, the least that can be expected is generating honest farming endeavours by all people interested in farming as a profession and not using land settlement as a political instrument — that is the one serious mistake of the past which should not be repeated.

TRUST BANK ANNOUNCES NEW SUBSIDIARY IN SWA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE TRUST BANK announced this morning that it has decided to set up a full subsidiary bank in SWA, following in the footsteps of most other banks in SWA.

Trust Bank was set up nearly 30 years ago by Dr Jan S Marais and was recently taken over by the Sanlam group. The present South African Chairman is Dr Fred du Plessis.

General Manager for the bank's special projects, Mr T L Vermaak, said "the fact that SWA has its own tax authority as well as Registrar of Companies and Secretary of Finance were important considerations in this decision.

"As differences may in future appear in regard to taxation and the application of the Banking Act in the Republic and SWA, a separate company is better placed to adapt to such changes. This must be viewed against the background that SWA will increasingly administer such matters on its own.

"Depositors and savers will be afforded the opportunity to transfer their desposits without any cost to the Trust Bank of SWA, or to retain it with the Trust Bank of Africa," Mr Vermaak said.

The same will apply to new deposits.

Mr Vermaak pointed out furthermore that cheque account and finance clients will be notified individually of the transfer of their existing accounts to the Trust Bank of SWA.

It is understood that one of the first tasks that will be tackled by the Regional Manager of the bank in SWA is to improve the bank's image among local German and English-speakers.

The local bank's clientele is largely Afrikaans-orientated while the bank itself has concentrated almost exclusively in marketing itself through the Afrikaans media.

Significantly, a dinner was held last night for the bank's co-Managing Director, Mr D Swanepoel and his wife, who are presently touring SWA. They have visited both the north and the west of the country. Mr Swanepoel did not refer in his speech to the bank's new status.

The dinner was attended by numerous leaders in both the private and public sectors.

Mr Swanepoel complimented the country on the friendliness that he had met everywhere.

Turning to the SA Budget which was presented last week, he said that in his view it was neutral, it allowed for harmony between fiscal and monetary policies and it reflected that SA had moved into a downward phase of the economy.

Mr Swanepoel urged that everything possible be done to consolidate the economy during the downward phase so that it is able to benefit to the full from the next upward phase. This inlcuded keeping inflation in check.

Mr Swanepoel forecast that interest rates would play an important role in the economy during the next year or two and hinted that they would remain on the high side.

NEW FINDS PRECIPITATE 'COAL RUSH'

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 17 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Article by David Pieters: "The Coal Rush is On!"]

[Text]

INDICATIONS are strong that another coalfield has been discovered in SWA, 170 kms north-east of Windhoek near Hochfeld and that the search for coal in SWA has turned into a "rush."

While CDM continues to explore its vast concessions in the country's south-east around the Nossob River where a coalfield with estimated drilled reserves of some three billion tons has so far been identified, another Anglo American associate, B & O Mineral Exploration, has reportedly struck coal on five adjoining farms in the south-eastern corner of the Otjiwarongo district bordering Hereroland West.

Applications to have their respective concession areas further extended were filed both by CDM and B & O at the Mining Commissioner's offices in Windhoek last week.

While several concession-holders are engaged in opposition in at least three separate regions for SWA's coal, exploration has intensified and corporate involvement become increasingly complicated since it became known last year that CDM was in the process of quantifying the Territory's first major coalfield in the south-east near Aranos.

The mining authorities have meanwhile begun to apply the brakes for smaller concessionaires by trebling grant fees and other statutory financial commitments on exploration in an effort to ward off "undue speculation" amidst the flood of concessions granted and applied for since the beginning of this year.

An official in the Mining Commissioner's office in Windhoek informed the Advertiser last week that there has been roughly a 50 percent increase in applications for concessions during the first eight months of this year, mainly in the south and south-east of the country.

It is generally acknowledged that exploration in the south-east is aimed at coal, for it has been established that SWA harbours vast reserves of high grade coal in that area.

REWARDS

The search for coal subsequently spread to other parts of the country since CDM's initial successes late last year, and the concession grants taken out in the new area slightly east of the halfway mark between Okahandja and Otjiwarongo since April this year have met with their first rewards.

CDM's application for two further grants just south of the Nossob and east of Botswana convering some 24 000 sq kms will bring to a total its concession area for coal to approximately 16 500 sq kms stretching all the way to the northern boundary of Aminuis.

B & O, which is active in its concession straddling 22 degrees south between 17 and 18 degrees east, has now applied for another 600 sq kms in Hereroland West to add to its approximately 1 200 sq kms already under exploration.

The region is known for its superficial manganese deposits and of the several dormant mines, one at Otjozondu is active.

LATEST FIND

The latest coal find by B & O is immediately south of 22 degrees south almost in the centre of its concession.

The depth at which the coal was struck as well as its quality has not been disclosed, nor has the find been officially confirmed by B & O.

If the reported discovery of coal on "at least five" adjacent farms Okamutenja, Okatuogo, Okatjise, Hindbrechts and Okamandumba are true, then it is clear at any rate that another coalfield—SWA's second has been identified.

B & O is not alone in the search for coal in the area covering the north-eastern corner of Okahandja district, south-eastern corner of Otjiwarongo district and south-western corner of Hereroland West, however, although it seems to have been rewarded first.

Two closely-associated domestic companies, Von Francois Mining and SWA Manganese, apparently followed B & O's cue when it took out a concession near Hochfeld in April, by also applying for grants bordering on the former's area in May and June.

SURROUNDED

Last month, another exploration company, which has on its directorship principals of established mining intersts in SWA also entered the fray and applied for several concession grants also adjacent to B & O, now almost surrounded entirely on the east and west flanks of its concession area.

A little distance to the south-east near Otjozondu, SWA Manganese's concession on which it is operating probably SWA's largest manganese mine, is similarly flanked by another string of concessions all belonging to one interest of unknown significance at this stage.

It is noteworthy that SWA Manganese is also locked in competition over coal on the banks of the Nossob River, where its strategically-placed concession is almost entirely surrounded by CDM.

The mining authorities' damper on the rush for concessions which it announced in July with retrospective effect from April this year, is largely directed at the search for coal, both in terms of its timing and in respect of the targets that recent grant applications have set themselves.

This has been partly confirmed by a spokesman in the Mining Commissioner's office in discussion with the Windhoek Advertiser last week.

SIGNIFICANT

The latest indications of coal deposits near Hochfeld are regarded by mining sources as being of considerable economic significance because of their closer location of existing infrastructure than the Nossob field.

BRIEFS

SWAPO GUERRILLAS SHOT--Windhoek--Security Forces had shot and killed 18 armed Swapo insurgents in northern SWA in the past fortnight, Defence Headquarters has announced in Windhoek. All but one of the insurgents had been shot in a number of skirmishes south of Beacon 22 and Beacon 23 in Owambo. During the period under review, four members of the Security Forces were killed. Their names were released by Defence Headquarters in Pretoria. "Swapo terrorists were also responsible for one sabotage incident and the murder of an unidentified Owambo", the statement said. Another Owambo civilian died instantly when the vehicle in which he was travelling triggered a landmine near Eenhana. Ten civilians were injured in the landmine explosion and were admitted to a military hospital. Last Wednesday, a group of Swapo terrorists blew up telephone poles near Mahenene. "On the same day they murdered an unidentified Owambo civilian near Omaheva" the statement said. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 21 Aug 81 p 4]

NATIONAL AIRLINE FOR SWA--Windhoek--The Administrator General of SWA, Mr Danie Hough, has announced the appointment of a committee to implement the transfer of functions from the South African Department of Transport to the Territory. The committee's task would include the establishment of a national airline for SWA. In a statement issued in Windhoek, Mr Hough said the appointment of the committee arose from recommendations in the Welgemoed report on transport affairs in SWA. The implementation committee would be chaired by Mr P J Welgemoed, a former Professor of Transport Economics at RAU, who was nominated to Parliament at the beginning of the current session. Mr Hough said the committee's programme would comprise two phases. The first would entail the transfer of legislation on transport affairs from South Africa to the Administrator General. At the same time, the committee would take the necessary steps to establish a national airline for SWA. In the second phase, arrangements would be made in consultation with SA Airways to extend flights of the SWA national airline to South Africa. INTIMIDATION OF IGBO PEOPLE DEPLORED

Igbos Ask Protection

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 6 Aug 81 p 16

[Article by Joe Onovo]

[Text] Igbos living at Apiapum in Obubra Local Government Area, Cross River State, have appealed to the three Governors of Cross River, Anambra and Imo States respectively, for protection of their lives and property.

The appeal was contained in a strongly-worded petition addressed to the three governors on behalf of Messrs Raymond Okafor, S. I. Ahanonu and Osy Onwuche by Barrister Kanu B. Okpaleke, an Abakaliki based lawyer.

According to the petitioners, more than 200 Igbos of Anambra and Imo origin resident at Apiapum consist mostly of traders, drivers, mechanics and have been there for many years.

On April 19, 1981, according to reports, there was a minor disagreement involving some boys in Apiapum market, one of whom was an Igbo, and the other Mbembe--the tribe which owns the Apiapum town.

The fight exploded into a riot in which Igbos were hunted down all over the town and assaulted.

Their homes were allegedly invaded by gangs of Mbembe youths who either looted or destroyed their property.

Many of the Igbos were seriously wounded during the rampage and had to pass the night in the bushes.

They regretted that "inspite of several appeals to the police headquarters at Obubra, no policemen came to the scene until 9 O'clock the following morning."

Ten days later, the clan head of Mbembe, summoned a peace meeting of both parties, including the secretary to the Obubra Local Government Council and the legislator representing the area in the Cross River State House of Assembly.

It was agreed at the meeting that all property and money seized from the Igbos should be recovered and deposited with the clan head who should return same to the owners.

According to the petitioners, it was also agreed that a committee comprising five members each be appointed from the two sides to investigate and submit a report to the Obubra Local Government Council on the loss of property sustained by the Igbos.

The petitioners regretted that since the peace meeting nothing practically had been done to alleviate the sufferings of the victims of the rampage.

Although they have furnished the police with the names of some of their assailants no action seemed to have been taken by them, the petitioners added.

[Editorial in the column "Front Page Comment": "Stop Intimidating the Igbos"]

[Text]

THE recent statements by Senator Ubah Ahmed during an NTV Enugu Press Conference, were a bolt of mischief and arrogance to say the least. His utterances were not only inciting and inflamatory but a display of self-conceited pedagogy and temerity.

UBAH Ahmed used the NTV programme to threaten and warn the Igbos that the break-up of the NPN/NPP accord, their security is once more balancing on a keg of gun powder which, he predicted, could blow up to their corporate liquidation, anytime some interests so decide.

HIS comparing the break-up of the accord to the break-up of the NPC/NCNC alliance (in the First Republic) which he alleged was responsible for the pogrom against the Igbos in the mid-sixties, is most unfortunate and uninformed. Yet Ahmed has said something curious and new. He had also wrongly inferred that the Igbos are no longer safe because their security was anchored in the defunct NPN/NPP accord.

UBAH Ahmed erred in his premise, and per-

ALL said however, we find it provocative of anybody to come all the way from Lagos to threaten the Igbos with anathema, simply because a political party decided to determine its own destiny.

ONE wonders what Ubah Ahmed meant to achieve by invoking the incubus of civil war and mass persecution of the Igbos. All efforts have been to destroy the sordid memory of the morbid past, in the interest of brotherliness and national continuity, and for a Senator to strive revive such old wounds is not only frightening but devilish.

THE intimidating statements coming from an NPN member of Senator Ahmed's status, cannot be dismissed as irrelevant, and the Igbos call on the NPN to briddle the tongues and control the Machiavellian consternation and ethnic jingoism of its political outriders.

BALANCED against an earlier statement credited to the Minister of Industries, Mallam Adamu Ciroma, also of the NPN, that non-indigenes should not hold sensitive posts in the Borno State government, we begin to wonder whether stateism and ethnic chauvinism are part of the ideologies of the National Party of Nigeria.

DAILY STAR warns that unguarded and inflamatory statements can serve no useful purpose and may only create sectional bitterness that will jeopardize the unity and stability of Nigeria. We also call on the NPN to refrain from the belligerent complexes that tend to pose it against the rest of the nation.

SENATOR Ubah Ahmed's Press Conference has made many people — the Igbos in particular — uncomfortable and we wonder that the President and our law enforcement agencies should allow people to say things that bother on sedition and still get away with them.

MANPOWER SHORTAGE SAID HINDERING FOURTH DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 10 Aug 81 pp 1, 32

[Text] The implementation of large number of projects envisaged in the Fourth National Development Plan may meet with difficulties like its predecessors becuase of the shortage of manpower to execute them.

In a recent manpower study carried out in the country by the Ministry of National Planning, the rate of manpower shortage now ranges between 30 per cent and 50 per cent in respect of a large number of senior and intermediate level categories of manpower.

According to Dr. Udo Udo Aka, the Director General of Centre for Management Development (CMD) the situation may even be made worst if the States now planning to build higher institutions go ahead to build them because they would definitely increase the number of the needed manpower in the country.

The manpower requirement in the Fourth National Plan based on the present strength of establishment position in both the public and private sectors indicates that the nation will require, on the average, two additional people out of every three people now on the important occupations.

The manpower requirements during this period, that is 1981-1985, in some specific occupations showed that about 352 additional statisticians would be needed to the present workforce of 380. For the system Analysts and Programmers 272 would be needed to supplement the present number of 376.

Also about 403 architects would be needed to supplement the present number of about 412, for Estate Supervisors and Valuers 122 more are required to supplement the present number of 247.

The others are: Civil and Structural Engineers, 9617 more needed to the present 8069; Electric and Electronics 930 needed more to the present 1567, and Marine Engineers, 122 more are needed to join the present force of 371.

It has also been estimated that 6,000 Executive and about 700 Administration officers are needed for the implementation of projects in the country during this plan period.

CAMPAIGN TO BE LAUNCHED AGAINST ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

ILLEGAL immigrants and those who have overstayed their entry term will soon be flushed out of the country.

The permanent secretary in the Ministry of Internal Affairs, Mr. G. A. Nwanze, yesterday told the House of Representatives Committee on Internal Affairs that the action would be taken as soon as the Government White Paper on the Kano religious disturbances was released.

"The issue of illegal immigrants is of much concern to the ministry, like the Kano religious disturbances, and that was why the present administration has decided through the White Paper to flush them out."

According to him, this decision would ensure strick compliance with the immigration law in future.

The raid on illegal immigrants had been suspended because of the repercussion on Nigerian nationals in other neighbouring countries.

In his own contribution, the Director of Immigration Services in the ministry, Mr. L. Sambo, said that lack of accommodation, insufficient manpower and inadequate communication facilities were the main problems facing the ministry.

He said the problems were inherited, adding that immigration officials could only maintain a skeleton "traffic index card" to monitor the movement of immigrants who had addresses with the ministry.

Mr. Sambo pointed out that those without fixed addresses often disappeared when they entered the country which made it difficult for the ministry to locate their whereabouts.

He maintained that it was through constant raid by the law enforcement agents that those illegal immigrants could be brought to book.

On the Nigerian/-Cameroun border clash, Mr. Nwanze said although a treaty was signed in 1974 between the two countries it was not ratified.

PROBLEMS REPORTED AMONG NATIONAL YOUTH CORPSMEN

Lagos SUNDAY TIMES in English 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Basil Okafor]

[Text]

MORE than one week after they are supposed to have reported at their various orientation camps, hundreds of National Youth Service Corpsmen are yet to do so. And late comers are supposed to be punished by having their periods of service extended.

When the SUNDAY TIMES called at the NYSC Secretariat in Surulere, Lagos, corpers were seen gathered in various groups, complaining about various problems.

While many of the students complained that they wanted their postings changed, others claimed they had not got their deployment letters. And yet others cannot collect their transport allowances.

A graduate of the University of Lagos said he wished to be posted to one of the northern states to be able to see more of the country.

According to him, he was not even given transport allowance with which he could travel to Anambra State where he was erroneously posted to, because this is his state of origin.

One other graduate, Mr. Kalio, from the Rivers State who said he had all his education in the western states saw no reason why he should be posted to Ogun State instead of any of the northern states.

Mr. Namkufong from Bauchi State said he had been in Lagos for four days just waiting for his deployment letter, and has exhausted all his money in the process. And Mrs. Agunwa complained bitterly that she had waited for days to get her wrong posting corrected. She said that contrary to what they were told earlier, she had been posted away from her state of origin and this should not have applied to a married woman.

"There is no guidance of any sort here. You just come in and move about like a sheep. When you finally get a form and fill it, you fight your way once more to submit it. I really suggest a decentralisation of operations here."

At the director's office he was said by an official to have travelled out. And at the assistant director's office where a huge crowd of the graduates had been locked out, all attempts made by the SUNDAY TIMES to reach him for comments failed.

"You can't see him!" boomed a lady.

DECREASE NOTED IN AGRICULTURAL LOANS

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES IN English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Roseline Umesi]

[Text] IN spite of the increase from 6 to 8 per cent in the proportion of their loans which banks should give to agriculture, lending under the Agricultural Credit Guarantee Scheme declined in 1980.

According to the scheme's report for the year, total lending amounted to N30.9 million — down 8.0 per cent from the 1979 total.

Of a total of 2,221 applications for loans received in 1980, only 945 or 42.5 per cent were approved. This compares with a total of 1,105 loans approved in 1979.

As in the previous years of the scheme, lending for livestock production accounted for a large portion of the total. This sector in 1980 took N21.1 million or 68.1 per cent of the loans, with the bulk going to poultry production which alone accounted for N19.5 million or 63.1 per cent of all loans granted.

Loans for food crop production amounted to N5.2 million or 16.7 per cent of the total. Mixed farming accounted for N2.7 million while other crops accounted for N1.9 million. The report attributed the decline in lending to various factors.

First was the fact that government restricted importation of maize, a feed constituent for poultry in 1979. Although the restriction was lifted later that year, the effect filtered in 1980, the report argued.

Also, the government had libralised importation of frozen chicken and this caused a lot of losses to local poultry farmers who consequently could not meet their commitments to the banks.

The banks, therefore were cautious about lending for poultry production in 1980, the report concluded.

Secondly, there were reports that maize and rice growers around Bauchi and Borno States had difficulties selling their products, resulting in repayment problems, and caution on the part of the banks in committing more funds.

In this connection, the report suggested that the Grains Board should be better organised to enable it buy up all that farmers are able to produce.

The third factor, according to the report, was the delay in the long-expected review of the guarantee scheme. Prospective borrowers might had held back in the hope of better credit terms after the review, it suggested.

Difficulties in obtaining certificates of occupancy in line with the Land Use Act, also prevented farmers from obtaining loans, while the agricultural loans schemes of various state governments appear to have been more attractive to farmers, particularly the small ones.

Most important of all however was the problem posed by increasing incidents of defaults among borrowers, which tended to discourage banks from lending to new borrowers. Loans under the scheme are guaranteed by the Central Bank up to 75 per cent only of any amount in default, subject to a maximum of N50,000 or N1.0 million respectively in the case of loans to individuals or co-operative societies and corporate bodies.

GOVERNMENTS PROVIDE FOOD, SEED FOR DISTRIBUTION

Rice for Kaduna

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 2 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Sani Ahmadu Gaya]

[Text] THE Kaduna Distribution Agency will soon receive 3,000 tonnes of rice out of a total of 10,000 tonnes it ordered under the open general license.

The order for the rice was made about six months ago and it is expected to start arriving in Kaduna by next week.

The Managing Director, of Amigo (Nig) Enterprises Ltd., Lagos, one of the three companies responsible for the importation, told the Sunday New Nigeria in Kaduna that an allocation of 3,000 tons had already arrived at the Lagos ports.

Mr. Ejembi said that arrangement for the transportation of the consignment to Kaduna had been completed, and that delivery would start next week if the Agency paid his company what they agreed upon.

He, however, expressed fear that any delay by the Agency to act according to the contract agreement may lead to losing some quantity of the rice to thieves at the Lagos ports.

Investigations revealed that the Kaduna State Distribution Agency has received little or no supply of rice since February, when the last consignment of the commodity was distributed to educational institutions, like the Ahmadu Bello University Zaria, after the rice riot there.

Until recently, the Sunday New Nigerian gathered, the Agency has been supplying sugar, milk and other consummer items to people, in preparation for the Ramadan Fast.

It was further gathered that some officials of the Agency, including the Chairman, have just returned from an oversea tour in connection with rice importation.

The Chairman, Alhaji Balarabe Ibrahim, was not available for comments.

The 10,000 tonnes of rice to be imported will cost about 8 million Naira.

Bauchi Rice Distribution

[Text] The Bauchi State Government is planning to import 300,000 bags of rice and sell at subsidised rate to the people of the state, this year.

The first consignment of 200,000 is expected to arrive in the state soon.

Announcing this in Bauchi recently while speaking to the New Nigerian, the state Commissioner for Rural Development and Co-operatives, Alhaji Daudu Abubakar, said his ministry had worked out effective methods of distribution.

The methods, he said, included allocation to all the ministries and educational institutions.

Other methods, according to the commissioner, included allocations in all the 43 local governments in the state, based on 75 per cent population and 25 per cent on equality.

Bauchi Peanut, Cotton Seeds

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Aug 81 p 17

[Text]

IN a bid to revitalise the production of groundnut in Bauchi State, the government, has this year distributed 900 tonnes of groundnut seeds to all towns and villages in the state.

The state Commissioner for Agriculture and Produce Inspection, Alhaji Adamu Tafawa Balewa, who is also the Deputy Governor in an exclusive interview with the New Nigerian recalled that the decline in groundnut production engaged the attention of the agricultural commissioners of 10 northern states last year.

He said in 1980, the government distributed disease free groundnut seeds to farmers in addition to other inputs necessary for successful groundnut production.

He said, the move yielded results, as, the drought notwithstanding, the government was able to purchase groundnut worth 63,000 Naira for the Nigerian Groundnut Board as well as another consignment worth 40,000 Naira for the same board.

On cotton production, Alhaji Adamu Tafawa Balewa said, 4,000 tonnes of cotton seeds had already been distributed to all towns and villages in the state. He said chemicals such as Aldrex T, Fernasan D, Ruradan and Primer had similarly been distributed.

RURAL BOARD ELECTRIFIES 21 TOWNS IN KADUNA

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Aug 81 p 17

[Text] KADUNA State Rural Electrification Board (REB) in the current development plan period, will supply of electricity to 21 towns in the state.

This was announced by the Chairman of the board, Alhaji Mu'azu Kankara, in an interview with an official of the state Ministry of Information in Kaduna.

The chairman revealed that the 1975/1980 development plan period, provided for the electrification of 15 towns, out of which the board had completed 13 despite unforeseen problems and escalating prices of equipment.

The mass rural electrification programme was important to any government, especially the Kaduna State Government, where there are several rural areas with over 5,000 inhabitants each, he added.

Commenting on major rural areas, of the state, the chairman said, the board was committed to 100 per cent reticulation of electricity to such towns and satellite villages. The board had been trying to spread evenly supply of electricity throughout the state, he added.

He pointed out that the REB plan to electrify 31 towns would require 33 KV ring main circuit and about 35 million Naira. Most of these towns would be supplied from the national grid and two stations.

The REB stations are currently functioning for 24 hours but arrangements were underway to recruit more staff for 24-hour service at Saminaka, Kachia, Birnin-Gwari, Mani, Ikara, Makarfi and Soba, Alhaji Mu'azu added.

Enumerating REB's problems, the chairman said some of the worst problems were poor performance by major contractors and the limited fund allocation by the state government, scarcity of spare-parts and shortage of diesel fuel were also constraints, he said.

On staffing, the chairman further said that the board had about 400 technical staff, a mechanical workshop and a fleet of vehicles, which facilitated training the technical staff.

The REB he said had bought a staff bus running between the headquarters and certain parts of the town at nominal charges. Plans were underway to acquire low-cost houses from the state housing authority for its intermediate and junior workers, he added.

CONTRACT AWARDED FOR IRRIGATION, DRAINAGE SYSTEM

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Aug 81 p 17

[Article by Abdulhamid Babatunde]

[Text]

A 76 million Naira contract for the construction of the irrigation and drainage system of the first phase of the Hadejia Valley Project has been awarded.

The contract was awarded to B. E. C. Freres Nigerian Limited at a ceremony at the headquarters of the Hadejia Jama'are River Basin Development Authority.

When completed the irrigation scheme will cover an area of 12,500 hectares or about 30,000 acres.

In an address on the occasion the chairman of the caretaker committee of the authority, Ambassador Bawa Bulkachuwa remarked that investigations of the potentials of the area which began twenty years ago had now confirmed that there was up to one million acres of fertile land which had been only partially cultivated.

He added that if put under irrigation with adequate water supply and even flooding production of crops and livestock would be significantly increased apart from bright prospects for the establishment of agro-allied industries for tomato, sugar and rice processing.

Ambassador Bawa Bulkachuwa pointed out that the country would be saving up to 25 million Naira in foreign exchange on imported food if the Hadejia Valley Project was executed as recommended.

He appealed to farmers in the project area to co-operate with the construction firm and also thanked the Federal Government for approving the project and making funds available.

Ambassador Bawa Bulkachuwa signed the contract on behalf of the federal Government while Chief Alex Duduyemi, signed on behalf of the construction firm at the ceremony which was witnessed by the Presidential Special Assistant for Kano State, Alhaji Lawal Kaita and a representative of the Minister for Water Resources Alhaji S. A. Olatunde.

DOWNPOUR REPORTED SETTING BACK PROGRESS OF DAM

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 8 Aug 81 pp 1, 13

[Article by Mohammed Bomoi]

[Text]

THE torrential rainfall which devastated many houses in Malumfashi two weeks ago has set back the progress of the eight-million Naira dam by about 20 per cent.

A New Nigerian investigation revealed that before the rain swept away the spillway, construction work on the entire dam had reached 90-95 per cent completion and the people of Malumfashi could have decent water supply by December this year.

However, engineers at the site are saying that because of the damage, work progress has gone down to 70-75 per cent.

The spillway of the dam which had been completed several months ago was washed away by flood leaving deep gorges. The spillway is an architectural design attached to the dam which expels unwanted water when the dam is full.

Engineers at the site informed the New Nigerian that even though final details of the damage had not been worked out, about 350,000 Naira would be required to reconstruct the spillway on a much higher level.

At the site of the dam, the entire area looked desolated because there was no water, only endless open space. The run-off water that terrorised the people in the town found its way into the dam about five kilometres away and swept along the water already dammed.

An official commented that it was a good thing the incident occured at this time, "because if it had occurred after the dam would have been commissioned, the inhabitants of Malumfashi would experience acute shortage of water."

The dam is designed to provide more than one million litres of water daily to Malumfashi town in the first phase of the project. In the second and third phases of the project, Kankara and Musawa would be provided with water from the dam.

However, people in the town were very skeptical about the durability of the spillway. Some of them who commented on the incident attributed the collapse of the spillway to the weak foundation which they claimed was not sturdy enough to resist powerful water gushes.

The contract for the dam which includes the construction of the main dam, spillway, access roads, treatment and storage facilities was awarded in 1979 but actual construction work did not start until last year. No reason was adduced for this. Much energy and anxiety have been shown over the project especially by former governor, Alhaji A. Balarabe Musa who visited the site several times.

The rainfall which wrought havoc on Malumfashi lasted for only five hours. The Secretary to the Malumfashi Local Government, Malam Kabir Garba, said 6.63 inches of rainfall was recorded.

However, the Resident Engineer for Malumfashi, Mr. P. Ravindra Nataan, said by their own estimates, about 8 inches of rain fell on the town. He was of the opinion that if the rainfall was spread over a period of time, it would not have caused any havoc.

At the last count, 1,000 houses have either been destroyed or damaged by the rainfall and as much families were displaced. Many mud houses especially resplendent in their traditional architectural designs crumbled like a pack of cards. However, people have started reconstructing their houses and clearing debris.

Many inhabitants of Malumfashi said they had seen nothing like it in their life time.

Malam Kabir Garba, the Local Government secretary, said two minor floods had occurred about seven years ago but nothing of this magnitude had ever happened.

The Local Government secretary said so far, 600 persons have been identified as those seriously affected by the rainfall and were therefore in dire need of relief.

Malam Kabir said the distribution of relief materials to the victims was in progress. In fact the New Nigerian witnessed one such excercise in progress. He said the local government had provided relief materials as an interim measure.

He said 100 bags of guinea corn, 40 bags of maize and 71 bags of rice were being distributed to the victims, adding that the state government had been requested to allow the local government to spend 40,000 Naira more to buy relief materials.

Malam Kabir announced that an appeal fund would be launched to ease the victims' plight.

Malumfashi has already been declared a disaster area by the Kaduna State Government.

BRIEFS

PROBE OF RICE DIVERSION--Oyo State House of Assembly has started investigations into allegations that a member of the state House of Assembly, Mr. Adedeji Adegun, diverted 400 bags of rice meant for the people of his constituency to his personal use. The investigations are being conducted by the House Committee on Protocol in conjunction with the Committee on Human Rights and Public Petition. Calling for the investigations during a motion for adjournment, the Chief Whip, Chief Akinlabi Kuponiyi, said that the matter had been in the news and therefore it was necessary that the issue be investigated to get at the truth. Last week, some members of the public who claimed to have come from Mr. Adegun's constituency (Ibadan South West 1) came to the House to protest against the alleged diversion. They also alleged that Mr. Adegun collected a sum of 1,200 Naira from women in the constituency for bags of rice which was not refunded. [Excerpt] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 4 Aug 81 p 7]

GONGOLA GRAIN PROJECT--A total of 44,340 bags of assorted grains are now ready for sale to the public in Gongola State. A bag of guineacorn will be sold at 20 Naira, while a bag of paddy rice will cost 30 Naira. The Commissioner for Agriculture and Co-operatives, Alhaji Abubakar Mutum Biyu, said in Yola that the assorted grains were stored by the state government under its Strategic Grain Reserves Programme during the 1977 and 1978 harvesting seasons. The programme, Alhaji Abubakar explained, was meant to stabilise prices of foodstuffs in the market expecially against disasters like drought, flood or fire outbreaks. The commissioner stated that the government had expended about 1,478,060 Naira on the purchase of the assorted grains which would now serve as a buffer stock to stabilise the price of the commodity in the market. He announced that the government has approved another sum of one million Naira to purchase grains from farmers during the next season to restock the grain reserves in various parts of the state. The commissioner stressed, "It is hoped that our willingness to purchase surplus grains from our farmers will be a strong incentive to increase their holdings and thus in the end contribute in no small way to the success of the Green Revolution in the state." On the goal or equitable distribution of the assorted grains now ready for sale, he stated that the ministry was up to the task and assured that the grains would reach the prospective consumers despite the activities of some unscrupulous elements who are out to create artificial scarcity. APPROPRIATION FOR RICE PRODUCTION--The Federal Government has set aside N103 million to boost rice production in the country this year, the Federal Minister of State in the Ministry of Agriculture, Chief Olu Awotesu, has said in Lagos. Inaugurating the Oyo State Committee on Green REvolution, the minister disclosed that last year, N1.2 million was released by the Federal Government to Oyo State for land-clearing. Chief Awotesu also said that N1 million was given for cocoa rehabilitation and the national accelerated food production project in the state. He said that the Federal Government would continue to do its best by providing essential inputs, necessary infrastructures and incentives to make investment in agriculture attractive and profitable. Speaking at the occasion, the Special Assistant to the President in Oyo State, Dr Saka Bakogun, disclosed that the Federal Government was planning to review the agricultural credit gurarantee scheme with a view to making more funds available to small-scale farmers. He added that emphasis would be placed on modern techniques of farming, storage, distribution and processing. Dr Balogun said that the present administration would not "just feed the nation but also have lots for export." [Text] [Enugu DAILY STAR in English 7 Aug 81 p 10]

SERIOUS FINANCIAL PROBLEMS--Nigeria now faces a bleak future because of its financial problems. To this end, the President of the Republic of Nigeria has alerted the Governors of the States in the Federation to re-order their priorities. This was disclosed by the Governors of Kano, Abubakar Rimi, Borno, Alhaji Mohammed Goni and Ogun State, Bisi Onabanjo at a crowded Press conference at the Enugu Airport on Sunday shortly after their arrival for a visit to Anambra State. The Governors explained that it was due to the deteriorating financial position of the country that they have come to Anambra State to discuss the best approach of solving this problem with their Anambra counterpart, Chief Jim Ifeanyichukwu Nwobodo. They pointed that the bulk of Nigeria's economy was dependent on oil which no more yields the required dividends. According to them, this short-fall is traceable to the fact that so many countries of the world who bought Nigerian oil are [?now] producers. DISPUTE OVER LAND SEIZURE--The Ondo State Government has deplored the incursion by the Benin-Owena River Basin Authority into farmlands in various parts of the state without the consent and knowledge of the land owners. The Ondo State Commissioner for Lands and Housing, Professor S. A. Agboola who was speaking at Okitipupa yesterday described the situation as serious. The commissioner told the farmers in the area that the government had entered into some agreements with the authority on certain conditions to be fulfilled. He said one of such conditions was that the authority should obtain the permission of the state Ministry of Lands and Housing before entering into any land in any part of the State. Professor Agboola explained that communities which would require the authority's assistance in clearing should also channel their applications through his ministry. He said if those conditions were met, and there was full consultation with the communities in which the authority intended to work, the state government would co-operate with the authority as partners in progress. He advised the people to report to his ministry immediately any illegal entry into their lands. [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 6 Aug 81 p 23]

NEW, POSITIVE ARMY ROLE

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 10 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] President Siaka Stevens has pointed out that the Sierra Leone army not only continues to provide an all-embracing security umbrella for national freedom, but has increasingly come to identify itself with the collective aspirations of the people.

He was speaking at a colourful Passing-Out parade at the Moa Barracks in Dura on Friday and said that older members of the army who were privileged to allow the transformation of their institution from a simple frontier force to a fully combative army would recall those years of colonial tutelage when members of the force struggled to gain recognition and identify themselves with other members of the national community.

Dr Stevens added that the period intervening between those formative years and the present circumstances reflected a great improvement in the nation's relations with the force on whom the nation had come to rely basically for the protection of its freedom.

He told the new recruits that the tradition of military service which they had opted to follow was one that required dignity, a sense of purpose and achievement incorporating the dreams and aspirations of their fellow countrymen.

On an optimistic note he said that though the global economic trends were discouraging, there appeared to be on the horizon a ray of hope that in the not too distant future Sierra Leoneans would, as a team, overcome those obstacles that now seem to hinder progress.

This would be done by exploiting human and other resources to advantage.

The President assured the army that his government would continue to do all that was humanly possible to make the armed forces a source of pride.

He however reminded them that they owed a corresponding responsibility to this nation to justify the confidence and trust reposed in them by being loyal and fair in the service of the homeland.

"You must therefore ask first what you can do for your country even before you consider what your country can do for you", he added.

The President congratulated the new recruits and expressed the hope that as they go to join their various units they would consider themselves joining the ranks and their countrymen for the match into the future with courage, determination and hope.

Dr. Stevens also disclosed that with the completion of the Army Barracks at Lungi and Teko, government would soon embark on the construction of a similar one in Freetown.

Earlier on arrival at the Moa Barracks, the President was welcomed by the Force Commander, Brigadier J.S. Momoh.

Dr Stevens then inspected a parade of the new Pass-Outs and guard of honour.

One remarkable feature of the Passing-out parade was the thrilling performance by children of Army Officers which drew continuous applause from the President and other distinguished guests.

Later at the Native Administration Court Barri in Daru, President Stevens advised Paramount Chiefs, Parliamentarians and elders of the Kailahun District to concentrate on agriculture which he described as the only salvation for the nation.

The best system of education was that which was geared in the service of the people, he said.

President Stevens congratulated the people for maintaining Law and order in their area and promised that government would actively consider their requests.

He also urged them to maintain such law and order which he said was a pre-requisite for the forthcoming general elections.

The Chairman for that occasion was the Resident Minister, Eastern Province, Mr B.S. Massaquoi and the welcome address was read by Paramount Chief V.V. Kallon of Daru Chiefdom.

Later on his way to Freetown, President Stevens made a brief visit to the Nixon Memorial Hospital where he was taken on a conducted tour of various wards.

On arrival in Daru on Thursday, President Stevens visited the nursery and headquarters of the Daru Trading Company where he addressed its management and workers.

DECADE OF RELATIONS WITH CHINA

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 1 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] President Stevens has sent a message of congratulations to the Chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, Mr Hu Yao Bang to mark a decade of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Sierra Leone and China.

President Stevens said that Sierra Leone cherished the ardent hope that the existing bonds of friendship binding the two countries would continue to grow even stronger.

Meanwhile the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr Abdulai Conteh has said that the government of Sierra Leone has nothing but satisfaction with the Chinese people.

Dr Conteh was speaking at a reception on Thursday evening to mark the tenth anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Sierra Leone and China held at the Chinese Embassy, Wilberforce.

Since China took her rightful position at the United Nations, she has contributed greatly in searching for peace, the Minister declared.

He recalled the two visits of President Siaka Stevens to that country noting that those visits were a manifestation of the strength of relationship between the two countries.

He recommended the Chinese government for their immense contribution towards the development of this country particularly in the fields of Agriculture, Technology and Medicine.

Dr Conteh assured the Chinese people of Sierra Leone's co-operation at all times and hoped that the friendship between the countries would grow even stronger.

Earlier, the Chinese Ambassador Mr Tian Ping said, the aid his government gives to developing countries like Sierra Leone still has its limitations.

He hoped Chine would soon become richer and be able to do more for her friends.

He also recalled the recent visit of President Siaka Stevens to China which, he said, consolidated and strengthened the relationship between the two countries.

Mr Tian Ping warmly praised the hospitality and friendliness of the people of Sierra Leone.

Present at the reception were Cabinet Ministers, Diplomats, the Chairman of City Council and a cross section of the Freetown community.

DIRECT PHONE-LINK WITH LIBERIA REPORTED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 1 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] President Siaka Stevens and Liberia's Head of State Master Sergeant Samuel Doe yesterday became the first users of the new and direct telephone link up system operative between the two countries.

The new telecommunications system was formally commissioned at State House and Dr Stevens exchanged greetings directly by phone with Master Sergeant Doe.

Dr Stevens told the Liberian Head of State that the peoples of both countries under the aegis of the Mano River Union should congratulate themselves for this achievement in telecommunications.

In a statement during the ceremony, Dr Stevens said Sierra Leone and Liberia have finished the final phase of commitment to the telecommunications link in Africa.

The decision to embark on the project he said, was originally taken at the 1972 OAU Heads of State meeting. The Posts and Telecommunications Department started the work on the Sierra Leone side in 1977 and completed it in December last year.

The President said there were reasons to congratulate ourselves for what he described as "the very impressive achievement in the development of our infrastructure".

He thanked the engineers and all those who were involved in making the event another historic one.

The Minister of Transport and Communications, Mr P. P. Brima Kebbie who earlier spoke to his Liberian counterpart, Mr George Bowly, thanked President Stevens for inaugurating the link and hoped that very shortly, Sierra Leone would link up with the Republic of Guinea through the same process.

The ceremony was attended by Acting First Vice President C. A. Kamara-Taylor, Acting Second Vice President Dr. Sama Banya, Cabinet Ministers, the Secretary General of the Mano River Union, Dr Ernest Eastman Liberia's Deputy Minister of Justice, Captain Eugene Cooper, the Acting Deputy Minister of Revenue, Mrs Henrietta Koening and other distinguished personalities.

FINAL SEISMIC STUDY TO FIND OFFSHORE OIL DUE SOON

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 5 Aug 81 pp 1, 12

[Article by Lans Joe Sesay]

[Text] One of the world's most sophisticated geophysical exploration vessels--T. W. Nelson now in the North Sea, is due back in Freetown later this year for the third and probably "final" seismic work for oil in Sierra Leone's offshore waters.

Results of two previous seismic studies so far have been described as "encouraging and promising."

But actual drilling according to competent sources, has been delayed because Mobil Oil Corporation which is investing more than Le600 million on the entire project wants to achieve "very good" results.

The additional seismic work therefore, the sources further confirmed, is to develop more detailed information as to the positioning of the oil wells for drilling.

With the "black gold" already discovered just ten miles within Sierra Leone's territorial waters and where "abundant natural gas" has also been confirmed, Mobil is all set to throw in its most advanced technology.

All being well, T. W. Neslon will arrive towards the end of september and unlike the previous studies will spend at least two months carrying out the seismic work.

On the conclusion of what has already been described as "extensive programme", Mobil Oil Corporation which has majority shares will then commence offshore drilling operations.

"It is anticipated that actual drilling will commence during the second half of this year," said President Siaka Stevens in his Annual Presidential Address delivered to this nation on June 5.

Meanwhile, a new company--Offshore Services, has been formed by Sierra Leoneans to provide "logistics" and services to Mobil.

The expected oil bonanza will transform the economy with job opportunities for many Sierra Leoneans.

NEW FERRY TERMINAL TO OPEN NEXT MONTH

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 10 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Article by Lans Joe Sesay]

[Text] The Le2m-plus Government wharf ferry terminal now nearing completion, is to be formally opened in September.

Shortly after the ceremony according to very reliable sources, Sierra Leone's three "OAU ferries" will go into commercial operation.

Added to the two existing slow ferries the launching of the Japanese ferries is expected to ease the volume of traffic from the east and cut by half, the 30-minute Targrin-Freetown trip.

And as the end of the September deadline approaches, the three specially-built ferries have already undergone major overhauling and servicing by two Japanese engineers recently in Freetown.

According to the Sierra Leone Ports Authority, when they go into operation, there will be a "slight" increase in fares.

The three ferries are part of a Le10m Japanese loan to this country.

Originally meant to ferry delegates to the 17th OAU summit in Freetown, the ferries which arrived just two weeks to the conference were hardly put into use due mainly to the non-completion of the Government Wharf terminal.

However since June 1980, they've been standing in the Sierra Leone river.

Warportman International who are managing the affairs of the ports, also confirmed that the ferries will be operational in September.

Apart from facilitating easier access to Freetown, the three additional ferries will also mean more agricultural produce from Bullom across the river to the capital city.

ADB OKAYS LOAN FOR OIL PALM PROJECT

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 6 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] A delegation led by the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has returned to Freetown after successfully negotiating a Le3.4 million loan with the African Development Bank (ADB) to finance the second phase development programme of the Gambia/Mattru Oil Palm Company over a five year period.

The loan will enable the Company to develop an additional 5,500 acres of land in the Project area for Oil Palm production as an expansion of the Outgrowers scheme as well as to improve the operating conditions of the Nuceus estate and the Mill.

The development programme will also include the construction of nine wells in some of the nearby villages and the construction of about 150 miles of feeder roads to farms and surrounding villages.

Other aspects to be financed by the Loan include Mill improvement and a farm development credit.

The Personnel to assist in the Mill operation is to be provided under Technical assistance while Extension Staff would be trained in operating the Nucleus and Outgrowers farms.

The objective of the development programme is to further increase Palm Oil Production with a view to reducing the importation of Vegetable Oil and thereby save foreign exchange through import substitution.

It will also enable the Gambia/Mattru Oil Palm Company to develop utilized but otherwise potentially productive farm lands in the Project area thereby reducing Urban Rural income disparity.

It is also expected that the development programme will improve the operating conditions of the Gambia/Mattru Oil Palm Company with a view to increasing its overall efficiency and profitability.

The Sierra Leone Government will contribute Le603,000 towards the cost of the Project which is expected to be implemented by October this year.

The delegation also took the opportunity to sign an 8.5 million U.S. dollars. soft lean to finance th second phase of the Northern area Project.

The loan agreement was signed by the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry Dr A. F. Joe Jackson, Leader of the delegation, in the presence of other members of the delegation, which included Mr James Sampha Koroma, Deputy Financial Secretary; Mr Francis Dumbuya Senior Agricultural Economist and the General Manager Gambia/Mattru Oil Palm-Company, Mr S. M. Pessima.

BRIEFS

RUBBER PROJECT--Plans to establish a Le14.10 million Rubber Development Projet at Potoru in the Southern Province are now underway. This week, President Siaka Stevens was appraised of the plans by a representative group of financiers, the Commonwealth Development Corporation, the Commission of European Communities and the French Central Bank of Economic Cooperation. The President and the group discussed the present valuation of the Potoru estate, the financing of the project and the memorandum of Association of the proposed Sierra Leone Rubber Company. The pojrect will include the extension of the existing plantation of 100 acres rubber to a further 250 acres of high yielding clones and the establishment of a factory which will process latex into rubber smoke sheet. The meeting was attended on the Sierra Leone side by the Acting Second Vice-President and Minister of Finance, Development and Economic Planning, Dr Sama Banya, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, Dr A. F. Joe-Jackson, the Acting Development Secretary, Mr David Minnah, the Deputy Development Secretary, Mr P. J. Sheriff and the National Authorising Officer, Mr Len Turay. LEBANESE GIFT--The World Lebanese Cultural Union has presented a cheque for Le1,000 to the Sierra Leone United Nations Student Association as assistance to the Association to attend a United Nations conference on energy problems in New York in September this year. The cheque which was presented by the Treasurer of the World Lebanese Cultural Union. (Freetown Chapter) Mr Farid R. Hassaniyeh was received by Mr Alhusain Jalloh, a pupil of the St. Edward's Secondary School. Mr Jalloh is the Treasurer of the Association. The Association will send three delegates to the conference, Miss Ijatu Barrie, Mr A Grand Davies and Mr Alhusain Jalloh. In a letter to the Association, Mr Farid R. Hassaniyeh said the word "world" in the name of their union implies, the universal cultural exchange of learning and ideas bringing the people of Lebanon closer and into a bond of true brotherhood, mutual understanding and love. Mr Hassiniyeh wished the delegation good luck and asked them to take with them the good name of Sierra Leone. "Please let the name of Sierra Leone be heard," he requested. VILJOEN DISCUSSES STRATEGY FOR COMBATING TERRORISM

Warning to Neighbors

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 22 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] POTCHEFSTROOM. — Some neighbouring states had been warned at top level that South Africa's security measures might in due course outweigh co-operation with them, General Constand Viljoen, Chief of the Defence Force, said at Potchefstroom yesterday.

He was delivering a paper at a University of Potchefstroom symposium on terrorism as a method of modern warfare and South Africa's answers to it.

In spite of efforts by South Africa to create stability in southern Africa through economic aid, some of these countries attacked the Republic in world forums, supported sanctions against the country and harboured terrorists.

"Economic realities are therefore regarded as secondary to ideologies by these countries which have up to the present only caused them political chaos, famine, poverty and deterioration," Gen Viljoen said.

Such a state of affairs could not be tolerated.

"Should matters get even worse, South Africa will have no other choice but to put its security interests above the humanitarian and economic ideals of a stable sub-continent.

"Warnings in this vein have already been directed at high-level to some of our neighbouring states.

"Economic sharing at the cost of a country's security and continued existence could not be afforded in an unqualified manner", Gen Viljoen said.

The protection of economic targets in South Africa was of the utmost importance. Protecting national key-points was an important start but not sufficient.

Every private businessman economically active should insure his interests were protected against sabotage, Gen Viljoen said.

Care should also be taken that "soft" targets could not easily be attacked. It was a classic method of terrorism to undermine the public's morale.

He said he did not believe these tactics would be successfull because of the strong feelings against communism and the will to survive among South Africa's people.

The Soviet-inspired terrorist onslaught against South Africa was aimed at the destruction of all four power bases. It was aimed atz the political, economic, socio-psychological and security bases of the State.

Should the conflict require increased military power levels and readiness, timeous and planned action would be required, striking a balance between military preparedness and economic growth, he said.

Burden of Combating Terrorism

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 22 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] POTCHEFSTROOM. — The strategy of terrorists acting against South Africa made greater demands on the security forces than Swapo did in South West Africa, General Viljoen, said.

The fight against, terrorism in SWA was faring well because it was taking place far from urban complexes and densely-populated areas.

"But the strategy of anti-RSA terrorist organisations are different from that of Swapo because they are operating countrywide in the RSA in scattered actions, which makes far greater demands on the security forces as far as power levels are concerned," he said.

The drawn-out, scattered and fluid nature of a revolutionary terrorist conflict was specifically aimed at over-taxing the country's security forces and, at the same time, its economic power base, Gen Viljoen said.

The Foremost prerequisite for successful anti-terrorist-operation was the realisation by all concerned of the seriousness and urgency of the situation.

South Africa's enemies operated from a masterplan and their actions were not haphazard, he said.

"Should we underestimate the enemy, action might come too late to be successful".

The fight against terrorists was further complicated because of the unconventional nature of their onslaught.

The Government refused to be blackmailed by terrorism. Should terrorist-action against a government be successful, the demands made would escalate dramatically.

In a revolutionary war like the one in SWA, terrorists moved in small groups over a large area, draining a great deal of manpower from the security forces.

Burden

Whites alone could not carry this burden. It was most important that other population groups be involved in the defence of the country, he said.

As far as national service was concerned, Coloureds and Indians were already incorporated on a voluntary basis.But the goal was to now involve other population groups to a greater extent Blacks were also being incorporated on a regional basis.

Gen Viljoen listed a number of basic principles in the conflict against revolutionary terrorism:

- Each member of the forces and the public must have a thorough knowledge of their enemies.
- Accurate information to keep abreast of terrorist action.
- Should the terrorist conflict escalate, sufficient units should be earmarked in good time and be well-trained and fitted out to cope
- Motivation of the soldier and his family.

Knowledge

- Where current and future operational areas had been identified, military structures were being established to undertake regional studies and gain knowledge of the local population.
- National key-points must be safeguarded at all costs.

"Although action against terrorists should be effective and ruthless throughout, care should be taken that, as far as the population is concerned, any action should be within the law — a principle meticulously adhered to by South Africa," Gen Viljoen said.

'THE CITIZEN' Editorial

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Heed Warnings"]

[Text]

SOUTH AFRICA'S neighbours have been warned often enough — by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Pik Botha, by the Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan, and other Government spokesmen — not to allow their countries to be used as bases from which terrorists launch their attacks on South Africa.

Now the Chief of the Defence Force, General Constand Viljoen, has added his voice to that of the others.

He says that in spite of efforts by South Africa to create stability in Southern Africa through economic aid, some of these countries attack the Republic in world forums, support sanctions against the country and harbour terrorists.

"Economic realities are therefore regarded by these countries as secondary to ideologies which have up to the present only caused them political chaos, faminine, poverty and deterioration.

"Should matters get even worse, South Africa will have no other choice but to put its security interests above humanitarian and economic ideals of a stable subcontinent.

"Warnings in this vein have already been directed at high level to some of our neighbouring States."

The terrorists responsible for the growing number of attacks in South Africa come from Mozambique — and infiltrate this country mainly through Swaziland, a country with which we have normally friendly relations.

Mozambique is the last country which should allow terrorists to be trained and to muster in it, since South Africa provides it with port revenue, food and railway expertise without which it would be in an even more parlous state than it is in at present.

Relations with Zimbabwe are deteriorating, not because South Africa wishes to be in a state of tension with its northern neighbour, but because Zimbabwe continues to blackguard South Africa and to throw its support behind the terrorist movements which aim to overthrow the Government of this country (though Mr Mugabe hesitates, for the present, to allow these movements to train or station their men in Zimbabwe itself).

Although South Africa has helped to allay hunger in Zambia, and its railway system is vital for Zambian exports, that country's leader, Dr Kaunda, continues to bite the hand that does so much to feed his people. He, like Mr Mugabe, has nothing but condemnation for South Africa in international forums.

Lesotho, although it seems to be on better terms with South Africa since the Peka Bridge meeting last year between Mr P W Botha and Chief Leabua Jonathan, still shows a measure of hostility towards the Republic, blaming it falsely for attacks made by the underground "Lesotho Liberation Army," the militant wing of a faction of the opposition Basutoland Congress Party.

However, Lesotho, like similarly landlocked Swaziland, is not one of the neighbours to whom General Viljoen's warning necessarily applies. What is important is that Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Zambia, in particular, should be in no doubt whatsoever that the Government and the chief of its armed forces are not speaking lightly.

South Africa will not hesitate to act against neighbours if its security is jeopardised by them — directly or through terrorists who use these territories as staging grounds for their attacks.

General Viljoen also makes some important points that should not go unheeded by South Africans too.

Referring to terrorist attacks, he says that protection of national keypoints is important, but private businessmen must also see to it that their interests are protected against sabotage.

You may recall that this was the very point which The Citizen made after the recent series of bomb attacks in Natal, the Eastern Transvaal and Eastern Province.

Businessmen should not wait for a serious loss of lives before they take precautions against terrorism; they should bring in security measures now.

We also warned against the complacency of those who think that the attacks always happen somewhere else; they never know when the bombs may have their own names written on them.

In warning that steps should be taken to ensure that "soft targets" cannot easily be attacked, General Viljoen says it is a classic method of terrorism to undermine the public's morale.

Nevertheless, he does not think that such tactics will be successful because of the strong feeling against communism and the will to survive prevalent among the people of South Africa.

This is so in the case of Whites, in particular, but as General Viljoen knows, the battle against terrorism cannot be won unless there is support from the Blacks as well.

That is why we wholeheartedly support his statement that South Africa is economically and militarily powerful, but should utilise time to the utmost to find viable solutions to problems and defuse situations which can be exploited by communists and terrorist organisations.

The effort by the government of the day to accommodate the fair aspirations of all in South Africa is, from a security points of view, among the highest priorities.

Will opponents of reform please note!

HEUNIS DISCUSSES COLORED REPRESENTATION ISSUE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 22 Aug 81 p 10

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — Direct representation of Coloured management committees on city councils had a lot of merit, Mr Chris Heunis, Minister of Internal Affairs, said when he opened the Free State Coloured Municipal Relations Association conference at Bethlehem yesterday.

Mr Heunis said at Stellenbosch city council members already liaised with Coloured management committee members regarding each branch of the council's activities affecting it's Coloured townships.

The Minister said he felt a political solution that would suit the needs of all communities in South Africa, would have to be based on second and third levels of management.

It was easier to identify the aims of this country, but difficult to decide which road to take to get there.

We did not need wise people to find the answer for us, but we need people capable of finding acceptable solutions, the Minister said.

People who thought certain aims in South Africa could be achieved without constitutions linking them with the feelings and emotional reactions of all it's people, were ignoring the realities of the century, he said.

Referring to the present investigations by the President's Council to find a political solution for the Coloureds and Asians, he said current Government policies saw all race groups sharing the same national state.

"But time is of the essence to find an acceptable solution and I am of the opinion that we should embark on a process of the gradual developing of a recipe aimed at successful political adaptations."

Mr Heunis stated the reports which the President's Council was presently considering, "would affect not only one specific population group, but all the other population groups in South Africa.

He said the envisaged constitutional development would be the end result of communities wanting to complement each other because a country's constitution should represent the attitudes of all it's people.

He stressed the Government was not paying lip-service when it said it was untenable that one group should decide for all the other groups. For this very reason, institutions have been established by the Government so people could meet.

The Minister said until an acceptable constitutional solution had been found, the Government would have to evaluate how it could adapt the present system to function more effectively in the interim.

There were expectations from all concerned in this regard and the Government's duty now was to reconcile them.

"And for this reason I want to ask that when we move outwards, we allow ourselves to be crucified if the purpose is worthwhile," Mr Heunis said.

He said he, himself was prepared to be crucified for an acceptable solution for all, adding that if everyone was prepared to follow this line, the country would reach an acceptable solution more speedily.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF SHORTAGE CAUSED BY LOW PAY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Aug 81 p 13

[Text]

THE public service in South Africa is experiencing one of the worst staff-shortages ever, according to an editorial in the Public Servant, published in Pretoria.

The latest edition of the magazine, the journal of the Public Servants' Association, said the crisis could be attributed to a number of factors.

But the main cause of the exodus of trained staff from the central State departments to the autonomous State departments and institutions and to the private sector was the totally inadequate level of remuneration, particularly in the lower ranks.

Other factors included a fairly high economic growth rate, narrowing and elimination of the wage-gap and a general shortage of skilled labour.

The real slide had started when public servants had pledged their support for the anti-inflation campaign launched during 1975. The pledge had been given in the belief that all sectors of the economy would co-operate and exercise restraint, which proved to be futile, the editorial said.

"Public servants are, therefore, justifiably tired of hearing that improvements in their remuneration are highly inflationary, while the public sector is the only one in which an appreciable increase in productivity can be measured."

Public servants felt they were being singled out to manipulate the economy.

When the Public Service Commission was changed to the Commission for Administration and its terms of reference broadened, it was expected that a greater measure of co-ordination in the public sector would result, the magazine said.

It now appeared that the commission's authority was still not sufficiently wide and powerful to bring about the desired parity

Four primary aspects should receive urgent attention:

- The remuneration package should be improved to bring about greater comparability with the general trend in the labour market
- The co-ordinating powers of the Commission for Administration should be extended to eliminate unreasonable disparity in the different divisions of the public sector
- Departments should receive greater responsibility in recruitment, training development and advancement of personnel
- Public servants themselves should take a close look at the manner in which they organised their work and performed their duties.

TRANSKEI TO COMPLAIN ABOUT CONTRACT WORKER TREATMENT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Aug 81 p 12

[Article by Lawrence Mayekiso]

[Text] TOP-LEVEL discussions are to be held between the Transkei and South African governments over the treatment of Transkeian contract workers by some SA employment agencies.

Transkei is expected to send a high-powered delegation to talks, expected to be held in Pretoria soon.

A Transkeian official said yesterday he was satisfied that now that Transkei was independent some White officials in South Africa's employment bureaux were not keen to give work to Transkeians.

"They are telling our people that now that Transkei is independent they should return to Transkei to seek work because South Africa had her own Black people to employ" the official said.

This week Transkeians living in Soweto held a meeting with officials of the Transkeian labour Department to acquaint them with their difficulties in finding employment in the Johannesburg area.

At the meeting it was said the labour bureau established by the Transkei Government on the East Rand to help Transkeians with their labour problems, was not being recognised by some Administration Boards officials, as far as having work permits approved.

The Transkeian official said: "They are still clinging to an old labour agreement between South Africa and Transkei before Transkei established labour offices in South Africa.

"Under the old agreement, at the end of a contract, a worker had to return to Transkei to be supplied with new work permits.

"A worker could not take up employment in South Africa without the permit having been endorsed in Transkei.

"After some time we discovered that this system was too cumbersome as it caused our workers to incur a loss of time and money travelling to Transkei for the work permits.

"We then established offices in all the major centres of South Africa for our people to obtain work permits without having to travel to Transkei.

"The problem now is that some administration boards will not recognise our locally established labour offices.

"They still demand that our people travel to Transkei for their work permits."

The official said the East Rand Administration Board recognised the local Transkeian labour offices, while the West Rand Administration Board did not.

The Oranje-Vaal Administration Board recognised them while the Free State board accepted some applications and rejected others.

"We were in Cape Town two months ago to discuss the matter with the South African Minister" the Transkeian official said.

"It was then decided that both parties should form committees to formulate a new labour agreement between the two countries.

POLICY ON PUBLICATIONS BANNING EXPLAINED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] BANS on the novels "Magersfontein, O Magersfontein," by Etienne Leroux, and "Lady Chatterley's Lover, by D H Lawrence, were lifted because the undesirable material they contained was offset by the necessary literary merit.

However, Andre Brink's "Looking On Darkness" was not unbanned because it contained offensive mixing of the Christian religion and sex.

Explanation

These disclosures are contained in a comprehensive explanation of principles applied by the Publications Appeal Board in the latest report of the Director-General of Internal Affairs, Mr J W A van der Merwe, tabled in the Assembly yesterday.

"The Appeal Board has indicated in several decisions that the Publications Amendment Act of 1978, which provides for the establishment of a committee of experts in the literary, linguistic and artistic fields, shows not only that the legislature is not unconcerned about developments in this area but also that the advice of this committee should be regarded as being of particular value," the report says.

Permitted

The board had shown that, to an increasing extent, films, books or public entertainment might be permitted to contain material that would otherwise have been regarded as undesirable, provided this was offset by the necessary artistic' literary or dramatic merit.

However, when all positive factors had been taken into account, and the work was nevertheless found to be offensive to public morals or the religious convictions or feelings of any section of the population, or prejudicial to the safety of the State, it would be banned.

In the light of the said principles, "Magersfontein, O Magersfontein" and "Lady Chatterley's Lover" for example, were found to be not undesirable.

Offensive

"On the other hand, books such as "Sophie's Choice" (Styron) and "Man of Nazareth" (Burgess) were found to be undesirable — the former because of the offensive sexual descriptions it contains and the latter because of the humiliation of Jesus."

The report says that sharp political criticism was a typical phenomenon in South Africa and that a work could not be banned for this reason. Consequently, "Forced Landing" an anthology by a number of Black writers, and the June 1980 issue of the Black literary journal, "Staffrider" were found to be not undesirable.

As far as nudity in publications and films was concerned, it was emphasised that nudity per se was not undesirable. Everything depended on how and where it was treated.

"In the light of this nudity in the film "Dementicare Venezia" (To Forget Venice) was found to be not undesirable because of the limited number of probable viewers and the outstanding dramatic and artistic merit of the film.

Violence

"Likewise nudity in publications which, for professional or documentary reasons, had a limited readership, were found to be not undesirable. Artistic merit also justified nudity in a few non-popular publications."

The Appeal Board also emphasised that there should be a reasonable weighing-up of interests between the demands of morals, religion and State security on one hand, and the principles of freedom of speech, freedom of conscience and freedom of literary and artistic creation on the other.

RESERVE BANK ANNUAL REPORT REVIEWS STATE OF ECONOMY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Aug 81 p 21

[Article by Daan de Kock]

[Text] SOUTH Africa's economic growth rate levelled off to 4,5 percent in the first half of the year but a real rate of economic growth between 4 percent and 5 percent for the year as a whole is still expected, the Reserve Bank says in its annual economic report.

The bank says the slowdown occurred in most sectors of the economy but was most prominent in manufacturing and commerce. The real value added by this sector was to an important extent effected by the high level of utilisation of production capacity, which had risen to about 90 percent at the end of 1980.

The real value added by the gold mining sector continued to decline in the first half of this year and the fall in the price of gold from the last quarter of 1980 had apparently not yet resulted in the mining of higher grade ore.

The bank says the real product in the non-gold mining sector was also lower in the first half of the year than the second half of last year as a result of the decline in the foreign demand for metals and minerals.

Only the agriculture sector showed a higher growth rate in the first half of the year than in the preceding six months. The acceleration in the growth rate was more pronounced in the second quarter of this year after the harvesting of record summer crops has commenced. The bank says although real agriculture output is expected to remain at a high level in the second half of the year the overall rate of growth is unlikely to accelerate during this period.

It is also expected that the monetary demand, which still remained abnormally high during the first quarter of 1981, will decline during the second half of the year under the impact of the decline in the value of net gold output and merchandise exports and a lower rate of increase in investments.

The bank also points out that as a result of the deterioration in the country's terms of trade during the first half of the year, mainly because of the lower gold price, the gross national product in the first half of this year was only marginally higher than in the second half of the year. In 1980 South Africa achieved a growth of 3,5 percent in gross national product. This figure decreased to about 2 percent at the first six months of this year compared to the last six months of 1980.

Gross domestic expenditure, although lower than last year, still increased by 10 percent in the first half of this year compared with the corresponding period the previous year.

The slow-down was evident in most components of real gross domestic expenditure, namely private and government consumption expenditure and fixed investment. The exception, however, was investments in inventories, which further increased in the first six months of the year.

Other highlights of the national accounts for the first six months of this year are:

- Real private consumption expenditure increased by about 6 percent compared with the corresponding period the previous year;
- Government real consumption expenditure slowed down considerably. In the first half of 1981 it showed a growth of only 1,5 percent compared with the same period last year.
- Real domestic fixed investment, which showed a record growth of 12,5 percent for 1980 as a whole, also slowed down in the fourth quarter of last year and the first half of this year. However, it still remained high and the level of real fixed capital outlay in the first half of 1981 was still 6,5 percent higher than during the corresponding figure the previous year.
- The upward phase of the inventory cycle, which had commenced in the middle of 1979, continued during the first half of this year. The build-up in inventories were particularly noticeable in diamond and agriculture stocks. Industrial and commercial inventories did not increase in the first half of the year because of the continuing high level of consumption and investment demand in the face of limits imposed on production by the high degree of utilisation of production capacity, the high costs of carrying large stocks, and some manufacturers' and traders' views that in the short run existing stock levels were adequate to meet expected sales.

● Gross domestic saving in the first half of 1981 declined markedly and amounted to only 25 percent of the gross domestic product in this period. The decline was mainly in the savings of corporations and personal savings, because saving of the general government showed little change during the first half of the year.

The bank also points out that the current account of the balance of payments showed a deficit of about R3 000-million in the first six months of the year. This is mainly due to the lower gold price, and the increase in imports.

DEVELOPMENT OF PRETORIA-WITWATERSRAND-VEREENIGING AREA UNDER STUDY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Aug 81 p 9

[Text]

THE public is being asked to comment on proposals for the future development of the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vereeniging complex, in terms of guidelines laid down in a development strategy study released at the weekend by the Office of the Prime Minister.

Although the proposals contained in the document are directed mainly at physical-spatial development, account has been taken of social and economic considerations.

As soon as the public and private sectors have submitted their comments on the draft, amendments may be made — if necessary — and after approval by the Cabinet it will be released as an official policy document.

D-day for public and private sector comments is November 13, 1981, and copies of the draft can be obtained from the Physical Planning Branch, Office of the Prime Minister, Pretoria.

In the draft it is stated that, although the PWV complex covers only two percent of the area of the Republic, it accomodates 20 percent of the total population and nearly 40 percent of the total White population.

Nearly 43 percent of the gross geographic product of the country is generated in the complex — seven percent of national agriculture production, 34 percent of mining production and 51 percent of production in the secondary sector.

The area was also responsible, according to 1975 figures, for 49 percent of trade, 35 percent of transport, 53 percent of finance and 54 percent of national services.

As the PWV complex will have to play a key role in the deployment of a national development policy, it is imperative that future development should take place in such a way that the national objectives will be promoted.

The broad aims in the compilation of a physical development strategy are summarised as follows:

- The evaluation of the role of the area in national and sub-national context, and its linkage with other neighbouring development nodes;
- Localisation of future job opportunities to relieve pressure on the central areas and to curb congestion, without detracting from the essential growth of the area and its role in the national context;
- Identification of residential areas which will possess the necessary urban quality, to provide for the present and foreseeable needs of various population groups;
- Identification of a functional open-space system which can also meet the recreational needs of the inhabitants.

The report says the population of the complex will increase by about 2,8 percent Annually in the next 20 years — from the present five-million to 8,6-million — and the number of motor vehicles will increase over the same period from 980 000 to some 2,5-million.

ESCOM ANNOUNCES CONTRACTS AWARDED FOR POWER STATIONS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Aug 81 p 21

[Article by Peter Moscardi]

[Text] ESCOM has announced that two contracts, each worth R700-million, have been awarded for the construction of their power station at Matimba and for yet a further power station, unsited at present but code-named Station C. Both contracts are for boiler plants, each with a capacity to generate 3 600 MW of electricity.

Each power station will cost in the region of R2 000-million. The Matimba contract has been awarded to a French company, Stein Industrie, and a German company, EVT, which have combined together with their South African representatives, Industrial Machines Supplies, to form a company named SI-EVA.

Although no siting for Station C has yet been finalised, Escom yesterday told The Citizen that it will be situated in either the Transvaal or OFS and that a decision on its location is expected during the next few months.

An American company, Combustion Engineering Incorporated (CE), has been awarded the Station C contract. International Combustion Africa (Icai), the South African representatives of CE, have secured from its American counterpart a R160-million contract for the local manufacture of component parts and the total work involved in the site construction. The first generator at Station C is expected to be in operation by the end of 1987.

Work will be provided for about 6 500 people at Station C during the construction stage and permanent employment for about 1 000 people once the station is operational. About 1 000 houses will be provided for it's work force. With the five remaining generator sets following at yearly intervals, a final completion date of 1992 is envisaged.

Nearly 80 percent of the two R700-million contracts will be spent locally, with the major portion of the expenditure being allocated to the boiler plants.

An Escom spokesman said yesterday that a wide international response had been received to the tenders recently issued for the boiler plants at the two power stations. "In view of it's continuous expansion programme, Escom decided to make two awards for two power stations, a process which would advance the commissioning date of Station C.

The Matimba power station will also employ 6 500 people during the construction phase and will, similarly to Station C, create permanent employment for about 1 000 people on completion of the project.

The Matimba power station, situated near Ellisras in the north-western Transvaal, will be the largest dry-cooled station in the world planned for up to six 600 MW sets. With water supplies limited in the area, the dry-cooling system will reduce water consumption to about one-third of the usual figure.

The boilers are 30 storeys high with walls consisting of many kilometres of piping in which water is heated. Each boiler at Matimba will consume about two million tons of by-product coal a year when fully operational, the supply of which will come from Iscor's Grootgeluk Mine and is the residue after Iscor has extracted the coking coal component necessary for it's steel production.

Finance for the Matimba contract will be obtained from local and overseas sources.

The Matimba project is expected to contribute greatly to the development of Ellisras and will increase the area's population. Escom and Iscor employees will be housed in the Onverwacht Township, with Escom erecting 630 houses and Iscor 300.

BRIEFS

PENALTY FOR FLAG BURNING--A bill amending the South African Constitution Act to prescribe new fines for contempt of the national flag and the State President, was published yesterday. According to the Bill, spoiling, destroying or removing the national flag from an official position will become punishable by a R10 000 fine. Any person whose actions are deemed to injure the dignity of the State President, the Vice-State President or an acting State President will also face a maximum fine of R10 000. The fine used to be R2 000. In both cases the offences carry a maximum of five years' imprisonment. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 22 Aug 81 p 4]

NYANGA PROTEST MARCH--Cape Town--More than 1 000 people gathered at St George's Cathedral in Cape Town yesterday and marched to Parliament to present a "protest script" to the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof. The crowd was stopped by riot police at the entrance to the Gardens and the head of Cape Town's Riot Squad, Colonel Piet van Rensburg, requested the people to return to the cathedral. About 25 church ministers were allowed to remain, surrounded by police. One of them, the Rev Siegfred Abrahamse, said they had been refused permission to enter Parliament to present the "script" protesting against the treatment of the Nyanga squatters. He said Colonel Van Rensburg had told them he would hand it personally to Dr Koornhof, who might be prepared to see some of the ministers at a later stage. Earlier security policemen had gone into the crowd to take down posters calling for the right of families to live together and recognition of the Freedom Charter. One security policeman was dragged into the crowd and punched, while other people held onto posters and were involved in struggles. One of the leaders of the protest march, Mr Jan de Waal, said after the marchers had been dispersed they had "achieved what a group of concerned citizens had set out to do". WARNING TO UNIVERSITY--The Administrator of the Transvaal, Mr Willem Cruywagen, last night threatened Witwatersrand University that he would do everything in his power to end the provinces teacher-training links with it if there were a repetition of the flag burning episode. Replying in the Budget debate in the provincial council, Mr Cruywagen laid it strongly on the line to the university, condemning the episode and warning that he would watch campus attitudes closely in future. Emphasising that he was speaking personally, he said he would not hesitate to use every legal weapon at his command to terminate the education of provincial teachers at the university if the flag burning or a similar episode were repeated. Mr Cruywagen said that he had been brought up to have respect for certain institutions in the country. The flag was one of them. "In terms of the National Education Act we are committed to Christian national principles. If I find that these principles are not coming to the fore I will personally do my utmost to break the contract relating to teacher training with that university--or any other similar institution that oversteps the mark," Mr Cruywagen said. CAPE STUDENTS DETENTION--Cape Town--A member of the Students Representative Council at the University of the Western Cape, Miss Amanda Sanger, and another student, Mr Johathan de Vries, were detained under security laws at their homes early yesterday. This brings to four the number of UWC students held under security laws in recent weeks. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Aug 81 p 5]

TUTU COMMENT ON SENTENCES--Any community should be appalled when young people were sentenced to death for crimes in which nobody had been killed, the general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, Bishop Desmond Tutu, said yesterday. He was commenting in a statement in Johannesburg on the death sentence passed by the Pretoria Supreme Court on Wednesday on three African National Congress men found guilty of treason. The statement reads: "Many, perhaps most, Whites will say that these persons involved in treasonable acts had it coming their way, whereas many in the Black community are deeply distressed and do not regard the condemned men as criminals at all. Indeed, they are seen as heroes," Bishop Tutu said. "The SACC wants to reiterate its abhorrence of capital punishment, which brutalises all of us. We call on South Africa to change while there is time so that people don't become desperate and so are forced to use desperate methods. Capital punishment will not serve as a deterrent where people believe they are struggling for justice. It will only make them say 'better be hanged as much for a sheep as for a lamb', and instead of attacking installations they will kill people. Please let us wake up and hear the cry of the depressed," Bishop Tutu said. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Aug 81 p 7]

INDIAN VOTE BOYCOTT APPEAL--At a meeting in Lenasia on Wednesday night, the chairman of the Anti-SAIC Committee, Dr Essop Jassat, urged the Indian Community to stay away from polling booths on October 4. He said: "The South African Indian Council is a tool of the White parliament and we don't want you to give any credibility to the puppets and clowns of the apartheid circus". The main object of the Anti-SAIC Committee was to try and reject the Indian council because it was a racist and powerless body, which had not accomplished anything for the Indian community over the past 17 years. END TONGAAT WORKERS' STRIKE--Durban--The 3 000 non White workers employed by the Tongaat group of companies on the Natal North Coast who have been on strike since early Tuesday decided to return to work yesterday. The workers, employed in the flour, cattle food and sugar divisions of the company, decided to go back to work yesterday after the company management committed themselves to thrash out their grievances about the pension and super-annuation funds next week. The managing director of the company, Mr Alan Hankinson, said yesterday that the grievances of the workers had been fully noted. He said they would be discussed in detail next week. Mr Hankinson said that the company had a proud record in management-labour relations and he was sorry that the workers had decided to strike originally without presenting a memorandum on their grievances. He gave a promise that all their complaints would be met with justice and fair play. The workers first went out on strike at the early shift on Tuesday. They had milled around the company's sugar plant at Maidstone since early Tuesday. The police used teargas on Tuesday evening to disperse them after the strikers started to intimidate other workers who had just left other sections of the company's premises. RETURN TO WORK--Ninety-five percent of the 500-strong Black work-force returned to work yesterday at Paper and Packaging Industries in Pretoria, a spokesman for the company said. The workers walked out this week over a wage-dispute and other grievances. The spokesman said management had made it clear to the workers' council it was not prepared to discuss disputes unless the men returned to work. NEED FOR WHEAT IMPORTS--At least 200 000 tons of wheat will have to be imported for the next South African season--for the second successive year, according to Mr Denis van Aarde, chairman of the Wheat Board. Mr Van Aarde said the estimated yield for the next season (October 1981 to September 1982) was 1,7-million tons. "Conditions have improved since then, but an import of at least 200 000 tons will be required" he said. Last season South Africa had a wheat crop of 1,38-million tons the worst in 10 years--and 286 000 tons had to be imported. This was the second time in 11 years South Africa had to import wheat. Mr Van Aarde said this season's carry-over of 423 800 tons would last until the middle of December. The protracted drought at the beginning of this year, he said, was the main cause for the shortfall, particularly in the Free State. South Africa's annual wheat consumption, according to Mr Van Aarde, is 1,9-million tons, including exports and that required for seed. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 22 Aug 81 p 9]

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX--The Consumer Price Index for all income groups rose by 2,3 percent last month to bring the total increase since July last year to 15,5 percent, according to figures released by the Department of Statistics in Pretoria yesterday. Food prices on their own showed an increase of 0,4 percent during June, with the increase since July last year at 22,5 percent. For the lower income groups, the increase was 1,3 percent in June and 16,8 since July last year. The index for the middle income group rose by 1,8 percent in June (15,4 percent since July last year) and for the higher income group it was 2,8 percent (15,2 percent since July last year). A breakdown of the 2,3 percent increase last month shows a 0,1 percent increase under the heading of food, an increase of 0,1 percent in cigarettes, 0,1 percent in clothing, 1,2 percent in housing, 0,1 percent in household operation, 0,6 percent in petrol and other items contributed 0,1 percent. FRENCH COOPERATION ON RAILWAYS--A new Franco-South African company, Faiveley SA, has been formed to supply a wide range of components for the new generation of South African super-fast trains now under development. The international agreement, designed to equip South African Railways with advanced technological expertise in rapid train transit, has been signed in Johannesburg between Wispeco-Widney, part of the Metkor Group, and Faiveley SA of France, a world pioneer in the development of electronic systems for transport. The decision by South African Railways to extend electrification and develop a new breed of trains with in-increased speed has demanded a new quality of technology. We have been in the transport electronics field for more than 20 years and we hope our expertise will be put to significant use in South Africa," said Jean-Paul Ballerin, director-general of the French company. IMF DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR TALKS WITH GOVERNMENT

[Article by Daniel Mwale]

[Text] A HIGH-LEVEL delegation from the International Monetary Fund is visiting the country for talks with the Government on the country's economy and the recent loan given to Zambia.

Minister of Finance Mr Kebby Musokotwane has confirmed that the IMF team which arrived last week has had talks with officials from his ministry.

He declined to disclose details of the discussions which he described as routine.

The IMF was set up by the Western nations at Bretton Woods in the United States in 1944 to smooth out balance of payments problems between nations.

It aims to promote international monetary cooperation and currency stabilisation. The US controls more than 30 per cent of the assets of the IMF.

Zambia's shares at the moment are understood to be 1,660 votes which represent 211 million Special Drawing Rights (SDR).

The IMF announced in May that it had approved an K800 million loan to Zambia to help the country reconstruct the economy. The loan would be used to support the Government's economic and financial programmes over the next three years.

The programme is aimed at diversifying domestic production and achieving financial stability.

Following the loan agreement there have been price hikes on essential goods with the tacit approval of the Government to parastatal companies to charge what in IMF parlance is regarded as "economic prices".

Leader of the visiting team, Mr Edwin Bournemann, said in an interview that the delegation was here to review Zambia's economic performance since May.

Asked whether the IMF officials were impressed with what they had seen so far, Mr Bournemann said:

"It is much too early to say how things are going on. But I should say that Zambia has made reasonable progress towards economic recovery."

He said the talks with Government officials were quite "satisfactory."

Asked whether the IMF had seconded any experts to Zambia to oversee the implementation of the programme, Mr Bournemann said: "There had been no request from the Zambian Government to do so."

IMF experts were seconded to the central bank of Zaire after the organisation bailed out the government there from economic collapse. This, according to reliable reports, was done to prevent President Mobutu Sese Seko from channelling IMF funds elsewhere.

Recently a group of experts said the demands of the IMF loan to Zambia coupled with the declining economies in other parts of the world would bring special problems to Zambia.

Consultants commissioned by the Government welfare department to look into social and welfare problems said in the reports that Zambia would be required to implement policies which would lower the standards of living.

In the aftermath of the report which was published by the Zambia Council for Social Development, Mr Musokotwane said in an interview with Television Zambia that the IMF loan would be used to further Zambia's socialist goals.

TALKS BEING HELD CONCERNING PRIMARY ELECTIONS' ABOLITION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

CONSULTATIONS are going on between Freedom House, the Office of the Prime Minister and the Electoral Commission on the amendment of the Party and Republican constitutions with a view to effecting the abolition of primary elections.

Prime Minister Mundia said this in Parliament yesterday when backbenchers took him to task on why by-elections in Mpulungu constituency had been delayed.

The constituency fell vacant after the death of Mr Wind Mazimba who died in a car accident in Lusaka last year.

Nchanga MP Mr Cosmas Masongo asked the Prime Minister when the by-election would be held in Mpulungu and what had caused delay in announcing dates for the primary and final polls.

In reply Minister of State for Decentralisation Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula said following the abolition of primary elections, there were appropriate amendments being made to the two constitutions.

Luwingu West MP Mr John Chalwe asked if it was not possible to conduct the elections while awaiting the amendments, but Mr Mundia said the matter was too involved and that polls could only be held after the amendments were throu[illegible]

Mr Albert Limbo (Sinjembela) asked whether it was constitutional to delay by-elections. Mr Mundia said there was no specific time limit given.

PRIME MINISTER ADDRESSES OPENING MEETING OF ZAMBIA-MOZAMBIQUE BODY

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 14 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE World Health Organisation (WHO) has agreed to co-finance a manpower exchange programme in which Zambian medical personnel will be seconded to Mozambique.

Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia revealed in Lusaka yesterday that this agreement which was aimed at enhancing technical co-operation between the two countries would start in January next year and will initially last six years.

Mr Mundia was speaking at the official opening of the Zambia—Mozambique Joint Permanent Commission meeting at Lusaka's Mulungushi Hall.

This means that WHO has become a third party participant in the mutual technical assistance programme of exchange of medical personnel between the two countries.

He said Zambia establishes joint commissions with friendly states in order to strengthen bilateral links against divisive policies that were created by colonial masters.

Prime Minister Mundia called for full utilisation of resources at the mutual disposal of neighbouring African states to enrich the lives of their people.

Mr Mundia told the meeting that the two countries have to grapple with divisive "vagaries" created by their former imperialist masters who cherished dreams of permanently retaining their overseas possessions as satellites of their home economies.

"They therefore deliberately created overseas settler economies whose main reason for existence was to supply their industries with ill-gotten cheap raw materials, outlets for exploitative labour and imperialist capital," he said.

He pointed out that as a result of these policies, both countries were faced with discrimination and restrictions such as the running of the Mozambican economy by the Portuguese with the exclusion of the indigenous people.

In Zambia, this was done in the form of restricting the people to menial tasks and the use of strategic products such as copper for their war effort.

"All the major transport routes in Mozambique were mainly designed to serve the Western world and their allies. Communications with the outside world had to be routed through metropolitan capitals," he added.

Against this background, independent countries must set themselves the task to restructure their national and regional economies and stressed the need for unity in this co-operation.

"As we have all learnt against the bitter experience of divide and rule, in unity there is strength," he added.

Mr Mundia said links must be forged in transport, telecommunications, trade, finance, manpower development cultural exchanges, and information to ensure success.

He emphasised that a spirit of give and take was important and called for the strengthening of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) and the proposed Preferential Trade Area (PTA).

The Prime Minister said for the region, success was imperative in order to to disentangle its economy from dependence on South Africa.

"Our permanent commission for joint co-operation has a very important role to play in all this. Let us all work hard to improve the lot of our people by formulating practical joint programmes of action," he added.

He also called on the international community to fully participate in the region's development projects, pointing out that this would be to their advantage too.

"I call upon other agencies from the international community to follow the example set by WHO. Indeed the international community should realise that their participation in our projects is to their advantage as well as ours," he stated.

Mozambican leader of delegation Mr Alcantara Santos echoed the Prime Minister's call for unity and said difficulties would only be overcome by joint efforts.

Mr Santos, who is Mozambique's Minister of Ports and Surface Transport and the chairman of the joint commission, said the meeting would try to implement the Prime Minister's guidelines.

Mr Santos is leading a 13-man delegation of government officials and industry.

Works and Supply Minister Mr Haswell Mwale is leader of the Zambian delegation which includes Minister of Youth and Sport General Kingsley Chinkuli and other top Government officials.

PRIME MINISTER ASKS WEST GERMAN GROUP FOR AID

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

PRIME Minister Mundia has urged the visiting 17-member group of the West German committee on justice and peace to play a major role in helping solve Zambia's economic and political problems.

Welcoming the group headed by Mrs Margaret Steur and former Times Business Review editor Mrs Ruth Weiss at his office yesterday, Mr Mundia appreciated the role the committee was playing in solving Zambia's problems.

"We appreciate the role you are playing in promoting mankind through friendship."

The Prime Minister said he was sure that during the visit the group had seen and noted the many problems facing the people of Zambia.

He was grateful to the group for choosing Zambia and making efforts to improve the friendly relations between Zambia and West Germany.

Mr Mundia said the visit by the committee was the fourth to Zambia. They had been operating for the past ten years.

The group was interested in studying the pricing of raw materials such as copper which was the nation's economic backbone.

Mrs Steur said the committee was in Zambia to look at her economic and political problems as a developing country.

It had chosen Zambia to bring understanding between Germans and Zambians and to understand each other's problems.

"We are looking for ways and means in which we can help the people of Zambia and we have found that the best way is to develop friendship between the people in West Germany and Zambia."

INDIAN AID PLEDGE

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 17 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] The Indian government has assured Zambia that it will do everything to assist her attain a strong economy by providing her with various types of aids aimed at establishing more small scale industries.

Acting indian High Commissioner to Zambia Mr Krishna Rajan said yesterday that the Indian government was committed to all the pledges it has made in the past through various types of agreements in which it has undertaken to assist developing countries improve the quality of life of their citizens.

Mr Rajan said one way in which developing countries could improve their quality of life of their citizens was by having strong economies achieved through industrial development.

He said to achieve industrial development, developing counties needed to expand their small scale industries.

Hence, he said, his government was ready to assist Zambia to develop her small scale industries and to this effect, his government was looking forward to the implementation of the bilateral agreements which Zambia and India had signed in that sphere.

"We are looking forward to the implementation of the agreements which our governments have signed and in which the Indian government has pleged to assist Zambia set up small scale industries.

KABWIE DENOUNCES DETENTION WITHOUT TRIAL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Fanwell Zulu]

[Text] THE judiciary should look into detentions of people without trial, suspended Zambia Air Force commander Major-General Christopher Kabwe said yesterday.

"A detention without trial is one of the most traumatic experiences in a person's life and no one wants to be kept in prison for so long without trial — it is terrible and bitter," he said in an interview at his house in Lusaka.

Gen Kabwe, who was detained with 13 others on treason charges was released on Saturday morning.

He said he believed that in a democratic society like Zambia detentions without trial should not exist.

"You remove personal liberty and one does not know what to do."

Asked whether he is bitter General Kabwe who was flanked by his wife, children and relatives laughed and said: "This is a difficult question.

"It is not a question of being bitter, but a detention without trial is one of the most traumatic experience and I only hope that the judiciary and the State could look into this business of detentions without trial."

There were countries like Nigeria where they have democratic laws on detentions. "A chap detained would be taken to court within 48 hours."

Asked on what grounds he had been released, he said this question could only be answered by the Director of Public Prosecutions or the State.

But Minister of Legal Affairs and Attorney-General Mr Gibson Chigaga refused to comment on Gen Kabwe's release.

On whether he would be prepared to go back to his post he said: "If it is a question of going back to my job, this is not up to me. I am prepared to serve the nation."

Gen Kabwe, looking relaxed, said it was great to be re-united with his family. "I have been removed from my family for a long time and naturally I am happy to join them."

He was detained at the Lusaka Central prison.

He has appeared in court on several charges. Last May he appeared in the Lusaka magistrates court on treason charges.

Stolen

The others facing treason charges are former Brigadier-General Godfrey Miyanda, 36, (Zambia Army); Yoram Mumba, 41, businessman; Anderson Kabwali Mporokoso, 38, (major in the ZAF), MacPherson Mbulo, 35, (major in the Zambia Army) and Matinanga Liswaniso, 39, (police officer).

Others are Valentine Musakanya, Edward Shamwana, Deogratios Syimba, Albert Chilambo Chimbalile, Thomas Mulewa Mupungu and Roger Kanyembu Kabwita.

The suspended ZAF chief is also facing four counts of receiving property believed to be unlawfully obtained. He has pleaded not guilty.

The case has been adjourned to September 15 to 18.

He and Major Elton Mumba, 39, are alleged to have received a Peugeot 504 worth K16,500 knowing or having reasons to believe that the vehicle was stolen.

It is alleged that Moses Stirling Mulenga, businessman, stole five ZAF Peugeot 504s and a Mercedes Benz truck, worth K96,000.

They have denied the charges.

President Kaunda suspended him for suspected irregular activities — only three days after his appointment last October.

KASUTO SAYS MONZE MUST BE CLEARED OR DISMISSED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt] THE Government must clear Mr Basil Monze from his implications in the Mumpanshya commission of inquiry findings or nullify his appointment as Zambia Railways general manager.

Central Province Member of the Central Committee Mr Pius Kasutu (above) reiterated his call about Mr Monze's appointment in Kabwe yesterday.

Mr Monze took over the reins two months ago following his retirement from the civil service where he last worked as permanent secretary for the Ministry of Lands and Natural Resources.

Mr Monze's appointment was opposed by the Railway Workers Union of Zambia because of his alleged indifference to workers' problems when he was permanent secretary for the Ministry of Power, Transport and Communications as well as chairman of the Zambia Railways board of directors.

The commission revealed rampant cases of tribalism, nepotism, corruption and thefts.

Union chairman Mr Dominic Katwishi, said the union rejected the appointment because he was one of the architects of problems which forced the Government to appoint the commission of inquiry.

But the present chairman of the board, Mr Patrick Chisanga said Mr Monze's appointment would stay until the appointing authorities said something to the contrary.

Liaised

Mr Kasutu and his provincial political secretary Mr Samson Mukando, received a petition from the union against Mr Monze's appointment and blamed the impasse on lack of consultation by the Government.

Had the appointing authorities liaised with his office or the union there would have been no trouble about the post.

"I still feel that the union and the workers had a good case before the authorities," Mr Kasutu said yesterday.

"If Mr Monze's appointment is not revoked what is going to happen to my present political secretary? A m I going to have two political secretaries in the province."

Mr Monze's wife Lily is a political secretary.

Mr Kasutu stressed he had no grudge against Mr Monze.

"What I am unhappy about is that I expected the high authorities to clear Mr Monze from whatever he was implicated in the Mumpanshya report and give him a good beginning as Zambia Railways general manager.

Mr Kasutu denied that he opposed Monze's appointment in order to protect one of his relatives — an assistant general manager who is said to be his tribesman.

"I do not even know the two assistant general managers well," he said.

"It is nonsense for anyone to suggest that I want to preserve the post for somebody I favour."

"It is not in my interest to lead the people of Central Province on tribal lines," he said.

ZCTU DETAINEES TO HIRE ATTORNEYS TO SEEK RELEASE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 14 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE four detained labour leaders have given the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions instructions to engage lawyers to fight for their release.

ZCTU acting assistant general secretary (administration) Mr John Sichone said this after he visited three of the four leaders.

He saw ZCTU chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba, general secretary Mr Newstead Zimba and Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) deputy chairman Mr Timothy Walamba but did not see Mr Chitalu Sampa although other ZCTU officials had seen him. Mr Sampa is ZCTU assistant general secretary.

Mr Sichone said the main reason for consulting the detainees was to get their detention orders so that these could be handed to their lawyers to fight for their release.

The detainees acknowledged receipt of detention orders furnishing them with reasons for their detentions.

Announcing their detention on July 27, President Kaunda said the labour leaders were allegedly inciting workers to disrupt industrial peace and eventually overthrow the Government.

The ZCTU would engage Jacques and Partners for Mr Zimba, Mr Walamba and Mr Sampa while Mwanawasa and Company of Ndola would stand for Mr Chiluba. The two law firms are the choice of the detainees although Mr Sichone had not seen them yet.

Mr Sichone said the detained leaders he had seen were well looked after.

Mr Chiluba is being held in Livingstone, Mr Walamba at Kasama while Mr Zimba and Mr Sampa are in Solwezi and Zambezi respectively.

The emergency council of the ZCTU has since demanded the immediate release of the four men. At a ZCTU meeting in Ndola after the detention orders were announced the labour leaders called for an international commission of inquiry on the causes of the strikes and the continued misunderstanding between the labour movement and the Party and its Government.

ZCTU deputy chairman Mr Hubert Bwempe said the independent commission of inquiry should include the International Labour Organisation (ILO).

NHA WORKERS' WAGE INCREASE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

NATIONAL Housing Authority hourly-paid workers of the construction department in Lusaka yesterday went on a sit-in protest in demand for pay increment.

The workers, who stayed out for more than two hours, dispersed after NHA managing director Dr David Simonda told them that they would get six ngwee rise.

Earlier, the workers alleged that they had been cheated for a long time by management and that they decided to stop work.

They claimed that in July management told them to continue working as "things were still being sorted out," but nothing was done to meet their demand.

Recently management told them to wait for four days so that it could meet union officials and discuss problems.

"It is for this reason that we decided that we march to the headquarters and wait until our demands are met," said one worker. Management officials could not comment.

'EVEN ASIA-ORIGINATED ZAMBIAN MUST BE PREPARED TO WORK FOR ZAMBIA'

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 16 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

TO what extent is the Asian community in Zambia prepared to support the country's socialist goals? It will not be off the mark to say the majority of our comrades want only to line their pockets with Kwacha.

Yesterday President Kaunda sent a message of congratulations to his counterpart in India Sanjiva Reddy in which he expressed the wish for the two countries to "continue to strive to consolidate our relations" in different spheres.

But has the Indian community, for that matter, been forthcoming? If anything some members of that community use every trick to smuggle millions of Kwacha out of the country. Examples are not hard to come by.

That is not good. We are not going to tolerate sordid activities because we need every ngwee for national development. And that is why we can shoot from the hip, however painful the facts are.

Ours is a non-racial society and we expect every Zambian to make efforts to ensure that development is not lopsided.

Even the Asia-originated Zambian must be prepared to work for Zambia. We cannot have Zambians whose bread is buttered on both sides. It is either they are with us or they aren't.

Let all Zambians live together in Misisi, Chimwemwe, Masala or Woodlands. The Zambian society does not discriminate and designating one racial group to one area is actually racialism. We shouldn't hear about that word, not in Zambia for true.

It is within this context that the message sent to India by the President must be understood. It is not "one of those fratenal greetings", it is important.

MINING YEAR BOOK SAYS ECONOMIC RECOVERY CONTINUES TO IMPROVE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 14 Aug 81 p 2

[Text]

ZAMBIA's economic recovery continues to improve, says the Zambia mining year book of 1980 which reports on the activities of the two mining companies.

The report says although Zambia faced economic problems in 1980 largely because of world recession, the two mining companies — Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) and Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM) continued to recover financially, a trend which was started in 1979.

Copper production rose to 609,935 tonnes in the year ending December 31 compared with 586,046 in the previous year. In money terms the copper output was worth K972.5 million compared to K843 million in 1979.

The sale of cobalt had gone up from 3,271 tonnes to 3,310 tonnes bringing the total value of the mineral produced in 1980 to K1,195.8 million — against K1,060.5 million in 1979.

This bright trend of events is attributed to sound industrial relations which the report says were maintained at all levels throughout the year.

It says there were only 11 unconstitutional strikes and these were far apart. In these stoppages a total of 154,865.5 man hours were lost.

CONSUMER PRICE REPORT NOTES EFFECT OF INFLATION ON POOR

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 14 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] The inflation rate for the lower income group in Zambia reached 15 per cent in April this year but dropped to 14.1 percent in June.

This is contained in the Consumer Price Statistics published by the Central Statistical Office and released in Lusaka yesterday.

The report says that increases in food prices are still the major contributing factor to these fairly high inflation rates.

This is because the low-income group spends a much greater proportion of their total expenditure on food that when costs rise, their cost of living is affected more than that of the high income group.

During the past three months, there have been increases in the price of rice (up by 27 per cent), bacon (by 18 per cent), butter (by 39 per cent), sugar (by 12 per cent) and salt (by 25 per cent).

According to the report, there have been some interesting price changes this year in the transport sector. Spare parts for cars were 5.8 per cent lower in June than in January but over the same period, the average labour charge per hour for car repairs went up by 21.7 per cent.

Following the introduction of price control on used cars prices the index of used car prices fell by 4.2 per cent between March and May. However, it went up again in June by 1.9 per cent.

On vegetables, the report says that prices vary according to availability. The more scarce a particular vegetable, the higher its price.

But vegetable prices also differ considerably from one outlet to the next and it is this aspect that the report looks at.

In some markets, vegetables are sold not by the kilogram but by the heap or bundle. Five types of vegetables sold this way--onions, tomatoes, sweet potatoes, rape and dried beans were selected and purchased a quantity of each from Kabwata market in Lusaka.

This was then compared with the equivalent price per kg that was paid for at Lusaka's City Market the same day. Four of the five items were more expensive at the city market than when bought by the heap or bundle at Kabwata market. Only dried beans were cheaper at the city market.

MINEX SYSTEM TO BOOST NATION'S EXPORT EARNINGS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Aug 81 p 2

[Text]

ZAMBIA's export earnings will be boosted when she starts to sell some of her minerals to the European Economic Community under a new system called Minex.

Minister of State for Commerce and Industry Mr Leonard Subulwa said this in Lusaka at the weekend when he explained the stabilisation of export earnings to EEC markets.

Zambia has for a long time been fighting to join another system known as Stabex in which countries covered were exporting goods to the EEC markets to earn foreign exchange.

But Mr Subulwa said Article 25 of Lome II lists the goods covered under the Stabex system as agricultural, forestry, animal and oil products.

Copper was not among them and that was why Zambia and other mineral exporting countries had not benefited from the Stabex system.

He said during the Lome discussions EEC agreed to introduce Minex to operate on similar lines as Stabex.

Minex covered minerals such as copper, cobalt, phosphates, manganese, bauxite, aluminium and tin.

Iron ore, until 1983 will continue to enjoy the facility under Stabex and under Minex thereafter.

Since the economy of Zambia was dependent on the mining sector, she automatically qualify under Articles 23 (1) and 49 of Lome II.

This meant that she can apply for assistance when faced with the decline in EEC capacity to export mining products to the EEC or decline in export earnings.

"A system for repairing any harm that might affect the economy and the earning has yet to be worked out by the ACP/EEC," said Mr Subulwa.

Zambia had not yet started to use Minex facilities.

"Once the ACP/EEC works out the details and the procedures, Zambia will definitely avail herself of the facilities," said the minister.

In April Mr Subulwa said that EEC was going to send experts in May to finalise Zambia's application to accede to the Stabex system.

He said at the time that once the application was processed, Zambia would benefit from the EUA 280 million (European Unit of Accounts) as there was a great need for the mines to rehabilitate machinery.

ALGERIA INTERESTED IN DIRECT COPPER, ZINC PURCHASES

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 17 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] Algeria has expressed interest in buying copper and zinc directly from Zambia instead of buying these minerals on the international market.

This came to light over the weekend in Lusaka when the Algerian trade team and a Zambian trade group started a final round of talks on bilateral relations.

Zambia has also shown interest in purchasing 1,000 railway wagons from Algeria.

She also wants Algerian expertise in the development of phosphate mines north of Lusaka.

Before the mines are fully developed, Zambia would like to buy phosphates from Algeria for the Nitrogen Chemicals factory at Kafue for fertiliser production.

A spokesman for the Algerian team said his country and Zambia had agreed to set up a joint copper fabrication plant but it had not yet been decided where this will be located.

Depending on production, Zambia will supply Algeria with copper starting next year.

Zambia will supply 7,000 tonnes next year, 9,000 tonnes in 1983, 11,000 tonnes in 1984 and 25,000 tonnes in 1985.

Some of the products Zambia may buy from Algeria include iron and steel, galvanised sheets, heavy and light machinery for industries and office equipment.

Apart from supplying wagons, Algeria may assist Zambia in the technical training of a number of Zambians in the industrial fields.

The Algerian team which had been in Zambia for almost a week, left Lusaka on Saturday.

MEMACO TO SELL COBALT ON WORLD MARKETS AT SAME LEVEL AS ZAIRE

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 14 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] THE Zambian price for cobalt has been reduced from 20 US dollars per pound (K37,000 per tonne) to 17.5 US dollars per pound (K35,350 per tonne).

The reduction was confirmed this week in London by the managing director of the Metal Marketing Corporation of Zambia Limited, Mr Lawrence Mutakasha.

The reduction in the price of cobalt comes in the wake of an announcement last week by the Zairean metal marketing firm, SOZACOM, that it had slashed its price of the metal from 20 US dollars per pound to 17.66 per pound, reflecting the rise in the value of the dollar.

In his statement this week, Mr Mutakasha however emphasised that Zambia would adopt a more flexible cobalt sales policy that will enable her to compete with Zaire which sells in Belgian francs and other currencies.

Because of the recent sharp fluctuations in the dollar, MEMACO will adjust its dollar selling price at the beginning of each month.

This month's sales price is 17.5 US dollars per pound against the previous official posted producer price of 20 US dollars per pound.

MEMACO will now be selling in world markets at the same level as Zaire. The 17.5 US dollars per pound price is for MEMACO's Rokana brand while its Chambishi metal is sold at up to 10 per cent less according to grade.

MEMACO had held its producer price at 20 US dollars per pound since March when it was cut from 25 US dollars per pound (K46,000 per tonne).

After Zambia had cut back on the price from 25 US dollars per pound to 20 US dollars per pound, MEMACO spokesman explained then that this had been done after extensive consultations between Zambian and Zairean mining industries.

He emphasised that it was important to understand that the new Zambian producer price of 20 US dollars per pound would be nett price.

Earlier this year, both Zambia and Zaire, who are the world's largest producers of cobalt, had decided to maintain the producer price of the metal of 25 US dollars per pound for 1981.

The decision to maintain the price of this precious metal was reached at a meeting held last November between representatives from MEMACO and SOZACOM.

MOZAMBICAN MINISTER CALLS FOR CLOSER TRANSPORT LINKS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

MOZAMBIQUE has called for closer links in transport communication with Zambia.

The call was made in Kabwe by that country's Minister of Posts and Surface Transport Mr Alcantara Santos after touring Zambia Railways and Tazara installations at Kapiri Mposhi and in Kabwe yesterday.

Mr Santos and national director of Posts and Railways Dr Subaschandra Batt were accompanied on the tour by Finance Minister Mr Kebby Musokotwane and Zambia Railways general manager Mr Basil Monze.

Speaking at Zambia Railways guest house where he had lunch before driving back to Lusaka, Mr Santos said Zambia and Mozambique should improve their communications network to minimise their transport problems.

"As far as investment in the railway network is concerned, I think we need more than you do because you have been independent much longer than ourselves. That is why we have come to learn from you.

"We can achieve this through unity which we think is the only way to develop our countries and grow together as brothers because areas of cooperation are already there."

The purpose of his visit was to attend the Zambia-Mozambique joint permanent commission "while the most important reason was to increase cooperation between our two countries."

At Zambia Railways workshops, Mr Santos said he and his delegation which included representatives from the Mozambican news agency (AIM) were impressed with the workers' skill and efficiency.

COMPLETION OF ZAMBIA-MOZAMBIQUE ROAD

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 17 Aug 81 p 5

[Excerpt]

CONSTRUCTION of the Zambia-Mozambique road has been completed and it will be inaugurated soon, Minister of Finance Mr Kebby Musokotwane has said.

Mr Musokotwane said this at the International Airport in Lusaka after signing documents of the Zambia-Mozambique permanent commission with the Mozambican Minister of Ports and Surface Transport Mr Luis Maria Alcantara Santos.

He said the road, from Katete to Tete in Mozambique, was expected to be launched by President Kaunda and Field Marshal Samora Machel at a date to be announced.

Commenting on the deliberations of the permanent commission meeting, Mr Musokotwane said Zambia and Mozambique had agreed on ways to improve the civil aviation network between the two countries.

The meeting called for closer cooperation between the central banks of Zambia and Mozambique.

BRIEFS

PRESIDENT ON POACHING--President Kaunda has described the rate of poaching in the Luangwa valley as tragic. Speaking at the start of his annual holiday at Mfuwe Lodge in the Luangwa valley yesterday, President Kaunda said that the damage being done by poachers in the area was grave and should be brought under control as soon as possible. He called on the nation, particularly the Wildlife Conservation Society, to help put a stop to the current waste of Zambian game, some of which is threatened with complete extinction. The President was receiving the gift of a painting done by distinguished wildlife artist David Sheperd, on behalf of the "Save The Rhino Trust" of which he is patron. The trust is to raffle the painting with the hope of raising K40,000 to help it in its campaign to save the rhino species in the country. [Excerpt] [Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 14 Aug 81 p 1]

COST OF OFFICIALS' TRAVEL ABROAD--The Government spent K16,664,662 on officers travelling abroad between 1973 and 1980, Minister of Finance Mr Kebby Musokotwane told Parliament yesterday. Backbenchers asked the minister whether it was necessary for the Government to spend so much money on travel when the country has representatives abroad and in view of the economic difficulties the nation was facing. He said increases in the travel bills resulted from high air fares but it was necessary for ministers and other officials to travel abroad. Mr Musokotwane said Cabinet Office was looking into the matter with a view to reducing the bill in future. [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 14 Aug 81 p 1]

LOSSES AT DAR ES SALAAM PORT--Zambia lost almost K1 billion through damages and pilferage of goods in two years at Dar es Salaam port. Zambia lost K985,037,525 in foreign exchange through damage to imports via the Tanzanian port and K1,948,917 through pilferage between 1978 and 1980. MUGABE CHARGES S.A. SEEKS TO REESTABLISH UANC REGIME

/Article by Tim Chigodo/

/Text/

THE Government has information that Zimbabweans being repatriated by South Africa are former supporters of the United African National Council who went there for military training, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said yesterday.

He said it was not true that the people being sent back from South Africa were all workers. The Pretoria regime was finding a way of bringing back the former auxiliaries of UANC president, Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

Addressing rallies at Suswe in Mtoko and Mrewa, the Prime Minister said 5 000 former auxiliaries had fled to South Africa after independence to be trained to overthrow his Government.

He told the huge gatherings that those coming back would be screened because South Africa wanted to plant them all over the country to carry out subversive activities, including sabotage.

Mr Mugabe warned Bishop Muzorewa that if he did not change, he would be detained. "I know he has not been to prison. I shall build a keep for him and his wife," he said.

He said that the men being sent back would be supplied with arms by South Africa to destabilise the country. The Prime Minister had information that Bishop Muzorewa's UANC had been holding secret meetings.

He called on all patriotic Zimbabweans to be united and expose the enemy. The Government would establish centres in all provinces to provide military training for children who were unable to attend school.

Today Mr Mugabe will address rallies at Chiota and Wedza in his programme to meet the people and hear their problems.

Politicians Deny Subversion Charge

TWO leaders of minority political parties denied Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's claims that they were involved in any subversive activities.

Both Bishop Abel Muzorewa, of the UANC, and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, of ZANU, challenged Mr Mugabe to substantiate his charges against them in court.

Bishop Muzorewa issued a statement calling for the Prime Minister "to go further and tell the nation in what way is the UANC involved in subversive activities and how we are still associated with the enemy".

He charged that the Prime Minister was trying to impose a one-party state by banning other political organisations.

Bishop Muzorewa also emphatically denied that his party was linked with armed saboteurs that South Africa intended to infiltrate into Zimbabwe.

ZANU president, Mr Sithole, said the Prime Minister's claims were to divert the attention of the people from national problems.

"It is typical of all witch-hunt programmes in the face of increasing national problems which the Government seems incapable of solving," he said. "If I am engaged in subversive activities, I challenge the Government to bring me before the courts of the land," Mr Sithole said. — Herald Reporter-Ziana.

PRESIDENT SAYS CHURCH'S PAY SCALES 'OUT OF LINE'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

THE Government cannot allow apartheid to thrive in Zimbabwean society, even within the Church, President Banana said yesterday.

Speaking at the Methodist Church conference in Salisbury yesterday afternoon, President Banana accused the Church of having a racial salary structure.

"That is intolerable because it is in direct confrontation with the Government's policy of reconciliation," he declared.

Saying he was conscious of the Church's contribution towards the development of Zimbabwe over the years, the President urged all churchmen to address themselves fully "in the new struggle against the last pockets of economic exploitation".

The country was in a position of peace and tranquillity as a result of and churchmen were the best qualified to implement that policy because reconciliation was a Biblical expression.

President Banana said the Government had formulated the reconciliation policy because the country could not afford the bitterness that characterised the past.

"We had to create conditions for every Zimbabwean, whatever his station in life, to be allowed to make a contribution to the development of this country," he said.

President Banana strongly criticised churchmen who still had fears about the future of the Church in Zimbabwe saying that the Government had stated every Zimbabwean had a role to play in the development of the country.

He added: "If there is anyone who has such fears, then there is something at the back of his mind or he is in conflict with the wishes of the people."—Ziana.

INDIAN ENVOY DETAILS PLANS FOR AID

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 4

/Text/

AN Indian team to survey technology and economics in the field of village and small-scale industries is expected to arrive in Zimbabwe later this year, the High Commissioner of India, said in Salisbury this week.

Interviewed by Ziana at the Indian Embassy Mr Arif Qamarain, said India had sent a mining survey team to Zimbabwe at its own cost in March 1981.

"The team has had a detailed look at the mining education facilities available in Zimbabwe and has brought out a report on the upgrading of such facilities. The report has since been submitted to the Zimbabwean Government," he said.

Mr Qamarain said that once a decision to proceed with the project had been taken by the Zimbabwean and Indian Governments, India would assist in giving some technical literature, laboratory equipment, teaching aids and providing some training places.

"Another such techno-economic survey team is expected later this year in the field of village and small-scale industries. This team will perform a similar function but with a view to setting up of village industries and small-scale industries in rural areas of Zimbabwe," Mr Qamarain said.

SCHOLARSHIPS

He said India had been giving technical assistance to Zimbabwe by offering scholarships to Zimbabweans for more than a quarter of a century.

"In later years these were given to liberation movements. At present, India intends to give 50 scholarships or traineeships every year from 1981/82, for the next three years — the development plan period of Zimbabwe. These will be in a wide range of fields such as engineering, medicine, pharmacy, commerce and metallurgy.

"India is giving, as part of its annual contribution to the World Health Organisation for this year, $67 000 worth of artificial limbs, surgical equipment and other items to the Zimbabwe Ministry of Health," said Mr Qamarain.

He continued: "With the establishment of a resident Indian mission in Zimbabwe from January 1980, efforts are being made to acquaint the Government departments, trading and industrial organisations, and individual business houses in both countries, of the various Government and commercial regulations prevailing in both India and Zimbabwe. Likewise, efforts are being made to improve Indian shipping services to Southern Africa, by avoiding South African ports."

DETAILS ON NATIONAL EDUCATION SEMINAR GIVEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 6

/Text/

UNESCO will co-operate with the Government and people of Zimbabwe to create an efficient and effective system of education, its director-general, Mr Amadou-Mahtar M'Bow, said in Salisbury yesterday.

Mr M'Bow urged delegates at the first Zimbabwe national education seminar held at the University of Zimbabwe to strive to maintain a high level of production in education.

"We live in a world in which rising costs are creating new problems for educational planners," he said.

Increased productivity at all levels of the education process, Mr M'Bow added, could achieve expansion without the unbearable financial burden.

Mr M'Bow called on the seminar to consider ways to strengthen educational planning and administration mechanisms at national, local and institutional levels.

In Zimbabwe, he said, the content and structure of education need to be carefully reviewed in the light of new priorities and needs of the country.

He also stressed the importance of adult education especially for those in the rural and deprived urban areas because most of the country's citizens had no access to education until recently.

"The task ahead will not be easy for it involves the building of a system based on the aspirations of the people and on their cultural heritage, as well as on the emerging national development policies and priorities," Mr M'Bow said.

He listed critical areas requiring special attention in Zimbabwe as:

- Policy formulation and educational planning management and evaluation;
- Curriculum development and research, teacher training and higher education;
- Literacy training, adult education and education for rural development; and
- Science education, technical vocational education, as well as education for productive work.

Mr M'Bow also pointed out other areas of importance such as the production of educational materials and educational technology.

Zimbabwe, he said, had a major role to play in upholding the principles of UNESCO and in promoting international peace and solidarity.

At the beginning of 1971 Mr M'Bow, then assistant director-general for Education with UNESCO, led the first mission to Africa to study the needs of the national liberation movements recognised by the OAU.

The report of the mission led to the launching of a programme of educational assistance to refugees and liberation movements involved in struggling for the independence of their country.

'Bloodshed' Warning Given at Seminar

SERIOUS bloodletting will result if the education system is allowed to move ahead of the conservative social order in Zimbabwe, the national education seminar was told yesterday.

The warning was given by the chief education officer for planning in the Ministry of Education and Culture, Miss Fe Chung. She said in a paper delivered at the seminar that serious problems arose when the education system was out of step with the mainstream of development in society.

She said bloodletting could be caused by the "imprisonment, destruction or frustration of the intelligentsia and of skilled personnel".

Miss Fe said: "Should the social forces try to change when the educationists remain conservative, then such changes will be effectively unattainable."

She said a new education system had to be developed to serve the new order in Zimbabwe.

In another paper delivered by Mr Samuel Mumbengegwi under the auspices of the International Institute for Educational Planning, which was established by UNESCO, several suggestions were made to the Government on changes needed in the educational systems.

To make all primary schools equitable, Mr Mumbengegwi called on the Government to give ownership of urban primary schools to parent communities or boards.

He said this would make all primary schools in the country private schools, but with open access to all pupils.

Mr Mumbengegwi also suggested that no teachers be considered for promotion unless they had taught for at least three years in rural schools.

Such a regulation, he added, could make teaching in rural areas more attractive than at present.

The three major languages in the country, Shona, Ndebele and English, should be given equal weighting in the curriculum, he stressed.

Mr Mumbengegwi urged that steps be taken as a matter of urgency to collect data on the exact numbers of the school-age population, their growth rate, their flow throughout the system and employment prospects on leaving school.

He warned that the rapidly expanding school age population of Zimbabwe was a socio-cultural phenomenon which could not be solved by one ministry alone.

"What is needed is a concerted effort, by the Government as a whole to educate the nation on the desirability of limiting family sizes," he said.

The problem of the rapidly growing school population could be solved by such a programme coupled with economic growth and prosperity among the people.

BRIGHT FUTURE FOR COOPERATIVES SEEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 14

/Article by John West/

/Text/

THE co-operative movement was born in Toad Lane, Rochdale, England, on August 15 1844.

This was the now celebrated occasion when 28 cotton weavers, angered at the high price and low quality of food, contributed £1 each as capital, set up their own shop, appointed one of their number on a part time basis to run it, and began buying bread, butter sugar, oatmeal and candles, for distribution to themselves.

These first co-operators had much more lofty ideals than mere shopkeeping. They planned ultimately to establish a self-supporting community and to run a farm for the benefit of unemployed members.

These projects never materialised, but "the co-op shop", has become an important part of modern commerce.

What this first society did achieve was to establish principles which have lasted until today, and form the foundation of the present movement.

The first principle is that of open membership, which means that anyone can become a member (this most definitely included women right from the start), though there are generally certain limitations of age or interest. For example, members of a dairy society must be dairy farmers.

Second is the principle of "one member, one vote", but here again there may be modifications in the case of societies which are unions of other societies.

Since it is regarded as wrong for any one person to hold an undue proportion of the total capital, the third principle is a limit on the amount of capital which any one member may hold.

The capital bears interest at a low and stable rate determined by the management committee, either by itself or in conjunction with the members. Because of the principles of open membership and limited interest on capital, shares in co-operative societies do not fluctuate in value and no one can make a profit by trading in them.

PROFITS

Fourth, co-operative dividend is quite different from joint stock company dividend, which represents a share of the profits allocated to shareholders in proportion to their capital.

The profits of a co-operative society are regarded as surplus and consequently the dividend paid to shareholders is calculated in propotion to each person's patronage of the society and is not related to his holding of capital.

From its small beginning the co-operative movement has spread to practically all countries of the world. There are now not merely consumers' societies, but marketing societies, credit societies, producers' societies and many other such as housing, fishing, transport and electricity.

The general principle of all these societies is that the members supply the capital and elect the management committee. The object is to provide a service for the members, not to make a profit out of other people. Any excess of income over expenditure — after providing for future development — is divided among members according to the amounts they have bought from or sold to the society.

Today there are over 200 consumer societies in the United Kingdom with a total membership of about 12 million people. These societies conduct about 10 percent of the total retail business of the country.

In Western Europe about 60 percent of all farmers are members of one or more co-operative societies. They associate themselves in this way to set up an organisation which will either purchase farm input items, such as seeds, fertilisers, feeding stuffs, insecticides, tractors and other equipment for use by members, or will market its members' crops.

Credit societies constitute an important sector of co-operative activity. The essential feature of both rural and urban societies is that loans are small and made only for productive purposes. The members of the society are known to each other and are therefore able to make a good assessment of the creditworthiness of any applicant for funds.

In some countries there are producers societies, though these have never made as much progress as the other three main types. Producers' societies consist of workers who collectively set up a factory to manufacture some product.

In Zimbabwe there is a Co-operative Societies Act which provides for societies established on Rochdale principles to be registered. There is a government official called the Registrar, who has never been busier than he is now, owing to the surge of interest in co-ops in the past year.

The Registrar will give advice to people wishing to form societies and will help them to draft a constitution.

TRANSPORT

There are nearly 400 societies in Zimbabwe, mainly operating in agriculture. Most are concerned with collective purchase of input items.

There are, however, many other spheres of activity including marketing of crops and provision of transport.

People who have been resettled on land purchased by the Government are being encouraged to form themselves into co-ops in order to produce and market their crops more effectively. The number of non-agricultural societies may not be large, but it is diverse.

It includes several credit societies, a businessman's co-op, a printing and publishing society, a handicrafts society and a watch-menders' association. Among the oldest societies in the country is the Civil Service Co-op.

In a prosperous and developing Zimbabwe the future horizon for the movement is bright.

CITY COUNCIL FREEZES NEW RENT INCREASES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

SALISBURY CITY COUNCIL last night froze rents and supplementary charges which were due to take effect in the former townships next month.

Councillors warned of deep resentment of proposed rent increases of up to 40 per cent and the more than doubled supplementary charges gazetted three weeks ago.

300 Women in Protest Over Rents

ABOUT 300 women yesterday protested in Mufakose against recently-introduced rent increases.

Most came from Mufakose's areas A and G. In area A the rent increased by $6,40 and in area G it rose to $17,37 in some cases and to $20,22 in others.

Some women complained that the houses, which were not plastered and had no electricity, were too old and therefore not worth the rent they were being made to pay.

One woman said: "I am a widow and not working, where am I going to get such a lot of money for rent?"

They also complained about the short notice of the increases. "We were only called to a meeting on Sunday by the councillors and told that house rents would go up," said Mrs Maggie Chihoko.

The women, who gathered at the Mufakose administration offices were told by an administration officer that there were different rises in area G because some owners had opted to buy their houses.

They noted there had been demonstrations in several parts of the high-density suburbs and the chance of violence was growing.

Statements in the Press by Councillor Timothy Stamps that the poor were subsidising the rich had fuelled the reaction, councillors said.

Because the increases had already been gazetted the council was advised it could not change the charges but it could decide not to collect the full debt owed by residents.

The original recommendation, put forward by the chairman of the finance and development committee, Councillor Tobias Musariri, had the effect of freezing rents and charges until the end of next month.

However, a unanimously agreed amendment by Councillor Norman Henry extended the freeze indefinitely, pending a reassessment of the charges and, if necessary, a revised budget.

The amended motion was also carried unanimously.

Introducing his motion, Councillor Musariri criticised Councillor Stamps for going to the Press. "Our people are demonstrating because they have been given to understand they are paying far more than the rich."

He appealed to the council to approve the freeze so that his committee could have time to come up with a solution acceptable to the people.

Councillor Tony Gara warned that there had already been demonstrations, while Councillor D. K. Mupavayenda said people in Highfield were waiting until Tuesday. "And when Highfield does something they do it in a big way."

Debate continued until Councillor Henry broke the deadlock with his amendment and asked the city treasurer, Mr Ian Galletly, the cost of the freeze. Mr Galletly estimated the revenue loss at $2 million a year and said he supported Councillor Musariri's motion.

Long-term plans, involving changes in legislation and in the urban tax structure, had to be worked out, he said, before Salisbury's particular problems could be solved.

DETAILS OF GIANT TABEX SETTLEMENT SCHEME REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 7

/Text/

A NEW life has begun for more than 120 people — peasant farmers and their families — now establishing themselves at the giant Tabex settlement scheme near Mount Darwin.

For them, and for thousands more due to be settled there, success of the project will revolutionise their future. Many of the farmers, who have been earning the rural average — about $250 a year — will find themselves pocketing up to $1 000 next year.

Tabex, one of Zimbabwe's largest tobacco buying and exporting concerns, is planning the 5 000 ha project so that it will, in a few years, house 500 farmers, supporting a prosperous community of over 3 000 people.

The key to the success of the venture lies in burley tobacco.

Soil and climate in the area are ideal; it doesn't need the vast capital investment and highly-sophisticated growing and curing techniques demanded by flue-cured tobacco; world demand for the leaf is insatiable and prices high.

Tabex aims to plough up to $1.4 million into the project, which is wholeheartedly backed by the Government.

The company has bought five former commercial farms in the district, and is building core houses and burley barns for each settler family accepted from the communal lands or nearby farms.

"Each family will get a house, curing barn, approximately 0,6 of a hectare for burley growing and a plot of the same size for other crops," Mr Mike Hodgson, the Tabex director in charge of the scheme, said yesterday. Big families — with 10 children or more — will get two units.

"We charge a nominal rent for the barn, and provide seed, fertiliser, insecticides and other inputs on credit. But we will plough, contour and prepare the land and seedbeds free.

"Then, from the start of the growing season in October/November, the farmer will be guided every step of the way by our experts and Devag extension officers.

"At the end of the season, after we've bought his tobacco and deducted our expenses, he can expect — at the base price for next season of $2 a kg — to clear between $750 and $1 000."

In addition, says Mr Hodgson, the farmer will be able to dispose of his maize or other crops as he pleases, with all income going to him.

So far, 62 houses have been built, and 58 families are settling in. They are being selected, with the help of Devag and Ministry of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development officials, from the Chiweshe, Madziwa and Kandeya communal lands, with some coming from commercial farms.

"We're looking for hard-working, motivated people who are willing to learn, and those with the type of family who can [illegible] the farmwork," said Mr Anesto Mndeiri, Devag agricultural officer for Chiweshe.

Mr Hodgson agrees: "The criterion is that they are people whose horizons extend beyond subsistence farming.

"They don't need to have grown burley before, in fact that may even be a disadvantage, if they've picked up bad farming habits that need to be undone."

Says Mr Mundeiri: "In the past, the problem of the peasant farmer trying to grow burley has been the lack of inputs, knowledge of grading and curing skills. The Tabex scheme will overcome this."

"For this first season we plan to settle 100 families," Mr Hodgson says. "T ey can, in consultation with us, extend their houses, and we are looking next year to provide a school, perhaps a clinic, and social amenities such as a beerhall.

"If this project is the success we expect it to be, we will be examining other areas to start similar schemes."

The Mount Darwin scheme has been highly praised by Mr Kumbirai Kangai, Minister of Labour and Social Services, who said last month that it was "forward - looking and completely in line with Government policy".

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Air-cured Tobacco Association in Salisbury, the minister also noted that the burley crop from just over half a hectare could earn the country $1 800 in foreign exchange.

For Tabex, this is one of the main objects of the Mount Darwin "family farm unit" settlement. Last season Zimbabwe produced 1,9 million kg of burley, 95 percent of which will go abroad for sale on markets which could absorb far more of the leaf.

"We can sell all the country can produce and more," says Mr Max Beddow, Tabex leaf director. "Last season peasant farmers produced 10 percent of the crop, and the key to further expansion of the burley harvest lies with them."

All-out Push To Cash in on High Tobacco Prices

THE Air-Cured (burley) Tobacco Association has launched a massive drive to increase Zimbabwe's burley tobacco crop fivefold and cash in on the world shortages and high prices.

Burley was the best peasant cash crop in northern Mashonaland and parts of thhe eastern districts and the record prices could boost rural development, the president of the association, Mr Piet Conradie, said yesterday.

An agreement between the association and the burley tobacco consortium for the next season meant a price of $2 a kg for the acceptable part of the crop if it was of normal quality.

If the crop was better than expected the price would be higher but whatever happened the acceptable part of the crop would fetch at least $1,70 a kg.

Mr Conradie said the acceptable part of the crop was of high enough quality to be saleable and 92 percent of the last crop was on this standard or above

Burley could be grown over much of Mashonaland between Salisbury and the Zambezi escarpment and was an ideal crop for peasant farmers although he urged commercial farmers to also become involved.

The Agricultural Finance Corporation would be offering loans to experienced or motivated farmers in the communal areas and he hoped all the 1 000 peasant farmers who dropped production would get going again along with as many new farmers as possible.

The association had, since its formation in the early 1960s, brought commercial and peasant farmers together and at present there were about 150 commercial farmers growing burley and 1 000 peasant farmers.

"The sky's the limit," said Mr Conradie. "We grew 2 million tonnes this year and we want to quintuple that. But that's just a target: we want to go far beyond that.

"This is an ideal time to get into the crop if you live in a suitable area. The prices are high enough to provide the capital for barns and other infrastructure."

BAN ON FURNITURE CRITICIZED--A joint statement issued by the Furniture Manufacturers' and Retailers' Associations says the Government's recent ban on emigrants exporting consumer durables has depressed an already slack market. And, the statement says, yesterday's furniture market was "dead." The associations' combined view was that the ban would increase unemployment, would depress local materials markets, and would cause a fall in both State and industry revenue. The statement claimed further that: "The loss of business from emigrants was not the primary concern, but the loss of confidence in the economy by the established Zimbabweans who at this moment have no wish to move, was the major consideration." /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 12/

INTERNATIONAL MEMBERSHIPS--Zimbabwe Government institutions have joined a total of 58 international organisations, ranging from the United Nations Organisation and Interpol to the California Avocado Society and the Commonwealth Association of Tax Administrators, according to a document tabled in the Assembly. According to the document, most of the organisations joined after independence. The country has been a full member of the International Union of Geogedy and Geophysics since 1967. The document also noted that the Government is in the process of joining another seven organisations and intends to join 17 more.--Ziana /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 5/

NO PETROL RATIONING--Rumours that petrol rationing is imminent have been squashed by the Department of Trade and Commerce. A spokesman for the department said yesterday that the rumours were completely unfounded, and no plans existed to introduce rationing. Panic buying or the accumulation of stocks of petrol was not in the national interest, and the spokesman urged the public to purchase their requirements normally. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 1/

KANGAI VISITS BELGRADE--The Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, left for Belgrade yesterday to attend an international conference about non-alignment in the eighties. EDUCATIONAL CHANGES--For Zimbabwe to change it must first change its educational system, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said last night. "Our children in school today are, after all, tomorrow's workers and leaders," he said. The type of future workers and leaders was to a large extent determined by the kind of education obtained today in respect of knowledge, skills and values attained, Mr Mugabe said at the official opening of a national seminar on education in Zimbabwe. He urged that the entire educational system had to inculcate a socialist consciousness among the people of the country. It had to instil a sense of commitment to the development of people collectively rather than an individualistic responsibility. "In Zimbabwe today education must fundamentally orient itself towards the revolutionary transformation now taking place in many spheres of our society," he said. "For its part, Government is seeing to it that our educational system undergoes the requisite structural, curricular and philosophical transformation," the Prime Minister said. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 1/

METHODIST LEADERS VISIT--The president of the Methodist Church of Southern Africa, the Rev Howard Kirkby, said yesterday that the 900 000 members of his church were realising the need for Africanisation in the church. Mr Kirkby, who is attending the Methodist conference in Salisbury, said that a recent conference held in Johannesburg had been a watershed. "I think that black and white found each other at a deeper level than they had ever done before in the history of our church in South Africa," he said. Also attending the conference are the president of the United Church of Zambia, the Rev Doyce Musunsa, and the president of the Methodist Conference in Ireland, the Rev Ernest Gallagher. The conference opened on Wednesday and ends on Monday. The Rev Caspen Makuzwa was elected president of the church for the next three-year term. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Aug 81 p 3/

PLANS CONSIDERED FOR EAST AFRICAN STEEL INDUSTRY

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 7 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Managing Director of Uganda Steel Corporation, Charles Omoding Okui, is on a tour of Tanzania, Madagascar and Mauritius in a bid to drum up support for a plan to set up an iron and steel industry for the Eastern Africa region.

"The People" learnt that the idea of establishing such a regional industry was first muted by the Economic Commission for Africa and it has now been incorporated into the Lagos Plan of Action. (See lead story).

At a recent meeting of a team of experts on this issue held in Addis Ababa, Okui was elected Chairman of the meeting and was later charged with the responsibility of urging other countries in the region to submit their position papers.

The Addis Ababa meeting which Okui chaired, "The People" learnt, was attended by representatives from Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Zimbabwe and Uganda.

Sources said that the aim was to try and convince Tanzania, Zambia, Mozambique, Angola and Botswana to join the programme.

At the Addis Ababa meeting the experts identified the major constraints inhibiting the development of the iron and steel industry. Besides the inavailability of raw materials and adequate sources of energy, the other problems were lack of mobilization of finance and procurement of technology, lack of transport and communication plus lack of skilled manpower.

The experts however, agreed that "a joint effort would greatly ease these constraints including providing adequate markets for steel products."

The next meeting of the group will be held next October.

Talking about the meeting to "The People," Okui said that his election as Chairman helped to project Uganda's image which had been overshadowed during the reign of terror. He said Uganda was endowed with rich deposits of iron ore which were awaiting exploitation.

"Uganda also has hydroelectric power, limestone, water, may-be coal, and charcoal which could be produced without any environmental danger," adding that steel produced using charcoal was one of the best.

He emphasised the fact that iron and steel were the basis for industrialisation in any country and the production of steel was a yardstick in which to measure the economic development of a country.

Okui reiterated that Uganda was, therefore, well paced as a producer of raw materials and energy for production of raw--steel or ingots which could be utilised domestically and some exported to the member states in the sub-region.

A clear advantage in this co-operation will be that member countries will be able to procure modern technology and plan as a group and enable the establishment of a centre for the promotion of industrial development.

It is after the October meeting, he told "The People," that a concrete programme and recommendations will be prepared and submitted to the first meeting of Council of Ministers of Trade, Planning and Finance of the 18 countries in the region which is due to take place early in 1982.

LUSOPHONE INSURANCE MEETING SET FOR MAPUTO

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] An internatinal meeting on insurance will begin tomorrow in Maputo. Taking part, in addition to Mozambique, are Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau and Sao Tome e Principe. The primary purpose of the 3-day meeting is an intensive study of cooperation between the five countries in the training of cadres and in matters of reinsurance.

The countries first met to discuss insurance matters in July 1979 in Cape Verde. That meeting focused on an exchange of information, viability studies for cooperation and the determination of the first steps to this end. Now, 2 years later, as decided in Cape Verde, Maputo is the scene of the meeting to evaluate the extent to which the decisions have been implemented.

In Mozambique, among the actions taken within the existing framework of cooperation was the admission of Cape Verdian and Guinea-Bissau cadres to training courses conducted by EMOSE [Mozambican Insurance Company].

The Cape Verdian and Sao Tomian delegations have already arrived in the Mozambican capital for tomorrow's meeting. The Guinea-Bissau and Angolan delegations are expected today.

The meeting is highly important, mainly because all the participating countries are making a great effort to develop their economies.

EMOSE is a state company created after the insurance companies based here ceased activities. On its creation, it became solely responsible for all insurance and reinsurance activity in Mozambique.

Among its responsibilities is execution of a correct and rational policy for insurance, consistent with the country's needs and circumstances. It is also responsible for carrying out an appropriate policy for reinsurance, seeing that the most suitable coverage for each type of risk is obtained in foreign markets.

LUSOPHONE CONFERENCE ON INSURANCE ENDS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] "Collective discussion of the specific problems in each of our countries makes it possible for the errors occurring in one to be avoided in the others. These meetings also make possible better growth in our insurance structures." So said Jose Leonel Ribeiro, head of the Guinea-Bissau delegation to the second insurance meeting held recently in Maputo, as he spoke at a press conference.

Jose Leonel Ribeiro also emphasized that the regular meetings by the "five" make possible a growing consolidation of "the relations of friendship forged during the struggle for national liberation, and they open up new prospects for the development of cooperation among us."

The Guinea-Bissau representative also said that as was noted at the recent meeting, the specific field of insurance is not the only activity being stimulated by meetings between the five African countries, since the same may happen in the future in the transportation sector.

Alberto Xisto Almeida, the Cape Verdean representative, said concerning the contacts between the five African countries that relations of cooperation in the insurance field experienced some progress beginning with the first meeting, although certain conditions specific to each country have prevented them from making more rapid headway.

Alberto Xisto Almeida emphasized: "In addition to insurance, there have also been contacts on several occasions concerning other fields--transportation and banking, for example. That is the result shown by our first meeting."

Aleixo Augusto of the future state-owned Angola Insurance enterprise said that the regular meetings by the five African countries make it possible to find solutions which, being adapted to the specific realities in each country, "enable us to advance together as we did in our struggle to win independence."

The Angolan delegate to the meeting then described the situation with insurance in the five countries at the time of their independence. Aleixo Augusto pointed out that in Angola, as in Mozambique, there were many companies scattered arour. the country with no joint activity or common objectives.

"In the other countries there were merely insurance agencies that carried on their activities under directions from Portugal. The establishment of national enterprises is a process that arose after independence. It has involved tremendous efforts and difficulties, since there were no cadres. They had all left."

In his meeting with the press, the Angolan delegate explained that establishment of the national insurance enterprise is still underway in his country. He said: "We are not following the same path as Mozambique. We have closed down the companies, and now those companies are in the process of liquidation. When we closed the companies, we added their assets to the present structure, which is currently supervising activity in the insurance sector."

JOINT COMMISSION ON ZAIRE RIVER--Proceedings of the fifth session of the Special Angolan-Zairian Joint Commission for the Zaire River began yesterday in Kinshasa, capital of the Republic of Zaire. The commission is responsible for maintenance and regulation of the navigable course of the river common to the two countries. Chairing the proceedings are Joao dos Santos Gomes, of the Transportation Ministry, representing Angola, and Bukasa Mayela Odia, president of the Zairian Waterways Company, representing Zaire. The commission was created in 1978, pursuant to cooperation accords signed between the two countries for the transport sector. It is responsible for overseeing maintenance of the navigability of the portion of the Zaire River common to the two countries. In the course of the Kinshasa meeting, the commission will focus on the progress on implementing the resolutions of the fourth session, held at the beginning of the year in Luanda. The resolutions pertain specifically to dredging and channel marking operations and hydrographic studies. The two parties to the commission regularly exchange information on these aspects. This exchange of information has made it possible, for example, to increase the depth of the river channel in question. The channel, which was 22 feet deep about two years ago, has been deepened to 30 feet, enabling deep-draft ships to navigate in the area from Banana, on the coast, to the port of Matadi. COMPARISON DRAWN BETWEEN PRIVATE, STATE ENTERPRISES

[Excerpts] The INDUVE is a private firm that manufactures oil and soap. It was visited by Henrique Santos (Onambwe) and Domingos Bartolomeu, Central Committee members, within the context of the offensive against liberalism and disorganization.

A total of 680 workers are employed by the INDUVE. The plant produces 290 tons of soap and 170,000 liters of oil monthly. Organization and discipline among workers are excellent, according to the plant manager. Premises are scrupulously clean and workers can take advantage of the facilities of a medical office, staffed by three nurses and visited three times a week by a physician. They also have a cafeteria, which is often used by other workers from the surrounding area.

After his tour, Henrique Santos talked with the workers: "Who is responsible for some of the evils in our country? This is our daily concern. We must realize, comrades, that the responsibility is ours and it is up to us to solve our problems. Whether directors or workers, we must know that we are all working toward the same goal. Our goal is for all of us, for each one of us, to give as much of oneself as possible, anywhere and at any time, in order to solve our problems. During our visit to this important unit of production, we noted some good things and some negative situations. Some of them go beyond your competence, but in a number of cases, there is room for improvement."

In the afternoon of the same day, Henrique Santos and Domingos Bartolomeu visited the Siderurgia Nacional, a state enterprise manufacturing mainly steel rods for the construction industry. Its financial situation at present is bad, as a result of low levels of productivity, poor management and the disorganization that is obvious at all levels.

This important firm is affected by a variety of serious problems to which no attention has been paid by the competent structures of the Ministry of Industry. Equipment is in poor condition and the rate of absenteeism among workers is quite high, at a time when it is necessary to work hard for the development of the country and the elaboration of scientific socialism. In addition, no medical care is provided to the workers, the cafeteria is neglected and the quality of the food is bad.

Given the importance of the Siderurgia Nacional to our economy, this plant must receive the proper attention so that solutions are found to foster a renewed take-off.

WESTERN GOAL: SOUTH AFRICAN ENERGY SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 12

[Article by F. Manacas]

[Text] The startup in the FRG of a vast propaganda campaign through several newspapers to encourage increased investments by multinationals in South Africa has again spotlighted the strategic aspect of Western cooperation with the Pretoria regime.

That interpretation is based on the fact that the West is now trying to expand the scope of its cooperation with Pretoria, which supposedly is moving toward the "reformulation of apartheid in humane terms."

But that diplomatic language is aimed only at disguising the fact that at the moment, and notwithstanding its interest in South Africa's raw materials, the West's current cooperation with Pretoria is designed essentially to make South Africa self-sufficient in energy--since it has no petroleum deposits--and to see that it remains a vector for imperialism's thrusts, chiefly in the African region.

"Supposed Humanization of Apartheid"

That is why the Western countries that openly cooperate with South Africa are attempting through their media--principally the print media--to present the system of apartheid as a "model society of stability" and, from the economic standpoint, as a lucrative partner for the Western world.

And to confirm the "social rehabilitation" of apartheid, the Pretoria government is preparing various plans for reformulating the system and announcing measures affecting a minority of the black population that has been selected to become the middle class and a factor for negating nonreformist transformations.

As Joe Slovo, a member of the ANC, said during an interview for issue No 34 of the CADERNOS DO TERCEIRO MUNDO, those concessions do not affect 95 percent of the black population. As a result, they are already doomed to failure. The concessions are few: "access by those blacks to a few hotels, restaurants, and theaters; a minute sector of the skilled black proletariat can now be promoted to a few more highly skilled jobs; and that minority is entitled to live in white areas."

Energy Is Basic Field of Cooperation

The manufacture in South Africa of weapons, and even of fighter planes under license from several Western countries, has now made it possible for the Pretori regime to regard the field of energy as a basic and fundamental field of cooperation with the West.

And Pretoria, along with the United States, the FRG, Great Britain, Canada, Israel, and other Western partners, has been paying more attention to that field in recent years, especially as regards the development and acquisition of technology for converting coal to liquid fuel. That attention has also been given greater impetus, especially from the standpoint of military protection for that strategic industry, since last year's attack by the ANC on the SASOL [South African Coal, Oil, and Gas Corporation] refinery complexes I, II, and III in Sasolburg.

It was within that context that SASOL of South Africa and Westinghouse of the United States recently signed an agreement for the start of construction in Secunda (near Johannesburg) of a gasification unit that will reduce the cost of producing petroleum from coal by SASOL.

Westinghouse, an American firm, is a company that deals in nuclear electronics and the construction of nuclear reactors, and several times it has been accused of being one of the companies that made it possible for South Africa to join the "atomic club."

The main purpose of Westinghouse's cooperation is to contribute to SASOL's industrial expansion, since that will make it easier for the South African firm to convert coal to petroleum and to develop, test, and market its finished products.

CONGRATULATORY MESSAGE TO CASTRO ON MONCADA ANNIVERSARY

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 26 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, president of the MPLA-Labor Party and of the People's Republic of Angola, sent the following message to Fidel Castro, first secretary of the Communist Party and president of the Council of State of the Republic of Cuba, on the anniversary of the Assault on the Moncada Barracks, 26 July.

Esteemed Comrade:

On behalf of the Central Committee of the MPLA-Labor Party, the people and government of the People's Republic of Angola, and in my own name, I have the honor of extending cordial greetings and warm congratulations to the Communist Party, the people and government of the Republic of Cuba, on the historic date of 26 July.

The assault on the Moncada barracks glorified the heroic struggle of the Cuban people against the oppressive regime of the dictator Batista, and established new bases in the struggle to build a prosperous socialist society in your country, contributing to the consolidation of world peace and strengthening the struggle against colonialism, neocolonialism and imperialism.

Moncada signified the beginning of the overthrow of the counter-revolutionary forces which, supported by American imperialism, sought in vain to convert the Cuban people to the vile condition of misery, poverty and submission. This courageous action and, later the "Granma" landing confirmed the unshakeable will of the Cuban people and the guerrillas of the Sierra Maestra to carry forward the glorious struggle to the triumph of the revolution in 1959.

The brilliant flame of the many examples of unparalleled heroism in the Cuban Revolution is still burning, reflected in the contribution to the cause of victory of world socialism, the defense of victories already won, the militant internationalism to which our current history is witness.

Through the ties of friendship and cooperation between the Cuban Communist Party and the MPLA-Labor Party, the Angolan people have been honored with this manifestation of the Cuban people's solidarity, brilliantly evidenced at the time of the racist South African mercenary invasion of the People's Republic of Angola.

We are certain that we will continue to develop and strengthen the traditional bonds of friendship, cooperation and anti-imperialist solidarity between our parties, states and peoples in the unrelenting struggle for peace and progress for our respective peoples and for humanity.

In this hour of rejoicing of the Cuban people, I reaffirm the Angolan people's highest spirit of solidarity, and congratulate you for your achievements in building a socialist society in your country.

Comrade Fidel Castro, please accept our sincere wishes for your personal prosperity, health and well-being, and expressions of high and most particular esteem.

SOUTH AFRICA SAID TO RESURRECT CUBAN, EAST GERMAN 'GHOSTS'

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 14 Aug 81 p 12

[Text] While international public opinion is being prepared for a renewed escalation of the war in the People's Republic of Angola, the military and propaganda machines of racist South Africa are, once again, resurrecting Cuban and East German 'ghosts" so as to better justify its imminent aggression.

According to racist sources, Angola is allegedly "installing Soviet-manufactured SAM-3 and SAM-8 missiles and building port and military facilities within reach of the Namibian border" with Cuban and East German assistance.

Beginning with their first invasion in 1975, the racists have never been able to understand the reason for their successive failures. This is the source for much of the delusion revealed in their inept propaganda campaigns conducted "for the benefit of the West."

Since their previous attacks have proved unsuccessful despite the deaths and destruction they caused all over the south, the "Pretorian" forces need a pretext to modify their tactics, or, in other words, to intensify and exacerbate still further their attacks against Angola and its people. This was revealed by the commander of the forces of occupation in Namibia, Charles Lloyd, when he said (according to the AFP), "we must prepare ourselves mentally and physically for a more serious war."

Therefore, the needed pretext is represented by the famous missiles "connected to radar and usually mounted on vehicles or tanks, of longer range and improved accuracy," as the obviously concerned Western press hastened to specify in its deference to South African propaganda.

As if this were enough to confirm their "scare," the racists are also charging that "a large Cuban contingent" is building "a well-equipped armored vehicle base" near Lubango (a city that--it should be mentioned in passing--they consider to be a SWAPO base) and improving the Mocamedes port so as to facilitate the offloading of heavy armored vehicles.

Even supposing that Pretoria's "scare" is justified, what did the racists expect? That the Angolans and their internationalist allies should wait for them with open arms, "impressed" by the war materiel they have amassed along the border between Angola and occupied Namibia? That Angola should witness with indifference the destruction of its riches and of its soil and the massacre of its own people?

What should be retained from all this historic last-minute campaign, with which South Africa has flooded the international press, is its exact similarity with the campaigns launched by Israel against the Arab states in the region before large-scale attacks against them. The parallel is obvious, down to the very language used: "hot pursuit," "preventive action" and, finally, the so-called "preventive strike" which was the pretext used in the criminal destruction of an Iraqi nuclear facility....

So far, in their furious opposition to the Frontline states and the movements of national liberation, the racists have adopted a two-progoned strategy: on the one hand, a guerrilla-like war to force economic erosion and maintain tension and the mobilization of cadre and attention, through the use of mercenaries and puppet groups. On the other hand, contingency plans for air attacks against urban centers of strategic and economic significance, launched only according to prevailing circumstances and opportunities.

Meanwhile, the large territories of Southern Africa and the internal problems faced by the apartheid regime, as well as the international situation itself, reveal the facists' deep weakness. It is precisely the breadth and dispersion of its own forces that make South Africa so easily frightened. Great power, but, simultaneously, many enemies, has never been advisable for the survival of regimes condemned by history. Has it not always been the problem of all octopuses with long tentacles to have a particularly vulnerable head?

BRIEFS

JUDICIAL COOPERATION WITH GDR--Under the terms of an already existing protocol of cooperation in the field of justice between the People's Republic of Angola and the GDR, an annual plan (1982) was signed yesterday in Luanda by the Angolan and East German ministers of justice, Diogenes Boavida and Joachim Heusinger. The plan, which was signed at the conclusion of an 8-day working visit to Angola by the German delegation, provides that a delegation from the Angolan Ministry of Justice will visit the GDR during the first half of next year to study the proceedings of subordinate courts and the organization and duties of attorneys and notaries. It will also study matters inherent in labor law. Also under the terms of the same protocol, it is specified that the 1983 annual plan of cooperation between the ministries of justice in the two countries will be agreed to in writing between the two ministers during the second half of next year. The two ministers expressed their conviction that the talks just completed will contribute greatly to a strengthening of the cooperation that already exists between the two ministries. The German minister left Luanda late yesterday afternoon to return to his country. He was seen off at the 4 February International Airport by his Angolan colleague, Diogenes Boavida. SOLIDARITY WITH ARAB CAUSE-In preparation for a conference on solidarity with the Arab people and their main cause--Palestine--delegations from the MPLA-Labor Party and the International Secretariat for Solidarity with the Arab People of Palestine met yesterday at party headquarters in Luanda. The delegations were headed by Afonso Van-Dunem, Central Committee secretary for foreign relations, and Omar Al-Hamidi, chairman of the solidarity organization and secretary general of the Arab People's Congress. The objective of the conference, which will be held in Angola, will be to mobilize states in support of the struggle by the Palestinian people against Israel's Zionist regime. Also participating in the meeting were Coelho da Cruz, chairman of the Angolan League for Friendship and Solidarity with Peoples, and, on behalf of the international secretariat, Silas Cerqueira of the Presidium of the Portuguese Council for Peace and Cooperation, Edward Dilinga of South Africa's ANC, and Abu Fahed, the PLO representative in Angola. It should be noted that the delegation has been in our country since Tuesday. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 2] 11798

CATHOLICS ON PILGRIMAGE--Lisbon--Last Sunday a group of Angolan Catholics participated for the first time since independence in the ceremonies held at the Fatima sanctuary. The Angolan pilgrims, who were led by Archbishop Monsignor Eduardo Muaka, included bishops from Benguela, Malanje, Luena and Ngwmza [as published], as well as 71 members of the clergy, and also participated in the Eucharistic Congress at Lourdes (France). ECONOMIC SITUATION ON EVE OF INDEPENDENCE ANNIVERSARY

/Text/ Bangui (AFP)--On 13 August 1981, the Central African Republic will celebrate its 21st independence anniversary, which will be marked by a difficult economic situation.

In fact, the Central African Republic is recovering with difficulty, after 14 years of negligence and poor management on the part of former Emperor Bokassa, which were further aggravated by the absence of investments and the world crisis that seriously affected the country, in spite of considerable potential natural resources.

Although the country has diamonds and timber, although it is rich in coffee, cotton and tobacco, which are its principal exploitation resources, its productive potential is far from being utilized. Some of the pillars upon which the Central African economy rested were shaken during the years of Bokassa's reign, particularly since 1977.

Thus, production of cottonseed dropped from 54,000 tons in 1971 to 28,000 tons in 1977 and with difficulty reached 32,000 tons in 1978. The production of coffee for export was 100,000 tons in 1978 compared to 130,000 tons 12 years earlier.

Similarly, although budgetary revenues from export duties and taxes on diamonds--the number one source of foreign exchange--tripled from 1975 to 1978, production dropped from 600,000 carats in 1968 to 284,000 carats in 1978, according to official statistics. It is true that a substantial part of diamond production--officially estimated at 50 percent of the total--leaves the country illegally, depriving the public treasury of about $4.3 million in revenues annually.

Since becoming president on 20 September 1979, David Dacko has been making an attempt to reestablish financial equilibrium in domestic and foreign operations. In June 1981, the Central African Republic negotiated with its creditors a general policy of repayment of the foreign debt which totals about 80 billion CFA francs.

Representatives of countries participating in the "Club de Paris" noted with satisfaction the preparation by the Central African authorities of an economic and financial program which benefited from the support of the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The restructuring of the Central African Republic's debts should help the recovery of its economy, it is believed.

In a related connection, in March 1980, the Central African government took initial steps designed to revitalize the productive sectors of the economy and to restore its material and social infrastructure.

The 198' budget had been established with a provisional deficit of 7 billion CFA francs, whose financing the government had negotiated with the IMF and certain friendly countries. However, the Central African authorities had to resign themselves to increasing certain assessments and taxes because of the loss of nearly 20 percent of revenues vis-a-vis budgetary appropriations in the first 6 months of this year.

The government is now carefully examining its expenditures and has already taken certain steps, including the reorganization of several public enterprises.

The authorities recognize the need for austerity measures; however payment of the salaries of the 2,500 civil servants alone takes two-thirds of the budget.

CHADIAN FRONTS FORM ANTI-LIBYAN COMMITTEE

JN311232 Khartoum SUNA in Arabic 1100 GMT 31 Aug 81

[Text] Khartoum, 31 August (SUNA)--The Chadian fronts opposing the Libyan occupation have decided to form a permanent committee comprising two members from each front to work for uniting the Chadian political personalities and forces inside and outside the country as a prelude for the formation of a unified front that will work for getting rid of Libyan colonialism, drawing up an integrated concept for unitary action, unifying military operations and calling for a unitary conference for the Chadian forces which oppose Libyan colonialism in order to draw up the bases and principles of action in the forthcoming stage.

It was decided to form this committee after continuous meetings during the past 2 days in which leaders and representatives of the Western command of the Chad National Liberation Front, the original FROLINAT, the Patriotic National Movement and the Popular Movement of Chadian Liberation took part.

At the end of their deliberations, the conferees issued a statement in which they condemned the Libyan occupation of their country and Libya's violation of all international charters. They also stressed that the battle is a patriotic one and that a broad patriotic front should be formed in order to rectify the Chadian revolution's march.

Following is the text of the statement:

The Chad National Liberation Front-Western command; the Chad National Liberation Front-original FROLINAT; the Patriotic National Movement; and the popular Movement of Chadian Liberation.

Political statement on unifying the national forces:

Out of faith in the historical responsibility toward the Chadian homeland; out of consideration of the grave developments threatening Chadian territory and its independence; out of the desire to achieve a revolutionary unity to confront the challenges and dangers posed by the Libyan political and military intervention in Chad and violation of all international charter; in view of the patriotism of the battle in the forthcoming stage on both the domestic and foreign levels; out of realization of the forthcoming circumstances and the internal disruption and division as well as well as external bargaining; and for the sake of reuniting the faithful patriots in a broad patriotic front to rectify the revolution's march, representing the real meaning of national unity away from any personal ambitions or regional and tribal fanaticism. It is time to hold a unitary conference comprising all the sides calling for the independence of the Chadian homeland. Following consultations held among the representatives of the FROLINAT Western Command, the original FROLINAT, the Patriotic National Movement and the popular movement, all sides agreed to exert efforts to unite the ranks of the national forces. A permanent committee has been entrusted with the task of uniting the national forces. It has full authorization in this regard. Long live the unity of the national forces.

Issued on Sunday, 29 August 1981, corresponding to 30 SHAWWAL 1401 Hegira.

PRESIDENT MAKES OPENING SPEECH AT PLANNING COUNCIL

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 604, 8 Aug 81 p 5

[Speech by President Denis Sassou-Nguesso before opening session of National Planning Council; date not given]

[Excerpt] Once again, the representatives of the Congolese people's live forces have come together to debate the major problems facing our country. This confirms that the democratic process, reinstated by the 5 February Movement, has been firmly consolidated. Henceforth, the great problems, the great questions concerning the life of our country and its future, no matter how complex, will be democratically, sovereignly and freely debated by the people's masses or their representatives.

Present here today are our political leaders, party members, workers from the cities and fields, the heads of the major central government agencies, heads of national companies, the Congo's deiplomatic representatives abroad, Congolese thinkers and researchers, heads of mass organizations, Congolese heads of foreign companies and the directors of the national private sector. In short, all the Congolese people are represented here in all their diversity.

The fact is that the stakes are enormous. Over a year ago, we met here to debate the future of our government enterprises, their recovery and development. The national conference of businesses was a decisive moment that made it possible for Congolese revolutionaries to become aware of the need to perfect the management and operation of the national economic sector so as to make it the real spearhead of our country's economic development, which will make more advances of the Congolese revolution even more assured. The results of the national conference of government enterprises will be one of the essential parts of the 1982-1986 Five-Year Plan.

The stakes of this Council are enormous. It has the task of organizing the coordinated development of our country for the next 5 years. I know that we are all aware of the incredible problems we must face, particularly after the complete restructuring of our country by the colonial system. On other occasions, we have already reported on the disastrous results of colonial penetration and neocolonial domination for our country and our people. These results are regional imbalances, the isolation of most regions, underequipment, stagnant production, the desertion of rural areas by their most dynamic forces, disproportionate growth of the cities, unemployment, dependency, lower living conditions for the people and the increasing reduction of national economic life to only the cities of Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire, and so on.

The next plan must therefore move deliberately and resolutely in the opposite direction. In that way, it will be in keeping with the directives of the Third Special Congress, a plan that breaks with the current system. In the place of the existing structure of the economy, we shall gradually have a new, balanced and coordinated economic structure making it possible to ensure truly endogenous and self-maintained development, but we can all see that the changes made by colonization are very profound, the effects extremely harmful. A single plan will therefore not be enough to restore regional and sectorial balances. That is why all the structural transformations to be envisaged must come about over a longer period of time. The 5-year plan must therefore have a more long-term perspective to back it.

The consistent break with the current model implies that those on the National Planning Council have only the national interest at heart.

They must give priority to the great national objectives, the great structural actions that hit the main targets, making it possible to reorganize and unify our territory, relaunch production on new bases and improve our people's standard of living and living conditions. The general interest is not necessarily the mechanical sum of small areas and private parties. This means that we must avoid the paralyzing excessive division of funds allocated, which leads nowhere and emphasize that which basically contributes to the implementation of our strategy. The plan is an overall system. Projects must be linked to one another and joined in time. Those included here must not be treated as projects of a given area or region but as destined to serve a given strategy.

The National Planning Council meets after the government, the Political Bureau and Central Committee have already adopted the major guidelines of the 1982-1986 Plan. This is already an accomplishment and could be enriched and not brought into question. The projects attached are projects identified as in keeping with the options retained by the Central Committee. The National Planning Council must appreciate their pertinence, issue its opinions, make observations and thereby make it possible to improve subsequent arbitration.

The role of this National Planning Council is in fact to evaluate the strategies chosen, the consistency of projects with these strategies. Only later, following the work of the National Planning Council, will the political leaders hand down the final rulings, that will take into account our financial capabilities, ability to carry out plans and the intersectorial and interregional balance. Not until then will the hard core, the different optional sections, of the 1982-1986 Five-Year Plan be determined. Coming just before the Youth Congress, the meeting of the National Planning Council could undeniably contribute to the enrichment of the UJSC [Union of Congolese Socialist Youth] Congress.

FINAL COMMUNIQUE OF NATIONAL PLANNING COUNCIL MEETING

Brazzaville MWETI in French 11 Aug 81 p 2

[Text of communique issued 10 Aug 1981 in Brazzaville]

[Text] The national planning council met in Brazzaville from 6-10 August 1981.

The presidium was composed as follows:

--Honorary president: Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, president of the central committee of the Congolese Labor Party [PCT], president of the republic, head of state, president of the council of ministers.

--President of the presidium: Comrade Louis Sylvain-Goma, member of the political bureau, prime minister, head of government;

--Vice-president: Comrade Lekoundzou Itihi Ossetoumba, member of the political bureau; head of the department of economic affairs and planning, minister of finance.

Members:

--Comrade Jean Michel Bokamba-Yangouma, member of the political bureau, head of the department of organizations, secretary general of the Congolese Trade Union Confederation [CSC];

--Comrade Benoit Moundele-Ngollo, member of the central committee, minister of public works and construction;

The national planning council examined the following items on the agenda:

1. The broad lines of the 5-year plan for 1982-1986.

2. The major structural projects for the period 1982-1986.

3. An overview of regional and community development.

After the brilliant introductory remarks by Comrade President of the central committee of the PCT, president of the republic, head of state, president of the council of ministers--a speech which stressed the spirit of democratic renewal re-established in the country by the 5 February Movement, and which called on the participants to cast out the demons of tribalism and regionalism from their discussions--then the prime minister, head of government, and member of the political bureau presented to the plenary session the broad lines of the 1982-1986 5-year plan, covering the following topics:

--the colonial heritage and the option of liquidating it once and for all;

--the reconquest of the national territory by improving and unifying the territory through actions aimed at ending isolation (a new design for urban centers eliminating imbalances in regional importance and urban employment, regionalizing development);

--enhancing material and human productive forces in order to creat a substantial productive sector in addition to oil, and the liquidation of all forms of domination and exploitation of man by man;

--improvement of the cultural level and living conditions of the people.

Following fruitful discussions, the council approved the broad lines of the plan after having enriched them by several pertinent suggestions.

The council next heard in plenary session the constructive contributions of the political commissioners from the region and community of Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire. It made note of the various contributions which should improve the work of finalizing the elaboration of the plan.

Next the council's work continued in four committees:

1. "Territorial development" committee.

2. Committee on "organization of the productive sector."

3. Committee on "improvement of living conditions."

4. Committee on "finance and related measures."

The committee on "territorial development examined the following items:

--proposals for urban centers;

--specific projects in support of regionalization of development;

--projects in the sectors of trade, construction of public buildings, transport, information, posts and telecommunications, energy, and territorial administration.

The committee on "organization of the productive sector: examined projects in the following sectors:

--Agriculture and stock raising;

--Forests;

--Industry and handicrafts;

--Mines;

--Scientific research;

--Technological improvement.

The committee on "improvement of living conditions" examined projects in the following sectors:

--Education--Training--jobs,

--Health--Social Affairs,

--Culture--Arts,

--Youth--Sports,

--Tourism--Environment,

--Justice,

--Foreign affairs, as well as questions related to improving the living conditions of the broad masses of the people.

The committee on "finance and related measures" had to examine problems related to the financing of the future plan.

After having discussed in plenary session the reports of the various committees, the national planning council:

1. endorsed the concept of territorial development, of which urban center is an essential component, and also the regionalization of development as contained in the draft plans (the basic and the one covering territorial development);

2. adopted all of the structural proposals as well as pertinent suggestions from the council members.

With respect to the financing of the future plan, the council adopted the strict financial measures proposed.

The council satisfied itself that the projects adopted constitute an ambitious compendium. It is also cognizant of the fact that these aspirations will have to be prioritized, harmonized, and adjusted to the available financial allocations by the political leadership, and of the fact that compromises will have to be made.

The council is also aware that the plan, as an expression of the national determination to transform the country, can only succeed through the organized and dedicated work of the entire people.

The council is pleased with the spirit of frank comradeship and real democracy with which these meetings were imbued, as it also praises the excellent initiative of the political leadership, which, under the direction of the president of the central committee of the PCT, president of the republic, head of state, president of the council of ministers, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, called this gathering to get the opinions of the broad basses of the people.

RESULTS OF SPECIAL SESSION OF UJSC CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 604, 8 Aug 81 pp 4, 7

[Text] In keeping with the decisions of the sixth regular session of the Central Committee of the UJSC [Union of Congolese Socialist Youth], held from 6 to 8 July 1981 and in response to the convocation of its bureau, the Central Committee of the UJSC met from 5 to 7 July 1981 in the conference room of the headquarters of the UJSC, presided over by Comrade Gabriel Oba-Apounou, member of the Central Committee of the Congolese Labor Party, first secretary of the Central Committee of the UJSC and minister of youth and sports.

The opening and closing ceremonies were directed by Comrade Jean Michel Bokamba-Yangouma, member of the Political Bureau, head of the organization department of the Congolese Labor Party and secretary general of the Congolese Trade Union Confederation.

Two speeches were given at the opening ceremony: the first by Gabriel Oba-Apounou, first secretary of the Central Committee of the UJSC and minister of youth and sports, who first defined the importance of this special session, the last before the Fourth Regular Congress of the UJSC, and who then branded attempts to implant a spirit of useless revolt and reorganization and petty bourgeois anarchism in the Union.

In his speech before the sixth special session, the member of the Political Bureau and head of the organization department of the Congolese Labor Party heavily emphasized the Central Committee's need to make this sixth special session, the prelude to the Fourth Regular Congress of the UJSC, a session during which improvisation gives way to method in order to facilitate the smooth conduct of the Union's Fourth Regular Congress and guarantee the success of its meetings, as well as prevent agitation, speculation, discord and electioneering.

Work followed this agenda: 1) verification of mandates; 2) circumstantial reports of the Central Committee and the Verification and Control Commission of the Central Committee; 3) proposed motions and resolutions; and 4) miscellaneous.

Following the verification of mandates, the members of the Central Committee of the UJSC made a comparative examination of the circumstantial reports of the Central Committee bureau and the Verification and Control Commission, which actually evaluated the ethic and practical work of the Central Committee on the whole, on the one hand, and of the individual members of the Central Committee, on the other.

Following a thorough analysis taking account of all the parameters required for an objective evaluation of the Union, its bodies and cadres within the Congolese, African and world political-ideological, socioeconomic and cultural context, the Central Committee agreed upon the following:

1 -- The Union has expanded and grown stronger politically and ideologically as the avant-garde of the Congolese youth, an active auxiliary and secure reserve of the Congolese Labor Party, thereby justifying its youth role of the Congolese Labor Party.

2 -- The Central Committee of the UJSC has been able to maintain the growing consciousness of Congolese youth. The manifestation of this awareness has been the participation of Congolese youth in the 5 February 1979 Movement under the UJSC and its commitment to do everything possible towards the consolidation of this very salutory movement for the Congolese revolution.

3 -- The executive organs, particularly the bureau of the Central Committee and the Secretariat of the Central Committee have functioned normally, which has enabled the Union to make points politically, socially and culturally.

4 -- Deficiencies have been noted in certain members of the Central Committee.

The most serious ones were the subject of proposed severe sanctions which the sixth special session submitted for the examination of the Fourth Regular Congress of the Union, while failings inherent in the phase of the democratic national revolution were mercilessly condemned.

The members of the Central Committee who fulfilled their mission honorably were congratulated and proposed for reelection as members of the future leadership emerging from the sessions of the Fourth Regular Congress.

The members of the Central Committee of the UJSC expressed their satisfaction with the work done by the high officials of the political leadership, members of the Central Committee of the UJSC.

Within this framework, the Central Committee of the UJSC expressed its trust in the first secretary of the Central Committee of the UJSC, Comrade Gabriel Oba-Apounou.

The plenary meeting of the Central Committee of the UJSC vehemently condemned the tribulations of the bureaucratic comprador bourgeoisie and the enemies of the UJSC, the Congolese Labor Party and the Congolese revolution, who are trying to tarnish the Fourth Regular Congress of the UJSC, the great event awaited with hope by the people and youth and which the UJSC has methodically planned.

Given the political and economic situation which is favorable to the deployment of all live forces for the success of the first 5-year national development plan, the Central Committee of the UJSC passed the proposed motions and resolutions of the Fourth Regular Congress of the Union.

As part of its miscellaneous agenda, the members of the Central Committee of the UJSC examined the practical provisions for the conduct of the congress. It was in a democratic spirit marked by discipline and militant self-sacrifice that the work of the sixth special session of the Central Committee of the UJSC was done.

The Central Committee of the UJSC expressed its support for the line of the Congolese Labor Party, readjusted by the 5 February 1979 Movement, and pledged to mobilize all Congolese youth, who will be gathered together on the occasion of the Fourth Congress, in the accomplishment of the task of building an independent, free and prosperous economy by the 1982-1986 Five-Year Plan.

The members of the Central Committee of the UJSC once more expressed their unswerving support for the struggles undertaken by the Congolese Labor Party on all fronts, particularly the economic front, since its Third Special Congress.

Long live the Congolese Labor Party! Support for the Central Committee of the Congolese Labor Party and its president, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso! Onward with the Fourth Regular Congress in democracy, unity and discipline! The present is the time for struggle; the future belongs to us! UJSC: Production-Discipline-Arms!

BRAZILIAN LINE OF CREDIT--Brazilian Minister of Finance Galveas, who was recently received in audience by President Bongo, agreed to grant Gabon a new line of credit amounting to $2-3 million for the purchase of 16 Brazilian armored vehicles. The balance of trade between the two countries shows a deficit in favor of Gabon: $600 million as against $30 million. These $30 million were used for the purchase of Bandeirante aircraft from the EMBRAER, of Cascavel Engesa armored vehicles and of speedboats. WRITER SEES PRESENCE OF SENEGALESE AS LIMITING FREEDOM

Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Article by Pierre Biarnes: "Gambia Under Supervised Freedom"]

> [Text] A parliamentary session, scheduled before the abortive putsch of 30 July, is now to open Friday 14 August in Banjul, the capital of Gambia. The chief of state, Sir Dwada Jawara, may announce at that time the measures he plans to take to bolster his regime, which was barely saved by the military intervention of neighboring Senegal. According to Dakar, the operation to re-establish order cost the Senegalese army 57 wounded. The number of deaths has not been made public, but it is probably around 30. Meanwhile, a United Nations mission is in Banjul to assess the amount of humanitarian aid needed on an urgent basis. The scope of the attempted uprising, elucidated by our special correspondent, once again makes a live issue of plans for a confederation or customs union ("Senegambia") of the kind envisaged by Dakar to put an end to the economic hardship which the existence of a sovereign state completely surrounded by Senegalese territory imposes on the latter's economy because of the ruinous contraband trade.

Banjul--Two weeks after the putsch which almost overthrew the regime of President Dawda Jawara, the Gambian capital is little by little--despite the armed Senegalese patrols which have come to restore order--regaining its customary appearance: a small colonial market-village with a still sort of charm. But downtown, the shattered and empty shop windows of several large stores still serve as a reminder of the scenes of looting and bloody bursts of gunfire which, on 30 July, followed the proclamatin of the fleeting seizure of power by the Supreme Revolutionary Council of Mr Kukoi Samba Sanyang.

The affair, however, was far more serious than one might be led to suppose from the rapidity with which calm was imposed from the outside. For at least several hours before the arrival of the Senegalese troops, the larger part of the populace of Banjul and its environs seemed to be siding with the rebels, who were joined not only by most of the Field Forces and the police but also by most of the cadres and militants in the opposition, and in some cases even by those in the government party itself, Mr Jawara's People's Progressive Party (PPP).

Jawara is understandably determined to forgive and forget most of the defections, in order not to have to go ahead with a very large purge which would only impede the resumption of normal life in a country whose economic condition was dangerously eroded after the attempted putsch.

The Rise of the Opposition

The drought here translated into a marked decline in ground-nut production--barely 40,000 tons of unshelled nuts delivered to the oil mills in 1980-1981, compared to about 140,000 tons in a normal year. Also, the world economic crisis has entailed a significant decline in tourism--barely 21,000 entries in 1980, compared to 27,000 in 1979--at the same time that it created serious inflation in the cost of imported products. Living conditions for a very large part of the population in recent months, particularly in the populous quarters of the capital city, have become very difficult, and stand in even sharper contrast with the conspicuous ease in which a small corrupted majority with connections to the regime exist.

The opposition, comprised mainly of the National Convention Party (NCP) headed by Mr Dibba (represented by 5 deputies out of the 37 in Parliament) but also including several small semi-clandestine revolutionary parties, like Kora Sall's MOJA (Movement for Justice in Africa) and the Gambian Socialist Revolutionary Party (GSRP) of Mr Pingou Georges, quite obviously tried to exploit to the hilt the growing discontent provoked by this situation.

Mr Dibba was Mr Jawara's right arm for many years and had helped him in the early 1960's in the effort to mobilize the rural masses of the "protectorate" (the bush), to seize the power which up to the eve of independence had been monopolized by the "civilized people" of the "Colony" (the capital and its immediate environs). The two men fell out, and Dibba, who resigned in 1973 from his positions as vice president and minister of finance, was gradually thrust into the opposition. In 1976, he had created his own party and he was determined to keep--but this time all to himself--the peasant vote, the majority of which was mandingo. The chief of state, meanwhile, allowed himself gradually to be circumvented by the capital's small mulatto minority, the Akus, who came from Sierra Leone in the last century, and who had always held high positions in the bureaucracy and commerce, as well as by the Ouolofs, who came from Senegal and were increasingly numerous and enterprising in Banjul.

Very quickly the new opposition leader established himself solidly in his native region of Bandundu, north of the river, as well as in the main popular quarter of the capital, Serekunda, which is predominantly peopled by natives of that region, who naturally enough were found in large numbers among the rioters on 30 July.

Now, in the face of this opposition which continued to grow and which was becoming increasingly restless, especially since the general elections were to be held in March 1982, the government was in a very weakened condition. Sir Dwada, the victim last year of a small cerebral hemorrhage which was more serious because of his age, carried his British phlegm to ridiculous extremes, unloading a number of his responsibilities on an intensive and fairly corrupted entourage, symbolized most notably by his in-laws. Most of the members of his government were just as venal and, moreover, mediocre, and the Gambian constitution, which requires that ministers be picked from within the Parliament, also forbids employees of the executive branch from running for office.

Indeed, in various ways and to varying degrees, the ruling class lived--directly or indirectly--off contraband, three-fourths of the merchandise imported into Gambia being brought in by a very small number of big European and Lebanese trading firms, paying extremely low customs tariffs, and fraudulently re-exported by intermediaries to neighboring countries, where by contrast the taxes are high, particularly in Senegal. In short, there was no state--at least any longer--in Gambia, and at the first serious push from the opposition, the edifice on which Mr Jawara's power rested could only collapse.

This is what produced 30 July, even if Sanyang's handful of revolutionary militants who spearheaded the attempted insurrection were remote-controlled from the outside--after having been "trained" there most likely--which, nevertheless, at least at the present stage of the investigation being carried out by the Senegalese security services in Banjul, does not seem to be proven, despite several troubling coincidences, such as the delivery lately of unusually large quantities of light Soviet weaponry to the Field Forces whose loyalty to the regime had been somewhat questionable since last October.

Relations With Senegal

But is that state, which almost came to grief in the escapade, now ready to make major reforms, and from another perspective how is the relationship with Senegal, which made possible its survival, to be assessed? Such are the two great questions, closely linked with each other, which are being asked now both in Banjul and Dakar. A priori, it should be easy first of all to reform the constitution so as to enable several high [nonelected] officials of proven competence to come into the government to replace discredited political personalities. In particular, one hears talk of Mr Ceesseeay, the governor of the Central Bank, of Ibou Tall, the secretary general of the ministry of foreign affairs, and Mr Darbo, the Gambian Ambassador to Senegal. Similarly, another step that could rapidly be taken would be to create the position of prime minister, in order to unburden the chief of state of the exercise of some of his responsibilities.

A more long-range project, restructuring and improving the civil service, rehabilitating the police services of the armed forces and, above all, the indispensable recovery of the economy--all presuppose clear and sustained political will, and it is difficult to imagine this being exercised without building a broad consensus--which from the start poses the problem of the future relationship between the chief of state and the opposition, and of the necessary co-optation of at least a part of it. Since Cora Sall and Pingou Georges--whose base of support was in any case very restricted--were killed during the recent street fighting, Mr Dibba is the government's only possible interlocutor. He is under arrest. Will Mr Jawara offer his hand in friendship, and will the latter agree to collaborate once again with his old "patron" after the shock the entire Gambian political class has received from these recent events? It is not impossible.

In the weeks and even the months immediately ahead, the big Senegalese military presence, which will probably be maintained in Banjul and several other strategic points, in one form or another, should encourage the implementation of this reform policy. The Senegalese army, which had intervened here in last October's disaster, were not able to mount a repeat performance in the neighboring country, as the 30 July rebels had prepared their strike more thoroughly, and major resources had to be deployed to subdue them. Senegalese leaders would thus like to see Gambian officials attack the roots of the problem without delay.

In the longer term, there is once again talk in Dakar about the "Senegambia" plan, and there is mention of several examples of post-colonial mergers that have already succeeded on the continent: the one which links the former British and French Cameroon, or the less complete one between Tanganyika and Zanzibar which gave birth to Tanzania. Indeed, the Senegalese leaders, who for nearly a quarter of a century have shown considerable tact in this matter, probably do not envisage going that far, at least not initially. Nevertheless, even if the maintenance of public order in Banjul is vital for their own regime, they are expecting their intervention will at least result in the gradual establishment of a united customs zone for the two countries which would put a definitive and absolute end to the large-scale smuggling which has victimized them for decades, all the way from the unmonitorable borders of this enclave inherited from the colonial era, to the center of their own territory. That customs union would sound the death-knell for a number of special privileges. Obviously, it is at that very point that the plan runs up against the holders of substantial foreign interests, both British and other, who would very much like to see the status quo perpetuated. All the same, it would seem that recent events have opened the eyes of a number of Banjul's leaders. They believe that they almost lost 30 July and that their survival in power now requires a close alliance with Dakar, which will extract its price.

COMMENTARY CRITICIZES PARLIAMENT'S PERFORMANCE

AB251458 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 25 Aug 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] The second session of the first parliament of the Third Republic, which has just ended, has been rather unimpressing. We are yet to have a permanent clerk of parliament. State enterprises, which have been such a drain on the economy, remain disorganized after two full sessions of parliament and civil service has not been refashioned while the auditor general's report for the 1979-1980 financial year has not yet beed discussed. Parliament is one institution in Ghana that has continued to chastize the executive for waste and has paraded as upholding accountability of public officials. Yet parliament is the one branch of government that has been the least accountable. The first session of parliament performed during that session. Do the people of Ghana not have the right to know how their representatives are performing their assigned task?

Legislative powers of parliament include those powers that are specifically enumerated in the constitution. They also include powers that may be reasonably deduced from those enumerated in the constitution, which are necessary and proper for carrying them out. Among the specifically enumerated powers of parliament is law-making, and law-making is not just sitting to approve, amend or reject bills. For the two sessions of parliament, only two bills have originated from the house; the parliamentary service bill--a constitutional requirement--was introduced nearly a year after parliament was opened and it became a law on 15 December 1980. Yet it was just last week that the parliamentary service board was inaugurated, and officials of the parliamentary service are yet to be appointed. The other bill, intending to streamline the procedures for obtaining passports, remains to be discussed by parliament in spite of the fanfare that followed investigation of passport procedures.

In the midst of the critical financial conditions to the nation, most citizens have identified the expanding public sector as an area deserving much attention from their lawmakers. Parliament has failed to pay any attention to the expanding public sector. However, on 4 September 1980, the president forwarded that state enterprises commission bill. Parliament is yet to pass the bill.

The law of the land requires executive agencies to present their accounts to the auditor general for audit 3 months after the closing of the financial year. The constitution enjoins the auditor general to present his annual report to parliament within 6 months after the close of the financial year, that is 3 months after the executive agencies have presented their accounts for auditing.

On 20 December 1980, the acting auditor general transmitted to parliament his report on public accounts of Ghana for the year ended 30 June 1980 as specified by article 151, section 5 of the constitution. But parliament is yet to discuss the report. Instead parliament has come to specialize in passing resolutions expressing its concern—whatever that means. The inquisitorial powers of parliament grant the house authority to investigate the performance of the executive agencies to ensure parliament that enacted laws are effectively implemented or to enable parliament to enact new laws. Yet parliamentary inquisitions so far have resulted in nothing more than admonishing witnesses to go and sin no more under the same conditions.

All said and done, the poor state of the economy can be squarely placed on the shoulders of parliament, because parliament has not used its powers to reorganize the economy. It has failed to establish appropriate institutions to deal with the problems. It has failed to define the powers and duties of existing institutions and the personnel manning them.

If after nearly 2 years, parliament has failed to organize itself for its assigned task, on what moral ground can parliament ensure that executive agencies do any better.

COMMENTARY VIEWS RISING VIOLENCE OVER NAMIBIA

AB271937 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 27 Aug 81

[Documentary by Cameron Doudu]

[Text] For some time now, the illusion has been peddled around diplomatic circles that there can be a peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem. The fact that South Africa has now mounted a full-scale invasion of Angola should persuade all but the most obtuse observers of the international scene that if the rest of the world thinks that the Namibian issue is some sort of game, South Africa does not.

In moving into Angola, South Africa risks inviting the Cubans to increase their forces which are helping the Angolan Government. South Africa also risks inviting the Soviet Union to supply the Cubans and the Angolans with even more sophisticated weapons than they have already got. Finally, South Africa risks inviting the Angolans and their allies to carry out hot-pursuit-operations on the South African soil in the same manner that South Africans have been harassing the Angolans.

If in the face of these unpalatable risks, South Africa has nevertheless invaded Angola again, then it means that something serious is happening in South African thinking. It is not difficult to guess what this transformation in South African thinking is. The election of an ultra-conservative administration in the United States under the presidency of President Ronald Reagan is the key to South Africa's current aggressiveness. Even before the Reagan Administration took over in the United States, South Africa had been able to make significant inroad into American intelligence and armament circles. She is sure that these clandestine contacts she had built up with that powerful interest in the United States would be used to aid her should the Cubans and Russians escalate their involvement in Angola. More important, she is banking on the prospect that any such Cuban or Soviet escalation would tempt the American administration to throw up all strength and ally the United States formally with South Africa to stem the tide of communist infiltration into Southern Africa.

To make the bait more attractive to the American administration, South Africa is stressing the importance of Namibia's strategically important minerals, such as diamonds, uranium and the yet to be exploited petroleum deposits to Western economists. And of course, South Africa is also skillfully exploiting the dominoes argument which the American conservatives so easily (?buy), especially now that their predictions regarding the fall of dominoes in South East Asia appear to have come true.

There is, therefore, a very clear sign that Southern Africa could become in the 1980's as fierce a theather of war as South East Asia was in the 1960's. Of course, eventually, the people of Namibia will win their freedom just as the people of Mozambique and Angola have won theirs, followed by the people of Zimbabwe. What is worrying is the cost which the Namibians and their neighbors may be asked to pay, and anyone, who is aware of what happened in the Vietnams and Cambodia, would shudder to contemplate the meaning of it all. It is a good thing that the Angolans have sought to involve the United Nations at a very early stage. The African countries should stand united behind Angola and resist any attempt by the Western countries to use their veto in the security council to cover up the naked aggression South Africa is committing against Angola.

If the Africans allow divisions to prop up in their own midst on ideological grounds, South Africa would have won a major diplomatic victory. For them, the Reagan Administration would feel justified--not that it needs any justification--if it were to throw its full weight behind the South Africans. African unity in this case, however, would be pure self-interest for as Laos showed in Southeast Asia, regional wars can extend very, very far indeed.

ESSAY ON ISSUES FACING MERGED PARTIES

Accra THE LEGON OBSERVER in English 17 Jul 81 pp 177-181

[Article by Colin B. Essamuah]

[Excerpts] On Tuesday, 23rd June, leaders of the five Minority parties in the country came to an agreement to sink the individual identities and interests of their respective parties and to merge. This agreement was the result of five months of hard, tortuous negotiations by these parties. It is a pity that the parties should have taken so long to agree on such an obviously desirably course of action, and the delay has not been without some disadvantage. Already the all important voters registration exercise is almost over and the Minority Parties were unable to forge a unified approach to this although even individually a fool-proof register was one of their vital planks of success at the polls. In this article, I propose to examine three issues which the Electoral College of the merged parties may consider. This is because the Electoral College may turn out to be the first national executive of the new party and the issues I propose to raise are so vital that they need urgent attention and so should be directed to such a body for consideration. These issues are organisation, ideology and leadership.

No politician should entertain any doubts about the primacy of organisation if his political party is to win any election. No matter the size of the party its organisation will decide its fate at any election.

There is truth in the oft-quoted PNP dictum that "Even if we put up a goat it shall win." This is an unpleasant but nonetheless correct assertion if we appreciate its real basis, excellent organisation. And Kwame Nkrumah could not have been more right when he wrote that "Organisation decides everything." But organisation is not a mere abstraction. It is the sum result of three things, dedication to party principles, loyalty to duly-chosen party officials and the canvassing ability of these specifically charged with ensuring victory at the polls. It is around these three things that the general strategy and tactics of achieving victory are worked out. In all these three PNP offer a resolute position to the electorate, historically and even at the moment.

Organisation

The Electoral College therefore should concern itself first and foremost with how the new party is going to be organised. And not just that. It should be so done with the determination to have Ghana reconstructed that whoever leads the formidable machine would automatically be the 1983 President.

It is suggested strongly that as a first step active co-operation at the ward level upwards should be sought and encouraged. The voter should be reached everywhere.

A party newspaper is also urgently needed on all issues at any time. It is cautioned that the paper should avoid the useless homilies on human rights and Athenian democracy because the electorate does not care much for these seeing its preference for the PNP in the last elections.

Another thing worth considering is a party public relations outfit not only to build up the party generally but to give prominence to the good traits in the parliamentary and presidential candidates.

The second issue I would like to raise is the question of ideology for the new party.

If anything, what the big powers, US, USSR, China, Britain and France, have amply demonstrated is the futility of any rigid ideological stance. And in the case of the new party the broad middle position which is the most advisable is immediately suggested by the individual philosophies of the parties constituting the merger. Another easy pointer to this position is the ideological posture of the PNP which is demonstrating all the traits of its parent. The CPP started on a nationalistic tone, went in for Socialism, then Nkrumaism, and finally plunged into confusion with state capitalism and a big party corporation with majority shareholders. The new party should adopt a broad position copiously tempered with democratic principles and the absence of the politics of fear. The political and economic philosophy should be aimed primarily at the farmer and fisherman whose efforts, by and large, pay for the few things from outside still available in the country. This will give the new party not only enough room to grow a distinctive ideology over the years but also tell the PNP and its Nkrumaist allies in the Commoners Party that the new party believes in a society where men are justly and peaceably governed. In this respect, the examples of India, and to some extent France, Japan seem to stare the new party in the face. Institutions should be built around beliefs which minimise drastic changes in society when one party leaves the scene for another. Ideologically therefore this solution seems to be the best path to tread.

The final issue turned out to be the most explosive issue during the negotiations with some parties demanding the disqualification of certain people even before the merger could be considered. This is the leadership issue. Since it was not resolved before the merger, it can be assumed that either the parties may have buried their differences on the matter or decided to raise them again at the Electoral College. The issue is still explosive because that has been our problem since 1972. The suffering that Ghanaians have undergone all these years is the direct result of the crass, incompetent and grossly obtuse leadership that it has been our misfortune to experience. The concern of the Minority Parties over the leadership question is therefore proper.

Requirements for Leadership

If the new part arising out of this merger aims to give this country the government it deserves and bring back to the common man happiness, then whoever the leader is, is going to need qualities which many do not possess, even among the present leadership of the individual parties. It should be obvious that the job is not one for fainthearted men nor would the vacillating type find it comfortable. Indeed and the problem of finding a leader to take the new party to victory and more importantly organise men and resources for a solution of our problem is one to which the Electoral College must address itself with a sense of mission. It appears to me that in looking for qualities, several people have unnecessarily stretched the requirements too far forgetting conveniently that organisation, dedication and loyalty can put a goat at Castle easily. I can perceive only one quality as worthy of any profitable discussion but I would add another one just to examine it to see how valid it is in our society. These two are national appeal and experience.

Other Criteria

If the new party insists on national appeal I suggest it should shift it from its ethnic base parameters to other interests, like, does the candidate appeal to professionals, industrial workers, farmers, fishermen, students, churches etcetera. This is a more positive contribution to the breaking down of the ethnic barriers than accentuating and exacerbating them through the negative approach. So much for national appeal.

The other and last item is experience. I do pray and hope that the Electoral College will consider this a sine qua non for the leadership. There should be no question of new faces here at all. Not even the PNP believes in new faces. Alhaji Egala put up Sir Hilla only temporarily while he waged a legal battle to have his name cleared and by the time Egala became assured of his inability, it was too late to replace him. It is only on the exigencies of the moment that the PNP started rationalising the 'New Guard' approach to the leadership. However this time, they are stuck because either Old or New Guard in 1983, the invalidity of the New Guard approach will be obvious, what with the destruction of the economy by the New Guard! All the world over, experience is not lightly spurned.

It is obvious that the world's respected leaders are not the unknown impetuous young ones but the old and tested, who have had long periods of apprenticeship. This is so, because it is only in experience that you get the three qualities vital for political leadership: firm political beliefs; the ability to organise and manage people and lastly a sense of history.

In view of all this some would be inclined to rate the chances of Victor Owusu very high. It should not be forgotten, however, that he has in his time aroused resentments of a very deep-seated kind in some quarters. Colonel Frank Bernasko has a dedicated and growing following, but his association with the military might create some problems for him in some directions. SDF's Ibrahim Mahama might also encounter some resentment because of his association with Acheampong's Union Government. There is also John Bilson, an affable and likable person who has been in politics since 1969 but has not yet had opportunity to serve in any challenging position. It is not going to be an easy choice. Happily the decision is with the Electoral College and the Electoral College must decide, bearing in mind the requirements of the presidential elections of 1983.

TRAORE RETURNS TO BAMAKO, DISCUSSES PRC VISIT

AB270700 Bamako Domestic Service in French 2015 GMT 26 Aug 81

[Excerpts] The head of state returned to Bamako this evening from Beijing, via Paris and Algiers, at the end of a 10-day official visit to the PRC. He was welcomed on his arrival at the Bamako-Senou Airport by the deputy secretary general of the Democratic Union of Malian People [UDPM], Col Amadou Baba Diarra, and the minister of planning and acting head of the government, Ahmed Mohamed Ag Hamai. Here is the president of the republic discussing his second visit to the PRC:

[Begin recording] This second visit I have paid to China is proof that the relations which have existed between the Chinese and Malian peoples for several decades are very vital and good. These relations were further strengthened, as I stressed throughout my visit, through solid ties of friendship and cooperation which nothing can alter.

I had the opportunity to meet the new Chinese leaders, following the deaths of two great personalities--Mao Zedong and Chou Enlai. I noticed that within the framework of international relations and particularly concerning the relations between China and Third World countries, Mao Zedong Thought provides continuity. Also, I was able to see for myself the real story of development based on the four modernizations.

[Question] Mr President, while you were in China you visited the provinces and you held talks with the Chinese leaders, particularly with Deng Xiaoping, CCP Chairman Huang Hua, and Premier Zhao Ziyang. Can you tell us what you discussed at these talks?

[Answer] We discussed bilateral cooperation as well as international problems, the talks enabled us to confirm that we share similar views on several current world issues. We came to the conclusion that China and Mali are guided by the same willingness to seek peace, stability and a new and more just economic and international order. The liberation of the people, particularly the liberation of the African continent, and respect for the sovereignty of states were at the center of our talks on the international situation.

Concerning bilateral cooperation, we drew up a positive balance sheet of our relations. As you know, the Malian people cannot forget the assistance China gave to them by laying solid foundations for their development. After expressing our satisfaction for the success achieved and taking into account the world economic crisis as well as the negative consequences of an unjust international order, we decided to further strengthen this fruitful cooperation through the consolidation of Chinese activities in Mali. This will be done in all sectors--agriculture, industry, telecommunications, trade and (?education). [End recording]

U.S. INVITATION SEEN AS DIPLOMATIC VICTORY FOR MMM

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 21 Jul 81 p 4

[Editorial by Lindsay Riviere]

[Text] In the space of a few days, the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement] has scored two substantial diplomatic victories: the invitation to its president and possible head of government Aneerood Jugnauth, to make an official visit to the United States as part of a State Department program; and the Berenger-Indira Gandhi meeting last Saturday in New Delhi.

This "breakthrough" in the field of foreign affairs is of special significance for the party because (a) the American invitation to Aneerood Jugnauth precedes that for which Prime Minister Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam has already been waiting for several months for an opportunity to solicit financial assistance he says is aimed at "barring the road to communism," and because (b) Mr Berenger, for his part, made front page news in the Indian press (LE MAURICIEN yesterday), while up to now the Laborites had considered the Great Peninsula [Indian Subcontinent] their special political hunting grounds.

How is the regime--shortcircuited in its relations with two great powers with whom, by virtue of ideological or ethnic affinities, it had woven "special ties"--going to react?

Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, with the encouragement of Sir Gaetan Duval, believed he had finally reached the point where the United States, in the defense of its long-term interests, would put its well-known anticommunism before all other considerations and given open and massive support to the present government against the MMM in hopes of curbing Soviet expansionism in the Indian Ocean. We here have consistently continued to argue the opposite. On Wednesday 24 June under the heading "Let Down by the West," we highlighted the fact that governmental statements about massive Western assistance were nothing but a bluff, that the West would let the Laborites fall and that it was not at all certain that Ramgoolam's traditional "allies" could not make an accommodation with a more leftist, but nationalist, Mauritian regime. Three weeks later, as if to send a signal to Government House as to the neutralist position it will adopt during the upcoming campaign, the United States invited Jugnauth for an official visit to the State Department, whereas last year Jean-Claude de l'Estrac was only received unofficially, in his capacity as editor of the NOUVEAU MILITANT. If Ramgoolam has not yet understood, he will never understand!

Washington seems to be sending the Isle of Mauritius a double message through the invitation extended to Mr Jugnauth: (a) the United States will not directly intervene in the political campaign by throwing the Laborites an economic life-buoy at the last minutes; (b) an MMM/PSM government would not be completely unacceptable if the MMM, once in power, kept itself within the bounds of a nationalism and a neutralism with which the Western capitals have for some years now already learned to live. If that analysis is correct, one entire pillar of Labor's campaign strategy collapses.

The "Indian lesson" also merits our attention. Paul Berenger, unlike Aneerood Jugnauth, cannot exploit his official status as leader of the opposition to get himself received in high places. It was in his capacity as secretary general of the MMM that he was received--for a 40-minute audience--both by India's prime minister, Indira Gandhi, and by the Indian foreign minister, to discuss the great problems in this part of the world. The political implication of the gesture is clear: the Laborites, traditionally close to India for obvious historical reasons, are no longer the only ones to have the ear of the uncontested rulers of India and who can wield so much weight in the Third World and among the nonaligned. It now remains to be seen whether, as between the closer ideological affinities which exist between Mrs Gandhi's Congress Party and the MMM, particularly in foreign policy, and the sentimental affinities with the Laborites arising out of a common cultural heritage, Mrs Gandhi will in future make Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam her privileged interlocutor or, on the contrary, turn toward Jugnauth and Berenger.

For a long time the prime minister has worked to create an image apart in India, invoking the ties which for 150 years have linked the Indian and Mauritian people, exploiting his personal friendships, and working through the Indian High Commissioners posted to Mauritius. Today, however, it would seem that on the problems of the Indian Ocean, southern Africa, the role of the nonaligned, the concepts of neutralism and socialism, there is a closer convergence of views between the Gandhi government and the MMM/PSM than between New Delhi and a Labor regime which is ready to recognize the rights of the United States and Great Britain to a military presence on Diego Garcia, 1,000 miles off the coast of India. Ramgoolam has long thought he could fool everyone: now, everyone seems to see his game clearly.

If the events in the coming weeks confirm these impressions, Ramgoolam would then be more isolated than ever in the face of the opposition and of the crisis. For everywhere from the Isle of Reunion (where the French socialist administration will soon be established, along with the decentralization announced by Mitterrand) to Madagascar, including the Seychelles, Tanzania, Mozambique and India, most of the countries in the region would seem to be closer to the MMM than to the prime minister. So what seems to be in store for Sir Seewoosagur? While Washington sends an invitation to Jugnauth, London refuses to help the prime minister by concluding once and for all a solution to the problem of the "Islanders" [removed from Diego] and of Diego; Paris is only offering a few fishing boats in lieu of the massive assistance he was expecting from Giscard; Mrs Gandhi receives his main adversary. Ratsiraka and Rene are cool toward him. Australia is establishing direct contacts with the MMM. Libya is playing its usual role. While the MMM is gaining in international status, Ramgoolam might well be holding the endorsement of only Botha's South Africa and Abdallah's Comoros. With the elections coming up in only a few months, these prospects offer scant satisfaction for a man who has always built the success of his foreign policy on the solid foundation of his relations with his "old friends."

DIEGO GARCIA, ILOIS QUESTIONS EXPLORED

British Compensation for Diego Garcia

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 23 Jul 81 p 4

/Text/ In spite of the setback at the London conference, the Ilois Support Committee of the Fraternal Organizations /OF/ is not giving up hope of obtaining adequate compensation from the British government (8 million pounds sterling; i.e., 153 million rupees) without, however, renouncing the rights of the Ilois to return to Diego Garcia one day. Giving an account yesterday morning of the steps taken by the OF leaders during their stay in the British capital, Elie Michel announced that the OF has retained the services of a famous English attorney, John MacDonald, who has agreed to file a suit against Mrs Thatcher's government in British courts. The purpose of this lawsuit: to make the conservative English government pay what it had refused to pay during the London negotiations.

The OF support committee seems confident of having found the "right man," which could change certain things in the Mauritian-British dispute over the cession of Diego Garcia. John MacDonald, whom Elie Michel and Mmes Charlezia Alexis and Naik met through the intermediary of an attorney, Stephen Crozy, of Bindman & Partners (solicitors), is a specialist in the defense of human rights. Several years ago, he succeeding in recovering Badanos Island (in the Pacific) for its inhabitants. The English and Americans had taken over the island under circumstances almost identical to those of Diego Garcia.

It was agreed between the OF and MacDonald that the latter would come to Mauritius in a few weeks, while an OF delegation would go to London to prepare the lawsuit.

Because this initiative obviously involves enormous funds, the OF is counting on the "effective solidarity" of all Mauritians through a series of activities which it will organize in the near future to gather the needed money. The OF British government lawsuit to be undertaken by John MacDonald will be the second filed in the British courts in the name of the Ilois, following that of Mr Venkatassen, whose attorney is Bernard Sheridan. However, Venkatassen is only representing himself.

What is more, the opinion OF leaders have of the London conference is more nuanced than that already expressed by the other parties who made up the Mauritian delegation. Unlike the other delegations, the OF delegation feels that it was well received by the English.

"Although we did not get what we wanted, even so we were able to express ourselves normally and to pass along the message of the Ilois," Elie Michel said. "The fact that the English asked the Mauritian delegation to have the Ilois renounce their rights to return to Diego implies that Chagos belongs to Mauritius."

The OF leaders also met in London with the ambassadors of Tanzania and India who promised to inform President Julius Nyerere and Indira Gandhi of the real situation of the Ilois on Mauritius and of the Diego Garcia problem. The OF also approached London companies which will make gifts of old clothing and food to the Ilois. These gifts will be transported free of charge by ALITALIA. A support committee was also established in London by a Mauritian emigre, Toubule Mohun.

Finally, the Fraternal Organization intends to demonstrate in front of the British High Commissariat on Mauritius on Wednesday, 29 July, the day of Prince Charles' wedding. "A demonstration which will not be directed against the marriage itself but against the fact that the English are organizing grandiose and costly celebrations while on Mauritius the Ilois are slowly dying in their hovels," the OF said.

Berenger Reports on the Mission to London

Elsewhere, several actions will be initiated in the coming weeks as a sign of solidarity with the Ilois. Paul Berenger, who gave a report yesterday on the discussions of the Mauritian delegation with the British authorities, denounced the attitude of the English as "inhuman and intransigeant" during a press conference. The MMM secretary general was much harsher with respect to the English than with the Mauritian prime minister, whom he reproached, however, of having concealed from the members of the delegation the existence of the document relating to the acceptance of the 650,000 pounds sterling offered by the British government.

By doing this, according to Paul Berenger, the prime minister deprived members of the delegation of the cards they could have used during the discussions. The English thoroughly exploited this argument, emphasizing that the new proposal of 1.25 million pounds sterling was an "ex gratia payment." Here, too, the prime minister did not inform the members of the Mauritian delegation that this offer was final.

With respect to the solidarity actions which will be taken, Berenger announced that an initial meeting with the Ilois will be held in Roche Bois next Sunday and that a demonstration will take place in the Jardin de la Compagnie, in front of the British High Commissariat on Wednesday, 29 July, Prince Charles' wedding day. This demonstration will be followed the next day by a meeting of the National Front for Support of the Ilois (FNSI) and the OF/Ilois committee.

Berenger then gave an account of the interview granted to LE MAURICIEN by the leader of the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] on the problem of the Ilois and the cession of Chagos. He recalled that India since 1965 and the MMM since 1969 have maintained that the British decision to separate Chagos from Mauritian territory is illegal and contrary to UN resolutions concerning the dividing up of a territory before it obtains independence. To maintain otherwise, according to Berenger, would be unworthy of a patriot.

PT Favors Diplomatic Channels

Port Louis THE NATION in French 29 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

/Text/ Sir Kher Jagatsingh, secretary general of the Labor Party /PT/, is of the opinion that a fight at the diplomatic level can reestablish the rights of Mauritius of Diego Garcia. Any action taken, he said, should of necessity reflect a national consensus and a unanimous voice.

Sir Kher expressed this wish to the press yesterday at 2400 hours, after having received members of the National Front for the Support of the Ilois. He said that the only safe course would be at the diplomatic level and that it will be necessary to undertake common action at the national level to force the British and American governments to recognize the rights of the Mauritian people on Diego Garcia.

It is this unanimity and consensus which will be the basis of all concrete actions to induce these two powers to accept the Mauritian cause, Sir Kher added.

In this context he denounced the attitude of the MMM, one of the entities of this movement, for continuing to make this problem part of its election strategy, a stalking-horse for the upcoming elections. "As a party responsible for change, the Labor Party categorically refuses to have this problem on its back.

The MMM has done everything it could to make us responsible. But our position is clear.

"The Diego Garcia archipelago is Mauritian property. The excision of this island from our territory is immoral and illegal," the PT secretary general emphasized.

Reviewing the history of the excision, Sir Kher noted that the dismantling of Diego Garcia was accomplished at a time when the country was divided on the question of independence.

He went on to say that at the time of the constitutional negotiations in 1965, one faction of the populace had objected to independence. Even Jules Koenig had failed to raise an objection. "What more could we have done?" he wondered aloud. "It is the work of the imperialist powers. There was India, the Congo, Vietnam..."

Sir Kher added that since Diego Garcia is still the property of Mauritius the country should benefit from its maritime rights and exploitation of its resources.

Sir Kher took advantage of the opportunity to bring up certain activities which the Labor Party intends to engage in during the next few weeks.

He said that a series of public meetings will be held shortly in accordance with a schedule to be established by the Ringadoo committee. In a related connection, the deadline for submission of suggestions for the wording of the next Labor Party manifesto was extended to this Monday.

The document will be ready sometime next month. It will be submitted to the executive committee for ratification and then to a special Congress which will be held in September or October 1981.

Negotiations with Thatcher, Reagan

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 30 Jul 81 p 4

/Text/ Members of the Mauritian delegation which traveled to London in June 1981 to discuss the problems of the Ilois voted yesterday during a meeting to request Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam to resume negotiations with Margaret Thatcher and R. Reagan, president of the United States. In a letter which members of the delegation will transmit to Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam next week they also request that he respond officially to the figure of 1,200 Ilois and compensation of 650,000 pounds sterling "as full and final settlement" which were offered by the British authorities during the London negotiations.

What is more, they are going to suggest that the prime minister make television facilities available to the Ilois in order to make the Mauritians aware of the fate of the Ilois. It was also decided that the ad hoc committee chaired by B. Bacha will resume its work on Monday, 10 August 1981. This committee will have the task of examining certain specific demands of the Ilois, particularly those involving social services and fiscal concessions.

All these decisions which were made during the morning at the government office by members of the delegation were communicated to the Ilois yesterday afternoon by Paul Berenger during a meeting held in the Jardin de la Compagnie by the National Front for the Support of the Ilois.

During this meeting, other Front speakers reaffirmed their support for the struggle of the Ilois.

Before the meeting, members of the Front had walked in procession through some of the capital's streets. Carrying signs and banners upon which one could read words hostile to the British authorities, the demonstrators shouted slogans hostile to Mrs Thatcher.

Trials of Ilois, Front Members

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 31 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

/Excerpt/ There was a certain amount of turmoil yesterday in the vicinity of Port Louis Police Court where the two trials initiated by the police against six Ilois and two members of the National Front for the Support of the Ilois are being held before Magistrate Paul Lam Shang Leen, in connection with incidents which took place on 27 March 1981 in Port Louis.

The first trial in which two women, Marie Louise Armoogum and M. Lamb, are charged with having participated in a riot in front of the government office ended yesterday. The decision is under advisement.

In the second trial, four Ilois, C. Alexis, Roseline Pakion, Lilette Goyaram, P. Frivole and two members of the National Front for the Support of the Ilois, Lindsay Claire Seegobin and Ragini Kistnasamy, are being tried for having obstructed the public streets. Eight witnesses were heard during the legal proceedings.

TRADE DEFICIT WARNING LAUNCHED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 29 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

> /Text/ Over 12 months the country's imports have increased by 64 percent, while exports are up 2.6 percent.
> The balance of trade of the Isle of Mauritius has experienced a record deficit of Rs /rupees/ 1.87 billion during fiscal year 1980-81, according to statistics published in the official journal, for an increase of 64 percent over the previous fiscal year, when the deficit had reached Rs 1.14 billion. In numerical terms, the country's trade deficit was Rs 730.8 million more in 1980-81 than in the previous year.

Imports during the fiscal year 1980-81 reached nearly Rs 5 billion. More precisely: Rs 4.99 million, compared to Rs 4.18 billion in 1979-80, for an increase of Rs 810 million. Such a major increase in imports between one year and the next, topping the 1 billion mark, is quite simply astronomical in terms of the country's resources. Especially since the country's exports during the last 12 months (fiscal year 1980-81) increased to Rs 3.12 billion, compared to Rs 3.04 billion the previous year, for an increase of close to Rs 80 million or only 2.6 percent above last year. These figures prove that the Isle of Mauritius continues to live beyond its means.

This conclusion can also be reached by studying the figures compiled on a monthly basis. In May 1980, the Isle of Mauritius had a trade deficit of Rs 18.7 million.

In June of this year a deficit of Rs 268.1 million /was reported/ for the month just passed. In May, June, and July 1981 the figures were respectively Rs 197.5 million, Rs 245.1 million, and Rs 266.7 million.

Although trade fluctuates from one month to the next and from one year to the next, it is still true that the gap shown by these figures is very large and points to frantic importation, as well as purely monetary factors: the decline of the rupee against the hard currencies of the exporting countries; but if it were only a monetary question, and nothing else, our exports would have benefited very substantially; in fact, the only increased 2.6 percent, compared to a 64 percent increase in imports. It is clear, therefore, that a firm brake must be put on imports, if we are not to run straight into catastrophe.

We note that oil products weigh very heavily in our overall import bill. They amounted to Rs 667.3 million in 1980, for an increase in excess of 300 percent over 1974, when the figure was only Rs 161.5 million. We are not far from paying a billion rupees for petroleum purchases alone. The development of new energy sources is being carried out much too slowly to here make a tangible impact on the oil bill, though the situation is otherwise in the United States and other countries. The government has not removed the taxes on the materials and equipment or apparatuses that would need to be imported in order to utilize the renewable and free energy of the wind and the sun, etc. In the agricultural domain, excessive dependence on the outside is increasing worse than before.

The way things are going, one wonders where the Isle of Mauritius is heading.

SAUDI AID PROPOSALS FOR OIL, AIRPORT, REVIEWED

Oil, Northern Airport Assistance

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 20 Jul 81 p 4

/Text/ Saudi Arabia is ready to sell Mauritius crude oil at a preferential price and to finance part of the northern airport project. Housouf Mohamed, outgoing Mauritian ambassador to Cairo, who returned to the country yesterday, said that Prime Minister Seewoosagur Ramgoolam will once again discuss these two subjects with the brother of King Khalid, Prince Turki Abdel Aziz, on 31 July 1981 in Marbella, Spain, at the private residence of the prince.

Y. Mohamed is in fact the bearer of an official invitation to Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam from Prince Abdel Aziz. This meeting will also be attended by the Mauritian honorary consul to Saudi Arabia, Sheikh Yousuf Al Khereiji. The latter was officially presented to Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam by Y. Mohamed during his next-to-last visit to London 2 weeks ago. Sheikh Al Khereiji has been invited by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam to come to Mauritius.

Yesterday Mohamed explained the circumstances which caused him to discuss these two questions with his brother, King Khalid. A few days ago, Mohamed received a telegram from the Mauritian government signed by the minister of employment, O. Saccaram, about the possibilities of the Saudis' financing the northern airport project. After receiving the telegram, Mohamed, accompanied by Sheikh Al Khereiji, met with Prince Abdel Aziz to discuss the entire question. It was during these discussions that the possibility of selling crude oil to Mauritius was also brought up. However, as Mohamed had already assigned from his position, no official discussion could take place. Prince Abdel Aziz then agreed to meet with Sir Seewoogasur Ramgoolam on 31 July 1981 at his private residence in Spain to discuss these two questions in depth.

During the discussions Mohamed had with the brother of King Khalid, the prince also mentioned the fact that his country might provide Mauritius with the facilities for refining oil.

As regards the visit now being undertaken by MMM deputy Swaley Kasenally to Saudi Arabia at the invitation of Sheikh Yamani, Mohamed said that "he will not get a thing" from the Saudis. Why not? For the good and simple reason that he is an MMM deputy, Mohamed replied. In fact, according to Mohamed, Saudi authorities "did not take kindly" to an article which appeared in LE NOUVEAU MILITANT, the official organ of the MMM, whose editor is Jean Claude de l'Estrac, MMM phantom minister of foreign affairs, in which dishonest and untrue allegations were made against Saudi Arabia. This morning, before going to his office on rue Georges Guibert--tomorrow he returns to the practice of law--Y. Mohamed will go to see the deputy prime minister, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, to deliver the official invitation from Prince Turki Abdel Aziz.

Finally, Mohamed said that he was considering going back into active politics in Mauritius.

Doctors, Male Nurses Recruited

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN 25 Jul 81 p 1

/Text/ Saudi Arabia is prepared to recruit an unlimited number of Mauritian doctors and male nurses, provided they are graduates of French or English universities or training centers. This statement was made yesterday afternoon during a press conference by Beergunuth Ghurburrun, minister of health, upon his return from a trip to Saudi Arabia. He added that Saudi Arabia wishes to help Mauritius, which will also soon receive medical equipment worth 6 million riyals (1 riyal is worth about 3 rupees) from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. The minister also announced the visit to Mauritius in October of Dr Hussein Al Gezally, Saudi Arabian minister of health.

Thus, 92 percent of the doctors in Saudi Arabia are foreigners. The minister feels that unemployed doctors could benefit from these possibilities of employment in Saudi Arabia, as can male nurses. According to Ghurburrun, there are 80 male nurses who were graduated from English schools and are seeking employment at present. The starting salaries proposed by the Saudi government for doctors are 4,000 riyals; i.e., 10,000 to 12,000 rupees, and can reach 7,000 riyals after 15 years of service. Doctors recruited to work in Saudi Arabia will also be given a housing allowance, 50 percent of their initial salary for relocating to Saudi Arabia and paid trips to Mauritius for vacations. Male nurses will receive a base salary of 900 riyals.

The Minister of Health also emphasized the urgency of establishing an embassy in Riyadh rather than in Cairo, which would have jurisdiction in the other Arab countries. To resolve the unemployment problem among doctors, the Ministry of Health is also considering the strengthening of its preventive health service and the decentralization of medicine to dispensaries, so that hospitals will only take in cases needing intensive care or surgery.

BRIEFS

FUEL USE REDUCTION--Consumption of fuel has declined in Mauritius since the price increase recently approved by the government. This reduction reflects a normal tendency of consumption, the results of which are that few cars are seen on the roads, patronage of buses has increased remarkably, and there are a growing number of "available" parking places in the streets of Port Louis. According to statistics put out by the importing firms, consumption of fuel has been continuously declining over the last 3 weeks. This tendency is expected to continue, for a projection made by these same companies indicates that consumption will not exceed 10 million gallons by the end of the year. Since 1976, gasoline sales have been constantly fluctuating. That year, 10,599 gallons were sold. In 1977, total consumption reached 12,800,000 gallons. The following year, it was to show a substantial increase, reaching 13,800,000. In 1979, vehicles on Mauritius consumed 13,260,000. That was the year the trend toward a decline first showed up. Between 1979 and 1980, consumption underwent a drastic drop, reaching only 10,800,000. An investigation carried out by the NATION with filling stations in several regions of the country confirmed that the decline in consumption will become more marked in the months ahead. The decline in consumption, which has a direct impact on the income of regional distributors, has obliged the latter to reduce their purchase quotas with the importers. Also, a study undertaken recently by the ministry of works on trends in bus utilization in getting to work in Port-Louis on week-days indicates that since the recent fuel price increase, the number of passengers has increased substantially on the country's primary routes. By contrast, the same investigation showed that since the increase in fares, the number of regular bus riders on holidays and week-ends has gone down at least 15 percent. This figure was confirmed for the NATION by Emmanuel Bussier, the minister of works. It must also be observed that the parking problem along the main arteries of Port Louis and other cities in the country has practically disappeared. /Text/ /Port Louise THE NATION in French 27 Jul 81 p 1/ 9516

SPECIAL PRICE FOR TAXIS--Given the country's economic condition, the government finds itself unable to provide 2 gallons of gas at a discount price, as demanded by the country's taxi-drivers. In fact, yesterday morning, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo listened attentively to the many complaints brought forth by the taxi drivers union. He said that if the government were ever to provide 2 gallons of gas at the price of Rs /rupees/ 17 per gallon, it would suffer a loss on the order of Rs 24 million per year. Now this cannot be done, he said, because we are confronting serious economic problems. With respect to concessions such as abolition of the new surcharges on the cost of a drivers' license, the vehicle viability (fitness) certificate, and the new municipal tax, they will be examined by the minister of works, Emmanuel Bussier. /Text/ /Port Louis THE NATION in French 29 Jul 81 p 1/ 9516

BIRTH RATE DECLINES--In contrast to the demographic figures from the last 3 years, the birth rate on Mauritius is now declining. In fact, for the first 5 months of the current year, 9,543 births were recorded by the Bureau of Records, compared to 10,723 for the same period last year. Also, deaths recorded from January to May numbered 2,652, compared to 2,739 for the corresponding period for 1980. It should also be noted that the population of Mauritius on 31 May was 938,502. Expert observers believe the population will reach 939,234 by 31 December 1981. /Text/ /Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 31 Jul 81 p 1/ 9516

CONTROL, DISCIPLINE DEPARTMENTS' FUNCTIONS DESCRIBED

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 9 Aug 81 p 16

[Excerpts] The departments of control and discipline must intensify their activities and become more attuned to the main aspect of their task: communication between the state apparatus and the people. This was the most important conclusion reached at a recent meeting held at the party's Central Committee headquarters and chaired by the Central Committee secretary for ideological work, Maj Gen Jorge Rebelo. Participants at this meeting included officials from the departments of control and discipline in the various Ministries, as well as representatives from the principal information organs.

According to the radio program A VOZ DA FRELIMO [Voice of FRELIMO], the goal of the meeting was to analyze a number of issues related to the letters sent by readers to the information organs. Many of these letters refer to problems that should be solved by the departments of control and discipline. However, very few people address themselves to these departments when they want to register a complaint in relation to some state function.

It is wrong to have recourse to the press, as long as the departments of control and discipline were established to ensure this communication between the state apparatus and the people.

However, A VOZ DA FRELIMO continued, in most of the Ministries, these departments were more attuned to their own disciplinary problems rather than to their relations with the people. Moreover, the program added, the people are not accustomed to addressing themselves directly to the state organisms about their problems.

The meeting concluded that the activities of these departments must be intensified. As a first step, it was decided that their functions must be more systematically and more broadly advertised, so that the people will understand what they represent and report to them any anomalous situation within the state apparatus.

A VOZ DA FRELIMO stressed that people should not stop writing to the press. Actually, only a certain percentage of the letters refer to situations that fall within the competence of the departments of control and discipline. Moreover, the cases with which the departments will deal should also be published in the press, as long as it is justified to do so. The radio program concluded by saying that the meeting decided to establish structures of communication between the departments and the press that will function under the supervision of the party.

REFUGEES COMPLAIN ABOUT INCREASED MRM ACTIVITY

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2821, 21 Aug 81 pp 21-22

[Article by Andrew Meldrum]

[Excerpt] Chipinga, Zimbabwe, August 20--More than a thousand Mozambican peasants have fled to Zimbabwe to escape widespread fighting between the Mozambican Army and an allegedly South African-backed rebel band, according to reports gathered by newsmen along Zimbabwe's southeastern border with Mozambique.

The refugees have left the mountainous Mozambican side of the border and have settled here in squatter camps at the edge of lush tea plantations.

The refugees complain that their corn fields are pounded by mortar fire and their villages are attacked at night. The people say they are especially terrorized by the anti-government group known as the Mozambique Resistance Movement (MRM), which demands food from the villages by day and at night kills community leaders and burns down the huts of those who support the government forces.

Joshua Mlambo, like many people from the Chipinga area, has relatives living on the Mozambican side of the border.

"Normally they will come in the evening or very early in the morning", said Mlambo of the rebel MRM bands. "The targets are in most cases members of the local government committees...if their informers say that you are a strong government supporter then you must die."

No Message

Mr. Mlambo said that the rebel group does not promote any strong political message except to spread general denunciations against the socialist Mozambican government.

The people say they suffer from both sides. If they are forced at gunpoint to give food to the MRM forces, then the army punishes the village for aiding the rebels.

MRM activities are hurting the plans of the Zimbabwe government to transport their exports and imports through Mozambique's port of Beira. The MRM's sabotage attacks have hindered rail and highway traffic.

Mozambican and Zimbabwean authorities are sensitive about the border war and official information about the situation is scarce. But recently the Mozambican ambassador to Zimbabwe, Rafael Maguni, said that attacks by the rebel group derail railroad wagons, halting traffic on the railways for up to three days.

Both the Zimbabwe and Mozambique governments have blamed South Africa and diplomats in Salisbury agree that South Africa is supporting the group.

Protected Villages

Mozambicans who have fled to Zimbabwe say they have seen helicopters flying supplies in to the anti-government group. A Zimbabwean pilot said he saw a French-made Puma helicopter--the type that South Africa uses--flying along the Mozambican border.

Mozambique's Frelimo (Liberation Front) Army is not having much success in wiping out the guerrilla-style group and, ironically, has begun resorting to tactics used by the Rhodesian forces against the guerrillas in Zimbabwe.

In an attempt to deprive the MRM bands of their source of food, the government forces have gathered the rural people into "protected villages" such as the Rhodesian forces used to prevent Zimbabwean peasants from supporting Mr. Mugabe's guerrillas.

Frelimo officials have also come here to the Chipinga area in Zimbabwe to request that the refugees return to Mozambique.

The refugees, fearful of both the guerrillas and the government army, say they want to stay in peaceful Zimbabwe until the fighting in Mozambique stops. And that appears to be a long time away. (A.F.P.)

FRENCH FRIENDSHIP ASSOCIATION VISITS, COOPERATION PLANNED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] Delegations representing the AMASP [Mozambican Association of Friendship and Solidarity With the Peoples] and the AAFM [Franco-Mozambican Friendship Association] began discussions yesterday, aimed at stronger relations of friendship and cooperation between the Mozambican and French peoples, as a response to the perspectives opened by the recent political turnabout in France.

The two delegations are led by Antonio Sebastiao and Michel Samuel, of the AMASP and the AAFM, respectively. Sebastiao described the climate of the discussions as one of "great openness on both sides and great interest in fruitfl cooperation."

At the beginning of the proceedings, which are taking place in the National Party Headquarters, the AMASP official stressed the importance of the meeting, which he called decisive for greater friendship, solidarity and cooperation between the Mozambican and French people in the future.

Continuing, Sebastiao described the various aspects of the Mozambican struggle against underdevelopment, noting that the French agronomists and economists in Mozambique will be able to determine the areas in which these scientists can cooperate within the work programs established between the AMASP and the AAFM.

The leaders of the Mozambican delegation evidenced every expectation of a successful meeting with the AAFM delegation. He emphasized that after the members of that solidarity organization visit various production sectors, the AAFM will be able to say what area it would consider first for cooperation.

In turn, the leader of the AAFM delegation said he felt the meeting was important because, as he stressed on his arrival, the changeover of the political regime in France has opened up a vast field for solid cooperation with the Mozambican people.

YOUNG TRAINEES BACK FROM CUBA, GDR WELCOMED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Aug 81 p 3

> [Text] "With your return and the upcoming departure of other cadres for professional training abroad, we feel that the ranks of our army of workers in the battle against underdevelopment are continuing to swell," noted Teodato Hunguana, minister of justice and acting minister of labor, during a welcoming ceremony held yesterday in the capital for the first group of young workers returning to the country after attending various courses in Cuba and the GDR.

A total of 26 workers constitute these groups, which left in 1979. The first group, with nine members, attended a professional training course in the repair of vehicles, specifically, IFA trucks, farm machinery, tractors and combines, in the GDR. The other group of 17 attended intermediate courses in the scientific organization of labor, hygiene and security, in the Republic of Cuba.

Also attending the welcoming ceremony were families of the recently returned graduates, guests from several ministries and the ODM, as well as hundreds of other young workers who will soon go to the same countries for similar training.

In reports presented on that occasion, the two groups gave an accounting of their activities in the course of their training. They stressed the hospitality and assistance provided by the peoples of the two socialist countries.

"The first phase is finished. We have been trained. There is still another phase, however, to be conducted among our workers. We will not only put into practice what we have learned, but we will also teach others," one of the reports stressed.

Greeting the returning groups, Minister Hunguana noted that the professional training they received in those friendly countries was not for their personal aggrandisement, but must be used to serve the development of the country, above all, in the new battle against underdevelopment.

"Professional training is strategically important in our country's present phase, because what is essential for production is the manpower," the official said at one point.

Hunguana noted the fraternal relations and strong solidarity and cooperation between Mozambique and the countries that are assisting us in the professional training of our workers. He stressed: "This is possible only because of the internationalism that guides our parties, peoples and states."

PROMISING PROSPECTS IN FIELD OF NATURAL GAS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] Four foreign firms have now supplied the Secretariat for Coal and Hydrocarbons with proposals for carrying out the first phase of exploration aimed at precisely evaluating the occurrences of gas--and possibly petroleum--in the Pande and Buzi zones and adjacent areas. Seismic surveys are to begin this year so that the drilling can be done in 1982.

A number of important projects for exploiting Pande's natural gas are also being studied. One of them calls for building big complexes for producing urea from ammonia and working iron ore.

It is already known that Mozambique has large deposits, chiefly in Pande, Temane, and Buzi. In addition, the entire onshore zone between Beira and Inhambane is recognized as having a high potential for the occurrence of gas, and there is also good reason to believe that petroleum exists at greater depths.

Of the known gas deposits, Pande appears to have the largest reserves. Its potential has not been correctly evaluated, however, because of the insufficient data available so far. Because of the poor quality of the seismic and geological data obtained to date concerning those reserves, it has not been possible to determine precisely the characteristics and dimensions of the industrial complexes to be built in the area to process that important raw material.

The prospecting work now to be carried out therefore constitutes a basic starting point for the construction of those complexes. The prospecting work will consist of seismic surveys and drilling in Pande, Buzi, and adjacent areas.

The four firms that have submitted proposals for doing that work are INGECO [expansion unknown] of Italy, the CGG [expansion unknown] of France, Geosource of the United States, and MINERALIMPEX [expansion unknown] of Bulgaria.

An official in the Secretariat for Coal and Hydrocarbons told our reporters that the meetings with all those firms could not have gone better.

The cost of the work is estimated at around $6 million (approximately 222,000 contos). The work necessary to collect data considered sufficient will involve about 1,000 kilometers of seismic profiles.

Studies made by a number of consultants concerning the gas potential in the Pande field point to proven and recoverable reserves of about 18 billion cubic meters. The same studies indicate possible recoverable reserves of up to 60 billion cubic meters.

Although those figures may be somewhat distorted, it is considered certain that the existing natural gas potential is sufficient for supplying large complexes for the production of urea and sponge iron.

In the opinion of experts in the field, the data that may begin to be available next year concerning those hydrocarbon reserves will permit an immediate start on construction of the industrial complexes. Among other things, those plants will insure Mozambique of complete self-sufficiency in urea-based fertilizers starting with the last half of this decade.

The search for hydrocarbons in Mozambique began in 1905, but activity did not pick up until after World War II. At that time, four consortiums were especially important in exploration: Gulf Oil-Pan American-Amoco, Sunray, Aquitaine, and Hunt.

The exploration took place both onshore and offshore, with the completion of 25,000 kilometers of seismic lines, 12 offshore wells, and 48 onshore wells.

It was during that time that the gas fields in Pande, Buzi, and Temane were discovered. Traces of gas, petroleum, and bitumens were also detected in some of the holes. It was noted, however, that the work done was insufficient, since there was no information as to the limits and reserves of the deposits discovered or, consequently, as to their economic viability for certain purposes.

Moreover, the entire technology used in that surveying work is now considered totally out of date, given the great growth and improvement that have taken place in that strategic sector of the world's economy. This means that new geophysical methods used in petroleum prospecting may reveal new deposits that could not be detected before.

In the course of the surveying work that was done, a fierce fire broke out in October 1965 in a well in the Pande field. It was not put out until 31 January 1967. It is assumed that about 10 or 15 percent of the gas existing there was lost.

DELAYS IN TRANSFERRING HOTEL UNITS' MANAGEMENT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 22 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Pedro Tivane: "CIT, We Are Waiting!"]

[Excerpts] Between the lines of people waiting for a table at the Taverna restaurant and the despairing silence at the Piri-Piri, where last year's crowds gave way to nights so serene that there is no difference between open or closed doors, the CIT [Information and Tourist Center] promise to improve restaurants within three months exploded like a bomb.

I bet no one remained indifferent to such earth-shaking news. This was the answer to an eternal and boring wait.

The decentralization of the control and management of hotel units through their transfer [to private management] was viewed as the beginning of a better era.

No one, however, could imagine what would happen. On 17 June, Radio Mozambique broadcast an interview with CIT director Mario Trindade, who stated that within 3 or 4 months, there would be a general improvement in restaurant service in the city of Maputo. The argument in support of this assertion was the transfer he also mentioned at the time. He added that the criteria to be used for such transfers were related to the rehabilitation and operational plan to be presented by the candidates. On this basis, if we are to understand Mario Trindade clearly, the adoption of such criteria entailed previous study. The results of such study would serve to adopt the modalities involved in the transfers.

Such being the case, we thought that the fundamental premises for the transfers were already established.

How, then, is one to understand the fact that the CIT has stopped the transfer process "in order to study the proposals that were submitted and review the methodology"?

Two months ago, the CIT director was mentioning the transfers, but only now, after all this time, candidates are asked to submit their plans. At this rate, we shall see no improvement before June 1983!

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 9 Aug 81 pp 30-31

[Article by Antonio Fernandes: "Muchololi"]

[Excerpts] "Muchololi" is the name given to the speculators who abound today, especially in our country's urban centers. They can be frequently found in the suburbs as well as in the center of Greater Maputo.

Their activity consists in purchasing, through all kinds of deals, any foodstuffs available to be then resold at exorbitant prices.

One can find, at the "Muchololi," from bread to beer and soft drinks, from soap to--incredibly--gas. If one has enough money, one can buy their chickens and eggs, rice, potatoes, meat or fish.

As a rule, the "Muchololi" have one or more accomplices in soft drink plants or in shops and distributing firms, who receive a percentage on the sale of the items.

The "Muchololi" did not emerge after independence. They were around in colonial times too; their presence is more noticeable today because of the shortage of some items on the market. They are opportunists, who profit from a crisis to siphon off as large a profit as possible. In general, they do not work, living off their deals, but there are others who are employed or have their own "business." The latter usually work in a field that permits them to acquire the items needed for their "extracurricular" activities.

The "Muchololi" are, therefore, a social evil to which it is very difficult to put a stop. In the course of the political and organizational offensive, some were detected and neutralized, but others immediately cropped up to replace them.

When soft drink plants and others will take care of production and distribution problems, when the new supply system will be well established, when certain items will no longer be in short supply, perhaps the institution of the "Muchololi"--so well known among us--will fade away.

LEASED SHIP RUNS AGROUND, DIFFICULTIES FORESEEN

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Antonio Souto]

[Text] The "Castle Glory," the largest of the six ships currently engaged in coastal shipping here, ran aground at 0300 hours on 1 August. The accident occurred off Timbwe, at the mouth of the Zambeze River, about 30 miles from Chinde. The 16-man crew is completely safe.

The cause of the accident is not yet known, but maritime technicians reached by our reporters point to possible navigation errors. Of the 16 sailors serving aboard the ship on this trip, 5 are foreigners, including the captain.

Regarding navigating conditions, the same sources said that area of the coast is dangerous because of the many sand banks that have formed at the mouth of the Zambeze. Safety conditions are currently within normal standards, however, including the fact that the Timur beacon is functioning.

The "Castle Glory" left Beira at 1530 hours on 31 July, headed for Nacala. It had about 2,400 tons of general cargo aboard, including 1,298 tons of sugar. It was also carrying various vehicles and machinery. The total value of the cargo is estimated in the tens of thousands of contos.

The situation is considered particularly sensitive because, given the conditions under which the ship ran aground, it will be difficult to float it. The ship bottomed at a time when the sea was high. The sea should not reach the same level it was at the time of the accident until 17 August. During this period, there will be times when the depth in the area of the ship will be only about 1 meter.

These conditions, aggravated by the fact that this is an area of heavy waves, make recovery operations extremely difficult. Asked if it would be possible to jettison part of the cargo to reduce the weight of the ship, in order to float it and save what is essential, a technician said this "would be difficult." Given the characteristics of the ship, every 90 tons of jettisoned would lower the water line by only 10 centimeters.

Emergency measures to save the ship are under study, while the causes of the accident are being investigated. Yesterday there was an aerial survey of the shipwreck area. A team of maritime specialists and merchant marine officers has already gone to the locale. It is feared that by 17 August, when it might be technically possible to float the ship, it may already be too late, because the ship may not be able to withstand the pounding of the surf, or possible storms, until then.

The "Castle Glory" has a maximum capacity of 2,470 tons. It is about 90 meters long and has a 6.90-meter draft. Owned by Greek ship chandlers, it has been operating in Mozambique since 1980. It was initially chartered by the "Anfrena" and, since the geginning of this year, by the "Navique." It has been in operation for about 25 years. "Navique" is paying $1,900 per day for the charter. The charter contract stipulates that payment will not be made if the ship is not operable, as in the present case.

The accident is considered particularly serious, primarily because the ship is the largest now in service for domestic coastal shipping. The total capacity of the Mozambican coastal fleet is 18,943 cubic meters, distributed over six ships. The "Castle Glory" represents 23.5 percent of this figure. In the first quarter of this year it transported 18,298 tons.

In the next 6 months, the ship was expected to transport about 20,000 tons. Interruption of its activity will certainly aggravate the already difficult coastal shipping situation.

BRIEFS

WASHINGTON'S ALLEGED CARTE BLANCHE--The United States reaffirmed yesterday its intention to support South African aggression against Angolan territory by declaring that Washington is not willing to normalize relations with the People's Republic of Angola. The statement was made by Department of State spokesman Alan Romberg, who pointed to the "Cuban presence" on Angolan soil as the reason for the refusal to normalize diplomatic relations between the two countries. Washington's hostility became more obvious following information from Kinshasa that the White House has approved political asylum in the United States for 73 former FNLA militants from the Holden Roberto faction, an Angolan counter-revolutionary movement now extinct. The same sources added that the former FNLA fighters left Zaire on Thursday on board a U.S. plane. Observers in the region believe that the United States now intendes to arm Jonas Savimbi's UNITA, operating in northern Namibia with South African support. SPECIAL PRIVILEGES ABOLISHED--"Opportunism and abuses by elements of the police, the militia and vigilance groups must end," Carlos Raposa Pereira stated yesterday at a meeting with residents of the Xipamanine district. The deputy minister of interior stressed the need to end these groups' privileges, especially in food lines. He said that "our security and defense forces are not there to commit abuses against the population." He added that "their task is to organize the people and not to take advantage of their status to commit abuses." In conclusion, he said that "we do not want opportunists." In the course of the meeting, the poor coordination between the police and the people in solving problems of criminality was stressed. Raposo Pereira criticized also the passivity shown by the people in denouncing cases of negative behavior by police forces. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 Aug 81 p 1]

DELEGATION TO GDR--A delegation headed by Teodato Hunguana, substituting for the minister of labor, left yesterday for the GDR, where it will participate in a meeting of the sub-commission on labor of the mixed Mozambique-GDR commission; this delegation also includes the president of the higher court of appeals, officials from the Ministry of Labor, as well as officials from the People's Development and Information Bank. The mixed commission will draw up a balance sheet of cooperation agreements in the field of professional training. Our delegation will meet with Mozambican workers and trainees in various provinces of the GDR where they are attending training technical specialization courses. It will also hold talks with the Ministry of Justice of the GDR. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 Aug 81 p 8]

SWAPO LEADER INTERVIEWS IN BERLIN REPORTED

AU271710 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 26 Aug 81 p 5

[Andreas Fleischer report on interview with Sam Nujoma, president of South West African People's Organization [SWAPO], on 25 August in Berlin]

[Text] Berlin--The Namibian people and the People's Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN) have achieved great successes in the armed liberation sturggle. This was stated by Sam Nujoma, President of SWAPO, in an interview on the occasion of the 15th anniversary of the armed struggle against Pretori's occupation regime. Enormous military defeats have been and are being inflicted on the hated Pretoria regime, which prove that Botha, who claims that SWAPO is shattered, is a liar.

Today SWAPO and its liberation army are stronger than ever before and enjoy the unshakable confidence of the Namibian people, who cannot be intimidated by the cruelest retaliation measures of the occupiers and their accomplices. South Africa's barbaric terror knows no bounds. An especially organized group of hired killers terrorizes the Namibian civilian population. Drilled in Benoni, near Pretoria, they terrorize the population, poison wells, lay mines in schools, hospitals and churches, torture defenseless men, women and children. In view of this continued campaign of terror, Sam Nujoma stressed, SWAPO has no alternative but to step up the armed liberation struggle.

The South African clique of criminals does not restrict itself to Namibia only. It uses the country as a steppingstone against the People's Republic of Angola and against the other front states. Here the racists pursue the goal of destabilizing these countries and force them to give up their support for the just cause of the Namibian people.

In this connection, the SWAPO president referred to the increasingly closer links and ties between the imperialist countries and South Africa. Now, as the international public increasingly supports all efforts aimed at Namibia's independence, the imperialist powers, with the United States up front, are intensifying their maneuvers to thwart a democratic solution to the Namibian issue. They use their veto power in the security council to prevent any effective measure by the United Nations such as economic sanctions against pretoria. They aim at a neocolonialist solution, since they, according to Sam Nujoma, "are afraid that their puppets could suffer a defeat in free, just and democratic elections under UN control."

Namibia, one of the richest countries of the world in natural resources, is unscrupulously exploited and impoverished by transnational imperialist concerns. Sam Nujoma referred to the fact that here the United States plays a leading role and that, particularly since Reagan took office, it has been increasing its investments in South Africa. "We are not surprised that Reagan is now showing his true face and inciting the fascist regime in Pretoria to ever new acts of terror." For colonialism, racism and imperialist are anachronistic phenomena of the same kind, which are in fundamental contradiction to the entire nature of mankind. "Therefore," he continued "all progressive forces of the world support our liberation struggle."

Particularly during the past period, the Namibian Liberation movement has achieved important successes in military confrontations as well as in foreign policy. This includes the recognition of SWAPO by the United Nations as the only legitimate representative of the Namibian people and the growing support of the heroic struggle by the world public. Sam Nujoma reaffirmed SWAPO's readiness to sign a cease-fire and to continue close cooperation with the United Nations in order to achieve, on the basis of security council resolution 435 adopted in 1978, a peaceful solution to the problem and true independence for Namibia.

In this struggle, the SWAPO president stressed, the anti-imperialist solidarity given to SWAPO by the OAU, the nonaligned movement. The community of socialist states and a number of national and international organizations is of great importance. He thanked the government and the GDR people as well as the SED Central Committee for their comprehensive solidarity support of the Namibian people. "Of course," Sam Nujoma finally stressed, "the Namibian people have to liberate themselves by their own efforts, but internationalist solidarity is an indispensable part of this struggle."

BUDAPEST 'MAGYAR HIRLAP' INTERVIEWS SWAPO'S NUJOMA

AU271335 Budapest MAGYAR HIRLAP in Hungarian 20 Aug 81 p 3

[Gabor Kurti interview--date not given, presumably in Budapest--with Sam Nujoma, president of the South West African People's Organization: "MAGYAR HIRLAP Interview With Sam Nujoma, For An Independent Namibia"]

[Text] Sam Nujoma, president of the South West African People's Organization [SWAPO], has granted an interview to Magyar Hirlap about the struggle of the Namibian patriots, the objectives and methods of the political, diplomatic and armed struggle. Gabor Kurti represented our newspaper at the discussion.

[Question] The Western press frequently tries to present SWAPO as a movement involving mainly one group of the Namibian people, the Ovambos. What is the truth?

[Answer] In the West, we are often called either terrorists, or communists, or even a tribal organization. The purpose is to divide the Africans. It is a well-known conventional method of the colonialists to try to pit certain ethnic groups against one another. SWAPO, which encompasses all the ethnic groups, is Namibia's proper national liberation movement. The Pretoria racist regime knows this very well. When we met with a South African delegation at the negotiating table in Geneva this January, we said to them: very well, we are prepared to participate in any elections supervised and controlled by the United Nations. However, South Africa did not agree. To this day, it is afraid of holding elections, because it is well aware of who is represented by the parties assembled in the so-called Turnhalle Alliance, which it organized itself. If SWAPO meant nothing but a mere single tribal organization among many, Pretoria would have agreed to elections. It has not agreed to elections because it is aware that the groups it has created would be defeated.

[Question] Your organization employs political and military means simultaneously in the struggle for independence. How would you characterize them?

[Answer] We must adjust our strategy to the circumstances. We cannot employ the means of mobilizing the population to strike and demonstrate to force the enemy to enter into negotiations on turning over the power, as has been done in Ghana, Tanzania, Kenya, Zambia and elsewhere, because we are struggling against a fascist regime, whose creators collaborated with Nazi Germany during World War II. This regime is not prepared to surrender power through negotiations. On the contrary, it intends to retain its control over Namibia's mineral wealth. Under such circumstances we decided to answer force with force and began our armed struggle, whose goal is to attain independence. SWAPO's political, diplomatic and military acts are of a complementary nature, they do not contradict one another.

[Question] In the UN Security Council, the leading Western powers have vetoed on several occasions resolutions that would have envisioned international economic sanctions against the Republic of South Africa, which is occupying Namibia. However, the UN General Assembly, which will devote an extraordinary session to Namibia from 3 to 11 September, is not empowered to vote on binding sanctions. As a result, a situation has arisen where, although international public opinion is almost unanimous in supporting your struggle, you cannot hope for more than political and more support from the United Nations.

[Answers] That is true, but we must not forget that history does not know a popular struggle whose participants have achieved liberty exclusively through international assistance. The United Nations is composed of various countries, with various interests. South Africa wants to continue ruling Namibia and the imperialists support this endeavor, because thus they regard their continued access to our country's strategically important mineral wealth as assured. This is a reality. Therefore, the purpose of the UN extraordinary session is to reveal that the Pretoria regime wants to dismember Namibia along ethnic lines into so-called Bantustans, as it has done in South Africa. Another purpose of the session is to unmask the assistance given to South Africa by the imperialists, which manifests itself, among other things, in the vetoes applied at the security council.

[Question] International observers often compare Zimbabwe's and Namibia's independence struggles, noting that the patriots of Zimbabwe have been militarily stronger than SWAPO, while the army of the white settlers of Rhodesia has proven weaker than the South African army. From this viewpoint, your struggle seems to be more difficult.

[Answer] It is a fact that the South African militarists are much better armed than the former Smith regime. Incidentally, at that time, also special South African units participated in the Zimbabwe clashes and were subsequently withdrawn and redeployed in Namibia in the struggle against SWAPO. Still, one should realize that, in a liberation struggle, it is not the quality of armament that is decisive, but the fact that the people are ready to fight and make sacrifices. The enemy must be convinced that it cannot feel safe for a moment. Once this is achieved, it will also regard its capital invested in Namibia as unsafe and withdraw it from the country sooner or later. We constantly are harrassing the enemy by our actions and forcing it to withdraw by our armed struggle. It took a few years to organize partisan groups into a popular liberation army in Vietnam. We have been fighting for 15 years and, if necessary, are prepared to fight for another 15 years to gain genuine liberty and independence.

[Question] Are you creating bases in the villages and will you capture the cities from there, as happened in Vietnam?

[Answer] Yes, those are the tactics we are applying.

[Question] Does that mean that you reject urban guerrilla warfare?

[Answer] Not entirely. We are applying the methods of conventional guerrilla warfare simultaneously with actions carried out in the cities.

[Question] Considering all factors, how do you regard prospects for independence? Is it attainable in the near future?

[Answer] I think that the situation will be entirely different within the next 24 months. The fact that the enemy was obliged to conduct direct negotiations with us this year is extremely significant. South Africa has sat down to negotiate face-to-face with SWAPO--we regard this as the result of the successes we have achieved in the armed struggle.

[Question] In writings, you are often called a Marxist. How would you summarize your views and SWAPO ideology?
